THE DISCIPLES DIVINITY HOUSE
OF THE
UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO

HERBERT LOCKWOOD WILLETT
LIBRARY

Digitized by the Internet Archive in 2012 with funding from CARLI: Consortium of Academic and Research Libraries in Illinois

http://www.archive.org/details/christiancentury28unse

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

Volume XXVIII. January 26, 1911 Number 4

Willett Prof H L
1220 E 56th St

Annual Reports of Churches

Achievements of 1910 in Local Congregations

The Campbells in Glasgow

By Errett Gates

A Minister's Life Story

Showing "the Other Side"

THE NEW CHRISTIAN CENTURY COMPANY
700-714 East Fortieth Street Chicago, Illinois

STARTLING STATISTICS OF THE YEAR 1910

The statistics of the tragical side of life, which are carefully gathered each year by that great newspaper, the Chicago Tribune, leave a dark shadow on the year that has just closed. The increase of suicide was startling; the number was 12,608, as compared with 10,230 in the previous year. The proportion of suicides as between men and women remains about the same as in 1909, being 8,252 males, and 4,356 females. Physicians, as usual, head the list among professional men, the number being 51, as compared to 27 in 1909 and 42 in 1908, and clergymen come next, 11 of them having taken their own lives. The causes of suicide have been as follows: Despondency, 6,673; unknown, 1,320; insanity, 925; domestic infelicity, 1,145; ill health, 1,230; business losses, 220; liquor, 270; disappointment in love, 825.

The most significant feature of these figures is the increasing number of those who were led to suicide by ill health. Of the total number, 4,202 shot themselves, 4,054 took poison, 925 asphyxiated themselves, 1,682 drowned themselves, 984 cut their throats, 656 jumped from windows or roofs, 56 threw themselves in front of locomotives or electric cars, 27 stabbed themselves, 14 killed themselves by fire and 8 by dynamite. Thirty-four unfortunates quit life by suicide pacts.

Murder or Homicide.

The increase of homicides puts another dark blot upon the year. The number of deaths by personal violence of all kinds in 1910, except suicides and lynchings, as reported by telegraph and recorded in the papers of the various states and territories, was 8,975, as compared with 8,103 in 1909. The various causes of these deaths were as follows: Quarrels, 4,049; unknown, 984; liquor, 798; by highwaymen, 930; jealousy, 612; infanticide, 126; highwaymen killed, 73; resisting arrest, 106; insanity, 225; riots, 46; self-defense, 76; strikes, 53; criminal outrage, 16.

The most significant feature of these figures is the increase in murders committed by thugs, thieves, burglars and holdup men, the number being an increase of 33 over that of 1909. There have been 186 cases of murder and suicide, 27 double murders, 6 triple murders, 4 quadruple murders, 15 murders by Highbinders, and 40 by the Black Hand.

Less Wholesale Killing.

The wholesale slaughter of men in war shows a gratifying decrease. The wars of 1910 were mostly short lived and not destructive. One thousand five hundred and fifty have been killed in Africa, 20 in Corea, 1,060 in China, 45 in India, 550 in Syria, 1,300 in Arabia, 2,103 in Albania, 113 in Morocco, 300 in Portugal, 11 in Persia, and 200 in Tripoli. The battle losses in Mexico, Central and South America as the outcome of revolutions were as follows: Mexico, 2,653; Nicaragua, 2,406; Honduras, 116; Brazil, 400; Uruguay, 500. The total for the year was about 13,000, as compared with 68,000 in 1909 and 22,000 in 1908.

Increase of Dishonesty.

The men who reach for big money when they have their hand in were busy last year. The record of embezzlements, forgeries, and bank wrecking shows a material increase over 1909, being in round numbers about $25,000,000, as compared with $8,000,000 in 1909 and $13,000,000 in 1908. These losses as reported by telegraph were distributed as follows: Banks, $15,000,000; public officers, $2,000,000; forgeries, $2,500,000; agents, $1,000,000; loan associations, $2,000,000; miscellaneous, $2,500,000.

Less Mob Law.

There was less mob law than during the previous year; much less than in some former years. The number of lynchings in 1910 was 74, as compared with 87 in 1909. According to states, they were as follows: Alabama, 8; Arkansas, 9; Florida, 17; Georgia, 12; Kentucky, 1; Louisiana, 3; Mississippi, 5; Missouri, 2; North Carolina, 1; Ohio, 1; Oklahoma, 2; South Carolina, 2; Tennessee, 2; Texas, 7; Virginia, 1; New Mexico, 1. Of the total number there were 9 whites and 65 negroes, among the latter 3 women. There was but 1 lynching in the north, and this occurred in Ohio; it was due to the whisky traffic. But the above numbers do not include the killing of 15 negroes in Texas, in what was called a race war, which usually means a man hunt, and is another way of lynching.

Record of Lynchings for the Past Quarter of a Century.

In 1886, 138; 1887, 122; 1888, 142; 1889, 176; 1890, 127; 1891, 192; 1892, 255; 1893, 200; 1894, 190; 1895, 171; 1896, 131; 1897, 166; 1898, 127; 1899, 107; 1900, 115; 1901, 135; 1902, 96; 1903, 104; 1904, 87; 1905, 66; 1906, 60; 1907, 63; 1908, 100; 1909, 87; 1910, 74. The total number for these years is 3,251, and inasmuch as nearly all the victims were negroes the figures furnish painful proof of what that race suffers from the anarchy and violence of mob law.

Executions.

Legal executions show a decrease, the number in 1910 being 104, compared with 107 in the previous year and 92 in 1908. Classified by states the record is as follows: Alabama, 6; Arkansas, 7; California, 2; Connecticut, 1; North Dakota, 1; Florida, 4; Georgia, 7; Illinois, 2; Iowa, 1; Kentucky, 2; Louisiana, 4; Massachusetts, 1; Mississippi, 3; Missouri, 3; New York, 9; New Jersey, 4; Nevada, 1; North Carolina, 2; Ohio, 4; Oklahoma, 1; Oregon, 1; Pennsylvania, 9; South Carolina, 7; Tennessee, 4; Texas 6; Virginia, 11; Washington, 2. There were 37 executions in northern and 67 in southern states, and in these cases 50 were whites, 53 negroes, and 1 Indian. The crimes for which they were executed were murder, 94; rape, 9; attempted rape, 1.

A significant fact shown by these figures is that there is most mob law in the states which do the most legal hanging; so that lynching is not due to a failure to execute murderers by law, but largely to race prejudice.

Fire Losses.

Losses by fire are becoming so great that they should be considered as related to criminal statistics. For it is a crime to burn up or permit to be burnt up as much property as went up in fire and smoke last year. The total fire losses for this country and Canada during the year approximate $222,000,000, as compared with $191,000,000 in 1909, $172,000,000 in 1908, and $150,000,000 in 1907, which indicates a steady increase of destruction by fire from year to year.

THE BRIGHTER SIDE.

The darker side of the year can be put into statistics and it seems appalling, but the brighter side does not so easily lend itself to arithmetic. It is like air and light and warmth, and nobody stops to keep the list. Even the gifts made by philanthrophy cannot easily be chronicled, for the little rivulets of benevolence which constantly flow through life, and which would make a vast volume, escape public attention. But the showing of the year in the larger way of benevolence is impressive, reaching an aggregate of $141,604,000. Of this amount $97,492,407 represents gifts and $44,112,131 bequests. These sums have been distributed as follows: To charities of various kinds, $56,229,243; to educational institutions, $61,283,182; to religious institutions, $12,654,433; to art museums, galleries, and public improvements, $9,536,680. There has been a marked decrease in gifts to libraries, but a large increase in donations made by women, who have given during the year $8,743,722 to charities, $6,433,250 to schools and colleges, $3,025,500 to museums and galleries, $2,432,270 to religious institutions, and $148,000 to libraries.

Big Givers.

Carnegie gave $15,000,000 more than in 1909, or a total of $19,664,325, making the aggregate of his donations $179,500,000. Rockefeller increased his gifts nearly $4,000,000 over the previous year, a total of $16,039,000, and a grand total up to date of $135,000,000. Mrs. Russell Sage let go her hold upon $3,888,150 during the year, and the sum of all her benefactions is now $22,000,000.

Other Gifts.

Among the other larger givers were the following: J. Pierpont Morgan, to various causes and institutions, $1,040,000; Thomas Murdoch, Chicago, will to charities, $1,775,000; Mrs. E. H. Harriman, New York, gift to New York state park, $1,000,000; H. C. Elliot, Alaska, will to charities, $2,500,000; T. A. Forsyth, Boston, Mass., gift to charities, $2,000,000; four donors to Washington University, $3,000,000; unnamed donor, New York, for general philanthropy, $2,500,000; C. P. Thorndike, Salem, Mass., gift to charity, $980,000; Isaac C. Wyman, Salem, Mass., will to Princeton university, $4,000,000; David Ranken and sons, St. Louis, Mo., gift to Ranken trade school, $3,000,000; O. S. A. Sprague, Chicago, will to Sprague Memorial institute, $1,216,000; Henry Dexter, New York, will to charities, $1,109,200; Flora Dolger, Philadelphia, will to Tuskegee institute, $1,000,000; Harriet Cole, Glenlake, L. I., will to charity, $1,000,000;; Loomis estate Chicago, to Loomis institute, $1,250,000; A. M. Heinsheimer, New York, gift to charity, $1,000,000; George Crocker, New York, will for investigating cancer, $2,000,000; Charles F. Simmons, San Antonio, Tex., gift to church, $700,000; Mary Baker Eddy, will to church, $1,000,000; George L. Fox, Brooklyn, N. Y., will to charity, $1,500,000; unnamed donor to New York Presbyterian hospital and Columbia university, $1,000,000.

The Test of Character

Endurance is a high test of character. To keep up and keep on; to stand up under pressure; to bear strain without giving way—these are the marks of the kind of strength that counts for largest service. The woman who can take care of her several little children and her sick husband and helpless father-in-law all day long, day after day, and then appear at a formal dinner in faultless attire and with cheerful words for everyone, and not one word about her burdens, has character marked by an endurance that the hardiest athlete might envy. The man in business who braces his energies against the onset of almost unbearable shocks of disappointment, and pushes on and on, never yielding to the tugging grip of discouragement, shows character by his endurance in toil and struggle. It is not that these brave souls rise to the occasion, perform sudden feats of strength, do brilliant work for a single shining hour. But day after day, week in and week out, endurance is the habit, the atmosphere of their steadfast duty-doing. Character has not met its severest test until it has proved its ability to endure.—Sunday School Times, N. W. Christian Advocate.

1131

The Christian Century
CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON AND HERBERT L. WILLETT, ... EDITORS

Professing Our Plea

I was very much delighted with your leading editorial in The Christian Century of Dec. 8 and also with the letters from the various editors. It is all very excellent, indeed. There is only one thing that I might object to but it seems hypercritical to criticise an article which is so fine. I refer to your use of the word "plea." One of the editors replying to Mr. Morrison's inquiry seems to think that the Disciples are the most denominational of all denominations. It seems to me as long as we talk so much of "our plea," there is good ground for this statement. Personally, I am absolutely not interested in things that keep different religious bodies apart. I think it is high time for our people to give up the use of this term which bears the ear-marks of sectarianism. I think Isaac Errett might have had great hesitancy in using the term if he had foreseen what a shibboleth it was destined to become.

The above is written by a prominent Disciple educator. His criticism is aimed at a very real defect in the thinking of some Disciples. There is no question that in certain minds the term "our plea" has come to have a credal significance. It means the adoption of a particular view of the New Testament and the apostolic church. It means ten or a dozen fixed doctrines. It means a cut-and-dried interpretation of certain specific texts of scripture.

Any variation from these doctrines and interpretations is a betrayal of the fact that a teacher or preacher is "not of us;" "he does not understand our plea." Two instances come to mind at the moment.

* * *

One is that of a devout young minister who left the Congregational fellowship for a pulpit with the Disciples. He was attracted by the ardor of the Disciples for unity, and believed their organic and aggressive advocacy of that ideal put them in the strategic place among the denominations. He made but little effort to familiarize himself with the Disciples' distinctive doctrines, believing that there were none, that he could be perfectly free to unfold God's word as it was revealed to him without reckoning on any creed or system of ideas with which he must conform.

He was rudely disillusionized one day, however. After an earnest and intelligent and wholly unsuspecting sermon on the return of the prodigal son, in which he had set forth the way of salvation, one of his elders came to him and asked him if he did not know that the story of the prodigal belonged to the "old dispensation," that a new "law of pardon" went into force after the death, burial and resurrection of Jesus, a law first announced at Pentecost when Peter said, "Repent and be baptized . . . for the remission of your sins."

The minister had to admit that he did not understand it that way. Whereupon, a contention arose in the congregation, fomented by this elder and a few other members who argued that their pastor did not understand "the plea" at all. He had to leave that pulpit, and returned to his former denominational affiliation.

* * *

The other instance is quite the opposite. It is the case of a minister who united with the Disciples, coming from the Baptists by the rather circuitous way of Unitarianism. Not many weeks after he was established in a leading pulpit of the brotherhood, he was invited to deliver a special address before a representative group of his brethren from many congregations. He drew out his twenty-minute allotment into an hour and twenty, touching the whole round of characteristic ideas which have nested themselves in the Disciples' mind in the last century and showing marked familiarity with the approved proof-texts. But the whole performance was transparently parrot-work. When afterward he was asked for an explanation of his course he naively confessed that he wanted "to show the brethren that he understood the plea!"

* * *

To this preacher and to the contentious elder in the first illustration above, the "plea" was, clearly enough, a system of hard and fast doctrines and interpretations of scripture which unless a man held in their accepted form he was "not of us." The word "plea" had become a euphemism for "creed" which latter word, of course, could not be tolerated.

Our correspondent has such a conception as this in his mind when he counsels The Christian Century against the further use of the expression "our plea." But to our mind the hope of our salvation lies in that expression. Instead of remanding it to the limbo of disuse let us save it from its grievous misuse. It characterizes the mission of the Disciples better than any other term that could be devised.

Our plea!—Not our creed concerning the operation of the Holy Spirit, or the nature of the Trinity, or the divine decrees, or the organization of the church, or the form of baptism, or the design of baptism, or the "divisions of the word," or the setting up of the kingdom, or the formula of conversion, or any such matter upon the understanding of which men of equal loyalty to Christ may differ.

Our plea! Not our particular understanding of Acts 2:38, or John 3:5, or Matt. 28:19, or Mark 16:16, or Romans 6:3, 4, 5, or any other specific texts of scripture upon which men of equal intelligence and loyalty to Christ differ after the most exhaustive study.

Our plea!—Not our argument. Not our platform. Not our basis of union, nor yet our understanding of the "scriptural basis" of union.

But our plea for the realization and bodying forth of the already existing unity of all souls who own allegiance to Jesus Christ as Lord.

* * *

Other communions are distinguished by their creeds. The Disciples are the one communion whose creed is catholic, whose fellowship is, logically, limited only by the line that marks the limit of Christ's fellowship.

But the Disciples are distinguished by their plea for unity. Their's is the one communion in Christendom which has no other business than this. When this business is done the Disciples, as a body, will disappear into the great catholic body of Christ, the present apparent separation from whose common life is their unceasing regret.

It is their "plea" that must save the Disciples from the pitfall of creed-making into which they are ever in danger of falling. The Disciples are not a doctrinal people but a practical people. Their enterprise is not to establish some ordinance or doctrine or set of doctrines, but to aid in reconstructing the order of the church.

* * *

The denominational order is wrong, and it is relatively impotent, the Disciples contend. There is no good reason in the present conscience of the Church why the denominational order should exist. Differences in belief are not sufficient grounds for schism in the body of Christ. The unity of the Church should not be made to hang upon the uniformity of belief or practice of its membership. Its unity is made the richer by all variety that is rooted in allegiance to Christ.

Therefore, plead the Disciples, let us be one brotherhood! Without surrendering our convictions of truth or laying aside any duties of obedience to our Lord, let us lay aside all tests of fellowship except loyalty to Christ.

* * *

The continued use of this term "our plea," lays the Disciples of Christ under the most solemn obligations of mind and heart. It demands that they shall really plead with Christ's people to cease doing those things that divide, and strive for the unity of the spirit in the bonds of peace.

The wooing note should be the dominant note in our preaching—not the arguing note. Without relaxing his doctrinal sensitiveness with respect to his own beliefs, each Disciple should cultivate a fine tolerance for the varying views of others.

It is the Disciples simplest duty to invite to fellowship and even to follow the leadership of men who may not be able to pronounce certain shibboleths.

Certainly we will not all think alike or preach alike in the united church. It is the Disciples' obligation to illustrate how happily men of widely differing views can dwell in unity under the same Lord.

Our plea, then—by no means let us give it up. But let us back it up with a catholic spirit and a catholic practice which rises far above the petty contentions of creed and sect.

Social Survey

BY ALVA W. TAYLOR

Benevolence That Counts

R. A. Long has honored his wealth with many large gifts but it is safe to say none have, in the minds of all lovers of mankind, more signally commended itself than his last and greatest. One may give for things that are not great in their meaning because he lives in a narrow world and sees only the need that is close to him. No doubt many rich men give little just because they live in a world so small that there is no great appeal that reaches their deeper nature. John Wanamaker went on a pleasure trip around the world and had his interests so enlarged and his vision so illuminated that he has since put hundreds of thousands into Christian missions and only regrets that he did not see sooner that he might have been investing greater sums. A fervently religious man may give to his denomination because its particular benefits and pleadings may seem to him to embody the greatest good and so he wastes his largess on sectarianism, honestly thinking he is promoting truth. Another pours out his benevolence trying to correct fancied errors in current theology and burdens the mails and the desks of young preachers with antiquated tracts when he could get into the big world of Christian work he would spend for their education in the work of Christ instead of the opinions of armchair theologs about him. A great number choose to bestow their goods on numerous relatives who are perfectly capable of caring for themselves or in burdening children with it without having trained them how to use their largess for the benefit of the disinherited of the earth. Mr. Long has offered the immense sum of $400,000 for the benefit of those whom the founder of Christianity came to minister unto more than to any other that were about him. He hopes to enlarge the gift to a round million. Best of all, he does not demand that the healing institution be called after himself but after the name of the Great Physician. The world builds greater monuments to those who build in the name of the humble Nazarene than to those who so anxiously build for themselves. This gift adequately sets forth the heart of the Gospel.

Will the Disciples Awaken?

This is the first really great awakening among the Disciples to the ministry of the Gospel of the "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these." An orphanage or two, a few old people's homes and a small hospital have heretofore been the apology of a great brotherhood who have for a century been preaching a return to Christ. It may well call us to humility that we have been so busy exalting a theological and personal Christ that we have neglected the manner of his daily ministry and shouted baptismal shibboleths so loud that we have heard little of the cry of the poor and sick of earth. There will be no more need with us than with the apostles for preaching on baptism if we commend our ministry to the world by our lives and so glorify the Father with our good works that others seek the secret of our interest in them. They will then come in real apostolic fashion asking "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" There is no answer to hospitals and works of mercy. Civilization has never profited much by doctrinal controversy but it has been fostered by Christian benevolence. Gibbon attributed the rapid rise of early Christianity to the manner in which the humble followers of Christ did good unto those in need and lived for the common welfare. Lecky found the inalienable good that fixed the Christian's morals into the code of Europe to be that of charity in all things. Human nature feels its needs deeply and responds nobly to the religion that has a balm for its pain and an answer for its troubled mind. All Christian history teaches that the only royal road to the secret of life is by the way of doing good. Luther glossed the missionary gospel in his zealous controversy with Rome. Will the Disciples take heed and not gloss the very heart of the gospel of human good in their controversy with sectarianism? Where is their commission on social service? Where are their bands of deaconesses? Where are their institutions of mercy? Where are their books on the burning human problems of the time? Where is their chief religious interest as a people? Is it baptism or missions and mercy?

The Song of the Shirt

Chicago has been hearing the pitiful song of the shirt. Forty thousand garment workers have been on a long strike for the right to some sort of independence in their work and a living wage in these prosperous times. Those who read of the strike in New York and Philadelphia when the shirtwaist makers battled for decent working conditions and a living wage will not need to be argued with about the need of better arrangements for the garment workers. This industry has furnished most of the sweatshops and the worst of wages. Work is intermittent and pay largely by the piece. The work is done under a boss system that leaves the worker accountable to the foreman and without power of appeal over his head. If there was no work the women were often compelled to sit long hours before being told they could go. The slightest pretext caused the boss to make a slight cut on the small piecework and in the end wages were miserably small. To be able to make but ten or twelve dollars per week in rush season by working overtime at home and but one-third that in dull seasons, and then lose much time besides does not leave a very commendable total with which to meet the cost of modern living. These workers were not organized when they struck. They belong to many different nationalities and speak many different languages but the oppression grew so intolerable that the uprising was almost spontaneous. Like the shirt waist makers the result is organization and an esprit de corps that will prevent them ever being again victimized by the anarchy of individual contracting, which means, to a foreign girl in a great city, with no other trade and solely dependent on daily wages, an absolute dependency upon the mercy of the boss. This foreman assessed fines for all sorts of things, used such language as he pleased, played the petty tyrant at his will and one could either work or quit, for there is always some one else, in a great city of foreigners, to take the place.

An Example of Brotherhood

This strike has afforded a heartening example of brotherhood and a heartless example of the lack of it. On the one hand was the rallying of the social workers and the Federation of Labor to the unselfish help of the strikers. On the other hand was the disheartening willingness of many workers to grab the vacated jobs and thus fight against their brothers in the world of toil. There may be no excuse for refusing to allow one who wishes to work for what he chooses any more than there is excuse for refusing to allow one to sell his goods for what he chooses. But neither is there any excuse for a public speaker or writer crying out against labor for trying to win its battle for a living wage by resorting to violence against these enemies of their kind, without at the same time denouncing the "scab" who thus conspires against the general human cause involved. The strikers, though unorganized and unaccustomed to working as a unit, exhibited a rare spirit of determination to stand by one another even when starvation stared them in the face. The united labor of Chicago displayed a rare example of brotherhood by the heroic manner in which those who had work gave for the benefit of those who had none. The ministers showed devotion to their office when they investigated conditions and then, finding there was cause for grievance, sought to bring about arbitration. The employers manifested various tempers. Some made terms quickly and saved great losses and a good name. Some refused to meet the committees of either employees or citizens and gave vent to the brutal boss cry of "nothing to arbitrate." Some manifested a willingness to conciliate and meet matters on fair ground. On the other hand the strikers had plenty of bad council as well as good. There are enemies of society who council bloodshed. There are radicals who see only one side and know no conciliation. And there is ignorance that demands great patience and a statesmanlike wisdom. With the agreement of Hart, Shaffner & Marx to arbitrate, one-half are back at work and will give of their earnings to help the others win. The great third party, the public, has not only suffered a loss of peace but of money and a shock to the social adjustments that ought to be so fixed as to prevent such wars in the midst of its social life.

Who Will Be Mayor of Chicago?

Chicago's affairs have been variously managed but perhaps never more notoriously in the interests of a machine than during the administration that is just passing. True, the past year and a half has been redeemed by strenuous efforts to meet the rising wrath of an aroused electorate but no spasm of reform that follows such notorious disclosures as brought on this one will redeem the officials who were guilty. The recent county election was ominous. It was not that the Democrats are more to be trusted but that they could not be worse and might be better than the particular Republican gang that has been in control. This machine has not been that of the old time political bunco gang. It has been that of the newer "Business" regime. The demand for business administration is wholesome but in most cases it has been the stool pigeon for the contractors and franchise interests who under the guise of Big Business have sought control for the sake of financial privileges. Now that the Democrats feel encouraged by the recent county victory this same Big Business is making strenuous efforts to capture the Democratic nomination and has put forward a banker by the name of Graham as its candidate. Carter Harrison, many times mayor in the heyday of odorous political machines, and a man who is personally clean but who always manipulated and gave favors to the saloon vote, is the candidate of the dyed-in-the-wool type of party men. Judge Dunne, the incumbent before the present administration, and a man above suspicion of alliances with either gangsters in the party or interests in the franchise world, represents the really progressive Democracy. Up to this writing Alderman Merriam is the only prominent Republican candidate. He is a teacher in the University of Chicago, the most efficient and prominent member of the city council, the head of the Merriam Commission that has revealed the shocking business waste, not to say worse, of the present administration, and perhaps the most genuinely unbeholden of any interest or suspicion of all candidates. Chicago would be honored and redeemed by electing him. It is the city that is on trial, not the parties.

Missionary Notes

In France a movement to organize the dissenting priests into a strong evangelizing agency is taking shape. It is under the leadership of Mons. Leon Revoyre and their organ is called Le Chretien Libre. This is the day of opportunity in France.

The Japanese Christians have recently erected their third church in Manchuria.

Down at Richmond, Va., is a little church of 166 members that gives nearly $900 per annum to foreign missions.

The latest missionary magazine is a quarterly called "The Moslem World." It will be published at 35 John St., Bedford Row, London and edited by Drs. Zwemer, Gairdner and Lepsius.

Ten years ago Dr. Coyle's church in Denver was giving $500 per annum to missions. It is now giving $6,000.

A pastor by the name of Stearns took charge of a little church of 30 members at Germantown, Pa. in 1892. It was about dead. It now gives $50 per capita to missions and is more than alive with 150 members and no financial problems.

The Presbyterians South have been investigating the result of the campaign for foreign missions on home missionary gifts. They find that 78 per cent of the churches increased them.

Miss Harriet Noyes opened a girls' school in Canton, China, 38 years ago. She has sent out 400 trained workers. Last year she had 312 students, all paying tuition, twice as many as she really had room for.

Native Korean Christians have recently begun work among the 14,000 deaf mutes of that land.

There are 3,700 villages in Japan where the gospel has not been taken. Unlike the Koreans the Japanese have been approached through the upper classes and they have not furnished the evangelizing zeal that is found in Korea and in Southern India.

Three years ago the Laymen's Missionary Movement was inaugurated in Toronto. The contributions in that city amounted to $175,000 the first year; $363,700 the second year; $410,773 this, the third year, and the goal is set for $450,000 for next year.

There are 8,000 Hindus in California. Here is a missionary obligation. The M. E. Church, South, proposes to give $2,000 to start the work this year.

Since the Laymen's Campaign in Buffalo last year 65 churches report a gain in their missionary offerings from $26,634 to $50,305.

The Layman's Movement is moving across Scotland and, following the Edinburgh Conference, promises great things.

The churches of Canada are engaged in a movement to bring the missionary offerings up to a total of $5.00 per capita.

That the Layman's Movement was not the thing of a season is shown by the fact that 1540 men sat down to the banquet at Rochester recently while 300 more looked on, unable to find seats. They listened for two and one half hours to missionary addresses and great enthusiasm prevailed.

The American Board (Congregational) recently celebrated its one hundredth anniversary. It has raised and spent more than $40,000,000 and has in hand as a Century Fund $1,200,000 on a permanent endowment of $2,000,000.

Algeria is giving signs of promise as a mission field. Several hundred converts have been recently won.

Great success is rewarding the work among the Miao, a race of aborigines in the mountains of West China. There are now 17 churches and 4,000 Christians.

The American missionaries in Turkey are enjoying unexampled freedom in their work and now have 40,000 pupils studying the Scriptures. Turkey will open 65,000 elementary schools next year. Her great need is teachers.

Prayer for Minister, Elders and Deacons

"If ever we have loved our own leadership and power when we sought to lead our people to thee, we pray thee to forgive. If we have been engrossed in narrow duties and little questions, when the vast needs of humanity called aloud for prophetic vision and apostolic sympathy, we pray thee to forgive. If in our loyalty to the church of the past we have distrusted thy living voice and have suffered thee to pass from our door unheard, we pray thee to forgive. If ever we have been more concerned for the strong and the rich than for the shepherdless throngs of the people for whom thy soul grieved, we pray thee to forgive.

"O Master, amidst our failures we cast ourselves upon thee in humility and contrition. We need new light and a new message. We need the ancient spirit of prophecy and the leaping fire and joy of a new conviction, and thou alone canst give it. Inspire the ministry of thy church with dauntless courage to face the vast needs of the future. Free us from all entanglements that have hushed our voice and bound our action. Grant us grace to look upon the veiled sins of the rich and the coarse sins of the poor through thine eyes. Give us thine inflexible sternness against sin, and thine inexhaustless compassion for the frailty and tragedy of those who sin. Make us faithful shepherds of thy flock, true seers of God, and true followers of Jesus." Prayer for Ministers in PRAYERS OF THE SOCIAL AWAKENING by Rauschenbusch.

* * *

The minister is an interpreter. He interprets the message of God that men may receive and enjoy it, and he interrprets to men their own experiences. He must be all things to all men, that is, he must be able to understand the good in all to whom he is sent to minister and he must feel the strength of the temptation, to which any have yielded. The sin of sins in a minister is the narrowness that causes him to trample on a goodness he does not understand and the self-deception that causes him to think he is not like other men. The minister of Christ studies the deeds and words of his Master to little purpose if he remains hard and narrow. The church in its prayer for him should emphasize his need of large-mindedness and compassion. It should pray that he may be a minister of the church of Christ and not of a group of sectarians.

We pray for those whose services we value and whose difficulties we understand. The minister is before us constantly and we have a feeling that he is in some way necessary to the life of the church. But elders and deacons are not so much in evidence. We hear, now and then, that some wayward member has been visited and admonished, perhaps excluded from the church. Once a year, possibly several times, we encounter the finance committee. We are not deeply impressed with the importance of the work done by the chosen leaders of the congregation. In more than one congregation the officers do little for the religious culture of those whom they are supposed to serve.

They know more about hogs than about training children in the way of righteousness and mercy. The real leader, if the congregation has any faith to justify its existence, is some man or woman outside the circle of the nominal leaders. Often the elders and deacons stand in the way of progress. They understand their own business, it may be, but they do not read aright the signs of the times in the religious world. Being in need of instruction, they are nevertheless unwilling to receive it.

It would be unfortunate, however, if we should devote an evening to the faults of the elders and deacons. There are thousands of good men serving as officers of churches and for them we should be thankful. They have things to perplex them. It falls to their lot to attend to the finances of the churches. One who has never tried to raise money for church purposes may think this is an easy task; every one who has had anything to do with the business side of religion knows that the finance committee of a church needs the faith of Abraham and the patience of Job. And who is sufficient for the task of admonishing the disobedient and of strengthening the weak? Who is wise enough to correct misunderstandings and to stop the mouth of slander? We expect our officers to do these things. They need our prayers. Complaints against them will avail nothing. We must expect them to make mistakes. Our business is to give them encouragement for their proper work.

Midweek Service, Feb. 2. 1 Thess. 5:25; 1 Tim. 2:1-2, 3:1-13; Acts 20:36.

Editorial Table Talk

The Appellate Court of Kentucky has decided that the sale of a jug of liquor is made at the place of its delivery and fined a grog seller for shipping a case of his stuff to a patron in "dry" territory. That helps some to protect a county that wants to prohibit the stuff.

The "wets" lost six more of Arkansas counties in the last election. They had but nineteen left, and now but a dozen. In another year they will doubtless have none, for Arkansas bids fair to join the honor list of states.

Colored Men's Social Resources.

There are several very significant features in connection with the undertaking to establish a colored men's Y. M. C. A. in Chicago. That the initial impulse of the movement was given by Mr. Julius Rosenwald, a Jew, is itself encouraging especially in view of the recent decided re-emphasis of the Y. M. C. A. convention upon its much discussed "evangelical test." But more interesting even than the fact that Jewish generosity is at the basis of it is the alacrity and resourcefulness with which the colored people of Chicago made their contributions. The original gift of $25,000 by Mr. Rosenwald was matched by Mr. N. W. Harris, both being offered with the stipulation that the colored people should themselves raise $50,000 more. The achievement has not only provided the colored men of this city a social, educational and religious center, but it has awakened them to a certain clear perception of their own independent resources as a community, and lifted from them the repressive sense of helplessness in promoting enterprises of a public character. It is not too much to predict that the acquirement of this Y. M. C. A. by their own efforts will be followed by other enterprises of uplift among the colored people due to their awakened sense of social responsibility.

The Home and Religious Problems.

The whole round of religious and moral problems related to the American Home as the center is the subject matter for discussion at the Eighth General Convention of the Religious Eucation Association to be held in Providence, R. I., Feb. 14-16. About thirty different meetings are scheduled on the program. The speakers are men and women of recognized leadership in the religious and educational fields. Among them are Dr. Lyman Abbott, Pres. W. H. P. Faunce, Miss Jane Addams, Bishop Lawrence, Pres. Henry Churchill King, Dean Shailer Mathews, Dean George Hodges, Pres. William Douglas Mackenzie, and many others. The Home and the Modern City, The Home and Rural Life, The Christian Ideal of Marriage, Religious Education and Contemporary Social Conditions, A Call to American Parents, Responsibility of the Church for Training Parents, How Can School, Church and Home Get Together—these are a very few of the very suggestive titles of addresses and discussions. The R. E. A. has established itself in the higher life of this country by its splendid fruitage during the eight years of its history. It is the most potent influence in the land in redeeming the Sunday-schools from the slipshod methods into which many have fallen. It stands for the highest ideals.

Chicago Saloon Foes Up Again.

The movement for getting 100,000 signatures to a petition to make the city of Chicago anti-saloon territory is on with a full head of steam. Instead of being disheartened after the throwing out of their petition last spring the foes of the saloon have been working all the year perfecting an organization covering most of the city. This machinery is now in full operation. Rev. James K. Shields, the state superintendent, is the local chairman as well. The canvassers report that it is easier to secure signers to the petition this year than last year. It is held by the leaders that all the reasons for getting the issue on the ballot last year hold this year, and more besides. If the petition is not filed the United Societies (Chicago's "personal liberty" organization) will declare that the temperance wave is receding. They point out that Chicago must force the saloon issue as a protection to the small towns over the state which will vote this spring on local option. If Chicago's saloon element is not kept busy fighting here at home it sends money and men to corrupt the vote in strategic towns in the state. On the other hand, the filing of the petition will be the hardest single blow the liquor business can receive. Coming on top of the election of a "dry" speaker in the legislature it will secure the enactment of advanced anti-saloon legislation for Chicago as well as for the state. Special precautions are being taken to secure absolutely valid and verifiable signatures.

Largest Gift in Disciples' History.

That was a thrilling event in Kansas City the other night when five hundred Disciple banqueters in the Independence Boulevard Church listened to Mr. R. A. Long read the text of his proposition to give first two hundred thousand dollars and later two hundred thousand more to build a hospital which shall be the finest in America and perhaps in the world. It was not a cold proposition of dollars and cents that Mr. Long made; he prefaced his announcement with a service of self-consecration as beautiful as it was unprecedented. His service consisted of a reading of the great "Inasmuch" chapter from Matthew's Gospel, then followed a prayer of self-dedication. After this, with his own voice, the philanthropist started the hymn, "Jesus, Lover of My Soul," and the guests joined in with tender awe. Then the gift was laid upon the altar.

The religious emotion accompanying its announcement was equalled only by the business wisdom of the gift itself. Mr. Long wished his gift to be matched dollar for dollar by the gifts of others. He wished, however, to have the enterprise started immediately. So he provided that only $150,000 should be required from others to put his initial gift of $200,000 in force. Later, beginning with the year 1914 Mr. Long will give $50,000 a year for four successive years provided $62,500 a year is contributed each year from other sources. In this way the sum of $800,000 will be equally divided between Mr. Long on one side and all other contributors on the other side.

Thereupon Mr. J. W. Perry, a Kansas City bank president, took the lead in asking that company to do its part in making up the public share of Mr. Long's proposition. And the sum of $120,000 was raised in pledges on the spot. The remainder will be secured very shortly, without doubt, and the purchase of the ground actually accomplished.

In a talk with Mr. Long he set forth his conception of the National Christian hospital which his gift is intended to found. It is to be thoroughly unsectarian. One-third of its beds are to be free, if so large a proportion is called for at any one time. He hopes to see it established not in the crowded part of the city but on a piece of ground affording ample room for air and outlook and for additional buildings. The initial buildings will be designed with a view to such additions without mixing the architecture.

It should be said that this offer of Mr. Long's is the greatest single gift ever made to an enterprise of the Disciples of Christ. Professor Taylor in his Social Survey department in this issue interprets editorially its significance.

The Nomenclature of Unity.

In the drawing together of the denominations looking toward ultimate unity it is increasingly felt that a set of terms upon which all can agree is a matter that may not be disregarded. In the names applied to the various organic groups of Christians there are differences of choice in different groups. The Episcopalians and Disciples, for example, do not like to be called "denominations." On the other hand an awkwardness is bound to be felt at certain times in referring to either as the "church," implying, as it seems to do, that the body referred to is the only church. Bishop Brent in a London sermon the other day declared with surprising candor that "there is no warrant except perverted use for the application of the word 'Church' to any existing Christian communion in the sense it is commonly intended." He pleaded that the word "Church" be reserved to describe the mystical body of Christ which is one underneath all our distinctions. He says:

> The word is so majestic in what it connotes, that it cannot bear the restraint of adjectival qualification beyond what has been attached to it in the language of the creeds. A distinguishing word linked to it—like Protestant or Episcopal, for instance, is apt to contradict the essential meaning of the word. The utmost it can bear is a territorial or a national characterization, and only then if it is applied with understanding. Its careless use obscures the catholicity of its sweep, caging men in sectarianism and removing the stinging rebuke which it forever carries to a city that is not at unity with itself.

Bishop Brent would term the various groups of Christians indiscriminately as "Communions." "Not one is worthy of a better title," he says. "Then we could reserve "Church" for the Bride of Christ, that glorious Church, holy, without blemish, not having spot or wrinkle or any such thing."

The Bishop does not like the term "reunion." He contrasts it with organic unity as from without, while the latter is from within. One is fundamental, the other artificial. The movement for unity must not be conceived of as a return to a past ideal condition, but a going forward on the basis of our history and present possessions into the realization of the richest possible synthesis.

In both these points Bishop Brent agrees with the position of The Christian Century. With respect to the latter point it has long been apparent that the principle of a return to the apostolic church as a norm of the church of today is quite as likely to be a divisive as a unifying principle. The whole doctrine of "restoration" is misleading as a principle of unity. The history of the Disciples in America and in England is an obvious proof that however legitimate and even essential the principle may be in each individual Christian's own life and each church's own life it is not a unifying idea. There is just as much likelihood of today's church being divided on what was essential in the apostolic church as on any other matter. Indeed, the fact is that most of our divisions are over just that point. The real principle of unity must transcend those differences of interpretation involved in a study of church history, and of the Scriptures even. This principle will build unity upon these differences, allowing for them and for future differences that are bound to arise.

No, the way to union is not backward, not a return to some ideal past condition, not a reunion, nor a restoration. The way is forward, where Christ the Leader is, to a Church that understands the spirit of her Lord better than the apostolic church understood it and is, therefore, strong enough to meet the temptations to division to which the apostolic church succumbed.

The Bones of Joseph

The town of Shechem lies between the two mountains of Ebal and Gerizim. From the summit of either of them one can look down upon the place where Abraham first pitched his tent in Canaan, as one now looks down on the modern city of Nablous.

But to the thought of early Israel the most interesting spot in that valley that leads downward from Shechem to the sea was the grave of Joseph, not far from the proverbial well which his father Jacob had digged, and which was the scene of one of the impressive episodes in the life of Jesus.

On the long march of Israel from Egypt to the land of their possession they brought with them that sacred object, the body of Joseph. In his final moments he had laid upon them the strong injunction that they should bear his bones with them from the valley of the Nile to the land of the Jordan. And when Moses gathered the scattered clans of Israel, the one prized possession that was regarded with greater veneration than any standard or trophy was the body of the patriarch.

The body had been prepared with all the skill of Egyptian embalmers for its long carrying and its eventful journey. Nothing less than its arrival in the sacred land could satisfy the mind of the patriarch as he gave his farewell to the people whose deliverer he had been. And Moses understood that the final request of Joseph laid upon him the high obligation of obedience.

That journey was long. There were the Egyptian forts of the frontier to be passed. There were the waters of the Gulf to be crossed. There were the long sandy plains of the Red Sea region, and the piled up crags of the Sinai district.

There were enemies, human and beastly and demonic. There were sufferings from drought and famine. There were dangers from the mountain blasts and the desert wind-storms. There were delays and tarryings but still the goal was never lost to sight.

Perhaps there were days when discouragement sat heavily upon the hearts of the leaders. There must have been times when it looked as if the fair goal of their journeying would never be reached. Sometimes they wished to turn back to Egypt. And at other times they would have been content to abide by the oases where food and water seemed for the present plentiful.

But ever there was the urgency of the unspeaking patriarch in their midst. The bones of Joseph demanded the continuance of the journey. They spoke eloquently though without voice or language of an obligation not to be forgotten. No soil could receive them but that of the land of promise. Whenever depression, discouragement or suffering suggested the abandonment of the great task, that silent form forbade the plan and pointed them to the end of the way.

The whole of Israel's history was of this character. Long after Joseph's body had been laid to rest in the sepulchre at Shechem it continued to speak its lesson that the caravan must not tarry and the goal of the long pilgrimage of Israel toward a nobler age in the future must be kept in sight. Every prophet voice raised in the long generations of Israel's spiritual education spoke in the terms already suggested by the bones of Joseph, that the journey must not be abandoned nor the pace slackened.

The church of Christ resembles the caravan of Israel in this regard. There is no resting place until the goal be reached. Progress is the insistent word. The voices of leaders, perished long ago but still borne in the grateful memory of the people of God urge forward the great adventure.

The body of Joseph is still borne in the pilgrimage. It is not merely the corpse of some patriarch but rather the total sanction of the past with its glorious memories and its immortal hopes. Every prophet, apostle, saint and martyr whose name has made radiant the scroll of Christian history is a part of that insistent though voiceless Presence which goes onward with the host.

The Leader of that bears the preëminent name, far more glorious than that of any hero of them all. Even as Moses who led the pilgrimage through the desert was greater than Joseph whose bones were carried, so the Chieftain who leads on and points the way casts into eclipse every other name in the list of the centuries.

None the less the sacred burden of the past may not be laid down except upon the holy soil. The bones of Joseph can find their resting place only in the land of promise.

Not less is this parable true of the individual Christian life. There is many a pleasant spot in which it would seem good to tarry and abandon the high quest. There are places of gloom so deep and dark that one might well abandon hope, and say it is useless to go onward.

Yet there is the silent urgency of some impressive possession that must be carried onward to the goal. It may be the heart of a mother demanding the fulfillment of life's meaning for her son; it may be the expectations of a friend that will not be satisfied until character is attained; it may be the sacred obligations of domestic life or parenthood, of social service or of public work. The bones of Joseph cannot be buried in any spot short of the wished-for goal.

For the true Shechem is the place where we can at last lay down the obligations of the long career feeling that they are accomplished. And from the heights above the soul then can look down upon the fair valley of its arrival, and know that the bones of Joseph, sacredly committed to protection and transport through the long pathway of the desert, have reached the spot consecrated to their rest. On such a moment and such a spot alone can the final benediction of approval fall.

Thoughts to Ponder

Each tender deed and tone,
Each word, thought, sacrifice, that helps the world
By loving-kindness, use and charity;
Nay, "even one cup of water"—so He said,
Given in "My Name"—bring glimpse of God, and lead
Nearer and nearer to the law of Love,
Which shall be justified when all is known,
And the Eternal Wisdom whispers low
Its secret to the soul. —Edwin Arnold.

We are drawn to Christ by the deep and restful sense that we are known. Here is a Man who understands us thoroughly; who knows what we most need and what we crave for. And it is in response to that—which is the Gospel call—that we turn our back on the grave as Mary did, to find at our side one who has conquered death, and who lives to be our friend for evermore.—G. H. Morrison.

Civic Aphorisms

1. You can get a law through the legislature, but you can't get it enforced.
2. Billboards cover a multitude of tin cans.
3. One medical inspection in time saves nine doctors' bills.
4. Many playgrounds make light-hearted children.
5. Too many labor permits spoil the adult worker.
6. One tuberculosis case in camp is better than ten in a tenement.
7. All that's garbage is not collected.
8. Inspectors that can inspect and won't inspect should be made to inspect.
9. Uncleanliness is next to ungodliness.
10. Look out for the children and the men will look out for themselves.
11. You'll never miss the microbe till the river runs dry.
12. To the smoky city belongs the spoiled merchandise.
13. When the chimneys be up, all cats be gray.
14. It's an ill milk that bringeth no baby good.
15. Where there's a will to make a better city, there's a way.

From The Book of Gopher, by Mrs. Thomas G. Winter.

Is the Ministry Worth While?

A Life History of Another Color

The autobiography of a young minister printed last week has been the means of stirring up the author of the following article to tell his ministerial life-story. He has been a preacher for twenty-seven years, and reports an experience of a different color from that of his younger brother who spoke first. Which of these men's histories is the typical story of the average pastor?

The anonymous biographical sketch which appeared in The Christian Century of last week as an affirmative answer to the question heading this article, was full of interest and has moved me to write out of my very different experience.

The young man who wrote that sketch has been exceedingly fortunate—so fortunate that he knows only the sweeter side of ministerial life. But not more than one minister in three hundred has had such good fortune. Very many have had an experience akin to that imperfectly condensed into the following few paragraphs. To all such the ministry as a mere calling does not appear "worth while," though it may be highly "worth while" as a means of service.

Reared in Agnosticism.

I was reared in agnosticism and at eighteen entered the university of my state to prepare for journalism. Inside of four years I was converted to Christianity and turned from journalism to the ministry. At once I left the university and matriculated in a college of the church. After four years, having finished the course, I left my alma mater without a diploma because I had refused to be compressed into the institutional moulds. However, the diploma came many years later.

Even though without a diploma, I was called to an important church in a city of 6,000—the largest, oldest and richest church in the place. My salary was small—entirely inadequate to my needs and unworthy of the church. During my college days I had been married to one who was in deepest sympathy with my work and rendered most valuable service. Things were going on smoothly and hopefully. I was popular, drew a fine hearing and cost the church but little money. But suddenly there was a surprise for me. There was a local option campaign in the county. I made many addresses for the cause.

Interrupted in a Meeting.

In one meeting a voter arose and asked me the following question: "How can a minister like you consent to be the pastor of a church that elects as a deacon a man who rents buildings for saloon purposes, as your church does?" I replied that I could not and would not do so, but that I did not believe any deacon in my church was guilty of such complicity. The proof was furnished right on the spot and I went home that night with a new problem on my hands. A meeting of the official board was called and I brought the deacon's record up for consideration. There was no attempt to deny the fact that I had learned in a neighboring village.

A committee was appointed to meet the deacon and persuade him if possible to mend his ways. The committee met the deacon and was soon routed. Said the deacon, "You men vote for license in the state. As soon as you can show me how it is right to give the saloon a license and wrong to furnish it a building, I will do as you wish." The committee dispersed and never met again.

Pastor Takes Determined Stand.

I brought the matter before the official board again and told them that I could not remain with the church unless the saloon deacon was either converted or removed. After adjournment the officers gathered about me and begged me not to act rashly. They would do everything for me; even raise my salary more than I had asked; give me a nice vacation every summer, buy me a fine lot of books, if I would only remain and not try to work reforms too fast. Yes, they would do anything but offend the saloon deacon—that would be too much; his friends were too numerous, his wrath and popularity were too great, his family were too numerous in the church, and too powerful.

I Resigned—Saloon Deacon Stayed.

But I resigned and left. The saloon deacon held his place and paralyzed the church for fifteen years.

And the experience pretty nearly paralyzed my faith. My people, though agnostics, were reformers and moralists of the finest type. Before the Civil war, my father had spent a fortune in freeing Negro slaves, and since the war he had spent almost as much in the temperance reform. I had been born and matured in the very atmosphere of reform. On becoming a Christian I felt that I stepped onto the highest reform platform in the world, into the only real reform society that was worth while. At the close of my first pastorate I felt that I had been mistaken and the disappointment nearly landed me back in agnosticism.

Led Like a Lamb to Slaughter.

After a few weeks of rest I jumped into the first breach that appeared and found myself pastor of a church that had been rent and ruined by a terrible scandal. Some influential brethren whom I trusted implicitly had "led me as a lamb to the slaughter." They would not have touched the undertaking, but they induced me—a mere novice in church life and management, blinded by an optimism born in me—to undertake the hopeless job, while the knowing ones winked at each other.

Two Factions Pulling the Minister.

I soon learned the situation. There were two factions, each striving to control the minister against the other. I declined to be the champion of either faction and, hence, was soon left without support. I was obliged to resort to book-keeping to pay my grocery bills. In such a trying time the first baby was born, as was also my first big doctor bill. The church was a hiss and a by-word in all the region round about, and I gave up.

Crushed and humiliated by this experience, I went to another state and became head book-keeper for a large financial concern There I prospered and increased in usefulness and salary.

The Ministry Irresistible.

But I could not subdue the impulse to preach. In two years I gave up a fine salary to become the pastor of a mission church at less than a living wage. Into the new work I threw myself with renewed energy. The work grew and prospered in the most substantial way. As a minister and public speaker, I soon occupied the first place in the city. Again I was a reformer in the pulpit. One of the daily papers called me the "City Prophet." The prophet had to be stoned. Certain interests found it desirable to get me out of the city. They proceeded at the task very cleverly. The masses in the church did not know what was happening, nor did I till it was almost done.

Small But Happy Church.

I went to another state and was happily located with a small but devoted church where scheming and intrigue were unknown. but my salary was very small. An invitation to a larger church soon took me to another state in the hope of bettering my financial condition. But the move proved a mistake, for while it increased my salary, it led into one of the saddest chapters of my life. I need not recite the experience here, Suffice it to say that my reform preaching again caused scheming men to work my undoing for their own comfort and protection. And it was all done while I was popular with the church and no man dared say aught against me publicly.

I went to another church and remained nearly five years when the same experience, with slight modifications, occurred.

Then I had a pasorate where all things were very agreeable except that the church was content to remain inactive. It was satisfied just to exist and pay expenses. This church I left for my last field because of the larger salary.

Preached a Message for To-day.

This new work I was determined to continue during the remainder of my life. Accordingly I proceeded very carefully. I have ever tried to be a man of true progress and learning, keeping myself informed on the great problems and advances of the world. Accordingly I preached a message for to-day; I modernized the gospel and made its doctrines practical. Certain people took alarm, not so much at what I preached as at what I did not preach. They missed the "old doctrines in the old way," and the old slogans for party purposes.

There was a heavy debt on the church and my warmest supporters were on the notes. The people displeased with my preaching were able to scare the creditors. This they proposed to do unless I squared my sermons to their tastes or resigned. Of course I resigned. Thus again for the fifth time in my ministry a few balky malcontents, for their own personal ends, forced my retirement.

Cautious About Taking New Pastorate.

I am now without a church and my experience has been such that I am afraid to take another unless I know its real conditions before assuming charge. Especially is this true of my wife who, with the mother impulse for a settled home, has been moved from city to city and state to state until the family has been raised and yet she has no place to call her own. There is no particular call for my services because I have never been able to remain in a field long enough to do a constructive work. My methods are educational and not emotional, and there is a demand for the minister that gets quick results rather than abiding results.

Not a Freak Minister.

I am no freak of a minister. I am a peace-loving, honest, hard-working fellow who has for over a quarter of a century poured his money and his life blood into his work. I have always been considered one of the most active ministers and one of the best preachers in my city; have always made the church prosper in the truest sense; have always been popular inside and outside the church, and have never left a church except against the wish of a vast majority and at the behest of a few schemers. I have always enjoyed my work; the service and association have been the joy of my life; for the time being I forgot my own needs in the joy of my work for the cause; but those needs now stare me in the face and roar in my ears.

An Optimist Despite All!

Is the ministry worth while? Yes, a thousand times, yes! Not, however, as a mere profession; but as an opportunity for service. As a profession it has been nothing to me. As an opportunity for service, it has satisfied my soul. Yet I wish the churches were wiser as to the minister.

Daniel and his companions said to Nebuchadnezzar: "Our God is able to save us from the fiery furnace; but even if he is not, we will not worship the golden image." A ministry with the spirit of Daniel is needed—men who will say as they look towards the pulpit, "The salary may be good; but if not, I shall enter nevertheless, for there are greater rewards."

University Days of the Campbells

Researches in Glasgow University Archives and Environs

BY ERRETT GATES.

Robert Muter's Communion Token.

There is no date given in Richardson's Memoirs for Thomas Campbell's entrance into the University of Glasgow; nor is there any date given for his completion of his work. Richardson states that he completed the full course of three years required for divinity students; but whether this meant graduation and the taking of a degree is not stated. Thomas Campbell's name does not appear among the graduates of the university.

One of the objects I had in visiting the university and examining its records was to clear up this dark portion in the life of Thomas Campbell. I made three or four different trips to the university and enlisted the assistance of the registrar in a search for the name of Thomas Campbell upon their records. We went together over the discolored pages of sheep-skin in the registration book of 1750 to 1815, but were unable to find his name recorded anywhere. If we were shut up to the records of the university for our information concerning his studentship there, we should have to say that Thomas Campbell never studied in the University of Glasgow.

Such an omission of his name from the records is not surprising, however, when it is discovered that there was no systematic registration of students by the officials of the university in the eighteenth century. It seems to have been left optional with the student whether he signed the book or not. That condition of things was changed in the early part of the nineteenth century. The registration and record of student attendance and work grows more complete and detailed as the century advances.

Curious and Precious Relic.

That registration book of the eighteenth century is a curious and precious old relic. It is folio size, with vellum leaves and cover. The pages are perfectly plain, on some in the latter part of it a single line is drawn through the center from top to bottom, to separate the two columns of names. The student signed his own name, in the Latin form of its spelling, if it could be Latinized, and added, in Latin, a stereotyped statement as to his father's name, his birthplace or home, and the numerical order in which he was born, if there were several sons. The girls do not seem to have been taken account of. This ancient record is kept in a fire-proof vault, and from the difficulty I had in getting access to it, I judge that few persons ever see it. Sometimes the appended Latin statement of birth and country is in the handwriting of the student, and sometimes in the professor's who superintended the registration.

There is no clear evidence anywhere, that I have been able to find, as to the years Thomas Campbell entered or left the university; and from the investigation that I made I am convinced that he never received a degree from the institution. He might have graduated, though there is no evidence for this; but he could have graduated and yet never have received a degree. Degrees were very often conferred several years after a student's graduation.

This great uncertainty does not exist in the case of Alexander's attendance at the university. We know positively the year and month he entered. I found the following record in the old vellum registration book, in which his father's name ought to have appeared:

"Alexander Campbell, filius natu maximus viri Reverendi Thomas Pastoris in Porochia de Ahorey in Comitatu de Armagh."

This entire record is in his own hand writing, both name and Latin memorabilia, in the list of matriculates for the year 1808. By this time the rule seems to have been established that the student should sign his name in the book at the time of his entrance. In his father's time, the student might sign it at time of entrance, or of exit, or at any time between, if it suited his fancy.

A really new piece of information, as far as my reading is concerned, I did hit upon concerning Alexander as a student at the university. I found that he was a "prize man" in the class in Logic under Professor Jardine. The graduating exercises were held May 1, 1809. The following is the report as it relates to Alexander.

"This day, the annual distribution of prizes was made in the Common Hall, by the principal, dean of faculty, and professors, in presence of a numerous meeting of the university, and of many reverend and respectable gentlemen of the city, and neighborhood.

"The prizes of the Logic Class: For the best specimens of analysis and composition on subjects of reasoning and taste, prescribed and executed during the session, and for distinguished eminence and proficiency in the whole business of the class, were adjudged to seniores, Thomas S. Crisp, England; Robert Douglas, Haddington; George Redford, Berkshire; George Lyn, E. Kilpatrick, Henry Biggar, Edinburgh; Alexander Campbell, Ireland; John Lockhart, Glasgow; Henry Turner, Newcastle; Archibald Baird, Glasgow; Henry Crompton, Lancashire; George Kenrick, Exeter; George Smith, Galston; Wallis Grieve, London; Geo. Catlin, Nottingham. Juniores, etc."

A Year of Incredible Industry.

He took other subjects besides this one of Logic, but while the names of his associates in the Logic Class appear in the prize lists in other classes, Alexander's name appears nowhere else. Richardson tells us that besides taking an unusual number of classes as a student, he acted as private tutor to augment the income of the family. His year at Glasgow must have been one of incredible industry. He knew it would be his only year there, and he took advantage of every opportunity. He doubtless sacrificed the quality to the quantity of his work. But it stands to his credit that at least in one class he stood among the first.

In reading over this old matriculation or class book, it is interesting to come upon the names of students who became famous in after-life. In running down a column in the class-list of Prof. George Jardine in Logic in the year 1788, I found the name "Franciscus Jeffery," and a little lower down, the name "Robertus Haldane." They were classmates, and one was to become the famous Lord Jeffery, who sat as Lord Advocate in the case of Alexander Campbell's imprisonment; and the other was to become the munificent supporter of the Haldane movement that influenced Campbell so decidedly.

The Old University of Glasgow.

Alexander Campbell's Church Affiliation.

One of the interesting problems that entered into my investigations in Glasgow, was as to the church Alexander Campbell attended and communed with while a student at the university in 1808. And here again Richardson deals in the most provoking generalities, in his Memoirs. He definitely states (p. 187), that he had to "attend service in the day-time at the Seceder church." He came from Ahorey as a regular member of that church and was careful to comply with all the regulations of the Seceder body, one of which was the express prohibition of attendance at any other church when there was service at one of their own. Alexander started in as a good Seceder in Glasgow to attend the Sunday services of one of their churches. But what church was it? Richardson does not tell us. He tells us that (Vol. 1, 188), Alexander went often at night to hear Greville Ewing and Ralph Wardlaw, in the Haldanean Circus, and that between them and the Seceder preacher, Mr. Montre, there was a considerable contrast."

Who was this "Mr. Montre?" I have searched all the published and some of the Mss. annals of the Seceder church and have not found an Anti-Burgher preacher by that name. I did discover, however, that a man by the name of Robert Muter was minister of the oldest and strongest Anti-Burgher church of Glasgow from 1800 to 1842; that his church was located alongside of the university buildings and was called the "Duke Street Church" (formerly Havannah). There were but two Anti-Burgher churches in Glasgow in the year 1808; Dr. Muter's and Dr. Mitchell's at Anderston. On page 188, Vol. 1, Richardson expressly names "Mr. Mitchell, at Anderston," as having been heard only occasionally by Alexander; so the evidence is almost conclusive that the "Mr. Montre" (Vol. 1, p. 188), was no other than the famous Robert Muter, of the Duke Street Anti-Burgher Church. It may be a misprint of Muter or a misunderstanding of the name.

Robert Muter's Church.

Robert Muter's church, with which Alexander Campbell held temporary fellowship as a student in 1808 (still retaining his membership at Ahorey), still survives as the "Cathedral Square United Free Church," having, since 1808, moved about four blocks from its old location on Duke street, and built a new building.

The new building stands, an imposing structure costing $100,000, on one of four corners, opposite the famous Glasgow Cathedral. The building in which Alexander worshipped was remodelled in 1871, and was finally sold to the North British Railway in 1880, and removed to make way for their immense freight or goods station, at the corner of Duke and High streets. The same transaction also involved the purchase of the old university buildings and their wiping out.

In my researches, through the kindness of the present minister of the church, Rev. James Primrose, M. A., I obtained an old print of Dr. Muter's church of 1808; and more interesting still, several of his "communion tokens," bearing the date "1802." These were the tokens in use in 1808 when Alexander Campbell was a student in Glasgow and a communicant of his church. Richardson has memorialized this very "token" in making a dramatic crisis in Alexander's life center in its use. He says: (Vol. 1, p. 189):

"At the time of preparation, however, he concluded that he would be in the way of his duty, at least, and that he would go to the elders, and get a metallic token, which everyone who wished to communicate had to obtain, and that he would use it or not, afterward, as was sometimes done. The elders asked for his credentials as a member of the Seceder church, and he informed them that his membership was in the church in Ireland, and that he had no letter. They replied that, in that case, it would be necessary for him to appear before the session and to be examined. He accordingly appeared before them, and being examined, received the token. The hour at which the administration of the Lord's Supper was to be taken found him still undecided, and, as there were about eight hundred communicants, and some eight or nine tables to be served in succession, he concluded to wait until the last table, in hopes of being able to overcome his scruples. Failing in this, however, and unable any longer conscientiously to recognize the Seceder church as the Church of Christ, he threw his token upon the plate passed around, and when the elements were passed along the table, declined to partake with the rest. It was at this moment that the strugle in his mind was completed, and the ring of the token, falling upon the plate, announced the instant at which he renounced Presbyterianism forever — the leaden voucher becoming thus a token not of communion but of separation."

Robert Muter—Alexander Campbell's Pastor in Glasgow.

In the vault of the Cathedral Square Church, I saw a box containing no less than two hundred of these tokens of Dr. Muter, moulded in 1802, and used by him at communion throughout his ministry. Those I saw were, without the shadow of a doubt, used at the communion described by Richardson; and who knows, but perhaps, I picked out the very token Alexander threw into the plate! I shall comfort myself that I have it until some one proves that it is not the one! This token is exactly one-quarter of an inch square. It is one sixteenth of an inch thick, made of lead, and has on one side the initials of the minister's name, "R. M.," wrought into a monogram, the date, "1802," and in a circle around the monogram the words, "Assoc. Con. Glasgow," meaning the Associate (Seceder) Congregation. The other side is blank.

Robert Muter's Church in 1808.

Tokens Sold at Bazaar.

The remainder of these tokens in the possession of the church were sold at a bazaar of the Ladies' Aid Society, October 27, 28 and 29. It is unfortunate that they could not be offered for sale to admirers of Alexander Campbell in America. I should have been very glad to have given a dollar for the one I got, but it cost me nothing.

Richardson's account of Robert Muter's speaking ability does not agree with the estimate I find in a sketch of his life in a history of the church. Richardson reports (Vol. 1, 188), that, "though a good man, and influential and even popular in his party, (he) was a poor speaker." The present minister, James Primrose, says: "Soon after his settlement, Mr. Muter's powers as an eloquent and impressive preacher were felt, and his popularity attracted such audiences that old Havannah had to be enlarged—indeed, rebuilt in 1801. Consequently, many of the thoughtful and pious citizens, as well as of the prosperous manufacturers and professional men—whose descendants, it may be, are now among the merchant princes, or patrician families of the city—joined its membership. Among the members of Duke Street Church in those days, for example, were prominent citizens like Bailie Graham, Hornbank, Govan, Robert M'Lellan, Esq., partner of Henry Monteith & Co., William McLean, Esq., and his son, William McLean, Junior."

Church Influenced Campbell.

Can there be any doubt that Alexander Campbell profited by his connection and acquaintance in this church, when we read (Vol. 1, 190), that he "taught a number of families, among which were those of Mr. Monteith, Mr. R. Burns, Mr. Wardlaw, Mr. Buchanan, and others?" In view of the fact that "eight hundred communicants" frequently sat at communion, can we believe that he was the "prosy speaker" Richardson describes? There are the most striking consistencies and agreements between parts of Richardson's account of Mr. Muter and his church and the account of the present minister. We ought to be able to frame from all the surviving accounts, a fair picture of the church in which Alexander cast his lot for a year. It was no poor, weak, declining affair that we are likely to believe it to have been from Richardson's description, in contrast with the wonderful popularity of the Haldanes and Ewing.

When Thomas Campbell was in attendance at the university there was but this one Anti-Burgher church, so that we can have no doubt that both father and son sat as members of this Duke Street Church. But no reference to this church has come down to us from the pen of the father.

Edinburgh, Scotland.

The Art of Having Time

The people who work the hardest and accomplish the most are not those who complain of lack of time. Those who constantly put their time to good use do not excuse themselves from duty on the plea of lack of time. The people who have the most irons in the fire are those most ready to receive and forge another. Goethe, one of the busiest men that ever lived, has said, "Time is endlessly long, and every day is a vessel into which much may be poured, if one will readily fill it up." And, again, "One has always time enough, if he will improve it well." But we are also to remember what another wise German has said: "To-day is the opportunity for enjoyment and work. Knowest thou where thou wilt be on the morrow?" A greater Spirit than either has said: "Are there not twelve hours in the day?"—Selected.

MEN AND RELIGION FORWARD MOVEMENT

Meeting of the Committee of Ninety-Seven in Chicago—Organizes for a Wide and Long Campaign—Banquet and After Dinner Speeches.

The Committee of Ninety-Seven is now in the harness for the most extensive evangelistic campaign ever attempted in America. It is called the "Men and Religion Forward Movement," a rather peculiar title, but when reduced to plain meaning it signifies an inter-denominational proposition to go after the men and boys of the country and bring them into personal allegiance to Jesus Christ. Meetings of eight days' continuation are to be held in ninety cities of the United States and Canada. They will begin next September, and the campaign may be extended over several years.

Organization For The Work.

At the meeting held by the committee in Chicago, January 19, a preliminary organization for the great undertaking was effected. This included the appointment of a large number of committees, the election of a secretary, the mapping out of the plan of campaign, and an agreement regarding the message which is to be proclaimed. Among the committees is one on preliminary organization, which is to undertake the work of preparing the ninety cities for their meetings; another on publicity, which is to employ such secretaries as will be needed at different times. Another on finance, which is to supervise the raising and spending of money; another on conservation, which is pronounced the most important of all, its duties looking to the correction of mistakes, the prevention of lost effort and the direction of activity toward the greatest efficiency; and a committee on traveling exhibits. What this committee is to exhibit is not clear from any information at hand.

Teams of Experts.

This is the name given to three groups or bands of evangelists who are to lead in the actual work of proclaiming the message and calling upon men to accept the gospel. The list of evangelists named includes:

Mr. W. R. Lane, London.
Rev. John McNeil, Scotland.
Dr. W. E. Biederwolf, Indiana.
Rev. Milford H. Lyon, Chicago.
Mr. W. C. Pearce, Chicago.

"Speakers for special events," include bishops, archbishops, governors, ex-governors, judges, famous orators, men of literature and college presidents. England, Scotland, Canada, the United States all are to be represented.

Rev. Roy B. Guild, of the Congregational Building Society, was elected secretary. He will have his headquarters at New York, with the committee.

The Banquet.

A banquet held in the evening at the Auditorium Hotel was attended by nearly 500 guests. A number of Disciples from surrounding towns and cities were present, and men of all denominations gathered around the tables. The after dinner speaking was somewhat peculiar for a meeting called to launch an evangelistic compaign. Some of the addresses were greeted with roars of laughter and rounds of applause. President Harry Pratt Judson of the University of Chicago, who acted as toastmaster, spoke briefly. James G. Cannon, president of the Fourth National Bank, who was to outline the purpose of the proposed campaign, went off on what he called a digression, which proved to be a good word for corporations. He said he was an optimist, and declared business men generally honest. They are asking to be shown. They want to know what is right and do it. Passing to the object of the campaign, Mr. Cannon spoke of the revelations made by the census report, that the trend toward the cities is tremendous and therefore the need of great effort for the salvation of men in the cities. Life in the cities is intense, business is intense and pleasure intense. Men must be given a jar to arouse them from their spiritual apathy. Their inner life has been permitted to degenerate. The purpose of the campaign is nothing more or less than an effort to energize the wills of men up to right relations with God through the gospel of Christ.

The Message.

Fred B. Smith, the star speaker of the country to men, got down to pretty serious business and talked with much of his usual force and earnestness. He said that he had been asked to make a specific statement regarding the message which the committee wanted proclaimed in the campaign.

There are three great outstanding notes, he said, which must be sounded. First and foremost here and everywhere, men must be called upon to deepen their inner religious life. The church is in pain of travail and not bringing forth. Why? Because of a lack of spiritual life. Men of the churches must come back to devotion to God, to the Bible, to prayer, and to holy life.

Second, the men of the churches must stand committed to stewardship, not only a stewardship of money, but also a stewardship of business, a stewardship of social life, and a stewardship of the whole missionary field at home and abroad.

Third, men must be called upon to accept Jesus Christ as their Lord and Savior. Here the speaker said he must differ a little from Mr. Cannon regarding the condition of men. He thought the picture presented was fairer than facts warranted. There is a peril of sin which must be heeded. Mr. Smith then made some statements regarding the invasion of vice in the high schools and the prevalence of nameless evils among young men which nearly froze his audience solid. The silence could be felt.

This address called forth some hearty amens and was followed by prolonged applause.

A St. Louis Judge.

Judge Selden Spencer of St. Louis had come up from Missouri with a whole suitcase full of jokes and funny stories, and for a time he kept the audience convulsed with laughter. He began by quoting the remark of a Chicago paper, when their third bridge was built across the Mississippi; that it was well for the people of St. Louis to be provided with as many means of escape from the city as possible. But after he was through with his fun the judge said that men needed an escape from sin and from the wrath to come. And his hearers were impressed.

Dr. Ira Landrith of Nashville, Tenn., made the closing address.

A local committee of 100 was appointed to prepare for the campaign in Chicago. The Disciples are represented on the committee by a few of their prominent men.

The Team-Work Campaign

The conflict of the Chicago Team-Work Campaign dinner with the date set for the Men and Religion dinner, whose story is told above, made it necessary for Disciple men to postpone their function to some later date. However this ill-wind blew some good to this city in that the larger enterprise brought a considerable number of our church leaders together. R. A. Long, of Kansas City, and P. C. Macfarlane, spent the day in the session of the Committee of Ninety-seven, and attended the banquet in the evening. The team-members, being without an engagement for that evening, came to Chicago anyhow and attended the banquet, Secretary Muckley and E. E. Elliott among them. Mr. Elliott reports the Team-work Campaign an enthusiastic success. The men are turning out in good-sized companies in most places, and the seeds of missionary and benevolent Christianity are sown in good soil. The team-work idea is a good one, and there is talk of a second tour on behalf of certain interests omitted from this effort, especially our educational interests.

The Financial Problem

Methodists Adopt a New Plan For Raising Money—The Scheme Outlined.

The benevolent boards of the Methodist Episcopal Church were so much disturbed over the small returns from their churches that they got together and devised a financial plan from which they hope for larger results. A statement of the scheme is now appearing in their Christian Advocates. The outstanding features of the new plan are given below:

1. A Prayerfully Conducted Educational Campaign followed by
2. A Personal Canvass of every man, woman, and child in the congregation for
3. A Weekly Offering for Missions and Benevolences, using
4. The Duplex Envelope as the most effective collecting device and emphasizing
5. Intelligent Prayerful Subscription instead of the Omnibus Collections.

The plan in detail, with the reasons for it, follows:

1. The Every-Member Canvass.

The great argument in favor of the Every-Member Canvass is that it increases the number of givers. It stresses the fact that every Christian man, woman, and child is responsible for the welfare of the Kingdom. Giving, like prayer, is a grace. The father cannot exercise this grace for his child, nor the wife and mother for her husband and family. It is therefore impossible for a few men or women to discharge the whole missionary obligation of any church. The Every-Member Canvass is the only way to reach the entire membership. The annual collection never did and never will.

2. The Weekly Offering.

The new plan proposes that the missionary and benevolent contributions shall be put upon the weekly basis, as is done now, almost without exception, for congregational expenses. The arguments for the weekly basis are, in brief: (1) It is scriptural. (2) It is educational. (3) It enlists a larger number of givers. (4) It makes possible larger giving, especially by those of moderate ability. Experience shows that it is as easy to get an average of ten cents a week from an ordinary congregation by the weekly method as it is to get $1.00 a year by the old collection plan. (5) The weekly offering to missions does not decrease but actually increases the offering to current expenses and other benevolences. This, to the worldly wise, may seem absurd, but it is none the less true and in perfect harmony with the operation of spiritual law. (6) It promotes prayer. Each weekly offering becomes both a service and an act of worship.

3. The Duplex Envelope.

As the name implies, it is a double envelope. It is 2 1-2 inches wide by 4 1-2 inches long, and is securely gummed through the center, to form two pockets, each of which is large enough to contain contributions many times larger than the average contributor is willing to give.

The one pocket is used for contributions to defray current expenses; the other for contributions to the benevolent causes. The envelope is perforated through the center, so that it may be torn in two (each forming a complete envelope) and the separated envelopes handed over to the respective treasurers.

The Christian World

A Department of Interdenominational Acquaintance.

Baptist

The Baptists of Chicago have before them the proposition of raising $50,000 for church extension in the city. They are impressed with the marvelous growth of Chicago, its commercial expansion, and its public spirit. They realize that Chicago has a strategic location and that a man in Chicago counts for much in American life. The responsibility for preaching the gospel of love to the people of the city rests upon its churches. The Baptists are called upon to do their full share.

One writer in The Standard says Chicago Baptists need fifty thousand dollars for church extension because of the need of the suburbs. "Denominational strength is being gathered more and more into the suburban church. With the steady improvement in transportation facilities and the increasing pressure from expanding business upon the residence area in the city, the annual suburban exodus must grow rather than diminish. Where the city church is not disintegrated its character is so materially changed that its former strength and leadership suffer. If the denomination cannot find its place in the rapidly-forming suburb, its influence in the city is seriously threatened."

Dr. Shailer Mathews defends the thesis that the Baptist denomination in Chicago must expand if it is to hold its own. "We must found and house new churches or be weaker ten years hence than we are to-day. The past fifteen years have seen a few feeble, and even mission churches, grow strong and influential. But these churches have not begun to consume our strength. A careful estimate has convinced me that within the next five years there ought to be eighteen or twenty buildings erected, if the denomination is to hold its own in point of efficiency, both financially and spiritually. I do not mean to be an alarmist, but I do mean to insist that the Baptists of Chicago face the situation and be ready to make some reasonable sacrifice in the interest of denominational efficiency, which we all believe means so much to the spread of the gospel and the evangelization of this metropolis. We are glad to see other denominations growing, but I do not want to see them grow at our expense."

Presbyterian

The difficulties connected with the attempt of the Presbyterian Church and the Presbyterian Church South, to work in harmony are discussed with frankness and in a Christian spirit by the editor of the Presbyterian Advance. "We love our brethren of the Southern church. We would do nothing to harm them—nay, we would do nothing to hinder them, in their legitimate work. We are even looking forward to the time when all our differences will be forgotten. All that we ask is that we be shown the same consideration which we are ready to show; that we be accorded equal rights with all other people in the land of our birth, where we, and our fathers before us, have labored for generations. We would rob our brethren of no field in the South which is theirs by right of possession. In cases of joint possession, where the interests of our common cause are hindered by two churches where there should be only one, we are ready for the Christian comity which should apply. In new territory, we are willing that there shall be the fullest and frankest consideration of the rights of our respective churches in the establishment of missions. In cases where our sister church has members accessible to congregations of their own, we readily engage to let them alone, with the understanding that, under similar conditions, they let ours alone. In short, we simply ask for that consideration which they would not think of withholding from any other denomination."

Congregational

Congregationalists are engaged in a "Together Campaign." The task of reconstructing Congregationalism has been entered upon. The National Council has voted to unify the interests of the denomination. The action of the Council is now the subject of discussion. "Let the issue be clearly stated," says the Congregationalist and Christian World. "Begin with the most sensitive nerve of many a church member—his pocket-book. The Council voted practically unanimously to ask the churches for one cent more per member than they have been receiving. This with the state tax will make the assessment in Massachusetts, for example, this coming year, eight cents per member. What is to be done with the extra sum sought? If efficiency means more money yearly from the average church let that church not simply be prodded for its due share, but be aware of the benefits arising from larger expenditures.

"The Council voted to relate if possible our national missionary societies to itself. From the point of view of the local church and Deacon John Smith what advantages will there be in such action? Will there be a real gain in efficiency?

"The Council voted in favor of a paid secretary to promote if possible greater friendliness between the churches and men who work with their hands. It also voted in favor of a secretary to promote the Apportionment Plan whereby each church shall do its full share in supporting our common enterprises. Both of these men are already at work. Let the local associations and state conferences ask how they may co-operate with these men.

"Only through free and general discussion by local churches when they come together and by themselves can interest in the "New Congregationalism" be deepened and each church be made to realize its responsibility. Congregationalists cannot be driven or hurried; they can be persuaded, guided, and incited."

Men whose ancestors fought against ecclesiastical tyranny may have fears that the Congregationalists are going backward and not forward when they make plans for more efficient organization. But is not representative government as necessary in churches as in states? Besides, Congregationalists are organizing for work and not for the definition of doctrine. A distinguished preacher once said, "Our fathers discarded the festivals of the church. They did well. We also do well to restore them." He meant that the fathers had to discard the festivals in order to show their rejection of the wrong ideas connected with them. Later generations may express their life through festivals that formerly served to express radically different conceptions of life. Men of the present can consistently praise their fathers for resistance to tyranny in the church while they are advocating a closer organization for common work among the churches of the present.

Methodist

That three and a half million members, under the guidance of twenty thousand preachers, should spend ten million dollars a year for extension at home and abroad and gain in membership less than fifty thousand is disquieting to Methodists whose eyes are open. They are confident that Methodism has a gospel that men need and they know that there are many men without the gospel. What, then, is wrong? The answer of the Northwestern Christian Advocate is: "A gospel shown to be efficient in the church is the first condition of compelling interest on the part of those who are without." It continues:

"When the church is awakened the world takes notice. There is a quick and powerful contagion in religious earnestness Spiritual passion spreads like a fire. But the earnestness and the passion must be genuine; they must be of the very texture of the common religious life. The church suffers from revival occasionalism. There are zeal and effort two, three, four weeks in the year; and the rest of the year there are apparent indifference and a somnolent pedestrianism. No sensible man is greatly impressed by such a spectacle. He is more likely to feel that the occasional spurt of religious zeal and effort is professional and a trifle perfunctory, and that as soon as it is over the church will care just as much or just as little as it did before the effort. A friend tells of one good woman who wrote of her church: 'We have an annual spasm in January. For thirty days we hear nothing but "Rescue the perishing; care for the dying," but as soon as the meetings are over we settle down in ease and the gospel of the perishing is not mentioned for another year.' A revival that is 'worked up' is soon 'worked out'; and a church at ease for eleven months is a serious handicap to the church distressed for one month. By the time the curious outsider has recovered from his surprise that the church should be distressed at all, the church is at ease again and the outsider is surprised at his surprise."

Many a pastor thinks he has no aptitude for evangelism simply because he cannot use the methods of the "professional" evangelist. "There are ministers so constituted that the idea of making people stand up to witness their acceptance with God, or sit down to witness their want of such acceptance, or sign cards to witness their desire for such acceptance, would be unconquerably repellant. To them the use of posters, of electric signs, of press notices, and all the paraphernalia of publicity is a sin against decency and the spirit of worship. They cannot away with it. Having identified this with evangelistic method they find in themselves no aptitude for evangelism. The cure for this is a better and larger view of the evangelistic commission. To ask one of the official board in a frank yet intimate way concerning the religious welfare of his family; to make friends with a man of no religious profession or persuasion and in the confidence of personal talk to direct his mind to the higher friendship in God; to have and to show a neighborly concern for the careless and apparently indifferent young man or young woman and by a word or a note or a gift to start a new and better course of thinking; to come before the boys and girls of the Sunday-school and make an appeal to susceptible minds in behalf of God, and one's own love for them, of a noble life, and a blameless appearing in judgment —all these are evangelistic methods quite as worthy, quite as valid, quite as far-reaching as any displayed by the modern professional campaigner."

Rainier of the Last Frontier

BY

JOHN MARVIN DEAN

AUTHOR OF

"THE PROMOTION, ETC."

Copyright 1910, By John Marvin Dean

CHAPTER X—CONTINUED.

The secretary was listening intently to the noise above. He had no pleasant memories of Lately, the former prig of the Provo Guard. But he was strange to say tender and pitiful in spirit as he listened to the man above. Down in his precious sack there was a medicine for Lately and he was glad for the chance to apply it to his erstwhile enemy.

"All right," he said absently to the guard. "I'll go over with you in a minute. McManus had better report my little brush to the sergeant of the guard. And, besides, I've a little mess of Christmas stuff for the men in my bag here. That's why I came over, you know. I thought you fellows might enjoy your mail on Christmas. You see it just got into Iloilo and the ambulance wasn't coming over until day after tomorrow. So they let me have it."

The secretary was painfully kneeling at the last sentence and began fumbling at the sack.

"Strike a match, one of you," he suggested.

"Well, I'll be ——! say, you're all right!"

By the light of the sulphur match McManus was looking at the kneeling secretary with open admiration, and the headquarter's guard had laid down his rifle and was helping to spread out the letters as directed.

A bright red drop from the secretary's forehead splashed like a seal upon a square envelope engrossed in a refined but quavering feminine hand as he held it up tremblingly to McManus' second match and said:

"That's the one. I knew I had one for him. Looks like a mother's message, men. Just tie a cartridge to it and toss it in the window. Then get ready and we'll shout, 'Merry Christmas,' all together."

Even as he spoke from over the plaza behind them came the echo of a drinking chant from the barracks' celebration, and just above their heads the Tribunal windows were vomiting forth blasphemies. McManus fumbled a moment in the gloom of the plaza and then the weighted missive shot up over the balcony and rattled across the floor of the "C. O.'s" quarters, while three hearty, but anxious, voices shouted:

"Mail's in, sir. Merry Christmas."

* * * * * * * * * * *

The cursing and singing above them had ceased. Utter silence in the Tribunal. Then the three heard the officer's feet creaking from his cot to the message lying midway of his room. Again silence. Then a head appeared outlined in the square of light over them and a shaky but quiet voice said:

"Sentry."

Guns below rattled, and the two soldiers saluted.

"See that the men get their mail at once."

"Yes, sir."

"And, sentry—listen"—Lately's voice had even conquered its tremor. "Whoever brought that mail in—why, my love to him—and a merry Christmas."

CHAPTER XI.

"To Tea or Not to Tea."

Rainier received on the third morning after the successful feat of high finance a call from Lieutenant Carlisle, who undertook to pay over some $500.00 in gold to the hands of the stevedore. He evinced no few signs of amazement when Rainier calmly stated that the whole obligation had been met, he having cheerfully but privately undertaken to render back in personal service to McBurney's work the amount borrowed from the Association treasury. He did not explain the matter, but simply assured the officer that the ransom had been settled.

The lieutenant departed with a rather effusive manner. Poor Carlisle had no money to spare and had borrowed of others his fourth of the $500.00. For a blanked civilian, thought he, Rainier wasn't a bad sort, even though Sevier did rub it in about his being a dirty beachcomber. Cursed if he (Carlisle) didn't see more to be admired in Rainier, whatever his origin, than in that shadow of Miss Royce, Dr. Curt Sevier.

The day of Carlisle's visit came also a sweet scented note that poor Rainier opened with a dangerously high pressure heart. You would hardly have thought his old brain fever had left him had you witnessed the shameful shaking of his hand.

He was aglow with gladness when he finished it.

"Dear Mr. Rainier:—I have learned from Miss Carroll that our deliverance of three days past was from the terrible renegade Fagan himself. May God reward you for your splendid coolness and the wonderful way in which you served us in our time of fearful need.

"If I appeared rather indifferent to you for the service rendered it was because I felt somewhat humiliated to find myself so deeply in the debt of one toward whom (I must be frank) I had formed a most decided aversion.

"I am beginning to feel that I must have been misinformed concerning you—in fact, I am sure of it. I do wish humbly to thank you for your act of wise and modest heroism.

"Miss Carroll and myself have a little old-maidish custom of serving tea to those who care for it on Thursday afternoons from three o'clock to five. Could you endure the tea tomorrow that we may have a chance to chat with you?

"We shall expect you unless you write otherwise. Bernicia Royce.

Rainier carefully folded the little sheet of tinted paper back into its square, dainty envelope. Then as carefully he withdrew it and feasted on its lines again.

What a crooked, deliciously "scrawling" way she had of writing; the few sentences climbed east across the first page, south over the next, turned west around the corner and ended in a northerly twist and curleque.

And so he twisted the little message from one angle to another and pondered his answer.

Now he had received and answered many a similiar invitation and had long ago learned the fine tricks of carpet knights, but as he fashioned his ideas for his reply his smile left his face, for the solemn question involving Miss Royce and Sevier and his own growing affection made him realize that the grateful missive of the delivered girl had brought him to a point of vantage, of leverage and of crisis.

He who fights on the brink fights with grimness and knowing that the hold he had upon the object of his desire was hardly more than a tantalizing touch, he grew solemn indeed as he penned his reply. He had determined upon a daring course and only the fact that he felt she must feel the tremendous loyalty of his heart to her welfare blinded him to the inevitable response of her invitation and unsparing denunciation of Sevier.

Within four hours he had received his second note.

"Mr. Clarke Rainier, In care the Depot, Quartermaster's Office, Iloilo.

"Mr. Rainier:—The issue you raise in your note is a false one. I cannot feel it necessary that I should treat Dr. Sevier discourteously. He has been kindness itself to me since his arrival in Iloilo. It is true that he has not seemed friendly to you in much that he has casually said.

"But he is a gentleman, and I am deeply disappointed that in your hour of triumph over him—for you must realize that a man of so strong a type as he, was keenly alive to his helpless position in the Guimaras affair—in the hour of your triumph—you have tried to take an unfair advantage of him.

"Grateful as I am to you, I am certain that I make no mistake in retaining as my friend the one whom you so uncharitably suspect I am sure that you will see this eventually as I do. Your well-wisher, Bernicia Royce."

"All right," muttered Rainier, doggedly lowering his head as if receiving a blow "I've cleared my skirts. What little prestige I had I spent to warn her. I've lost her now, but so shall he before the game is finished. How whipped he looked in that launch, returning from Guimaras. Pretends still that he doesn't know me. But I'll take the pretense from him soon. Meanwhile he has his innings."

Sevier was indeed having his innings. His best pose with Miss Royce since the Guimaras affair was one of self-depreciation. He lost no chance of upbraiding himself for his careless negligence of their safety. He even said some judiciously nice things about Rainier, only taking pains to regret the man's antecedents.

His manners were on occasion perfect, his appearance strikingly effective, his visits at the Nurses' Home timed to a nicety. Not a wish of Miss Carroll or of Miss Royce but was anticipated. Lieutenant Lately, of the Provo Guard, was left biting his lips with so great a frequency that he scarcely complained when an order from his general transferred him far out into the interior.

Miss Royce was monopolized in so gracious but decided a manner that she found herself, as days passed by, yielding a little more of thought and time to the physician every day.

"Do I yield myself to him because of his subserviency or his masterliness?" she questioned her own heart in the seclusion of her apartment in the still hours of the Iloilo night. Yielding she unmistakably was. Her genuine girlish pleasure in men was beginning to be a more intense and disturbing pleasure in the presence and attentions of a single man.

"How little I really know of him!" she exclaimed within herself. "Yet how fully, how deeply, he is entering into my life. It frightens me as I think of what this all may mean. I wonder if Mildred has noticed anything? Dear me, I mustn't get silly over anyone. I'm sure it's more this glorious

(Continued on page 24.)

The Daily Altar

An Aid to Private Devotion and Family Worship

SUNDAY, JANUARY 29.

Theme for the Day.—The Human Temple.

Scripture.—Abide Thou with me.—1 Sam 22:23.

And they constrained him, saying, Abide with us, for it is toward evening, and the day is now far spent.—Luke 24:29.

For the temple of God is holy, and such are ye.—1 Cor. 3:17.

But whatsoe'er thy power shall make
Of these frail lives, do not forsake
Thy dwelling. Let thy presence rest
Forever in the temple of our breast.
—Henry van Dyke ("The Temple").

Prayer.—Our God and Father, Thy mercies are renewed unto us on this holy day. We awake with gladness, for it is a time of rest, of peace and good will. It brings us the consciousness that Thou art with us, and the satisfaction that comes from the fellowship of Thy people in the house of prayer We rejoice that on this day the message of the Gospel is preached throughout our land and in all the world. We join with all Thy people in the prayer, "Thy Kingdom come, Thy will be done." And we pledge our best efforts to assist in bringing the answer to the prayer. In thy temple help us to worship Thee in spirit and in truth. And may we welcome Thee to an abiding place in the temple of our souls. We pray in Jesus' name. Amen.

MONDAY, JANUARY 30.

Theme for the Day.—The Breath of God.

Scripture.—Thus saith the Lord Jehovah: Come from the four winds, O breath, and breath of life, and we have become living souls. —Ezek. 37:9.

The Spirit of God hath made me, and the breath of the Almighty giveth me life.—Job 33:4.

What lifts thee up? what shakes thee? 'tis the breath
Of God. Awake, ye nations! spring to life!
Let the last work of his right hand appear
Fresh with his image, Man.
—Walter Savage Landor ("Regeneration").

Prayer.—Father of all grace, Thy hands have fashioned us, and Thy spirit hath given us life. Into us Thou hast breathed the breath of life, and we have become living souls. For this gift of our being we praise Thee. We would lift up our hands to Thee in prayer for Thy mercies to us. We have no strength or courage of our own, and only as Thou shalt aid us are we able to lift up our heads. Bring to us the divine resources of the higher life. When we faint, do Thou sustain us. Make plain paths for our feet, and hold us by the hand till the journey be done. For we ask in Jesus' name. Amen.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 31

Theme for the Day.—New Heights.

Scripture.—They shall build the old wastes, they shall raise up the former desolations.—Isa. 61:4.

But they that wait for Jehovah shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings as eagles; they shall run, and not be weary, they shall walk, and not faint.—Isa. 40:31.

Standing on what too long we bore
With shoulders bent and downcast eye,
We may discern—unseen before—
A path to higher destines.

Nor deem the irrevocable Past
As wholly wasted, wholly vain,
If rising on its wrecks, at last
To something nobler we attain.
—H. W. Longfellow ("The Ladder of St. Augustine").

Prayer.—We put our trust in Thee, gracious God. We seem so beset with limitations and failures that we know not how to order our lives aright. Yet Thou hast not left us to find our way alone. In Thy word we have assurance and direction. Help us to rebuild the waste places under Thy guidance. We would find the path to higher ground, even though it be obscure, and over difficulties. Save us alike from satisfaction and despair. And bring us to Thyself at last. For Jesus' sake. Amen.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 1.

Theme for the Day.—The Guiding Light.

Scripture.—And Jehovah went before them by day in a pillar of cloud, to lead them the way, and by night in a pillar of fire, to give them light that they mght go by day and by night.—Ex. 13:21.

O human soul! as long as thou canst so
Set up a mark of everlasting light,
Above the howling senses' ebb and flow,
To cheer thee, and to right thee if thou roam—
Not with lost toil thou labourest through the night!
Thou mak'st the heaven thou hop'st indeed thy home.
—Matthew Arnold ("East London").

Prayer.—Our Father, we should like to live this day in such conscious nearness with Thee that all our words and acts shall be good. We do not always know what to choose. But in Thy word, and most of all in the life of our Lord we have direction and example. For these we thank Thee. Give us the humble and patient spirit. Make us successful in the effort to free ourselves from the things that are unworthy of us and of Thee. And may Thy presence be like the pillar of flame to make clear our way. For Jesus' sake. Amen.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 2.

Theme for the Day.—No Failure.

Scripture.—Let no man's heart fail within him.—1 Sam. 17:32.

I made supplication for thee, that thy faith fail not.—Luke 22:32.

He shall not fail nor be discouraged.—Isa. 42:4.

What is a failure? It's only a spur
To a man who receives it right,
And it makes the spirit within him stir
To go in once more and fight.
If you never have failed it's an even guess,
You never have won a high success.
—Edmund Vance Cooke ("Failure").

Prayer.—O God, Thou hast been to us in days gone by as rivers of water in a dry place, and as the shadow of a great rock in a weary land. Were it not for Thy mercies, we should utterly fail. But where our strength gives way, Thou comest ever to our help. We cannot miss the high purposes of our lives if Thou abide with us. Do Thou then sustain us day by day. For Thy mercy's sake. Amen.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 3.

Theme for the Day.—The Untroubled Heart.

Scripture.—I have trusted also in Jehovah without wavering.—Psalm 26:1.

He that goeth forth and weepeth, bearing seed for sowing, shall doubtless come again with joy, bringing his sheaves with him.—Psalm 126:6.

Asleep, awake, by night or day,
The friends I seek are seeking me;
No wind can drive my bark astray,
Nor change the tide of destiny.

What matter if I stand alone?
I wait with joy the coming years;
My heart shall reap where it hath sown,
And garner up its fruit of tears.
—John Burroughs ("Serenity").

Prayer.—Lord, to whom shall we go but to Thee? Thou hast the words of eternal life. In Thee we find peace when everywhere else there is strife. We learn daily to trust Thee more for life's fulfilment. We would rid our hearts of care and anxious thought. We would open our lives to confidence and hope, and thus find the serenity which our Lord ever enjoyed. Help us in nothing to be troubled, but in calmness and assurance to make our requests of Thee. We pray in Jesus' name. Amen.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 4.

Theme for the Day.—Mizpah.

Scripture.—Therefore was the name of it called Galeed: and Mizpah, for he said, Jehovah watch between me and thee, when we are absent one from another.—Gen. 31:48, 49.

Thou goest thy way, and I go mine,
Apart, yet not afar;
Only a thin veil hangs between
The pathways where we are.
"God keep watch 'tween thee and me";
This is my prayer;
He looketh thy way, He looketh mine,
And keeps us near.
—Julia A. Baker ("Mizpah").

Prayer.—Thou art the Comfort of our souls, dear Lord. Were it not for Thee we should be undone. But Thou dost give us the assurance that we do not go our ways alone, and that no distance can really separate us from Thyself and those we love. All life becomes our own in the clear shining of this knowledge. Time and space vanish away, and already we live in the beginnings of that eternity, wherein alone the soul can reach its final good. Hear our prayer for larger life and fuller trust. Amen.

Exercise and Rest

What is the relation between exercise and rest? Work is that at which we must continue, whether interesting or not, whether we are tired or not. It used to be thought that the prime requisite of rest was the use of faculties other than those involved in the labor of the day. But there is such a thing as fatigue which goes deeper than daily work. We can work so hard as to become exhausted —too exhausted for any kind of work. Perhaps this is will fatigue. It is coming to be regarded as fundamentally true that rest from such fatigue demands continuity: that, for example, four periods of fifteen minutes each of rest is not the equivalent of one hour's rest; that a man who goes on a vacation and takes half an hour of his business work every day, is doing the same thing as the man who had a horse with a sore back. He kept the saddle on only a few minutes each day, but the sore did not have a chance to heal. Rest periods must be sufficiently consecutive to overcome consecutive fatigue.—North American Review.

On the Way Home

S'posin' you do stub yo' toe, Emmie Lou,—
'T ain't no use to yell like you
Thought 'at it would come in two!
Goodness me! If I wuz you,
I'd laugh an' 'is say, "Pooh!
'T ain't nothin'!"

S'posin' you do see a cow what hollers
"Moo!"
'T ain't nothin' if she do!
'T ain't no use to run like you
Wuz mos' scared to death. Say
"Shoo!"
Tha 's the way I allus do—
Stan' right still and holler,
"Shoo!"—
'T ain't nothin.'

S'posin' you do hear a lion, Emmie Lou,—
'T ain't nothing' real-for-true!
Jist a shadder! Gee! I shu'
Heard sumpin' then, Emmie Lou, d'didn't you?
L'l'less t'try an' see which one
C'can beat! Come on, l'less run!
'T't't ain't nothin'!

—January Lippincott's.

Uncle Sam's Clock

BY WILLIAM THOMAS M'ELROY.

Every day, throughout this great nation of ours, millions of pairs of eyes glance at the clock on the mantel or at the watch in the hand and tell their owners that it is six o'clock or twelve o'clock or whatever time it may happen to be. If you ask a man what time it is, he will probably pull out his watch and say it is so-and-so o'clock. He does not say it might be that time or that he thinks it is that time, but he states positively that it is that time. He is sure that it is whatever o'clock he says it is.

How does he know? You will answer that his watch tells him what time it is; but how does his watch know? You say that he has set his watch by the town clock; but how does the town clock know? Perhaps you can answer this question and perhaps you cannot. A recent issue of the "Buffalo News" tells us how the clocks of the nation can say with certainty that it is so-and-so o'clock.

The clocks of the whole country are regulated by Uncle Sam, through the naval observatory of Washington. The manner in which the observatory gets the exact time is interesting. The observatory itself covers over forty acres of ground and represents an outlay of many thousands of dollars. In the observatory are thousands of clocks that are the finest and most accurate that can be made. Some of them are so minutely constructed that if they vary three-fiftieths of a second in a year's time they are considered bad timepieces. Most of us would be satisfied if our watches and the clocks in our homes varied no more than that in an hour, so we can understand how nearly perfect the clocks of the observatory are. The pendulum of some of them swing in vacuums, so that they will have absolutely no hindrance, and the temperature of the rooms in which they are kept is not permitted to vary so much as a degree all the year round.

But even then they cannot be made to keep perfect time. Therefore Uncle Sam's scientists, in order to give the world perfect time, must go to a still higher source. This higher source is the stars. "The only reliable clocks of the scientist," says a writer, "are the stars. These must be resorted to when it is necessary to actually find out what time of day it is." In order to do this, instruments have been built, and these, resting not on floors but on the solid earth, so that they cannot be jarred, record the minutest portion of the seconds by what the stars say. The time given by the clocks of the observatory is also recorded, and the scientist, when he has assured himself that the instruments have given a perfect record, sets the clocks accordingly.

Now comes the task of telling the world what the clocks say. One hundred and fifty years ago the naval observatory would have been useless to any part of the country except Washington City, for there would have been no way of scattering the information to other places in the nation. But people did not care so much in those days. Now, however, there is no such indifference to time and no such difficulty in securing it, and the second the hands of the observatory's clocks point to twelve o'clock noon, the news is flashed over millions of miles of telegraph and cable wires to every part of the nation. San Francisco and Galveston and New Orleans and Chicago and St. Louis and New York and the other large cities of the country get the message the instant the clock registers twelve o'clock, and even the ships at sea are not left out, for Uncle Sam's war vessels get the flash by wireless as soon as the cities get it by wire.

The Junior Pulpit

BY "MARK WAYNE."

BACK-YARD MORALITY.

"Isn't the snow beautiful and gleaming and white?"

"Yes," replies Mrs. Neglectful, "I love the snow. It does make my back-yard look so nice and clean. All through the spring and summer and autumn the yard gets so full of tin cans, and brickbats, and sticks and strings and broken glass, and old flower-pots, and worn-out brooms, and pieces of useless rags and all such trash, that it is a downright comfort when the snow comes. It falls soft and light and deep, and some winter morning I just wake up and find in place of my old messed up yard a lovely clean white square of snow. It is such a relief."

Now if you should walk into Mrs. Neglectful's front yard you might find it a very nice place. There is a rose bush on one side of the walk and fuschias on the other, two pretty flower-beds trimmed in blue and white and filled with flowers in season, tulips and verbenas and peonies; and along the edges of the wall are vines and along the walk are pansies and violets and London Pride and lilies sometimes, and you would find the front gate nicely painted, and the walk in good order, and the latch in repair, and you would say to yourself, "Isn't Mrs. Neglectful a splendid housekeeper? Isn't the lawn well-mowed and the flower beds well trimmed, doesn't she keep everything in fine shape?" But do you know, that all the while the back-yard, which she can see most of the day from the room where she stays most, has no flowers, nor lawn, only a straggling bush and a sprawling old fig tree—in addition to scattered pots and pans and bricks and cans and all the rest of the rubbish? Really, I wouldn't like to live at her house, would you? Her front-yard may be beautiful, but think of the back-yard, and one can't always wait for the snow to tidy it up—one would get ugly oneself to have to look every day on that untidy, rubbishy back-yard. No, we wouldn't be like Mrs. Neglectful for anything. We say, fix up the front-yard, that's all right, but clean up the back-yard, too, isn't that fair? I will tell Mrs. Neglectful the next time I see her.

But just a minute. I notice you girls have on nice clean pinafores, and you boys have your hair brushed and your face and hands washed. How does that happen? Oh, you fixed up to come to church. That's very proper, but how about being tidy at home, too? Didn't your mother tell you not to splash all over in the mud last week? Do you help her to keep you looking nice and clean? Be careful, boys and girls, ar I shall have to say Sunday is your front-yard, and week-days your back-yard.

I noticed one boy this morning touched his hat to me and said, "Good morning, sir," and smiled and looked every bit a little gentleman. But are you sure that when that boy's mother said yesterday, "Now, Johnny, please don't tease your sister," that Johnny didn't scowl and scold and when mother went away to her work, he didn't tease his sister worse than ever. To me that boy was polite and gentlemanly, but was he polite and gentle to his mother and his sister? He went to a party and said, "If you please," and "No, thank you," in a pleasant voice, but maybe at home he bawled out, "I want some of that," and stuck his knife rudely in his mouth

Wouldn't you say that boy had front-yard manners and back-yard manners, and that he needed to tidy up his back-yard? And if that boy managed to make everybody think he was a good, honest, industrious lad in public, but really in private he was too lazy to work, and told lies, and was greedy and dishonest, we would say, "My boy, you've got a very nice front-yard, you look nice and you act nicely and most people think you are nice. You've got a very pretty front-yard. That is a very good thing to have—appear well, make people think a lot of you. But be sure that your back-yard will bear looking into. Be sure it is not full of laziness, and lying and dishonesty and tricks and tempers and grumbles and meanness.

Clean up your back-yard for the snow may not fall this year, or if it does it won't hide your carelessness very long.

The Moral Leaders of Israel

BY PROFESSOR HERBERT L. WILLETT

Section VI. Samuel, Judge and Prophet

Lesson for February 5, 1911. Text for Special Study, 1 Sam. 15.

QUESTIONS.

1. What nations exercised a controlling influence on Israel in the different periods of its history?

2. What part of the country was held by the Philistines? What were the names of their cities?

3. What did Samuel do to save Israel from Philistine oppressions after the battle of Aphek?

4. Why was Saul's leadership a failure?

5. What advantage did David have in his contests with the Philistines?

6. How did David later employ the Philistines?

7. In what brief passage is the work of Samuel best described?

8. What was the center of Samuel's work?

9. In what places did Samuel hold annual gatherings?

10. What was the nature of these assemblies?

11. What results were attained by Samuel in these gatherings?

12. What view of the choice of a king is presented by the early Judean record?

13. What is the contrasted statement of the later Ephraimitic account?

14. In what respect do the reasons given for Saul's rejection seem insufficient? What is the probable explanation?

15. What was the reason for Samuel's commission to Saul against the Amalekites?

16. What was Samuel's great statement in regard to obedience?

17. What elements of strength and of weakness appear in Saul?

18. What was the value of his reign to Israel?

19. What characteristics are most prominent in Samuel?

20. What were the most important services rendered by him to Israel?

1. PHILISTINE OPPRESSION.

(1 Sam. 4-7.)

The entire history of Israel might be written in terms of the influence of foreign nations upon the land and its people. At the first Egypt was the master, not only in the Nile Valley, but also in Palestine; for at the time of the exodus the great empire of the south held sway over the whole of the Syrian coast land. Later came the Philistine period, extending from the days of the judges until the kingdom of David became strong enough to put an end to their aggressions. Then followed successively the Syrian, Assyrian, Babylonian, Persian, Greek, Late Syrian, and Roman dominations, reaching to the very close of the Jewish state in 70 A. D. There was hardly a time, from the beginning of the Hebrew nation to the Roman conquest of Jerusalem, when Palestine was not subject to or fighting against one or another of its strong neighbors. Of all these invaders none were more rapacious and dreaded than the Philistines. These non-Semitic people had apparently settled on the southwest coast of Canaan about the time the Hebrews were gaining possession of the central mountain range. While the Hebrews scattered themselves over the entire district east and west of the Jordan, subduing or absorbing the more civilized but less hardy Canaanites, the Philistines established themselves in their five strong cities, on the plain, Gath, Askelon, Ashdod, Ekron and Gaza. From this region they pushed out into the higher plateau or Shephelah, as they grew in strength, and later still they were able to control even the central range, to the almost complete discomfiture of the Hebrews. In the days of Samson there were raids back and forth across the border, the tribe of Dan suffering most because of its nearness to the Philistine cities. In the days of Eli the disastrous battle of Aphek was fought between the Hebrews and their foes, resulting in the total defeat of the former, the loss of the ark, the death of the priests, and the probable destruction and sack of Shiloh itself. Not for many years did Israel recover from this blow. As a result, however, of Samuel's efforts, the nation was wakened to a new sense of its power. The scattered clans were given a sense of unity, and were able at last, when attacked at Mizpah, to make a successful stand, which resulted in the victory of Ebenezer (1 Sam. 7:5-12.) But in spite of the confident assertion of the writer of this narrative that the Philistines were subdued, and made no more incursions into Hebrew quarters, but rather delivered back the captured places held by them (1 Sam. 7:13, 14), it is apparent from the entire account that they were in virtual control of the land, raiding it at will, and subjecting the people to constant terror and outrage. By untiring efforts Samuel put sufficient spirit into the hearts of his countrymen to give them hope of greater unity and power of resistence to these oppressions. And presently as the climax of his work he brought them to feel the need of a chieftain who could lead them in effective campaigns against their foes. The election of Saul was an experiment to this end. It failed because the people had not yet learned sufficiently the value of united action, and because Saul, in spite of great personal courage and patriotism, did not possess the qualities requisite for leadership in so critical a time. His attempt at kingship was a failure, and his forces were overwhelmed at last by the Philistines in the battle of Mt. Gilboa. David, who soon after assumed the leadership of the clans of Judah, and later won the entire nation to his standard, was far more successful. He effectively checked the Philistine advances, doubtless making use of his knowledge of their tactics and strategy learned when a mercenary in their employ. In more than one pitched battle he routed them, and broke their power so completely that they were never more than a second-rate military force afterward. Later still he employed a company of Philistines as his paid body-guard (2 Sam. 15:18, where "Chevithites—Peleithiles" is to be rendered "Cretans—Philistines"), and at least one of his trusted captains was a man of Gath (2 Sam. 15:19; 19:2.)

SAMUEL'S CIRCUITS.

(1 Sam. 7:2-4, 15-17.)

The youth Samuel, who had grown up in Shiloh at the sanctuary where Eli and his unworthy sons ministered, had come to be trusted even before the ill-fated battle of Aphek (1 Sam. 3:19; 4:1). It is probable that Shiloh was ravaged and the sanctuary destroyed, at that time (cf. Jer. 7:12-14; 26:6-9; Ps. 78:60, 61). Samuel seems to have gone back to Ramah, his birth-place, and that became his residence henceforth (1 Sam. 7:17; 19:18). The story of his service for Israel as judge, prophet and monitor during the next twenty years is told in three verses of the First Book of Samuel (7:2-4). There is no instance in the Bible of a notable public service extending through so many years described in such brief and telling words. All this time the ark was in a mountain village of Judah, whither it had been taken on its return from the Philistine country (7:1, 2). There was no sanctuary that had the regard of the people as Shiloh had possessed it, though there were many local shrines. In this chaotic state of things Samuel undertook the task of bringing the different groups of Israelites into closer touch with each other and greater loyalty to their common God. He did not attempt the creation of a central sanctuary, although by force of his growing influence his own town of Ramah grew to a notable place in the regard of the people (1 Sam. 8:4; 9:5, 6.) Rather he went about to the important places in the hill region of central Palestine, and in each tarried for a time and held services in the name of Jehovah, the national God. He seems to have chosen towns like

The Moral Leaders of Israel is a Sunday School course for Young People's and Adult Bible Classes. It will continue throughout the year 1911. The publishers of THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY will supply classes of six or more with weekly copies of the paper containing these lessons, at $1 per year for each copy, or 30 cents per quarter. The class members will receive in addition to their Sunday-school lesson all the rich things provided every week in THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY. The papers distributed to the class on Sunday will contain the lesson for the following Sunday. Orders should be sent through the regular Sunday-school Treasurer if you wish to pay quarterly; or you may deal directly with the Publishers, enclosing remittance at the rate of $1.00 per year for each copy ordered. Be sure and give name of teacher or class member to whom papers shall be sent for distribution.

Bethel, Gilgal and Mizpah, which were already reputed as holy places from ancient days, and were convenient of access to the people of the neighboring districts. (1 Sam. 7:16.) These places, and probably others he visited annually. His work at such centers was a combination of what we should probably call a term of court and a revival meeting. If a description of the essential elements of one of these visits is desired, it may be found in the account of Samuel's journey to Bethlehem (1 Sam. 16.) To be sure, that narrative presents the story of a particular event, the selection of David as King. But the essential features were probably drawn from his customary procedure in the various towns included in his yearly circuits. The people were summoned to a sacrifice. This was not merely the slaying of an animal and the burning of its flesh upon an altar. Rather it was a joyful assembly of all the people of the region; including all the children, and the celebration of a sacrificial feast as the central feature of a gathering that probably lasted some days. Of such occasions Samuel took advantage to preach the message of God to the nation, its essential unity, its high destiny, the lives and hopes of the patriarchs, the work of Moses, the providences of Jehovah in the exodus, the possession of Canaan and the measure of success they had attained in resisting their enemies, the Philistines. Such a moment was strategic for insistence upon the need of obedience to Jehovah, the abandonment of all images, the Baals and Astartes that they were often tempted to use in worship, and their faithful devotion to their God and the principles of his religion. It is not to be understood that this description in 1 Sam. 7:2-4 refers to any one episode of Samuel's long and faithful service. Rather is it the statement of the message he was accustomed to preach everywhere and on all occasions. It must have included not only injunctions regarding religious duties, but as well those which related to daily life and the obligations of the members of the different groups to each other. The effect of such constant activity on the part of the prophet was felt throughout the clans, at least in the central part of the nation. Whether the remotest districts were reached by his work to any extent we do not know. But that twenty years of quiet ministry, even in the midst of Philistine oppression, gave the people a vision of their ability to attain the status of a nation and with the help of their God to make a successful stand against their hated foes. The people were drawn together after Jehovah (7:2, margin), and were ready for greater things.

3. THE CHOICE OF SAUL AS KING. (1 Sam. 8-11.)

The results of Samuel's work came to their best expression in the popular demand for a king. Twenty years before at the time the prophet began his labors it would have been impossible to conceive sufficient unity of action to wish a common leader. Up to that time the motto of the Book of Judges described the situation, "There was no king in Israel in those days, but every man did that which was right in his own eyes" (Jud. 17:6; 18:1; 19:1; 21:25.) Now, however, all was changed. The clans had been made aware of a common danger and opportunity. The inward revival of national feeling needed to take form in action. Samuel was not a warrior. His sons, whom he had called to his assistance as judges, were not of his type, but took advantage of their position to extort bribes. The urgent need of the situation was a king, who could be both ruler and warrior. What was Samuel's attitude toward this new phase of public opinion? Two contrasted answers are given in our sources. (1) The early Judean narrative of Saul's life which appears in 1 Sam. 9:1-10:7; 9-16, 11:1-15, regards the choice of a king as the legitimate and desirable sequel of Samuel's great work. In this account Saul, a young and promising Benjaminite, on a journey in search of the strayed asses of his father (or uncle) goes to Ramah to consult the seer, and is informed by Samuel that he has been chosen to lead the tribes of Israel. Unable to credit so surprising an announcement, he is confronted with certain signs on his way home, such as his unexpected and wholly unaccountable subjection to the spell of the wild "prophesyings" of wandering groups of prophets. Later, when an emergency rises in connection with the seige of Jabesh-gilead, a Hebrew town, east of the Jordan, Saul calls together the clans of Israel in his own name and that of Samuel, and relieves the threatened place. Whereupon he is approved as king by the nation. In this entire narrative the attitude of Samuel is that of one who approves most heartily the selection of a king, and regards it as the fitting consummation of his own labors. (2) The later and northern record of Samuel's career, as given in 1 Sam. 8: 1-22, 10:17-27, 12:1-25 takes a very different view of the matter. It regards the popular demand for a king as unjustified, disloyal alike to Samuel and to God, and fraught with peril to the nation. In it the people make their request to the prophet, who is surprised and pained that they should forget his own services in their behalf. However, he is bidden to accede to their wishes, not however, without warning them of the danger of the step they are taking. Then at a national assembly at Mizpah, to which he has summoned them, Saul is chosen by lot, and soon after Samuel utters his farewell address. These two narratives present quite different interpretations of the wisdom of the important step now taken in the choice of a king, and of Samuel's attitude toward it. In one, emphasis is laid upon the growth of the people and the need presented by the new condition. In the other the writer is concerned to witness against the sin of Israel's love of novelty in its government, and its wish to be like the neighboring peoples. Between the two accounts it is impossible and unnecessary to decide. Their variation is the best proof of the substantial accuracy of the picture they both present regarding the conditions of the age.

4. THE REIGN OF SAUL. (1 Sam. 13-31.)

The records of Saul's reign are very scanty. Almost at once it became evident that he was unwilling to receive advice from Samuel. The reasons given for his rejection by Jehovah and the prophet, his haste in not waiting for Samuel (13:1-15) and his failure to render complete obedience in the extermination of Amalek (15:1-35), do not seem to us quite convincing, and the sympathy of the reader is rather with Saul than otherwise. But these were no doubt merely examples of many acts of self-will and insubordination which the prophet could not condone, in spite of his real affection for the man. To Samuel the decisions at which he arrived through prayer and earnest meditation upon the nation's life were invested with the full sanction of divine authority. He did not hesitate to announce the will of God as this was made known to him, and to hold king and people responsible for instant obedience. It is in this light that the narrative of our special study, 1 Sam. 15, is to be understood. On the march through the desert the Amalekites threw themselves against Israel in deadly conflict, and were only vanquished with the greatest difficulty. Many of their tribesmen dwelt on the southern frontier of Judah, and Samuel, though generations had passed, deemed it a sacred duty of Israel's to wipe out the old enmity in blood. In so doing he felt himself to be fulfilling implicitly the divine command. It is no part of the duty of the modern student to attempt to justify that command, impossible as it seems to square it with the character of God, but only to comprehend the point of view and the age of Samuel. between whom and the final interpretation of God as given by Jesus so many centuries of progress lie. Saul was nothing loath to execute the prophet's fierce will on Amalek, but he could not quite share that fiery enthusiasm which demanded that not even a shred of the spoil, nor the Amalekite chief should be spared. But Samuel's rebuke gave occasion for one of the finest prophetic utterances of the Old Testament. Saul claimed that the plunder was for sacrifice. "Hath the Lord as much delight in burnt offerings and sacrifices as in obeying the voice of the Lord," said Samuel in high indignation, "Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams." That word was treasured by the prophets of later days. Saul's kingdom at best was hardly more than the small territory of his tribe, his warriors were his own tribesmen, his capital the town of Gibeah, and his palace his own house. In war he showed himself at his best, winning successes on occasion against the Philistines and his neighbors, Moab and Ammon on the east and north. But his successes were more than matched by his failures, and at last, in spite of his own bravery, the noble courage of Jonathan, the loyalty of the little army, and the hopes and prayers of Israel, he was overwhelmed and slain by the Philistines at Mt. Gilboa. His reign had lasted only a few years. A stronger hand than his was needed to guide the affairs of Israel. Was it true that in his last hours he tried to call up the spirit of the great prophet to counsel him in his extremity (1 Sam. 29)? In any event, he realized too late that Samuel was the real power in Israel, and that in losing him he had lost all.

5. THE CHARACTER OF SAMUEL.

The prophet whose career we are studying was the most notable figure in the life of the nation from the times of Moses to those of David. His ministry constitutes the bridge across which Israel passed from the anarchical and chaotic times of the judges to the beginnings of orderly and constitutional government under David. Samuel was the representative of his age, strong in his convictions of national duty, fierce in his hatreds, implacable in his resentments, but loyal in every fibre to what he understood to be the will of God. It was one of the virtues of his nature that he did not despise the illiterate, fanatical "prophets" who went about in bands, telling fortunes and declaring the rude shibboleths of the national religion. He drew them to himself, and made them the instruments for the dispersion of his message in the wider regions of Israel. It was not strange that at his death the nation mourned, as if left fatherless. He had done a mighty work. And to the close of the history of Israel there appeared no more devoted, untiring and impressive teacher than Samuel, the Prophet of Ramah.

FOLLOWING STUDIES.

The next topic will be, "Nathan and the Prophets of the Court." Following that will come, "Ahijah of Shiloh and the Great Division," "Elijah the Reformer," "Elisha the Shepherd of Israel," etc.

TOPICS FOR SPECIAL STUDY, REPORTS OR PAPERS.

1. Foreign influences that were formative in the history of Israel.
2. The nature of Samuel's popular assemblies.
3. The two accounts of Saul's choice as king. Their relative value, and their common points of emphasis.
4. The character of Saul. His strength and his weakness.

Christian Endeavor Lesson

TOPIC FEBRUARY 5:

Why Do You Believe in Christian Endeavor? (Christian Endeavor Day) Prov. 22:6; 8: 12-17; 32-36.

BY W. D. ENDRES.

We cannot do better on this anniversary day of Christian Endeavor than to study the reasons for our existence. Broadly speaking, there are two reasons for believing in the work of Christian Endeavor: First, its work is with young people, and second, it seeks to give them a practical training for an appreciation and a work in spiritual values, the only abiding values of life.

It deals with the young. It takes the youth with his abounding energy, his plastic mind, and his awakening soul. It seeks to influence and guide him as he seeks to interpret the flood of experiences, physical, mental, and spiritual, that rush in upon him, and to adjust himself to them. This is a time when independent judgments are being formed, when deep and abiding impressions are made, when habits of life-standing are in the process of formation, and when important decisions, life decisions, such as selecting a profession, a political party, a life companion, a church home etc., are made. This is a time when former moral training is subjected to the searchings of his own mind and independent moral conclusions are reached. A time, too, when the soul seeks harmonious relation with God. Who can over-estimate this boundless opportunity, if we are interested in the kind of men and women we are to have tomorrow; and more especially, if we are concerned about the soul's relation with God?

The motto held constantly before the unfolding and developing powers of youth is: For Christ and the Church. Christ with his outlook upon life, his poise, his vision, his grasp, his correlation of all things, his insight to human needs, his exaltation of moral and spiritual values, and his revelation of the Father's will, is the personal appeal to every Endeavorer. The call from the materialism of our day which is bent on securing the personal gratification of the hour, and which will turn every effort, and subordinate every motive to that, to the mandate of our Lord to seek first the kingdom of God, is a far cry. Many will not hear it, and great is the institution which is instrumental in unstopping these dull ears.

Now the Christian Endeavor, which is an organization within the church, seeks to do two things primarily—to quicken and deepen the sense of spiritual values in its membership, and to train its members to awaken and nurture this sense in others. For this purpose has the organization been built up, and the various departments been given specific and definite tasks. Does not the Christian Endeavor prayer-meeting promote the hour of quiet devotion our Lord loved so to have? Does not the work of the Missionary Committee, as it seeks and labors in behalf of Christian missions, live over again the spirit of our Lord as he sought and commissioned the disciples to go into the whole world in behalf of his kingdom?

Nothing is intolerable that is necessary. Now God hath bound sickness upon thee by the condition of nature, for every flower must wither and drop. It is also bound upon thee by special Providence, and with a design to try thee, and with purposes to reward and crown thee. These cords thou canst not break; and therefore lie thou gently, and suffer the hand of God to do what he please, that at least thou mayest swallow an advantage, which the care and severe mercies of God force down thy throat.—Bishop Jeremy Taylor.

The Christian Century

Published Weekly by

The New Christian Century Co

700-714 East Fortieth St., Chicago, Ill.
United Religious Press Building.
Phone Douglas 3113.

Entered as Second-Class Matter Feb. 28, 1902, at the Post Office at Chicago, Illinois, Under Act of March 3, 1879.

EDITORS

CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON.
HERBERT L. WILLETT.

CONTRIBUTING EDITOR

SILAS JONES.

SUBSCRIPTIONS.

Subscription price $2.00. If paid strictly in advance $1.50 will be accepted. To ministers if paid strictly in advance, $1.00 per year. Single copy 5 cents.

EXPIRATIONS.

The label on the paper shows the month to which subscription is paid. List is revised monthly. Change of date on label is a receipt for remittance on subscription account.

DISCONTINUANCES.

Special Notice—In order that subscribers may not be annoyed by failure to receive the paper, it is not discontinued at expiration of time paid in advance (unless so ordered), but is continued pending instruction from the subscriber. If discontinuance is desired, prompt notice should be sent and all arrearages paid.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.

In ordering change of address give the old as well as the new. If the paper does not reach you regularly, notify us at once.

REMITTANCES

Should be sent by draft or money order payable to The New Christian Century Company. IF LOCAL CHECK IS SENT ADD TEN CENTS FOR EXCHANGE.

ADVERTISING.

Nothing but clean business and reliable firms advertised. Rates given on application.

Church Life

The church at Aurora, Neb., has called Allen Lee of Lincoln, Neb., to its pastorate.

Leon V. Stiles is in a meeting at Henderson, Iowa, with the pastor, J. W. Jacobus.

A successful meeting has been held at Valparaiso, Ind., by the pastor, Claude E. Hill.

A. J. Hollingsworth, of Bethany, Neb., has been called to the pastorate at Peru, Neb.

An inter-church conference was held recently at First Church, Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

The church at Le Grand, Iowa, which has been remodeled at a cost of $5,500 was dedicated on January 15.

J. W. Marshall and J. D. Bowles have held a successful meeting at Lyons, Kan., with the pastor, J. Walter Reynolds.

H. E. Sala closed his pastorate at Fifth Avenue Church, Grand Rapids, Mich, on January 22.

C. E. Chambers, state evangelist of Iowa, is conducting a meeting at Grant Park Church, Des Moines.

L. M. Downs, former pastor at Downs, Kans., has taken up the pastorate at Jewell, Kans.

Plans are under way to organize a Brotherhood at South Street Church, Springfield, Mo.

Cloyd Goodnight, for two years pastor at Danville, Ind., has accepted the pastorate at Shelbyville, Ind., and is now at work there.

A. R. Adams, pastor of First Church, Saginaw, Mich., has as sermon themes on a recent Sunday, "Religious Principles" and "Shall We Confess?"

A missionary rally was held on January 24, at Central Church, Warren, Ohio. F. D. Calvin, pastor there, will be absent from his pulpit for a month, having been called South.

The meeting at Tipton, Ind., under the leadership of Evangelists Wilhite and Stewart, resulted in ninety-one accessions in twelve days

The meetings held at Central Church, Huntington, Ind., by the pastor, Elmer Ward Cole, assisted by J. M. Vawter of Sullivan, Ind., have had large audiences.

A new church is planned for Kearney, Neb. This will be a modern structure, with a seating capacity of 1,000, and erected at a cost of $20,000.

The congregation at Carney, Okla., are rejoicing in the cancellation of their church debt, the last mortgage being burned recently.

During the meeting at Table Rock, Neb., held by J. L. Stine, Charles McVay and the pastor, G. M. Jacobs, there have been twenty-one additions.

A missionary rally was held recently at Central Church, Wichita, Kans., in the interest of the foreign field. It was conducted by E. W. Allen, a former pastor of this church.

The pastorate at Mt. Pleasant, Ia., is still vacant, since the resignation of its pastor, M. J. Nicoson, who has taken the work at Memphis, Mo.

Chalmers McPherson will speak at Central Church, Weatherford, Texas, on January 29, in the interest of religious education and Texas Christian University in particular.

Through the efforts of I. T. Underwood and his congregation at Lake City, Ia., a handsome pipe organ has been installed in the church there.

W. H. Waggoner, of Eureka, Ill., held one week missionary institutes lately at the following places, Danville, Akron, Bismarck, Fisher, Paxton, Henning, Oakwood and Versailles.

H. R. Lookabill, former pastor at Remington, Ind., has accepted the pastorate at Milford, Ill., for the coming year. Services are being held in the opera house during the completion of the new building.

A successful teacher training class is one of the organizations of the church at Rialto, Cal. At a recent meeting, 75 were present, among them a number of members of other churches as well as non-members.

Walter Hanshalter and Benjamin Leach, students at Hiram College, filled the pulpit of Second Church, Warren, Ohio, during the absence of the pastor, C. O. Reynard, at Nelsonville, Ohio.

The revival services at First Church, Rockville, Ind., held by the pastor, W. T. Barbre, have been concluded. Much interest was manifested in the recent meeting at Coffeyville, Kan., held by Evangelist Bloom.

The directors of the Bible chair of Indiana State University at Bloomington, have extended a call to Walter S. Rounds of Brooklyn, N. Y., to take charge of the pastoral work at the University.

D. G. Dungan, pastor at Vinton, Iowa, has concluded his meeting with W. S. Johnson at Waterloo, Iowa. Twenty-four persons were added to this church during this meeting, making a total of 107 new members since Mr. Johnson began his pastorate there six months ago.

(Continued on page 21.)

Illinois Department

State Office, 24 Illinois National Bank Bldg., Springfield

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY is a national religious paper published by the Disciples of Christ in the interests of Christian unity and the Kingdom of God. While its circulation is nation-wide and impartially distributed among all the states, it recognizes a special obligation to the State of Illinois in which it is published. It desires particularly to serve the cause of Christ in Illinois by publishing its significant church news, by interpreting its religious life and by promoting the ideals of the Disciples within its borders. To this end the publishers of THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY maintain a state office at Springfield, the capital and central city. It is the purpose of the state editor to study the whole field of Illinois, visiting all the churches, reporting his observations and pointing the churches to ever higher ideals. Pastors and church workers are requested to co-operate by regularly sending items of news, clippings from local papers, parish papers, weekly leaflets, occasional paragraphs of sermons and any other information that will give to the state editor all the data for reporting and interpreting the progress of Christian work in the state. All communications to the editor may be addressed, 24 Illinois National Bank Building, Springfield. All business communications should be addressed to the Chicago office.

C. R. Piety began his new pastorate at Hillsboro, the first Sunday in January.

H. H. Williams began his pastorate at McLeansboro on New Year's day. His former field of labor was Friendsville.

G. Halleck Rowe closed a meeting at Alma, in which there were 27 additions. This church is now pastorless.

M. M. Hughes recently closed his third years' ministry at Eminence and started the fourth with hopeful conditions.

The Mason City church called Frank P. Welton to become its minister. He began his work January 15.

Pittsfield church is making preparations for evangelistic services to be held during the month of March.

Union revival services are being held in Havana, under the direction of the pastors of the Disciple, Methodist and Baptist churches.

Pastor E. W. Smith of Sandoval was remembered by his congregation at New Year's time, with well-filled baskets, in addition to a purse of money.

H. H. Williams of Belmont has resigned to accept a call to McLeansboro, where he preached the first Sunday in January, three additions resulting.

J. H. Gilliland and family are living in Florida for the winter. Mr. Gilliland is now in the general evangelistic field and will return to work early in the spring.

Centennial Church, Bloomington, is holding a meeting with its own pastor, Milo Atkinson, doing the preaching. Mr. Atkinson recently came to this church from Kentucky.

Evangelist Mrs. Clara Hazelrigg is assisting Pastor W. G. Alcorn in revival services at Lima. At last report there had been seven additions, five of whom were by baptism.

The church at Vienna will be ministered to by J. T. Alsup. Mr. Alsup is living on his farm near Grantsburg, where he moved from Metropolis.

J. Frank Hollingsworth is holding his own meeting at Fisher. The meeting started well, though a vast amount of sickness is being encountered.

The Talbot Creek church has located C. H. Shipplett, who formerly was preaching at Fandon and Colchester. His ministry at the latter places was for half time each. His new pastorate is for full time.

The Tallula "Booster" class gave their teacher and minister his "time" during the Christmas season, in the presentation of a beautiful watch. The Ladies' Aid Society completed the gift with a chain.

An all-day Sunday-school parliament was held at Beardstown, January 15th, by the Illinois Secretary, Clarence L. DePew and Secretary W. T. Fisher of Iowa. They made the rounds of all the services of the church during the day.

Meetings at Browning and Marine have been recently held by R. L. Thomas of Eureka. There were nine additions at the latter point. Mr. Thomas is ready to serve churches, either as an evangelist or as regular or supply minister.

The Pekin church is having frequent additions, under the ministry of O. C. Bolman. On a recent Sunday, the morning service resulted in one confession, while at the evening service, there were six confessions. The additions are coming without evangelistic services.

Waverly church surprised its minister, Guy B. Williamson, with a donation party. The abundance of good things brought will eliminate from this parsonage anxious thoughts for the morrow for some time to come.

W. B. Clemmer and Central Church of Rockford, are co-operating in a union evangelistic campaign. One of our singers, Evangelist J. P. Garmong, is directing the music. Mr. Clemmer, with Mr. Garmong assisting, will follow the union services with a meeting in Central Church.

The church at Ipava, where C. R. Gains ministers, presented an annual report, showing total number of additions, 54; $1,095.60 raised for all purposes, of which $202 was for missions. This church is blessed with a Sunday-school superintendent, who has been absent only twice in six years.

The Antioch Church, located near Rossville, is preparing to dedicate its fine new church building, which has cost $14,000, on January 29. J. Fred Jones will be the dedicator. This is a fine church building for a country community, where there is a strong congregation, which will enable even a greater work in the future to be done.

Central Church, Kankakee, under the pastorate of W. C. Livingstone, is prospering in all of its departments. January 15th, there were three additions to the church at the regular services. The annual supper and roll call will be held January 25th. This is designed to be a rally for all interests of the church.

Newman church reports a membership of 530, with an increase of 30 during the year. The Christian Endeavor society with 44 members is active and advancing. Prayer meeting has had as high as 60 in attendance. The Sunday-school average was 150. The money raised for all purposes was $1,565.87. The minister is C. H. Livingston.

Independence Church, near Pittsfield, enjoyed recently a meeting with Evangelists Reavis and Robertson, at which there were ten additions, and the church life perceptibly quickened. The minister, J. W. Pearson, is serving his fourth year with this congregation.

West Pullman church, with Chas. A. Pearce pastor, enjoyed a prosperous year. The Sunday-school has doubled, a boy's work initiated, 20 were added to the membership of the church, last year's missionary offering was more than doubled, and the treasurer reported a balance on hand for current expenses.

Wm. Price of Howett Street Church, Peoria, reports 12 additions during the last six weeks. Active preparations are being made for a revival to be conducted by W. E. Harlow. The entire membership is co-operating, and a census of the community is being taken. Mr. Harlow is now with the West Bluff chapel in Peoria.

Mr. E. W. Smith is pastor of the church at Sandoval and is holding his own revival meeting this winter. His church has a Sunday-school with 200 enrolled, so large as to make necessary an enlargement of the building in the near future. The church recently installed an individual communion service.

J. M. Haughey, of Mason City, well known throughout central Illinois, and who is nearing his eightieth birthday, sustained a serious injury recently, by falling on an icy sidewalk. His arm was broken besides suffering severe bruises. Mr. Haughey has only recently recovered from a very serious illness.

Jackson Boulevard Church, Chicago, makes its annual report, showing a total of $8,107-.67 raised, of which amount $1,529.14 was for missions and benevolence. The church roster showed a total of 166 additions during the year, an average Sunday-school attendance of 400, and a Chinese Sunday-school with an enrolment of 40. The Sunday-school attendance is larger than for many years.

E. L. Powell of Louisville, Kentucky, will hold a ten days' meeting in February for Central Church, Decatur, of which O. W. Lawrence is pastor. At the annual meeting recently held, the clerk reported 100 additions to the church within the year, 45 of whom were by baptism. The treasurer reported $9,573.23 raised, of which amount $1,120 was for missions, and the church debt suffered a decline of $3,000.

J. Fred Jones assisted the Keithsburg Church in an all-day rally January the first, at which time $500.00 was raised to concel an old debt. In the evening all the churches and ministers of the town united in a union service. L. F. DePoister is the minister, having been with the church less than a year. His faithful service is resulting in a very distinct advance for the church.

An average attendance of 164 with an offering of $5.81 is the report of the Lewistown Sunday-school. At the annual meeting January eighth, the membership was shown to number 229, with a net gain during the year of 38. $1,859.59 was received for all departments of the church, of which nearly $250 was for missions. B. H. Cleaver is pastor of the church.

First Church, Springfield, reports a total of 32 additions during 1910, with an average Sunday-school attendance of 292. For all purposes $9,136.10 was raised. Of this, one-half was for current expenses. For general missions $1,286.35 was given. In addition to this, $678.36 was raised by the two Women's Missionary Societies. We notice in the statement such items as the following, which are significant—$126.80 was given the State Anti-Saloon League, $618.00 was raised for the City Local Option Campaign, for charity $142.00, the Laymen's Missionary Conference, $130.00. During the year $40,193.00 was pledged on the new church, for which it is hoped ground will be broken by March 1st. A fund of $10,000 left in trust to the church at the death of one of its aged members will be available in February. The interest on this money, which will be $500 a year, is to be used as the church may choose for the education of young men.

A revival meeting is in progress at Lindsey, with A. D. Hasse, the regular minister, preaching.

There have been eight conversions in the Mt. Sterling meeting, conducted by Sword and Rice.

Chicago Heights Church united in a meeting with the Methodist, Presbyterian and Baptist churches.

H. L. Maltman, the pastor at Rushville; is being assisted by W. A. McColley, of Normal, in evangelistic meetings. The first week of the meetings was conducted with home forces, resulting in six additions. Conditions appear favorable for a good ingathering.

Rossville Church held its annual meeting with an election of officers on January 1. During the last year there have been 50 additions to the church. The pastor, M. S. Metsler, has served the church for nearly three years.

The Litchfield Sunday-school recently reelected John H. Taylor as superintendent for the sixth time. Mr. Taylor is among the youngest of the superintendents of the state, but has led wisely and effectively his school until it has become one of the leaders among Disciple schools of the state. Last year the school had an average attendance of 350.

B. W. Tate was welcomed by the Pontiac church the first week in January. Reports indicate a favorable initiation of his work. On a recent Sunday, more than one hundred dollars was raised to cancel a current expense debt left from the preceding year. Mr. Tate will hold his own meeting in February and is already organizing his men to have supervision of the personal work. He is holding meetings in various parts of the city for more efficient preparation for the campaign.

University Place Church, Champaign, is adding to its corps of workers a Sunday-school pastor and stenographer. Together with the two student helpers which the Illinois Christian Missionary Society furnishes, and with the finely equipped new church this congregation ought to be in a position to do a piece of work even much in advance of that accomplished before. We like the idea of the Sunday-school pastor. Some day the churches will come to believe the Sunday-school is worthy a pastor, quite as well as the church, and will be willing to spend the money necessary for the employment of a specialist in that line. It is to be hoped that the day will come when religious education will be considered worthy of as well trained men and women for instructors and leaders, as is the case today in the public schools. It is one of the glories of the church that men and women are willing to do this work vountarily and with splendid consecration. It is not the church's glory that she is compelled to accept this service from individuals who have no opportunity to equip themselves for it.

BEAUTIFUL SERVICE OF ORDINATION

First Church, Springfield, Inducts Pastor, Elders and Deacons Into Their Respective Offices—Solemn Ceremony Exalts Church and Offices.

The churches of the Disciples have a prejudice of long standing against formalism in religion. Such prejudice is not without some reasonable foundation, but it has led to an unprofitable disuse of ceremonialism, even as certain other churches have developed what appears to us a decided misuse. In a large proportion of our churches, pastors are called and assume the pastorates, in the most in formal way. Officers are elected, to have the spiritual oversight of the congregation, and no public recognition is taken of the same, except a very brief announcement from the pulpit or press. First Church in Springfield, the first Sunday in January, held an ordination service, the beauty and dignity of which marked it as one of the great occasions of the year. It was not only a new era in recognition of the services which these officers were to perform, but was also the initiation of a new official regime in the congregation. The church was organized nearly eighty years ago and for many years, if not for its entire history, new elders and deacons were elected only as they were deemed necessary by the official board. The congregation never determined when additional officials were required, nor was it the congregation's function to sit in conference for the purpose of nominating men who should fill the respective offices. The official board was self-perpetuating and asked from the congregation only a vote of approval when new men were selected by them for official positions.

Board Resigns Voluntarily.

On its own initiative, during the latter part of last year, the board devised a new set of by-laws which was presented to the congregation for its approval or disapproval. The new by-laws, as adopted by the congregation, increased the size of the board, both in numbers of elders and deacons and also by addition of the Sunday-school superintendent and president of the Brotherhood as ex-officio members. Instead of electing elders and deacons for life, or during good behavior, they are now elected for periods of one, two and three years. The qualifications for membership on the board, specified in the by-laws, are those indicated in the New Testament; also, any member absenting himself from three consecutive meetings of the board, without reasonable excuse, or who shall miss six such meetings in a year, or who shall, for a period of six months or more, habitually absent himself from the regular services of the church, particularly the Lord's Day morning worship, shall thereby be deemed to have resigned his office.

By-laws Specify Duties.

Beside the ordinarily accepted duties of the elders, the by-laws specify that from the eldership, a committee on membership shall be appointed, which shall have supervision of the church membership roll. It is the duty of this committee to annually announce for publication a list of the active members of the church. In making up this list they will include as active members, all members who have attended the services and contributed toward the support of the church during the year, or who shall have been excused therefrom by illness or physical disability. The names not included in such active membership list shall be referred to the elders for their consideration and action. It is further specified that regular church letters shall be granted only to those in good standing and full fellowship in the church.

Other City Pastors Assist.

At the morning service on January 1st, after thorough preparation, the eight elders-elect and eighteen duly elected deacons, after a solemn and orderly processional, took their places before the congregation. Their ordination was conducted by the pastor, assisted by the pastors of the West Side and Stuart Street churches. For as much as Rev. F. W. Burnham had not been formally installed as pastor of the church, though being its minister four years, this occasion was accepted as appropriate for such a service. Elder Charles P. Kane gave the charge to the pastor and church, which was followed by a prayer of consecration by Elder B. R. Hieronymous, during the kneeling of the pastor, while the elders of the church laid hands upon him. The prayer of consecration was followed with a beautiful response by the choir. The ordination of the elders followed with a charge to the officers-elect and the church, by the pastor. Upon their presentation, the congregation was asked to arise to ratify the selection of these men to the exalted office of elder and to approve their formal setting apart to this service. While kneeling, they were consecrated to the eldership by Pastors J. R. Golden and H. H. Jenner, assisting Mr. Burnham. The prayer of consecration by Mr. Golden was followed by a response of the choir. The deacons were presented for ordination by Elder L. H. Coleman. The congregation first approving their selection and consecration to the office of deacon, they were ordained with laying on of hands by the elders, during which the prayer of consecration was offered by Elder Henry C. Latham, which in turn was followed by a response of the choir. The service closed reverently with the hymn, "More Holiness Give Me," and the benediction, succeeded by silent prayer.

A Help to Others.

We are reporting this service for several reasons.

We have no book of ritual to which reference can be made, to guide us in services of this kind. It may be therefore suggestive to others contemplating the ordination of officers, to become acquainted with a variety of programs followed by other churches.

The unity of the three churches expressed in the service, is not the least in importance of the good features connected therewith. It is to be regretted that in every city, where several Disciple churches are found, perfect harmony and cordial fellowship do not exist.

There was also a reverence manifested, which is not always observed in the house of worship. It is to be expected, after an exercise of this kind, that the congregation will settle back into its normal irreverence with some degree of difficulty. Whether all will agree on the advantage of a ritualistic service, certainly none will disbelieve in the very highest possible degree of reverence in the Lord's house.

An Evidence of Permanence.

There is also in it an evidence of permanence. The men selected for the various offices, have not only been elected to that position, but have been religiously set apart to the same. The relation which these men sustain toward the church and the church toward them, is not one to be easily dissolved, since there has been the recognition of spiritual fitness and the appeal for divine sanction in their consecration. When an individual feels that his task is God-given, as well as man-appointed, there will attach importance to it in his mind, which could not otherwise be possible. It may easily be possible that in a very large number of our churches today religious motives and religious sanctions are not prevailing. Any formal exercise, which will increase these essential elements in the church life, is not to be waived aside without due consideration.

In addition to these features, there is a dignity cultivated by this kind of initiation to one's official responsibility which must be approved. The company of men inducted to office took much more seriously the office to which they had been selected than they otherwise would have done. The entire congregation was very deeply impressed with the solemn meaning of this which was being accomplished. If before, they had been rather careless in choosing the eight elders and eighteen deacons, there were none now but felt the very deep significance of the consecration of these chosen men to their respective offices. There was such harmony between the character of service and the feeling of the congregation in its highest moments, relative to these offices, that one would need to be entirely devoid of sentiment to escape the profound feeling which such a formal service created. It was gratifying to the entire congregation that thirty young boys belonging to the "Scouts of America" were seated in a section of the church reserved for them near the front. It was an object lesson to them which will not be forgotten in many a day. They were made to feel a dignity residing in the office of elder and deacon that probably none of them had felt before, and who knows but that aspirations were set up in their hearts which will cause them to believe that he who seeketh the office of overseer desireth a good work.

Eureka College Letter

The annual board meeting of the Trustees of Eureka College was held in Eureka, January 11. The meeting was a splendid one from a business standpoint. Everything indicates that the Endowment Campaign for the raising of $125,000 will be completed by Commencement. $100,000 is now pledged on the proposition.

The board created a new committee, to be known as the Endowment and Investment Committee, to look after the proper investment of the permanent securities of the College. After the first of September H. H. Peters will work under the direction of this committee and his office will be known as endowment secretary. A vigorous prosecution of the work will be continued indefinitely.

Chicago Quarterly Assembly

The program for the quarterly Assembly of Chicago Disciples is published. The date is Sunday afternoon, at 3 o'clock, Jan. 29, at the First M. E. Church down town. The address will be given by George A. Campbell, retiring pastor at Austin. Ministers of the city will sit in the choir. A new feature will be introduced in having the congregations grouped about standards bearing the name of their several churches. Mr. E. M. Bowman, president of the City Missionary Society, will preside and O. F. Jordan will call the roll of churches and make his secretarial report.

Church Life

(Continued from page 18.)

The Hyde Park Church, Chicago, received fifteen additions recently.

Wm. Bayard Craig, pastor of Lenox Avenue Church, New York, delivered an illustrated lecture on Sunday evening, January 15, on "Japan; the People, Country and Religion."

The church at Larned, Kansas, through its Woman's Missionary Society auxiliary to the Christian Woman's Board of Missions, has chosen Miss Nora Siler, of Porto Rico, as its Living Link.

William Oeschger, chancellor of Cotner University, delivered an address on "Christian Education," on January 15, at First Church, Lincoln, Neb., this being religious education day throughout the brotherhood.

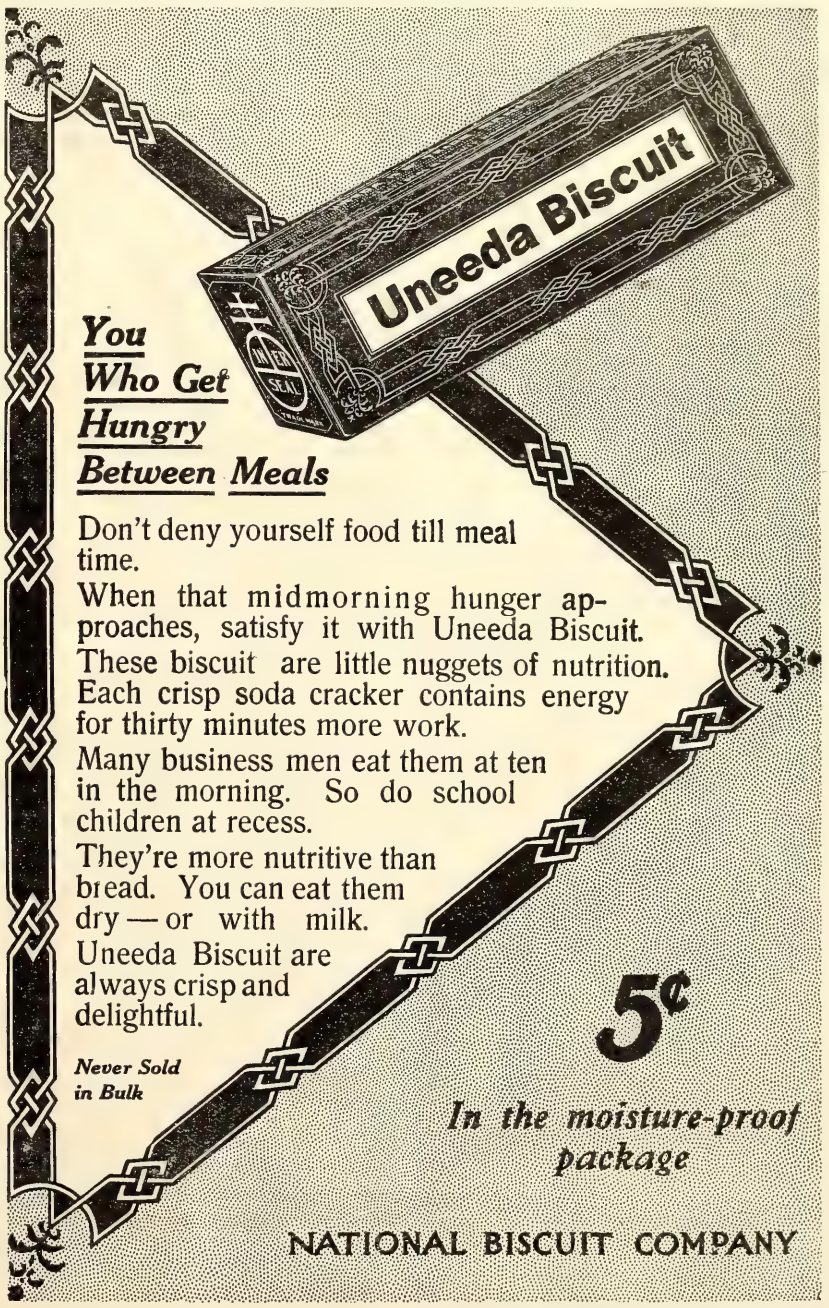
Preparations have been made by C. M. Chilton and his congregation at First Church, St. Joseph, Mo., for one of the most extensive evangelistic campaigns ever conducted by that church. I. J. Spencer of Lexington, Ky., has been secured to assist in the meetings.

The union meetings held by seven pastors of Massillon, Ohio, have created a splendid impression not only upon the church members, but upon those outside the churches, and it is expected that much good will result from them.

J. M. Alexander, Murray, Ky., has accepted the unanimous call of the church at Crawfordsville, Ind. A local newspaper facetiously remarks that it is quite certain Mr. Alexander will stand higher than any man in Crawfordsville, since he is six feet, six inches tall.

The enrollment in Christian University, at Canton, Mo., this term shows a healthy increase. The feeling of optimism is dominant. The students and faculty held an enthusiastic educational rally just before educational day. Most excellent work is being done in all departments.

The following "problem" has been given out by Nelson H. Trimble, pastor at Gary, Ind., to his Sunday-schools, those returning a correct answer to be given a New Testament. Some one asked "When will the church at Gary be in its new building?" The reply is: To the number of books in the Old Testament add the number written by Jude in the New Testament. From this amount subtract the number of times the Israelites marched around Jericho. Divide this by the number of wise men from the East. Then subtract the number of disciples on the Mount of Transfiguration and the answer will give the number of months the Gary Sunday-school have to wait before the new building is ready.



Uneeda Biscuit
You Who Get Hungry Between Meals
Don't deny yourself food till meal time.
When that midmorning hunger approaches, satisfy it with Uneeda Biscuit.
These biscuit are little nuggets of nutrition.
Each crisp soda cracker contains energy for thirty minutes more work.
Many business men eat them at ten in the morning. So do school children at recess.
They're more nutritive than bread. You can eat them dry — or with milk.
Uneeda Biscuit are always crisp and delightful.
Never Sold in Bulk
5¢
In the moisture-proof package
NATIONAL BISCUIT COMPANY

HIRAM COLLEGE. Send for Illustrated Bulletin, Souvenir Mailing Card and Complete Catalog to PRES. MINER LEE BATES, HIRAM, O.

BELLS.
Steel Alloy Church and School Bells. Send for Catalogue. The C. S. BELL CO., Hillsboro, O

Books

WHEN YOU WANT BOOKS
Send your order to us. We handle the books of all publishers, at the lowest prices. Your order will be promptly attended to.
THE NEW CHRISTIAN CENTURY COMPANY
700 East Fortieth Street - - - - Chicago, Ill.

The evangelistic services held at Central Church, Des Moines, Ia., under the leadership of the pastor, Finis Idleman, and De Loss Smith have been concluded and through their influence the whole church has been made conscious of a great spiritual uplift.

The church at Fulton, Mo., T. E. Winter, pastor, installed its new elders and deacons with a beautiful covenant and consecration service on Sunday, Jan. 1. The ceremony was held in the city theater where the congregation is worshipping during the construction of its beautiful new building.

At a dinner given by the Laymen's Missionary Convention, at Kansas City, Mo., George H. Combs, pastor of Independence Boulevard Church, was one of the speakers. The meeting was held in the interest of Christian union, and was attended by more than four hundred ministers and laymen of the Protestant churches of Kansas City.

Beginning with Jan. 15, Peter Ainslie is preaching a series of eight Sunday morning sermons at Christian Temple, Baltimore, Md., on the following subjects: Christ, the Final Speech of God; Christ Made Perfect Through Suffering; Christ Superior to Moses; Christ, Our High Priest; Christ, Our Salvation; Christ, Our Hope; Christ, Our Minister; Christ, Our Sacrifice.

Pastors of ten South End churches, St. Joseph, Mo., met recently at King Hill Church, and a preacher's union formed. T. H. Capp, pastor of King Hill Church, was elected one of the officers of the organization, whose purpose will be to foster Christian fellowship and to promote a hearty co-operation between the pastors and people of this section of the city

E. W. Allen at one time pastor at Wichita, Kans., and one of the general secretaries of the Foreign Missionary Society, was the principal speaker at a banquet given by the Brotherhood of First Church, Hutchinson, Kan. More than one hundred men were present to hear his address and the talks given by several missionaries. O. L. Cook is pastor of this church.

J. A. Longston has begun the eleventh year of his pastorate at Independence, Kan. That Mr. Longston's years have been full of good work is shown by the fact that ten years ago, the Disciple organization was the weakest in the city, having a little building and a small congregation, and it now has grown to be one of the strongest churches in Independence.

The Brotherhood at Massillon, Ohio, gave the following program at its regular meeting on Tuesday evening. Addresses: "The Foreigner in His Home Land." "The Foreigner At Work in America." "The Problems Which the Foreigner Creates." Debate: "Resolved, That Immigration Be Prohibited." The Brotherhood will observe its first anniversary on Sunday, January 29, when J. K. Shellengberger, the national field secretary, and L. I. Mercer, state Bible School secretary of Ohio will address the men. The Brotherhood will have charge of the evening services at this time.

The church treasurer of Evanston church (Chicago) asks the illuminating question in the weekly leaflet, "Who will guarantee the expenses of the church?" He replies as follows: "If the treasurer is asked he will resign. Shall the official board? They say it is unjust to ask it. The only fair way is for each member to guarantee his share through a pledge. Do you say you will give without a pledge? Only two persons gave adequately last year that way. Most of them forget." This is the right way to look at it. Each person's pledge represents each person's share of the guarantee that the expenses of the church will be paid. Every member of every church should share in this guarantee.

THE YEAR'S WORK OF THE CHURCHES

Reports of Pastors, Treasurers and Missionary Workers—Congregations Growing in Spirituality, Liberality and Numerical Strength.

UNIVERSITY CHURCH, BETHANY, NEB.
H. O. Pritchard, Pastor.

A neatly printed folder sets out the salient facts of growth and present condition of this church. Its membership is now 797—a gain of 67 for the year. Its Sunday-school has an enrolment of 790—a gain of 185 during the year. Four Christian Endeavor societies with a total membership of 360, indicates the presence of a great body of young life. A C. W. B. M., with 158 members and a Ladies' Aid with 95 members, registers the activities of the church women. For the year, the total sum of $11,772.02 was raised, of which $3,853.33 was for church expenses; $6,002.28 for building fund, and $1,916.48 for missions and benevolences. During Mr. Pritchard's three-year pastorate this church has raised $42,754.78 for all purposes, and received 467 persons into membership.

HOPKINSVILLE, KENTUCKY.
Harry D. Smith, Pastor.

The annual report of the church ministered to by the president of the American Christian Missionary Society will be read with especial interest. Its present membership is 827, a decrease of 147 during the year due to a vigorous revision of the church roll—a very wholesome thing for a congregation to do every now and then. The average attendance at Sunday-school was 232. Total money raised for all purposes, $10,579.05. Of this sum $6,752.05 was used in local self-support, and $3,827 for missions and benevolences of which Home Missions received $997.61, Foreign Missions $1,308.33 and McLean College $1,301.51. The C. W. B. M. maintains two auxiliaries and a young ladies' circle. We note a Boys' Brigade in the list of church organizations.

EL PASO, TEXAS.
Perry J. Rice, Pastor.

The year 1910 is regarded as the greatest year in the history of this strong church; 101 persons were added to the membership and $9,000 raised for all purposes, clearing a mortgage indebtedness of some years' standing. Every department of the work has grown, and, above all, the pastor says it has been a year of perfect peace and harmony. Not a single note of discord has been struck by any one. The church faces the new year with courage. H. O. Breeden begins a meeting with them about Feb. 1.

PADUCAH, KENTUCKY.
W. A. Fite, Pastor.

This church has done what most churches wait to do until their pastor has moved away or died. It closed the year with a strong set of resolutions unanimously adopted, saying to the pastor that his work was well done and that the people loved him and would back him better in the future than in the past. Every department—membership, finance, Sunday-school, missions—shows an increase.

CHAMPAIGN, ILLINOIS.
S. E. Fisher, Pastor.

University Place Church.—New church being erected, to be completed next spring. Total membership 1,034. Money collected, $11,250; paid for missions, $2,046.89.

DODGE CITY, KANSAS.
M. Lee Sorey, Pastor.

This has been a successful year at Second Avenue Church. The membership has had good increase. More than fourteen thousand dollars was received and paid out in the erection of their new church building.

KNOX, INDIANA.
Lyman E. Page, Pastor.

On account of long standing indebtedness this field has called for hard work, but the reports for the past year are encouraging. $1,150 was raised, and the good fellowship among the members gives promise for the coming year.

FIRST CHURCH, JOPLIN, MO.
G. J. Chapman, Pastor.

The debt of this church was reduced from $13,000 to $3,600 and payment completed on their pipe organ. The new year begins with good prospects.

URICHSVILLE, OHIO.
Charles Darsie, Pastor.

There were twenty-six additions to the membership in 1910, which now numbers 778 The receipts and expenditures totaled about three thousand dollars. A goodly amount of this went to missionary and benevolent work.

HUNTINGTON, INDIANA.
Elmer Ward Cole, Pastor.

The membership of Central Church is now 937, and the average attendance at the Sunday-school 453. The year's report shows a healthy financial condition, and all the departments of the church life are making good progress. The total receipts were $8,221.69. Notwithstanding Mr. Cole traveled 6,000 miles during the year and delivered forty-five lectures and addresses, his report shows that he preached 118 sermons and made 975 calls.

WEATHERFORD, TEXAS.
Owen Livengood, Pastor.

The total receipts from all sources were $1,370.91, a gain of about 24 per cent over last year. The subscription plan is meeting with success in the financial affairs of the church, and effort is being made to have the membership even more fully represented in this definite and regular giving.

EAST END CHURCH, PITTSBURGH.
John Ray Ewers, Minister.

On the evening of January 18, a great banquet was held after which officers were elected and reports read. The church raised $8,316.66, $1,200 for Foreign Missions, $441 for Home Missions. Minister's salary raised to $3,000 per annum. Church redecorated at cost of $1,200. Considerable new equipment added. Additions 51, by baptism 12, losses 21. Total enrollment 325, active membership 275. Sunday-school enrollment 225, average attendance 144. Enrollment in Men's Class almost as large as all rest of school. Recently this class had 140 at banquet. Sunday-school raised $1,178.56. Congregation voted enthusiastically to build a lecture-room at a cost of several thousand dollars. A spirit of fine optimism reigns and the work moves on with a strong brotherliness. This is one of the noblest groups among the Disciples.

ANGOLA, INDIANA.
Vernon Stauffer, Pastor.

Approximately $19,100 was raised for all purposes. Of this $2,200 went for missionary benevolent and educational work. The current expenses were met in full from month to month and a substantial balance remained in the treasury at the end of the year. The Sunday-school raised $678.32 and enjoyed the best year in its history.

FIRST CHURCH, TACOMA, WASH.
W. A. Moore, Pastor.

Notwithstanding that the three new congregations of Lincoln Park, South Tacoma and McKinley Park have organized largely from the membership of First Church, the year has shown increase. The Sunday-school had an average attendance of 333 and total collection of $1,028.64. The total receipts were $7,927.58.

MUSKOGEE, OKLAHOMA.
Melville Putnam, Pastor.

The membership of this church has doubled, as has the Sunday-school attendance, and the total receipts were larger than ever before. This church in addition to doing much charitable work at home supports a missionary in the foreign field.

SECOND CHURCH, WARREN, OHIO.
C. O. Reynard, Pastor.

This church, organized in April, 1907, now has a membership of 519. The current expense receipts for the past year were $2,275.91 and $534.27 was given for benevolent purposes.

LAWTON, OKLAHOMA.
A. R. Spicer, Pastor.

During the nine months of service of Mr. Spicer, this church was able to organize its work so that the annual report shows one of the best years in its history. A total of $6,600 was expended, $3,000 of this for a new parsonage and church improvements, and $520 for benevolent purposes. There was a net gain of 120 in the membership.

CENTRAL CHURCH, TOLEDO, OHIO.

The debt that has encumbered this church for years has been reduced to $1,500 and arrangements made to cancel it by May 1, 1911. The Sunday-school had an attendance of 300 and over a hundred added to the membership.

CENTRAL CHURCH, TERRE HAUTE, IND.
S. D. Dutcher, Pastor.

A new church is being erected by this congregation and $3,598.34 was raised for this fund. The church treasurer's report showed that $9,814.52 had been received. Fifty-seven were added to the membership.

STUART STREET, SPRINGFIELD, ILL.
H. H. Jenner, Pastor.

This church now has a membership of 500, 64 having been added during the past year. The financial affairs are in good condition and much work has been accomplished.

NEOSHO, MISSOURI.
J. B. Hunley.

This church closed a prosperous year, 149 being added to the membership and of $6,000 paid into the treasury a large part was applied on the church debt. Mr. Hunley is in the third year of his pastorate, and his congregation are encouraged at the progress made.

AKRON, OHIO.
George Darsie, Pastor.

The year closed with all debts paid. The total receipts were $12,735.59. More than $4,000 was given for missionary and benevolent work. The membership now numbers 1,585, 165 new members being added this year. One thousand have been added since the beginning of Mr. Darsie's pastorate. This church has a flourishing Sunday-school, the average attendance being 740, and total offering $2,300.

FIRST CHURCH, SEATTLE, WASH.
Joseph L. Garvin, Pastor.

There were 116 additions during the year, but by removals, etc., the net gain in membership was 44. The total receipts were $6,042.62. This church supports Dr. Dye in the foreign field and R. T. Maxey in the home work.

UNIVERSITY PLACE, SEATTLE, WASH.
T. J. Shuey, Pastor.

This church has been aided by the American Christian Missionary Society for some years, but this year its members have borne all the current expenses and paid off an indebtedness of over $2,000. Nearly $5,000 passed through the hands of the church treasurer, in addition to the amounts raised and disbursed by auxiliary societies.

DAVENPORT, IOWA.
S. M. Perkins, Pastor.

The reports showed that every society had a balance on hand and that the past year was one great growth in numbers and efficiency. The present membership is 525, 69 being gadded during the year. The average attendance of the Sunday-school was 225. The total receipts were $5,850, $1,500 being paid on the parsonage fund, leaving an indebtedness of only $1,500.

The Life of Jesus

IN FIFTY-TWO LESSONS

By Dr. Loa Ermina Scott

A NEW TEXT BOOK FOR YOUNG PEOPLE'S AND ADULT BIBLE CLASSES

INTRODUCTION BY PROFESSOR E. B. WAKEFIELD OF HIRAM COLLEGE

This book comes nearer meeting ALL the demands of both teacher and pupil than any biography of Jesus yet published. The style is graphic. The outlines are clean-cut. The book bristles with questions—all pertinent and revealing. It has both flesh and bones — the skeleton and meat in proper proportion. It is the product of experience. Dr. Scott is teacher of a successful Sunday-school class in the Disciples' Church, at Chagrin Falls, Ohio. She has been developing this book for years. It was not just written; it grew. The author's scholarship is thorough and safe, never pedantic, always practical.

Price, 50c. In Quantities of 10 or More, 40c Each.

Published by

THE NEW CHRISTIAN CENTURY COMPANY

700 E. 40th Street

Chicago

NINTH STREET, WASHINGTON, D. C.
George A. Miller, Pastor.

The fourth year of the present pastorate marks the close of a successful year's work. The attendance at both the church and Sunday-school services has increased. The building debt has been decreased to $7,000, extensive repairs have been made on the church property, and the missionary offerings largely increased.

MEMORIAL CHURCH, ROCK ISLAND, ILL.
E. T. McFarland, Pastor.

Over $4,200 was raised by the congregation, $1,100 of which was given to missions and benevolences. This church has its own missionary, F. C. Buck, stationed at La Chea Fu, China, and helps to support W. B. Slater at Moline. A third mission Sunday-school has been organized during the year and a temporary tabernacle built.

COLORADO SPRINGS, COL.
Geo. B. Stewart, Pastor.

This church has closed a prosperous year. The total receipts were $8,500, and progress is reported in all its departments.

CENTRAL CHURCH, DECATUR, ILL.
O. W. Lawrence, Pastor.

Reports show 110 additions during the year. Of these forty-five were baptisms, eight from other religious bodies and the remainder by letter and statement. From all sources $9,573.23 was raised. Of this $1,120 was given for missions and $3,000 paid on church debt.

FIRST CHURCH, LINCOLN, NEB.
H. H. Harmon, Pastor.

Much improvement has been made in the Sunday-school equipment this year, this church having one of the largest Sunday-schools in Lincoln. The church membership is now 1,200, more than three hundred being added during the past year. Miss Alice Wood, pastor's assistant, and Miss Irene M. Flint, Sunday-school missionary, devote their whole time to the work of the church. The church also supports Miss Olive Griffith at Damoh, India, and S. R. McClure, who assists the Nebraska churches where the local church is not able to support a minister. The C. W. B. M. Society is now arranging to make a pledge of $600 to send another missionary to the foreign field.

MONMOUTH, ILLINOIS.
D. E. Hughes, Pastor.

The annual report shows this church to be growing and prospering. The sum of $4,000 was expended during the year, $125 of this amount being contributed toward the building fund by the Sunday-school.

YOUNGSTOWN, OHIO.
Roland A. Nichols, Pastor.

The membership of First Church is now 1,016, 360 being added during 1910. The reports show that $7,963.16 had been raised for all purposes and that all organizations are in splendid working condition, with large plans for the future. The past year is considered the best in the history of the church.

EMPORIA, KANSAS.
O. L. Smith, Pastor.

Careful plans are under way to arrange for the paying off of the church debt. The total membership is now 588, the past year having a net gain of 94. Fifty-two of these united with the church at the regular services. The receipts for the year were $2,056.

NORMAL, ILLINOIS.
Wm. G. McColley, Pastor.

The accessions this year numbered 58, and $3,500 was raised for all purposes, $500 of this amount being given for missions. Mr. McColley began the fourth year of his pastorate Jan. 1st, 1911.

BOULDER, COLORADO.
A. L. Ward, Pastor.

This church has just closed the most prosperous year in its history. The Sunday-school reached the high mark of 627, and the pastor's class of men has had to meet in another building on account of lack of room. The same growth is manifested in all the departments of the church.

JACKSONVILLE, ILLINOIS.
Russell F. Thrapp, Pastor.

Nearly seven hundred people attended the annual meeting of the church, this being one of the great occasions of the year. The reports show that $10,472.21 was raised for all purposes of which $3,294.25 was for missions. The members of this church are apportioned each year and this year's report shows that over one thousand of the members contributed regularly.

WICHITA, KANSAS.
Walter Scott Priest, Pastor.

Harmony and enthusiasm mark the past year's work. Minister's salary was increased $400, Sunday-school increased nearly 100 in average attendance. The church debt of $4,000 paid off and Third Church organized from mission. Total sum raised $15,000, $4,000 of this for missions and benevolences, and much given by the members personally outside the regular channels of the church. Mr. and Mrs. Gill become living link in foreign field, putting the steamer "Oregon" into commission. This gives Central Church three living links on the foreign field and one at home, E. A. Newby, pastor of the newly organized Third Church. There were 105 additions to the membership during the year.

Rainier of the Last Frontier

(Continued from page 13.)

moonlight in the palms than anything else."

As to whether it was the pale glow of Luna, or the brighter torch of the God of the Altar, I leave my readers to judge. Meanwhile, outside the pale of teas, of drives, of tete-a-tetes and trivialities, a whole world of practical affairs revolved, and in the midst of them our friends McBurney and the chief stevedore of Iloilo.

Do you hear a hearty shout? That's Mac's voice. He has come to the end of his week's waiting, has put his vital question and received the answer that he craves.

"God bless you, old man; I just knew you'd come on into the game. You'll never regret it when you once get a taste. Now I'll sail on the Santa Isabel on Saturday I'll leave everything in your hands, shack, tent, supplies and the fellows who are helping and being helped. Don't despair of Rod Garrison. He thinks the world of you and we will save him yet. Now if I can get back to inspect the work in a few months, I'll do it. Keep me fully informed.

"Here are letters of introduction to the officers and garrisons of Panay. You'll find some opposition, but more sympathy. Don't worry about your enemies. Pitch in and enjoy yourself. Most of all keep close to God in prayer and he will help you through."

Thus Mac beamed on, holding Rainier's hand and pouring in encouragements until Rainier smiled back in response. Their hands parted and the Army Young Men's Christian Association on the Island of Panay had its newly ordained secretary.

Bethany Graded Sunday School Lessons

International Course

Charles Clayton Morrison, Editor

The Bethany series is now developed to the point where it supplies the entire school—children, young people and adults. The publishers ask all Sunday-school workers carefully to consider the following outline of Bethany publications:

Beginners

Lessons prepared by FRANCES W. DANIELSON.

First Year—Teachers' Text Book—Part I, II, III, IV. Large Pictures (9x12 inches).
Beginners' Stories—(Illustrated folder for Pupils)—Part I, II, III, IV.
Second Year—Teachers' Text Book—Part I, II, III, IV. Large Pictures (9x12 inches)
Beginners' Stories—(Illustrated folder for Pupils)—Part I, II, III, IV.

Primary

Lessons prepared by MARION THOMAS

First Year—Teachers' Text Book, Part I, II, III, IV. (With picture supplement).
Primary Stories—(Illustrated folder for pupils)—Part I, II, III, IV.
Second Year—Teachers' Text Book—Part I, II, III, IV. Large Pictures—(6x8 inches).
Primary Stories—(Illustrated folder for pupils)—Part I, II, III, IV.

Junior

Lessons prepared by JOSEPHINE L. BALDWIN

First Year—Teachers' Text Book—Part I, II, III.
Pupils' Book for Work and Study—Part I, II, III. (With picture supplement).
Second Year—Teachers' Text Book—Part I, II, III, IV.
Pupils' Book for Work and Study—Part I, II, III, IV. (With picture supplement).

Intermediate

Lessons for first year prepared by MILTON S. LITTLEFIELD

Teachers' Text Book—Part I, II, III, IV.
Pupils' Text Book—Part I, II, III, IV. (With maps).

Young People's and Adult Bible Classes

Dr. Loa E. Scott's LIFE OF JESUS, in Fifty-two Lessons. Adapted to young people and adults. An easy, but thorough text.

Professor H. L. Willett's serial treatment of THE LEADERS OF ISRAEL, in The Christian Century. The Publishers will make special arrangements to furnish The Christian Century to classes desiring to use Dr. Willett's course.

The curriculum outlined above furnishes a comprehensive course of religious instruction. It comprises not only the biographies, history, literature, and teachings of the Bible, but also lessons on the history and heroes of the Christian Church, of missionary enterprises, philanthropic movements, and moral reforms.

These lessons afford a signal opportunity for the Sunday-schools of the Disciples to promote Christian union. Sixteen denominations have laid aside sectarianism to prepare the Bethany Graded Lessons for their schools.

THE GRADED LESSONS MAY BE BEGUN AT ANY TIME

Send Today for Order Blanks and Prospectus.

THE NEW CHRISTIAN CENTURY COMPANY
700 East Fortieth Street, Chicago, Ill.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

Volume XXVIII. February 9, 1911 Number 6

Lincoln's Religion

By Edgar DeWitt Jones

A Missionary Survey

By Professor Alva W. Taylor

The Disciples and the Congregationalists

An Editorial

THE NEW CHRISTIAN CENTURY COMPANY
700-714 East Fortieth Street Chicago, Illinois

The Christian World

A Department of Interdenominational Acquaintance.

Christian Endeavor

The Christian Endeavor Society is thirty years old. Has it justified its existence and is it now entitled to the support of Christian people? The following facts, taken from the Christian Endeavor World, seem to compel an affirmative answer.

There are 75,000 societies and nearly four million members.

The society has been welcomed into more than eighty denominations, and in most of these it is the only religious organization of young people.

Societies have been established in all parts of the earth, and the literature of Christian Endeavor has been translated in all the leading and most of the subordinate languages, and has been a means of grace to many races.

Christian Endeavor unions and conventions have been powerful factors in producing sentiments of Christian unity. Thirty years ago there was little fellowship among the denominations.

The testimony of the leaders is that the society is yearly increasing in strength.

Congregational

The induction of Rev. A. Atkinson into the office of Secretary of Labor and Social Service for the Congregational Brotherhood of America occurred at the New First Church, Chicago, Friday evening, Jan. 20. The inaugural was preceded by a conference on labor and social service. The general subject of this conference was, "How can Congregational men best contribute to social progress and industrial betterment?" Addresses were made by distinguished ministers and laymen, among whom were Graham Taylor, Raymond Robins, and Dr. F. W. Gunsaulus. Miss Addams spoke on "Community interests." In his address the new secretary pointed out the desirability of understanding the church. Many a man in the pulpit criticises the church in a way that disheartens the people. One paragraph from the address will serve to indicate the purpose of the secretary:

We have had scolding enough. No man has a right to criticise unless he is able to tell how the thing criticised can be improved. A physician's duty is to diagnose disease, but he must know what to prescribe as a cure or a help for the disease he diagnoses. If a doctor should stand over a patient and denounce him for having a cancer, he would lose his patient and his reputation, and he might find himself locked up in the dangerous ward of the local hospital. The physician must know a cancer when he sees it—that is his business. It is also his business to tell the sufferer his condition, but he must have a remedy of some kind to suggest. The preacher is negligent of his trust if he does not point out the crying evils of the day. He must warn, must reprove, but it is of most vital importance that he have a remedy to suggest as a cure for the social ills he has diagnosed.

Church and State

The churches of the United States believe in the separation of church and state. The introduction of a bill into congress, donating three hundred thousand acres of unappropriated non-mineral land in New Mexico to J. B. Pitaval, archbishop of Santa Fe, and his successors, meets with emphatic opposition from intelligent American Protestants. The Outlook voices the general sentiment:

We believe that Mr. Pitaval is a Roman Catholic archbishop. We should say No! just as emphatically if he were an Episcopal bishop, a Methodist bishop, a Presbyterian elder, or a Congregational minister. No union of church and state! No union of state with any church!

Is the teaching of the people to be entrusted to the church or to the state? The answer of united America, from the Lakes to the Gulf, and from ocean to ocean is, the state. If the church wishes to teach, she must pay for her own schools. To appropriate three hundred thousands acres of land to a school is to tax every citizen of the United States for its support. The enforced contribution is small; but it is an enforced contribution. Churches in America depend on voluntary contributions. They do not tax the people.

In Spain revolution is threatened in the growing desire of the people to emancipate the schools from church control. In Portugal the resolve for emancipation has produced a revolution. In France, in self-protection, the Republic has been forced to prohibit church schools because church schools were teaching hostility to the Republic. In England the attempt to establish state education has been halted by a Protestant church. We have won the battle for free education in America. The question is no longer an open one here. The principle may be stated in one sentence: ALL SCHOOLS SUPPORTED BY THE STATE MUST BE CONTROLLED BY THE STATE.

Episcopalian

Bishop C. H. Brent of the Philippine Islands is now in England enlisting the leaders of the Anglican church in the conference on Christian unity proposed by the American Episcopal church at Cincinnati last fall. He speaks with great spiritual power and original insight. At St. Paul's Cathedral a few weeks since he outlined the plans for a world conference and concluded his sermon as follows:

"What a risk!" I hear someone say. Yes, I reply, a glorious risk. It were better far for a Christian communion to risk the loss of its distinctive character in a brave effort toward unity than to sit in idle contemplation of a shattered Christendom. At worst it would lose its eccentricities and prejudices; at best it would lose itself entirely in the splendor of unity according to the mind of Christ. But let there be what peril there may, peril for God's sake is the only safe condition for Church or Churchmen. It is more reasonable to be in peril than in security if the best things lie a hair's breadth beyond the peril. Everything worth having is found only on the yonder side of a risk. We must have unity, not at all costs, but at all risks. A unified church is the only offering we dare present to the coming Christ, for in it alone will He find room to dwell. Whole man for whole God is our watchword. Let us expect unity, let us think unity, let us pray for unity, let us work for unity. If we fail, it will be better to fail because we have dared great things than because we have not dared at all, so that men can say that we aimed at—

"The high that proved too high,
The heroic for earth too hard,
The passion that left the ground
To lose itself in the sky."

Presbyterian

For the second time the Fifth Avenue Church, New York, has called Dr. J. H. Jowett of Birmingham, England, and he has accepted. When the first call was sent to Dr. Jowett, there was a protest against his accepting it that came not only from his church but from the whole city. Birmingham understands Doctor Jowett and honors him. He will take leadership among American preachers the moment he lands in New York.

* * *

The Board of Foreign Missions is doing big business, says the Presbyterian Advance. It receives from 50 to 400 letters a day. As much as $500,000 has been received in one month. Last year the treasurer drew more than 6,000 checks, involving $2,798,000. The Board has a thousand missionaries in 149 principal stations and 1,718 out-stations. It has property valued at several million dollars, scattered over the world.

* * *

The National Convention of the Presbyterian Brotherhood of America will be held in St. Louis, Feb. 21-23, 1911. The general theme will be, "The Brotherhood and the Gospel." William J. Bryan will speak on the subject, "The Fruits of the Tree."

United Brethren

There has been a gain in the last two years of more than seventy thousand in the membership of the Sunday-schools of the United Brethren. This result is attributed to the movement for the organization of adult classes.

* * *

Bishop Matthews has been appointed fraternal delegate to the approaching Methodist Ecumenical Conference. As the Church of the United Brethren in Christ was never a part of Methodism, the bishops deemed it was not fitting that they should accept a place on the executive committee of the conference.

* * *

The bishops "deplore the tendency in some quarters to omit instruction, encouragement, and emphasis, as to the place and power of crisis in the religious life, thereby encouraging the conclusion that a mere conformity to the externals of religion is sufficient and all that is expected in the lives of our people."

Jewish

According to the latest statistics there are 11,625,650 Jews in the world. In Europe there are 8,892,000. Of these 5,082,342 are in Russia, 2,034,500 in Austria, 607,862 in Germany, 240,540 in Great Britain, and 95,000 in France.

The treatment received by Jews in Europe, especially in Russia, is driving them to America by the thousands. Prominent representatives of the race in America believe that the United States ought to have a larger Jewish population.

African Methodist

The career of the late Bishop Grant of the African Methodist Episcopal Church is an inspiring example to men of all races. He was born in an ox-cart near Lake City, Florida, August 25, 1848. He was sold several times. He escaped from slavery and came to the North. After the war he returned to the South and worked in a grocery store in Lake City. He was later a steward in a hotel. His education was obtained in a night school. In 1873 he was ordained to the ministry. At forty years of age he was elected bishop. His episcopal residence in later years was at Kansas City, Kans. He was influential in the councils of his denomination and his opinions were sought by the leaders of the nation. A leader in the education of his race, he served in his day as president of Paul Quinn College in Texas, president of the board of trustees of Wilberforce University, and president of the board of trustees of Western University at Quindaro.

S. J.

The Christian Century
CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON AND HERBERT L. WILLETT. . . . . EDITORS

Congregationalists and Disciples

From Another Point of View

A thoughtful comparison of Congregationalists and Disciples will bring out certain striking features strongly suggesting that in the logic of Christian unity these two communions are made for each other.

Fundamental agreements are essential in Christian unity, but genuine differences, contrasts, are quite as desirable in the united church as is a primary common faith. The Congregationalists and Disciples are agreed in the great basic matters of Christianity. Both bodies accept the Bible as the word of God and wish to follow its teachings. Both own Jesus Christ as their divine head and Savior, and hold his will supreme in their lives. Whatever he commands, Congregationalists and Disciples stand ready to do.

The two bodies do not understand the Bible alike, any more than all Congregationalists understand it alike or all Disciples. The two bodies do not understand Christ's commands alike any more than all Disciples understand them alike, or all Congregationalists.

But neither communion has any preëminence over the other in intelligent allegiance both to the Scriptures and to Christ.

Given this fundamental like-mindedness there are certain outstanding contrasts which suggest the possibility of mutual enrichment through the practice of Christian unity, and not mere denominational enrichment only, but the marked advancement of the Kingdom of God.

* * *

There is first the obvious fact that in territorial position in the United States these bodies supplement each other. The Congregationalists are an eastern people, the Disciples belong to the middle west. In the six New England states the Disciples have a membership of 2,780, while the Congregationalists have 264,377. In the five states of Ohio, Indiana, Kentucky, Missouri and Illinois the Congregationalists number 74,000, while the Disciples number 681,000. Of the Congregationalists' membership in these five states, Illinois alone holds 57,000, most of which is in Chicago and the northern third of the state, where the Disciples are hardly more numerous than in New England.

In the states of Tennessee, Texas and Oklahoma, the Congregationalist membership is 8,500. In the same states the Disciples number 217,000.

In Michigan, Wisconsin and Minnesota the Disciples' membership is 13,000, the Congregationalists' 83,000.

In Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, Colorado and the Pacific states, there is no marked difference in strength.

The Disciples, moreover, are a rural people, for the most part. They have not yet built up strong churches in the great cities. The Congregationalists are strong in the cities.

It is apparent that the union of these two bodies, besides emancipating each from its provincialism, would create an instrument of immeasurably greater effectiveness for the Kingdom of God than is represented by the sum of their energies taken as separate communions.

* * *

The Congregationalists are a social minded people. Their religious thinking, like their religious history, is closely intertwined with political life. Probably no one would dispute that Congregational ideals have affected our American civil standards more positively and potently than have the modes of thought of any other denomination. Puritan and Pilgrim contributed to our government's life at the very root.

Congregationalist religious thought has always gone out along the lines of political and social justice. Her scholars and preachers have ever set the Kingdom of God before the church. As a consequence, Congregational effort has been expended more upon the community than upon itself as a church within the community. It is only of late that a positive "church consciousness" has been awakened.

With the Disciples, on the other hand, the "church consciousness" is intense and militant. Unlike the Congregationalists, the Disciples' history at no place touches vitally a political or social crisis. The Civil War, for example, found their churches on both sides of Mason and Dixon's line and passed without making a breach in their fellowship.

The Disciples have a passion for building up the church. Their devotion to the church takes precedence of political or social interests. In the church their problems of the social order are transcended, if they are not solved.

These two ideals—that of a redeemed society and that of a redeeming church—need each other. Congregationalism needs the institutional feeling, so strong with the Disciples. The Disciples need the vision of a Christian social order and a vital connection with civil progress which is Congregationalism's glory. A united communion of over two million souls, such as Congregationalists and Disciples together comprise, would make the most potent instrument for personal religion and social justice that our American life affords.

* * *

Closely related to this is the supplemental contrast between the cultural method of Congregationalism and the evangelistic method of the Disciples. The Disciples are by instinct propagandists. The evangelistic "note" needs no encouragement in their ministry. Every pastor is an evangelist. The ingathering impulse is fundamental. From the earliest days of their history this has been true. Today their evangelists hold scores of meetings every year in which more people are added to single churches than were added to the one hundred and fifty churches coöperating in the recent Gipsy Smith or the Chapman-Alexander meetings in Chicago.

Weak in its evangelism, the Congregational church is strong and rich in its cultural ideals and resources. If births are not so numerous in its family, the children are cared for with extraordinary pains and skill. The educational impulse which founded Yale and Harvard and Amherst and Oberlin and a score of colleges of honored names and history, which produced Bushnell and Horace Mann, fulfils itself logically in a richly cultured ministry and the pedagogical reconstruction of its Sunday-school.

Here, again, Disciples and Congregationalists need each other,—the one needs the dynamic of evangelistic passion to save its culture from hollowness, the other needs the spirit of religious culture both to refine evangelistic methods and to conserve and perfect evangelistic results.

* * *

These are some of the more salient considerations which suggest the peculiar desirability of union between Congregationalists and Disciples. In addition, it should be remarked that the union of these two bodies, either as communions or in local instances, would afford one of the most convincing demonstrations of the possibility of complete Christian unity that could be desired.

Such a union, for the reasons given, would be more significant than that between Congregationalists, United Brethren and Methodist Protestants, or between Congregationalists and Episcopalians. It would be more significant than the union of Baptists and Disciples because Baptists' and Disciples' unions are often based upon the mere incident of agreement in the practice of immersion and the form of church government.

A union based upon the likeness of two denominations in custom or dogma is not necessarily a Christian union—though, of course, it may be. It is likely, however, to be a mere consolidation, making a larger sect than before. But a union involving differences, contrasts, disagreements of opinion and custom—and rejoicing in them as an enrichment of the united body—this is the goal toward which today's passion for Christian unity is surely tending.

Congregationalists and Disciples made one in Christ would greatly advance Christendom toward that goal.

Social Survey

BY ALVA W. TAYLOR

Living Facts

Disciples of Christ are approaching that season when the eyes of all are turned to the utmost corners of the earth. Here, in the brilliantly illumined civilization of a Christian land, we are asking of the men on the towers at the outposts, "Watchmen, what of the night?" Truly the answer is "The morning cometh." Never since time began have the signs of its coming to those that sit in darkness given such assurance. The facts that signalize the march of missionary progress during the past year seem like breathing things to one who loves the cause. He will clothe them with the warmth of lives given in far away and strange lands. He will see them living in the new found faith of the great multitude which has in the last twelvemonth found the light that lighteth every man that cometh unto it. He will see in the thousands of missionary homes, beacons standing like cities of refuge among barbarous tribes. And he will find his own faith renewed as he looks upon the sacrificial faith of those heroic souls of the race who are willing to leave houses and lands, friends and loved ones, for the Master's sake. In these facts, moreover, there is a lesson in Christian emulation. Scarce will any be found so partisan that he will envy another the work he has been able to accomplish in a great unselfish cause like this. The least will rejoice in the success of the greatest and the heedless ought to be stimulated by the generous examples of the thoughtful. Only those need be ashamed who have been more concerned with partisan and sect affairs while this great host has been striving to reap the whitened harvests of the fields beyond. How miserable would a party shibboleth sound in the echo of such an acclaim as a united Christendom might send up over the victories that belong as much to one as to another, because it has all been done in the name of the common Lord. When Christendom recovers from its near-sightedness enough to really see the worth and success of foreign missions it will repent in sackcloth and ashes. These children in the Gospel may lead them into unity.

Real Generosity

It is easy to be generous to those of one's own household. So easy is it that the danger, to those who have plenty, is that the generosity will be so undiscriminating as to ruin the recipient. It is not difficult to give to things that help those that we know in person and see in need and the amounts thus bestowed will never be told in figures, nor should they, for here is where the left hand need not know what the right hand doeth. The inconceivable total of $140,000,000 was given by the great givers alone last year in this country and perhaps as much more was bestowed by the multitude who give with greater largess because they have so much less left. In our appreciation of givers of great sums we are liable to forget the commendation of Jesus for the widow, because she had nothing left. The greatest giver is after all the one who gives the largest percentage of his holdings. Education and medicament received the largest consideration from the givers of large sums. The total amount received by the churches at home was $300,000,000 and overtops all other giving combined. Things that lie within sight most naturally challenge generosity. But when one gives to foreign missions he is most truly generous. He does not give to kith and kin, nor to those whom he sees and knows, nor to those who appeal to him because they are struggling for education as he had to struggle, nor to the pitiable sight that so justly touch his heart when he looks upon human suffering near at hand, nor to any cause that might make him generous and yet leave in his mind lack of love for those whom he has never seen or mayhap even contempt for men of another color and clime. When he gives to foreign missions he gives without reservation to the man farthest away and least known to him, and out of a heart that is touched with love of men without provincialism. He puts his money in hands cannot see and trusts to divine laws of goodness to do a Christly work, and he cares not that those who receive will never know from whom the gift has come.

Do Foreign Missions Pay?

When one reads such notorious breaches of truthfulness as a certain magazine recently printed from the pen of a man who claimed to have been around the world, and who must have compiled his "facts" out of his imagination in some interior Chinese opium den, he may yet ask the above question. When it can be contended that it costs twelve cents to get one to the heathen and that missionaries are mostly concerned with their salaries, the sheer boldness of the lying may challenge questionings in the mind of even those who thought they knew better. Of course it costs but twelve cents to get nearly two dollars to the heathen and men who give their lives in those places where other white men do not care to live, do not do it for the sake of a salary. It is safe to say that few business enterprises handle their affairs for so small a percentage, and it must be remembered that the most of what is spent is on the churches at home in efforts to arouse them to their most obvious duty in their relation to the heathen. One is not surprised when he learns that the magazine in question refused to allow an answer to such absurd charges or to print even the corrections offered. It was evidently determined and malicious in its perverseness. Comparisons are difficult, but such as can be made point to the glowing success of the foreign missionary enterprise. For each ordained minister in the mission field there were forty-one converts last year while for each ordained minister at home, including both pastors and evangelists, there were two. Of course for each ordained minister in the field there were thirty helpers but for each one at home there were doubtless as many besides the great host of Christian families striving to bring up their children so they would become members of the church. Against the well-gleaned field at home are to be put the overwhelming difficulties of an unevangelized field abroad and the sodden ignorance of heathenism. American Christians gave an average of fifteen dollars apiece for all church work and mission Christians gave an average of five dollars in lands where a dollar counts all the way from five to fifteen times what it does in America.

How We Gave

According to the figures for 1906, the last complete official statistics at hand for domestic work in the churches, the ratio of giving to home and foreign missions was approximately four to one. If that ratio holds good for 1910 the total gifts to home missions would mount up to $40,000,000. This includes on the home field the same activities that are the task of foreign missions on the far-stretching fields to which they are the sole Christian ministers. The following are the figures for America for the year, with enlivening comparisons, showing the way interest in the cause is growing by leaps and bounds:

In 1910 we gave	$11,908,671.
In 1905 we gave	8,120,725.
In 1900 we gave	6,115,759.

It will thus be seen that we almost doubled our giving in the decade. The gain for the past year was about $600,000. We increased our gifts by 33% in the first half of the decade and by 50% in the last half. This does not look as if the interest in foreign mission were less lively than it was in the days when there was more romance and less vital knowledge of the problem, as some of our cynics would have us believe—always of course without furnishing the figures. In Britain the giving was as follows:

In 1910	$11,055,210.
In 1905	8,197,000.
In 1900	6,846,759.

If measured by numbers and comparative wealth Britain still leads us. We have made the greatest gain in the decade but the most astounding figures are those that show she increased her gifts over last year by nearly $1,500,000 as against our $600,000. Reaping the benefits of the Layman's Missionary Movement, we ought to surpass her record this year.

Her increase was about 35% for the first half of the decade and 20% for the second half.

Germany is also increasing her interests. Though modern missions were really born with her Pietism and among her Moravians, she suffers as yet from an overdone orthodoxy on the one hand and a rationalism on the other that are not conducive to great missionary evangelism. Her gifts were:

In 1910	$1,965,298.
In 1905	1,587,049.
In 1900	1,185,000.

Grand Totals That Are Inspiring

The grand totals are inspiring. When we think of the wealth of Christendom and of the stupenduous amounts men spend on amusements, luxuries and vices, we are inclined, in our zeal for a great and generous human cause, to make comparisons that do not compliment. But when we think of the beginnings of missions and the opposition within the very sanctuaries themselves, and when we calmly consider the manner in which to this day so large a part of religious interest, as manifested in both pulpit and press, is concerned with the task of cultivating personal religions and defending denominational integrities, we can but take great heart at the growth of that larger and more Christlike task of going to the uttermost parts of the earth with a gospel that is larger than any individual interest, and so broad that denominationalism threatens to break down in the very midst of its own efforts to preach the larger Christ to the larger world. The churches will be saved from their own shortcomings by "expecting great things from God and attempting great things for God." Here is a grand total of more than $32,000,000 going to the Christian work of the foreign mission field in a single year. The comparative totals are as follows:

In 1910	$32,139,509.
In 1905	23,177,900

In 1900 .....17,315,526.

Of the above amounts there came from the mission churches in support of themselves the following amounts:

In 1910 .....$5,249,405.
In 1905 3,516,015
In 1900 ..... 1,833,961.

From the home fields the support increased then as illustrated by these totals:

In 1910 .....$26,890,104.
In 1905 ..... 19,661,885.
In 1900 ..... 15,481,565.

Thus the self-support of the mission churches has trebled in the decade and the generosity of the churches at home has increased by nearly 80%. Thanks to the increasing self-support on the field, the inspiring grand total for the decade shows that the amount annually invested is almost doubled.

The Progress on the Field

The total number of converts on the field last year was 140,000. This ought to warm the heart of the most pessimistic and convert the most ardent doubter. The law of increase on the mission field is that of an increasing momentum. The first million were won in a century but the second million came in twelve years and the third million in six years. Now we see the transcendent faith of the new born Korean church, daring to work for a million in that land alone in a single year. It is doubtless too great a Pentecost to expect but when we consider that twenty-five years ago Korea was a closed land and that there are now more than 200,000 in the churches there, we may confidently look for the million in that land alone inside the next five years. China is looked upon as the most difficult of all places, yet in the past twenty years the numbers have been multiplied by seven. It took thirty-five years to win the first six. After the first fifty years there were less than 1,000, but today, after the second fifty years there are 250,000. Last year the number of missionaries actually decreased while the amounts used in the work increased. The growth of the mission churches is bringing a greater ability to care for self and it might be expected that there would be a decrease in the amounts needed per missionary. But that is to overlook the fact that the mission churches are missionary to the last degree. They will need increasingly greater sums as their ability to preach and teach their own people increases and they become able to give of their number in greater proportion to the work of missionizing their fellow countrymen. In other words as the missionary succeeds he effaces himself. In the end he becomes more and more a superintendent of the native missionaries and as they become able to commandeer themselves and support their own churches they become increasingly the missionary host. This is not only the secret of the law of missionary momentum but it will be the glory of the universal church when each people shall assume the task of their own evangelization and education.

There is a Christian community in the foreign fields today of 5,000,000 souls. Of this number about one-half are actual communicants in the churches. The other half are those who are not yet sufficiently instructed to be admitted to church membership and those who, for other reasons that are sufficient on the mission field, are not in the full fellowship, though they have given up their old practices and beliefs and are under the sway of the Christian ideal. Ten years ago there were 3,500,000.

The Missionary Host

There are at the front on behalf of Christianity a mighty host of valiant crusaders. In the name of that humanity which is pleaded by all who are enthralled by the person of Christ they take to millions a new manner of life and the beginnings of a new social custom that will make old nations new and bring barbarous races to civilization. The number of missionaries is 600 less this year than it was last and the number of native helpers is decreased by 700 and a little more. But the reasons for this are temporary and the comparisons for the longer periods of five years are in harmony with the increases given in other tables. The following shows the number of missionaries for the decade:

In 1910 there were 21,248 missionaries and 91,513 native helpers.
In 1905 there were 17,839 missionaries and 89,335 native helpers.
In 1900 there were 16,218 missionaries and 62,566 native helpers.

The number of missionaries has increased one-third and the number of native helpers by nearly one-half in the decade. For the last half of the decade the number of missionaries has increased by one-fifth and the number of native helpers by but little. This last may be accounted for by the fact that the missionary effort is being made less merely evangelism and more and more the solid work of building up intelligent Christian communities, and so planting the churches that they will have permanent foundations and become active civilizing factors. The temporary decrease of the past year has been due to the fact that nearly all the societies havve felt it wise to pay off debts while the era of prosperity is on. They are confronted with the same problem that would confront a man who has an investment that was so profitable that he could not confine its increase to cash in hand each season but kept borrowing as his credit grew, until he felt the signs of the times called for that discretion which prepared for possible less prosperous times. The total missionary host is now 113, 207. Ten years ago it was 78,505. There are 45,540 places where the work is carried on. Ten years ago there were 25,108.

The Givers

The missionary societies are mostly denominational but the missionary message is increasingly undenominational. Everywhere the word comes back from the front that the things that have divided us cannot be urged on the mission field without hurt to the greater truths on which we are agreed. These essential truths are the message of missions and they must increase while the non-essentials decrease. So we see the heartening spectacle of unian missions supported by denominational societies. But it is interesting to observe the missionary interests of the various great denominations. It is safe to say that those who show the greater genuine missionary zeal will come to the unity for which Christ prayed. In America the great denominations gave as follows:

Baptists .....$2,297,000.
Methodists ..... 3,389,000.
Presbyterians ..... 2,786,000.
Congregationalists 1,250,000
Episcopalians 838,000
Disciples 674,000
Lutherans ..... 400,000.

In Britain the great givers were as follows:

Baptists .....$ 472,000.
Wesleyans 2,064,000
Presbyterians ..... 3,572,000.
Congregationalists ..... 957,000.
Episcopalians ..... 3,478,000.

The Lutherans of Germany and Scandinavia gave $1,350,000 and the Chinese Inland Mission, which is interdenominational received from all lands $1,869,000. The mightest of all is the Moravians. With but 37,000 members they gave $389,000 and with the self-support received from the mission churches, expended a total of a round million. The heroic Pans Society gave $240,000. For all the world, including the Continent and Australia, the great denominations supported their missions as follows:

Baptists .....$2,842,000.
Methodists (All Methodist and Wesleyan bodies)..... 5,981,000.
Presbyterians (including Reformed churches)..... 7,020,000.
Congregationalists ..... 2,202,000.
Episcopalians 4,316,000

The Sort of Church Our Age Demands

Who voices the demands of "our age?" Are the exploiters of men to give us the word of authority? Shall we listen to the whines of disappointed pleasure seekers? Or shall we accept the apostles of unbelief as the spokesmen of the age? There is danger that we shall give ear to one or all of the classes to the exclusion of the earnest men and women who believe in God and in the possibility of human improvement. Effective disciples of the Lord know the sentiments of those who do the honest work of the world.

The sort of church this age or any other age demands is one that knows its own message. It appeals to the hearts of men in the belief that it knows what men need. Futhermore, the representatives of the church speak out of their own experience. They have a living gospel. Their lives have been so enriched by it that they have the most intense desire to have all men taste the goodness of God. The ministers of the true church do not search for sensational subjects, unless the truth is sensational. They discuss the abiding interests of the human heart.

This age demands a church that understands the kind of world to which it is to minister. Christianity is great enough to use for its own purpose the dominant factors in every age. It has appealed to the soldier and awakened in him the feeling of compassion. It came to men through the avenue of Greek thought. Newton's great discoveries have been appropriated by the church. In an age of biology the church will employ biological terminology in its teaching. Every valid conclusion of psychology and of sociology will be shown to be in harmony with the fundamental doctrines of religion. The economist must not be allowed to think his science is undermining the foundations of the church. "The earth is the Lord's, and the fulness thereof," and it is the business of the economist to show how the fruits of the earth may be justly distributed to the people whom God has placed on the earth. If philosophy is agnostic, the church asserts the right to believe.

The church that gives a good account of itself studies methods of imparting the truth. There must be a connection established between the gospel and the man who needs it. The pioneers, who lived far from one another, were glad to travel long distances to enjoy the fellowship of the church. The preacher had willing hearers, for the people did not have to listen to lectures and essays and musical programs two or three times a week. The worship of God was reënforced by the social demands of the age. Many a man who was regular in his church attendance under pioneer conditions would not be seen at church at all if he were living now. Country people on going to the city find their social demands met outside the church and consequently they do not join with others in the worship of God. Educational methods have changed. The ways of the schoolmaster are being searchingly examined. He is expected to produce better results. What is taking place in the schools must be recognized by the church. The kind of building, the music, the style of preaching, Sunday-school methods, and how to connect religion with recreation and with economic life—all have to be studied by the church of the present.

In an age of specialists there is great danger that each will be interested in his particular work to the extent that he will lose sympathy for workers in other fields. The church should help us to understand all who are doing necessary work. In the meetings of the church all classes and conditions of men should be found and the needs and sins of all should be made known. The gospel of Christ makes no provision for a favored class whose sins shall be overlooked or lightly mentioned nor does it allow the church to look with indifference upon the woes of any. "The rich and the poor meet together: Johovah is the maker of them all." The age demands a church with strength of conviction to force men to recognize their common humanity in spite of distinctions of wealth, education and success or failure. And the common humanity which is to be forced upon our attention is not something cheap and vulgar; it is that which Jesus saw in every human being he met. The gospel levels up, not down. It gives the scholar something higher than scholarship to be proud of and the man of wealth is taught to glory in what is more powerful than money.

Is the church needed by this age? Observe the folly of men, consider your own foolish pride, and then give answer. S. J.

Midweek Service, Feb. 16. 1 Cor. 3:1-23.

Editorial Table Talk

A Small Request For a Big Cause

Missionary F. E. Meigs has received word of his appointment as head of the department of Scripture instruction in the new union University of Nankin. The course of instruction is yet to be arranged by Mr. Meigs and will be unique in its scope. Instruction in the Scriptures in Chinese mission school extends throughout all the course beginning in the primary grade and continuing until the college work is completed. The teaching is not technical, not theological, in its purpose but that the student may be furnished for Christian life. Mr. Meigs wishes a special library fund of not less than $2.000 to purchase certain English and Chinese books. This fund should be forthcoming by special gifts that this scholarly missionary who has through many years honored the Disciples and the cause of Christ in China may take the library with him upon his early departure. Mr. Meigs is recovering rapidly from an illness which caused serious concern among his friends. He is now at Hiram, Ohio, and will sail in the early spring.

The Israel of the Alps

Attendants at the Topeka convention last fall will be interested to know that Dr. Alberto Clot, who spoke there, has been creating in many Evangelical denominations a keen interest in the Waldenses of Italy, whose delegate to this country he is. The story of these un-Romanized Christians whose history extends back hundreds of years before the Protestant Reformation is most fascinating. Persecuted by papal authority they retired in the twelfth century into the Cottian Alps until modern freedom was established in Italy. Since then they have been conducting missionary work in all parts of their land, expanding from fifteen Alpine parishes to more than 150 churches and stations. Native as they are to Italy, with a reasonable hope of becoming the most potent Protestant force in their land, there would seem to be, to a non-sectarian mind, no good reason why all English and American missionary effort in Italy should not be expended through the Waldenses. There is certainly no rational excuse for exporting our denominations to Italy when there is already on the ground a movement working on a basis acceptable to most Protestant bodies. The progress of the Waldenses in Italy means the triumph of every truth held dear by the modern evangelical church.

Disciples' Congress Offers Splendid Program

That is surely a rich, live program provided for the Disciples' Congress of 1911 to be held in Springfield, Ill., April 18-20. The acquisition of Professor E. C. Moore, of Harvard University, sets up a magnet which will draw ministers and thoughtful laymen across many states, we predict. Professor Moore spoke in Chicago last Monday to the Outlook Club. Men of restrained enthusiasm came away saying it was the best address they had ever heard. Doctor Moore's part in the Edinburgh Conference last summer brought pride to every delegate from this side the water. The Scottish papers described him as "a Yankee—but different." His first-hand study of the religions and civilizations of the Orient has equipped him for discussion of the missionary problem as few men are equipped. Thoroughly modern in his scholarship he is equally evangelical both in his conviction and feeling. His presence in the Congress will be an inspiration. Other speakers are Dean Sharpe, of State University of Missouri; President Bates, of Hiram College; Rev. E. F. Daugherty, of Vincennes, Ind.; Rev. David H. Shields, of Eureka, Ill.; Rev. Willis A. Parker, of Cambridge, Mass.; Professor E. S. Ames, of the University of Chicago, and Professor Ernest H. Lindley, of the University of Indiana. The latter speaks on "The Religious Views of Professor William James." Professor Lindley's brilliant and stimulating address at last year's Congress warrants the highest expectation as to his treatment of so big and rich a theme as the mind of William James.

Methodist Bishop Looks Beyond Federation

That peculiar brand of Disciple of Christ which opposes the participation of this Christian union brotherhood in the Federation enterprise will find food for reflection in the frank statement by Bishop Earl Cranston, of the Methodist church, in the Federation executive committee meeting held two weeks ago in Washington. It is true, of course, that not all the leaders in the movement to federate the Christian bodies for effective practical coöperation commit themselves to any program of unity beyond the federation stage. But not a few of them have done so. And the Disciples of Christ in taking their place in this interdenominational organization regard it as a preparatory stage on the way to a much more intimate and organic union of Christ's people. Those who, in faith, have so conceived it, will be reassured and comforted by the words of Bishop Cranston:

We proclaim that we differ only in nonessentials. Thus we confess that what was deemed essential when the denomination was founded has lost its significance, and that is to confess that we are maintaining separate organizations without warrant of Scripture, reason or economy. We must face the question, what call have nonessentials on conscience or devotion? Plainly the Federal Council is an achievement whose chief glory is yet to be realized.

These words pierce to the dividing asunder of the joints and marrow of denominationalism. If federation can add to its own direct achievements the quickening of such a sense of unity as Bishop Cranston here expresses it is plain that the Disciples of Christ ought to be in it heart and soul.

One City That Has Made Good

In looking toward the Men and Religion Forward Movement whose elaborate campaign for enlisting the men of America in the Christian life is to begin next September, it is heartening to have at hand some specimen reports of the Laymen's Missionary cross-continent campaign of last year. It has been impossible to gather reports from all the cities, but if Buffalo is to be taken as a sample the effectiveness of the campaign is put beyond skeptical cavilling. And if last year's missionary campaign among the men proved fruitful in actual results there is yet narrower ground for the skeptic to stand upon as he assesses the more comprehensive program outlined for next year. Buffalo held one of those enthusiastic missionary meetings last year—indeed, it was the first city reached in the campaign. And Buffalo churches did what their men pledged to do. The enthusiasm was coined into dollars for missions. The missionary offerings for 1910 as compared with 1909, showed an increase in the Lutheran churches of that city of 202 per cent, in the Methodist churches 127 per cent, in the Episcopal churches 110 per cent, in the Presbyterian churches 73 per cent, in the Baptist churches 47 per cent, in the Congregational churches 28 per cent. Of the twenty-one Methodist churches of the city the smallest increase was 41 per cent, and the average of them all 127 per cent, an increase in actual offerings from $7,502 in 1909 to $17,023 in 1910. That this quickening of the missionary spirit is the best possible preparation for a great regenerating movement among the men of America all who have studied the logic of Christian activity will readily believe.

Christian Endeavor After Thirty Years

Address at the Thirtieth Anniversary of the Society of Christian Endeavor

On the Evening of February 2, 1911, Tremont Temple, Boston.

BY REV. FRANCIS E. CLARK, D. D.

Thirty years ago tonight, almost at this very hour, some forty-five young people at their pastor's house in Portland, Me., formed themselves into the first Christian Endeavor Society.

It is not inappropriate after these three decades to consider the work of young people in the churches then and now, for, of the changes that have taken place in the church life of the young people, the society can say, to paraphrase the historic words of another, "All of this I have seen, and part of it I am."

To recite the names of the denominations and the nations in which Christian Endeavor is established is impressive and instructive. It is the young people's society in ten denominations of Methodists, in nearly all of the Presbyterian bodies, among most of the divisions of Baptists, among all the Disciples of Christ and Congregationalists, and is found largely among the Lutherans, United Brethren, and Church of England in Great Britain.

Some Christian Endeavor Countries.

It is established in the United States, Canada, Mexico, Great Britain, Germany, France, Italy, Hungary, Scandinavia, Switzerland, Spain, Turkey, India, Egypt, China, Japan, Australia, New Zealand, the South Sea Islands, the West Indies, South Africa, Brazil, Chile, and, in fact, in every considerable nation if the world.

Yet I am sure that every Endeavorer would, as he recites these facts, also declare with humility and gratitude, "Not unto us, O Lord, not unto us, but unto thy name give glory." For of all movements in the religious world none has been more distinctly providential or less dependent on the skill and will of man than this. An organization that has maintained itself for thirty years, while literally scores of experiments for the young in our churches have been tried and failed; an organization that has spread into every land beneath the sun, and that has had its literature translated into a hundred languages; an organization that has grown stronger every year, and whose last year showed the largest increase and the greatest prosperity of all, has a right to tell its simple story without being suspected of egotism or self-congratulation.

Societies Then and Now.

Thirty years ago there were no distinctly religious societies for young people outside of a few local churches and certain circles of young people interested in the cause of foreign missions.

To-day there is scarcely a Protestant church in the five continents without a distinctly religious organization for its young people. Of these some 75,000 are Christian Endeavor societies, and there are at least 25,000 purely denominational societies based on the same principles.

From Point Barrow in northernmost Alaska, where to-day the Endeavorers endure a day of twenty-four hours without the sun, to Invercargill, at the southern tip of New Zealand, where they rejoice in twenty-four hours of daylight; from America due west across Asia, across Africa, across Europe, back to America, though we should lose and gain twenty-four hours in our reckoning of time, we should not lose sight of our Christian Endeavor comrades. At every ocean pier in our journey around the world, and at most railway stations, they would greet us and bid us Godspeed.

Meetings Then and Now.

Thirty years ago a church with a weekly meeting especially for young people was an exception; now a church without such a meeting is the exception, and every year there are held no less than four millions of young people's devotional meetings adopting the methods, the principles, and the topics of the Christian Endeavor Society.

Thirty years ago the young people were not banded together for any sort of evangelistic or ingathering work. Such a thing as a mission of young people to young people was unknown. Now 75,000 lookout committees are on the outlook constantly for new members for the society and the church, a distinctly evangelistic work that does not depend on the coming of an evangelist, and that does not cease with his departure.

This week in which Christian Endeavor Day occurs is an ingathering week, and next Sunday is a Decision Day in a multitude of churches. In Great Britain this very week in memory of the founding of Christian Endeavor a mission of young people for young people by young people is being carried on in many parts of the United Kingdom.

Social Life Then and Now.

Thirty years ago there were few social functions arranged distinctly for the young people. Now the young people's social is a distinct and almost universal method of interesting them in the life and work of the church, and the ingenuity of some hundreds of thousands of Christian young people on the social committees is taxed to provide wholesome entertainment and recreation under the auspices of the church. As one boy was heard to say, "everything starts from the church in these days." Who will say that this is not the best of all places for the recreations, as well as for the distinctively Christian service, of the young people to start?

Impressions and Expressions.

Thirty years ago we were in the age of impression so far as the young people were concerned. The Sunday-school was managed by the older people, as it is now and from its very nature must always be, for it is the most valuable of all agencies of religious impression. Older people managed the temperance society; they controlled the missionary society; they led the music; they furnished the flowers for the pulpit when any were seen; and it was hardly thought fitting for a boy or a young man to pass a contribution-box or show a stranger to a seat.

Now we live in the age, not only of impression, but of expression, when young people are taught that the impression made by teachers and books is largely lost unless expressed by them in words and deeds. This is a fundamental principle of the new psychology, of which the Christian Endeavor Society is a practical exemplar.

Activities.

Now most of the 75,000 societies have temperance or good-citizenship committees of the young people themselves, to promote the truest patriotism; missionary committees of the young people themselves, through which interest in the great world beyond us is aroused, and more than half a million dollars every year is raised for home and foreign missions; music committees of the young people themselves, who turn their own musical ability to account; and flower committees that make glad the sanctuary each Sunday with the handiwork of God.

Only the other day a letter reached me from distant Marsovan in the interior of Turkey, telling how the Endeavorers cultivated their own flower gardens that their church might be decorated, and another from India, telling how the dusky Endeavorers there beautified the church lawn and rescued the adjoining graveyard from the weeds of neglect.

On the Sea.

Thirty years ago there were Seaman's Friend societies, but no work for sailors by the young people of our churches. Now there are Floating Societies of Christian Endeavor among the boys on the sea on many iron-clad and merchant vessels, and in consequence an intense interest in them is aroused among the boys of the shore. The Floating Endeavor work carried on by the societies of Liverpool and London, of New York and San Diego, of Nagasaki and Bombay, and many another seaport is beyond all praise. Vessels are visited; services are held; socials are enjoyed; good literature by the ton and comfort-bags by the thousand are distributed; and, better than all, the Christian sailor on the sea is given to understand that he is not forgotten by his brothers and sisters on the shore.

Thirty years ago few young people out of prison gave a thought to the tens of thousands of young men behind prison bars. Now the thousands of prisoners who have been converted to Christ and organized into societies through the efforts of their Endeavor friends outside, appeal most strongly to the warm hearts of our youth; and the fact that no prison Endeavorer is recorded as returning to prison when once discharged is a tribute to the sincerity of their conversion and to the sympathy of their friends outside, who have helped them to forget the past and to begin a new career.

Fellowship of Young People Then and Now.

Thirty years ago there was comparatively little fellowship between the denominations, and of course the young people of different sects knew little and cared less for one another. Said a distinguished minister of a prominent church to me the other day: "When I was a young minister and I wanted to wake up my sleepy audience, I would pitch into the other denominations for their peculiarities. Then the men would sit up and take notice, and say, as they went out of church, 'Ain't our young minister smart? He knows how to give it to them hot and heavy.'"

Such a travesty on religion would scarcely be possible in any pulpit of the land to-day, and have not the young people had their full share in bringing about the hearty fellowship, which is so good and so pleasant a thing to behold?

As an answer to this question, go with me to any of our great state conventions, where from five to fifty denominations assemble under the banner of Christian Endeavor. In Pennsylvania forty-six denominations are actually enrolled among the five thousand Endeavor societies of the Keystone state. Or, better still, go with me to such a convention as the World's Endeavor meeting at Agra, India, where every Protestant mission was represented, as well as every great race of mankind, and where at the consecration meeting responses were made in thirty-one different languages,—English and German and Swedish and Chinese and Tamil and Telugu and Hindi and Hindustani, in Tibetan and Burmese and Karen and Cingalese and a score more, all telling of devotion to Jesus Christ and his cause.

William Carey and Andrew Fuller.

A century ago William Carey in a letter to Andrew Fuller prayed for and predicted such a meeting as a possibility of the remote future, but Andrew Fuller thought that it was not within the bounds of possibility, or scarcely desirable. A year ago his great-grandson, William Carey the third, presided at a meeting of forty denominations and as many nationalities at this same Endeavor Convention held under the shadow of the Taj Mahal in the heart of the same continent to which William Carey, the first, gave his life.

Great Conventions.

Or if in our own land you would fully realize the sweep and the strength of this fellowship of the young people of to-day, call to mind the convention of '95 in our own city of Boston, when 56,000 young people from all over the land made the pilgrimage to our good city, when the city was decorated with banners and mottoes of welcome as never before in its history.

Or, better still, go with me next July to Atlantic City, and see a similar throng of a younger generation, representing every denomination, and every state, and almost every considerable community, of our land. Join with them in their praise; lift up your hearts with them in their prayer; mingle with them in their hours of recreation; bow with them in their consecration; and tell me whether the fellowship of the young Christians of America is not a vital and glorious feature of our modern church life.

No Monopoly.

It is only fair to add that of course this great awakening by and for young people has not been monopolized by the Christian Endeavor movement. While it has been growing strong, the Sunday-school has largely multipled its efficiency and increased its numbers. The Young Men's Christian Association and Young Woman's Christian Association have become at least ten times as powerful and prosperous as they were thirty years ago. The distinctively missionary and temperance societies of young people of our country and the world.

A Personal Testimony.

May I add, before I close, a personal word? During these thirty years I have given myself with what vigor or devotion I could command to work with and for the young people o four country and the world.

During these years I have journeyed more that 600,000 miles in their behalf, have been five times around the world, besides visits to South America and Mexico and many journeys to Europe and nearer Asia.

I have spoken to nearly two millions of these young people, who speak sixty languages, and who were willing to listen to my halting words through an interpreter I have seen them in meetings great and small, and in their homes. I have seen them in shop and school and college, on the campus and the ball-field. I have heard their stumbling confession of Christ.

Watched Them Grow.

I have watched them grow strong in the faith and zealous in many a great cause. I have heard them in after years in the pulpits of our own land or preaching to the untutored nations of other lands; and, the more I have seen of these young people, the more I have come to believe in them, trust them, love them.

Making allowance for all unhappy exceptions, I have come more and more, during all these thirty years, to admire their sanity, their courage, their devotion to the right. I have found them responsive to every worthy appeal from God or country, and I have unbounded hope for the future, as more and more the affairs of state and nation fall into their hands.

I thank God for every mile I have travelled in their behalf, for every meeting I have addressed, for every kindly hand I have taken; and I can say with all heartiness, "The lines are fallen unto me in pleasant places," and so far as I may have the love and confidence of the young people of to-day I have a goodly heritage.

THE PREACHER AND HIS MESSAGE

Bringing the Sermon Close to Human Life.

BY JAMES SMALL

What shall the preacher preach? How shall he deliver the sermon? What is the ideal sermon for these days? How can I best lay the book to the hearts of the people?

These are the questions I am supposed to answer, but it is like raising a family. Those who know best how to raise boys are those who have none. I heard once of a man who went over to a friend who had quite a family, and he said, 'I want to give you some advice raising boys." "Well," said the friend, "I understand your own boys are not all they should be." "That is just why I can give you some advice now in regard to training your boys. I see where I have missed it in raising mine." It is one thing to tell a preacher how the thing is done; it is quite another thing to do it yourself. But I am to tell how it should be done, and if my reader is helped in any way, I am repaid.

Earnestness in Delivery.

I should put as a very first requisite, Earnestness in the delivery. A sermon may be faultless in regard to literary structure, or in the matter of Biblical composition, and yet it may produce little or no effect upon an audience, because it is not delivered with the earnestness and emotion which are necessary in order to "grip" the congregation and stir their souls to "do something." The keynote of every sermon should be salvation; and a sermon that rouses souls to do something is the sermon alone that accomplishes good. Nothing great is ever born outside of passionate earnestness.

Hopefulness an Asset.

The message should be hopeful. Every minister and evangelist should "go in to win." As one sits under the voice and power of those early preachers, nothing is more evident than that they "believed and therefore spoke." They knew the truth of their message and felt its power. They had embodied faith in immediate results from their preaching. The gospel, they believed, was the seed of faith. Men, they felt, must believe it when they heard it. Nor were they often disappointed in that faith. Who can doubt for a moment that their unbounded faith and hope had much to do with their success? They must have preached with an enthusiasm which was simply irresistible. They could not be defeated. With the love and hope of their master in their souls, their whole aim was victory, and they had reason to rejoice in daily and glorious triumphs for their risen Lord.

The preacher has before him a needy audience. The poor are there, the discouraged, the tempted, the tried, the saint and sinner; and if he knows their individual needs, all the better. Then he will not have to "scatter." He can be kindly direct and sympathetically personal. Often the best sermons are preached to one person.

Again, the preacher must "preach the word." The temptation to preach on topics of the hour is great these days. Young men, especially, think they must deal with living themes, and that their preaching must be abreast of the times. But is not the Bible up to date? Does it not keep abreast of the times? Is the word of God no longer in touch with the days in which we live? Men make an awful mistake if they think the "Word" has lost its power and its adaptation to the needs of the people. We call it the "Old Book" yet it is the very newest book of the day. The book keeps the best hearts alive. There is a tone of vital freshness about it that is really wonderful.

Principal Fairbairn says of the Book of Psalms: "For thousands of years these Psalms have been sung, and men still sing them, feeling as if they were the most modern, the most living of all religious songs. They have been translated out of their primitive speech into almost all our human tongues, and have become, as it were, the universal language in which man can tell his joy or sorrow, his contrition or exaltation, to God."

After all, the real and ultimate interpretation of the book is found in the person of Jesus Christ. Its supreme fascination centers in the Son of man. "All history is mystery without his story." He is the center of the book. All paths of life and liberty and type and predication lead to Him.

Human Interest.

Again, there must be the "human interest in the sermon." Preacher More, in the "Sky Pilot," did more for "Davie" by reading a letter that came from "home" to him than all the "sermons" he could have preached him. You remember how it ended: "And oh, Davie, if your heart ever turns home, remember the door is always open, and its joy you'll bring to us when you come back." That word brought "Davie" home to God. That open door in the old home was an open door in his Father's house. Friends, when God's love grows dim, remember mother's love, and reason from that to God's great love. No man ever loved God who did not first believe that God loved him.

Then, in conclusion, the preacher must be a living embodiment of God's power to save. Nothing can, nothing will, ever take the place of a man in the pulpit. The preacher must remind the people of Christ. He must be willing to "give his life a ransom" for his church. He must know his people and bring a message to their needs. It will come with power and unction when it is forged out of the hot furnace of everyday life.

It is well for us all to remember that Christ stands amid the common things of life. He lived our life that he might be a merciful High Priest, dignify human toil, and settle all the problems of labor and capital. He was born in a stable, cradled in a manger, that he might have something in common with the sons of honest toil.

Two of the sweetest passages in the New Testament to me are these: "As soon as they were come to land, they saw a fire of coals there, and fish laid thereon, and bread . . . and Jesus said unto them, Come and dine" (John 21:12). The other one is: "And Jesus being wearied with his journey, sat thus on the well." They both speak of the human Christ: bone of our bone, flesh of our flesh and heart of our heart. And as long as I have a Saviour on the throne that had such feelings and can never forget them, it will always be an inspiration to my poor, weak, frail life to "look to Him."

And then let the preacher lift up his eyes and see his risen Christ, a fisherman on the shore busy in preparing a meal for hungry fishermen: he will learn to preach the Christ that was friendly, human, forgiving and sympathetic, as never before.

Abraham Lincoln's Religious Views

Important Summary of Facts Concerning Great President's Faith

BY EDGAR DE WITT JONES.

One aspect of Abraham Lincoln's religion, and that the most important, has never been questioned; another has been the subject of controversy for forty-five years. This is to say that while nearly everyone now accepts his character as extraordinarily Christian in charity, unselfishness and the like, few have been able to agree as to his precise doctrinal views or denominational preferences.

About two years ago, I began a serious study of his life and writings with a view of approximating their religious values. My purpose was not to prove Mr. Lincoln a very proper and orthodox Christian. The world has long known that he was not a "technical Christian," nor identified with any church. From what I had already learned of his religious views in general and the comments of his biographies thereupon, I came to believe that regardless of opinions he may have held in early manhood, he certainly grew into a large and comfortable Christian faith during the last three years of his life. I set out to see if this were really so; to see if I could establish it, not by gathering together the scores of apocryphal stories that go annually the rounds of the press but by a serious and painstaking study of his writings. With this purpose I went through his speeches, his letters, and many of his public papers and I marked every reference to God, and every scriptural quotation or allusion. I have been richly repaid for my pains. Some pages I literally covered with pencilings. Some single paragraphs I found to contain as many as half a dozen such references.

Religious, But Not a Church Member.

In as brief space as possible I wish to sum up the evidence that goes to show how deeply religious a man Mr. Lincoln was, and in his later years at least, a follower of the Great Teacher in every way except church membership.

I think these values may be summed up under eight points.

1. The phraseology that Mr. Lincoln used both in his speeches, his correspondence, and state papers, is that of the orthodox Christian. This is not saying that Mr. Lincoln was such, but that in his references to the Deity, the scriptures, the church, and the Christ, he wrote like one.

2. He was friendly to the church, contributed to its support and attended its services frequently. In 1849 the Lincolns took a pew in the First Presbyterian Church of Springfield, and they occupied it regularly till they went to Washington in 1861. While president, Mr. Lincoln attended Dr. P. D. Gurley's church, the New York Avenue Presbyterian, where he was a regular attendant and pew-holder.

3. He was a profound and diligent student of the scripture; his speeches and writings abound in allusions to Biblical incidents and texts. No man in America's public life quoted so freely and aptly from the scriptures in public addresses as did Mr. Lincoln.

4. He was a believer in the efficacy of prayer, and was himself a prayerful man. What philosophy or theory of prayer he held we do not know for he never explained. That he prayed often and earnestly during his career as president, is so well known that it has almost become a platitude to speak of Lincoln as "a man of prayer."

5. He had a very strong and beautiful hope in immortality. In a letter written Jan. 12, 1851, to his step-brother, John D. Johnson, he refers feelingly to his father's approaching death and then expressed the beautiful sentiment, "say to him that if we could meet now it is doubtful whether it would not be more painful than pleasant, but that if it be his lot to go now, he will soon have a joyous meeting with many loved ones gone before, and where the rest of us, through the help of God hope ere long to join them."

6. He believed in a benignant Providence, the expression of the will of One whom he spoke and wrote of as "The Heavenly Father," "The Almighty Architect," etc., etc.

7. The conversations he is said to have had with Hon. Newton Bateman and with several visitors at the White House, on religious themes, in which he declared his belief in the unique sonship of Christ, have never been successfully controverted.

8. The very general impression of those who stood nearest him during the later years of his life, that his was a devout and spiritual nature, patterned in love and gentleness closely after the great Model.

These points I feel sure will be conceded by every fair-minded student of Mr. Lincoln's life.

Summary of Negative Side.

Next I wish to sum up the evidence that would seem to favor the other side of the controversy. I think four points will cover this testimony which is largely of the negative kind.

1. Herndon's testimony that Mr. Lincoln was skeptical and once wrote a tract in which he denied the truth of revealed religion. Also the strange claim that Mr. Lincoln continued to be an infidel all the time he attended the Presbyterian church, deceiving the people as to his real sentiments.

2. The opinion of Hon. Jesse W. Fell, who knew Mr. Lincoln intimately, who says, "Whilst he held many opinions in common with the great mass of Christian believers, he did not believe in what are regarded as the orthodox views of Christianity." Mr Fell thought him of the same religious belief as Theodore Parker.

3. The opinion of Hon. David Davis, another bosom friend of Mr. Lincoln, agrees with that of Mr. Fell.

4. The fact that he never united with any church.

Let us examine briefly this testimony.

1. It is pretty generally agreed that Mr Herndon was not in several respects a suitable biographer. For instance, the shadow which he attempted to throw over Mr. Lincoln's birth has been proven, to put it mildly, a gross error. There is a very obvious tendency on Mr. Herndon's part to make his own religious views Mr. Lincoln's also. It should be borne in mind too, that both Mr. John T. Stuart and Mr. James W. Matheny whom Mr. Herndon quoted in proof of his assertion that Mr. Lincoln was an infidel all the while he attended the Presbyterian church repudiated the same.

Lincoln's Views Changed.

On the other hand, both of these men, together with Ninan W. Edwards, expressed the opinion that while Mr. Lincoln may have been an unbeliever in the earlier part of his life, while at New Salem, his views underwent a change and he became a believer in the truths of the Bible, even delivering an address before the Sagamon Bible Society.

The charge that Mr. Lincoln was insincere in his interest in religious matters is unworthy of Mr. Herndon; whatever Mr. Lincoln may or may not have been religiously, he was surely above duplicity.

2. As for Hon. Jesse W. Fell, and Judge David Davis, they were men of the highest integrity and ideals of truth. Under no circumstances would they have wittingly misrepresented Mr. Lincoln or anybody else. Mr. Fell's testimony is really a splendid tribute to Mr. Lincoln's religious life, certainly, if we are to take seriously what Mr. Lincoln said and wrote, "he held many opinions in common with the great mass of Christian believers." And I think we are nearly all agreed now, that one may reject the various disagreeing theories, dogmas and ceremonial systems and still not reject the divinity of Christ.

Views Not Identical With Parker's.

A few words, however, as to Mr. Fell's opinion that Mr. Lincoln's views were similar to Theodore Parker's. Mr. Parker was a brilliant and useful man. With his theological views I am not now especially concerned, but if one will but open a volume of Mr. Parker's sermons side by side with Mr. Lincoln's writings, he will be compelled to note the difference in attitude toward the Bible as well as in phraseology. These two men may have believed alike on many religious questions, but they do not express themselves as belonging to the same school of theological thought.

Hon. David Davis claimed never to have heard Mr. Lincoln express himself on the subject at all. Up to the last three years of his life, Mr. Lincoln's reticence on religious subjects seems to have been marked.

3. As to Mr. Lincoln's not uniting with a church, we have his own explanation that the long and involved creeds of the various churches perplexed him, nor could he bring himself sincerely to subscribe to them. Said he, "When a church will make as its sole article of faith the scripture, 'Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart and with all thy mind and with all thy soul and thy neighbor as thyself,' that church will I join. In Lincoln's day doctrinal aspects of Christian truth received the stress of pulpit emphasis. In our own, practical Christian living receives the emphasis of both the pulpit and religious press.

Contemplated Professing His Faith.

It should also be stated that there is considerable evidence to the effect that about the time of his assassination Mr. Lincoln was intending to make a public profession of his faith and unite with some church, likely the Presbyterian. There is evidence that he so expressed himself to Dr. Gurley.

To sum up now the whole matter, I think we may safely say that whatever may yet come to light regarding Mr. Lincoln's religious views, his Christian character, his strong faith, and the prayerful habits of his later life are established beyond any doubt. No one communion can ever claim him to the exclusion of others. He was greatly and grandly, yet withal simply, a Christian in love and tenderness.

His Christianity was uniquely nonsectarian, and undenominational.

Lincoln's mother was a Disciple, his father was a Baptist, his wife was a Presbyterian and during his residence in Washington, Matthew Simpson, the great Methodist bishop, was often his spiritual advisor. In earlier life, Lincoln's intellectual difficulty as to the deity of Christ classed him with the Unitarians, so it has come to pass that all of the above-named communions have at one time or another claimed him as of their faith. This in itself is an extraordinary and unique tribute to a character that was simply, naturally and beautifully religious.

If anything could be added to the above paragraph, that would give it even a more universal spirit, it would be the fact that Mr. Lincoln's first teacher was a Catholic.

With the passing years, the limitations of Abraham Lincoln's religious views which were intellectual, and technical, will grow less and less apparent, while the great basic principles of the Christian faith which found such large expression in his daily life will grow more and more apparent until they will quite transfigure him, if indeed, they have not already done that.

Bloomington, Ill.

TRAVELS OF THE TEAM WORK CAMPAIGN

Itinerary and Results of the Get Together Movement.

BY E. E. ELLIOTT

When the "Team Work Campaign" now being conducted by the committee of the State and National Secretaries Association was launched, the promoters of the idea went about their task with much fear and trembling, lest the men of our churches might not take hold upon it with the necessary amount of enthusiasm to make the campaign a success. From the outset it has been one continual round of successes following closely one upon another. It was feared, also, that the gatherings on Saturdays and Sundays would not be well attended by reason of the mercantile activities of our cities on Saturdays, and the necessary round of religious duties of our congregations on the Lord's Day, but such has not proven the case. Beginning at Troy, N. Y., and continuing until the present writing in Des Moines, Iowa, every gathering has been of the sort desired and anticipated by the "Team."

The Cities Visited.

Troy turned out one hundred men, the largest gathering of men ever assembled in the history of our plea in that eastern city. Buffalo men and those from the Niagara frontier to the number of three hundred met with us about the banquet table, and gave the speakers such a hearty hearing that it has stayed with us to this moment. Uniontown, Pa., brought together one hundred and twenty-five of its sterling men on Saturday night. New Castle, Pa., accorded us a tremendous hearing on our first Sunday out. Akron, Ohio, turned the men out of its rubber factories, and other churches in the vicinity added to the horde, and when we took the count, one hundred and fifty were about us drinking in the addresses. Cleveland, Ohio, appreciated our coming but failed numerically to measure up to the standard of our previous appointments. Columbus did better, while Newark, whose appointment was made at the eleventh hour, gave us one of the nicest audiences of the trip. Lexington brought the men of eighteen churches of the community together, and they returned to their homes filled and thrilled with the great messages of the campaign speakers. The ministers of Louisville met with us at the hotel at noon as we passed through and served us with one of the tastiest banquets of the tour, and it was a delightful fellowship ending only with the departure of our train for Indianapolis. The Hoosier capital enjoys the distinction of having within its corporate limits some of the best churches and best preachers of the entire Brotherhood. We looked for a tremendous gathering in the afternoon of our Second Sunday, but in this we were disappointed. The men of Indiana had not caught the spirit of the occasion, and we were left to take the remains falling from the table after Newell Dwight Hillis obtained his audience of the afternoon. But we are never dismayed by a gathering such as we had at Indianapolis, even though it fails to measure up to our expectations. The one hundred men present stayed with us to the end and we congratulate ourselves upon the attendance and the attention of this number of men drawn from the ranks of our various churches in Indianapolis. Hammond, Indiana, drew one hundred and sixty men of twelve nationalities from the six churches of the Calumet District, the first meeting of the men of that industrial community ever attempted. Nelson Trimble and his good wife, Martha Stout Trimble, who divide the labor among the churches of Gary, brought over a whole carload from their churches, and these were augmented by Hammond, East Hammond, Whiting, South Chicago and Indiana Harbor. This was an inspiring sight and one not soon forgotten. Toledo came next with one hundred and forty men at the Norwood Avenue Church. Too much cannot be said of the work of the local committee here and elsewhere, who labored hard and faithfully to make the gatherings successful from an attendance standpoint. Detroit is blessed with a coterie of the best men we know of among the Disciples of Christ. One hundred and fifty of them met with us about the banquet board, and permitted us to bore them for a season, and strange as it may seem, they passed a resolution endorsing the Team Work Campaign and bidding us a cordial welcome to make Detroit a stopping place any time we are about the King's business in that vicinity. Then we stopped in Chicago for a brief rest, and took in the great banquet of the "Men and Religion Forward Movement," with J. G. Cannon, Fred B. Smith, President Judson of Chicago University, Judge Spencer of St. Louis, and others of national fame upon the program. The fellowship of the occasion with Morrison, Jordan, Ames, Muckley, R. A. Long and Macfarlane was a delight. Gibson City, nestling among the corn stalks of Illinois, came next, and gave us a splendid audience on a stormy night, in response to a twelfth hour appeal. Peoria, full of spirits, many of them exceedingly choice, was our Saturday night date in Illinois. The audience of about two hundred was added to by the presence of Ex-Pres. Hieronymus of Eureka, and Field Secretary H. H. Peters, and their good wives. Jacksonville is a quiet little city of homes down in the state, where about fifteen hundred of our folks follow the leadership of R. F. Thrapp, of whom none among our ministry stands higher. This was on Sunday, and Brother Muckley preached at the morning hour. In the afternoon we divided up, Dr. Kline going to the Old People's Home, Brother Madden to the Mission, while the writer addressed a large gathering of churchmen of the city at the Y. M. C. A. In the evening we told the story of the Kingdom to a crowded house at the church, and the appreciation of the people speaks from a letter of Brother Thrapp's printed in last week's issue. Springfield, Ill., which boasts of being the capital city of the prairie state, was the birthplace of our Board of Church Extension. Here is the tomb of Lincoln, containing the sacred dust of his family, his old home, and the very building where he pleaded his cases at bar. But all that is of the past. The Colemans are royal entertainers and took charge, body and soul, of the Team. Two hundred and fifty men gathered with us at the Y. M. C. A. for the banquet, which was served without money and without price to all who came. Men were present from as far away as Decatur, Athens, Petersburg, Girard and Virden. Some more resolutions were here added to our growing list of commendations. Champaign, Ill., is one of the prettiest cities of the state, with Urbana, nestling against her shoulder like a twin sister, eager to share in the joys of each other. The University Place Church is in process of erection, and will be one of the prettiest and most commodious in the great state when completed. One hundred and twenty-five men banqueted with us at the Y. M. C. A. Danville came next with a hundred men gathered in the drooping mist of a delayed storm. Terre Haute, with the same number about the tables of the Central Church, with St. Louis following with a great host of men at the Second Church. Among our auditors were J. H. Allen, J. H. Garrison, W. R. Warren, Marion Stevenson, C. C. Clark, J. H. Mohorter, and others whose names are prominent among us as a people. Springfield, Mo., brought together one hundred and forty men on Saturday night about the banquet board. Joplin gave us the surprise of the tour for a Sunday gathering. We had been told verbally, by letter and telegraph, that the Sunday supper for men was ill-advised, and all but impossible. These men of Joplin thought differently about it. They arranged with the good ladies of the Central Church to serve a supper to men at the evening hour. All the churches in the vicinity closed their doors or held services for ladies only in the evening. Neosho sent a carload of men, Carthage sent a delegation of nearly a hundred, and when the count was taken later in the evening, there were exactly four hundred men gathered about the tables, thus making the Joplin meeting the largest of the tour thus far. Kansas City has been having some great happenings recently. The pages of history have been turning rapidly for some weeks. The great hospital enterprise, city missions, various protracted meetings with Scoville, Martin, and others were in progress, but one hundred and fifty-five men from twenty-four churches gathered at the Independence Boulevard Church in response to the call of F. L. Bowen, chairman. St. Joseph, Mo., is the mecca of twenty-three counties of the seventh district, which has three hundred churches of the Disciples and thirty thousand members. This was the first meeting where the speeches preceded the banquet, but it was a success in every way. One hundred and thirty-nine men from nine churches of the community came together and gave us interested attention. Then the feast was served by the preachers of St. Joseph, having been previously prepared by them in the afternoon.

The Addresses.

Every address has been a "get together" speech. The State Secretary of Missions brings to the minds and hearts of these men the problems of the state. The Brotherhood representative presents to them a plan of operation for the men's society of the church, and follows this with reference to the program of the Brotherhood movement providing for the inspirational, educational and fraternal features of the organization. The representative of the Home Society tells of the work of American Missions in all its branches, city, district, state and national, including the work of the Board of Church Extension. The representative of our benevolent enterprises tells of the fellowship we are neglecting among the orphan, widow, aged and afflicted, and brings to the men assembled a vision of brotherhood without which the

(Continued on page 23.)

Our Readers' Opinions

A Misunderstanding, Not a Real Difference

Dr. Barrett's Rejoinder.

In The Christian Century for January 12, W. L. Hayden discusses my claim, made in The Century for December 29, that our Disciple brethren have done the people of the Christian Church a great injustice in claiming James O'Kelly as one of the leaders in the movement which brought into existence the Disciple Church as a distinct organization. He begins by confessing that a mistake has been made in this matter, but declares that it is an open question as to who made the mistake. That is a pretty good beginning, and we take pleasure in showing him who made the mistake.

With the error confessed, there is little difficulty in showing who committed the mistake. Brother Hayden does not even leave it for us to show the guilty party, he does that himself, as when he attempts to justify the error by saying: "Our movement has a right to claim all the servants of God as belonging to the whole Christian Church." Say, brother, does your movement claim John Wesley, John Knox, Chas. H. Spurgeon, Henry Ward Beecher and Bishop Phillips Brooks? These men were, beyond all human questioning, servants of God—were they also leaders in your "Restoration Movement?" The truth is, Brother Hayden clearly begs the question in an effort to dodge the main issue.

James O'Kelly was an advocate of the oneness of believers, but we deny that he was ever at any time a leader in the movement for the oneness of believers under the approved name of Disciples. He was never that, and no living man can prove it by reliable facts. There is no doubt as to who committed the error. It was done by the brethren who tried to sweep in all of Christendom on a platform so narrow that not one-fourth of the followers of Christ could possibly stand on it. Brother Hayden talks of the generous recognition of the faithful labors of "all men of God!" Aye, brother, the Christian church in which James O'Kelly was a leader offers fellowship to every child of God. Will the Disciples in their generous recognition of all men of God receive to their fellowship Methodists, Presbyterians, Episcopalians, Lutherans and Friends, as God's children, and without any change in views? If so, we hail you as brethren in the Lord, but if not, then what is your generous recognition of all men of God worth?

You declare that the Disciples "pitch into" others only because of their zeal for the truth. Sure, and so does the Roman Catholic and all the other fighting tribes—they have a zeal for the truth as they see it, but what of the truth as the other man sees it? He has as good a chance to see the truth as you have, and for all we know, he may have used it just as wisely. Now will you claim him as of your body, whether he accepts your view of baptism and regeneration or not? What say you, Brother Hayden? This is the crux of the situation. When the Disciples will agree to give membership and fellowship in their churches to every child of God on the basis of his being an heir of God and a joint heir with Jesus Christ to an everlasting inheritance, then we shall believe you are in earnest about union for all the people of God. That was the kind of oneness of believers in which O'Kelly was a leader. Will Brother Hayden and his brethren of the Disciple church, while trying to claim O'Kelly as a leader in their movement, agree in good faith to stand with him on that basis? If so, well; and if not, then you stultify yourselves in claiming him as one of your leaders. What say you, Brother Hayden? If you cannot stand for the oneness of believers on that basis, why attempt to palliate your self-confessed error by juggling words?

As a matter of fact James O'Kelly was not only not a leader in the Disciple movement, but there never has been any organic connection between the Christian Church, in which O'Kelly was a leader, and the Disciple Church, in which Alexander Campbell was a leader, and any attempt to make the contrary appear can rest on nothing but error, for O'Kelly was dead before the Disciple movement had any organic existence.

It is needless for Brother Hayden and this writer to have a war of words—that can do no good. Let Brother Hayden produce the historical data from reliable sources, showing that O'Kelly was a leader in the movement which brought forth the Disciple church, and I will immediately yield the palm to him, but till then this is enough.

Dayton, Ohio. J. PRESSLEY BARRETT.

Editorial Response.

It does not seem profitable to revive the controversy of five years ago in this unimportant matter. We are at a loss to account for the way in which our brethren of the Christian denomination took offense at the article of Rev. W. J. Wright which was the cause of all the controversy. In justice to Dr. Barrett we print the above rejoinder to W. L. Hayden and a few words of our own to which we do not think either Mr. Hayden or Dr. Barrett will wish to add anything.

Mr. Wright, now of Enid, Okla., was then secretary of the Disciples' American Missionary Society and prepared a historical sketch of the Disciples for publication in the program of the Norfolk convention held in 1907.

Following are the opening paragraphs of the article:

> The people known as Christians or Disciples of Christ, first appeared as a distinct people in America in the early part of the nineteenth century. They sprang up almost simultaneously in various parts of the country and in various denominations.
>
> Rev. James O'Kelly, of Virginia, a member of the M. E. General Conference, led off from his church a body of people who refused to wear any name but "Christian" or consider any book other than the Bible as authoritative.
>
> In 1800, Rev. Abner Jones, a Baptist preacher in Vermont, started a similar movement. As a result, congregations were formed in all the New England and North Atlantic states. The Bible was the only book of authority, the historic creeds were rejected, and the people and churches bore no name but "Christian."
>
> In 1803, Rev. Barton W. Stone and several other Presbyterian preachers withdrew from the Synod in Lexington, Ky., renounced all human creeds, took the Bible as their only guide-book, refused all names but "Christian," and proceeded to organize Christian Churches.
>
> In 1809, Rev. Thomas Campbell, a Presbyterian preacher residing in Washington, Pa., published a "Declaration and Address," in which he said that "The Church of Christ upon earth is essentially, intentionally, and constitutionally one, etc. * * *
>
> It will be noticed that the leaders of these movements, though widely separated geographically and denominationally, and knowing nothing of each other or his movement, alike saw and lamented the evils of a divided church; and that in the interest of unity and liberty, peace and progress, they alike rejected all the masks of denominationalism, and declared themselves simply to be Christians without denominations, and members of "one body," the Christian Church.
>
> It was natural that when these men learned of the nearly identical character of the movements they headed, they should seek to unify their forces. The two greater forces, that led by Mr. Stone, and that by Mr. Campbell, were brought into one in Ohio, Kentucky and Tennessee in 1832, after conferences between Mr. Stone and Alexander Campbell, son of Thomas Campbell. Since that time, many independent congregations holding common principles, have joined the movement.

This statement caused much feeling in the communion known as the Christian Church. The Herald of Gospel Liberty flew into a great rage (which we might have imagined time would have tempered) on account of what it called the inclusion of James O'Kelly among the founders of the Disciples of Christ. Mr. Wright, however, did not make any such claim. He was pointing out the religious movements just prior to and connected with the origin of the Disciples. The Rev. Abner Jones of Vermont is mentioned. But he is not on this account described as one of the founders of the Disciples' organization. James O'Kelly is mentioned not as a founder of the Disciples nor yet as a "leader in the movement which brought into existence the Disciple church as a distinct organization." He is set down as one who with his followers adopted the name Christian as the true name of the church and took the Bible alone, without a human creed, as the sufficient rule of faith and practice. In this position James O'Kelly has significance for the Disciples, for these are two of the cardinal ideals of the Disciples from the beginning.

O'Kelly has the same kind of significance for the Disciples' history that the Haldanes of Scotland have. But with this addition: It happened that after the Disciples were in existence as an organized body some years under the leadership of Thomas and Alexander Campbell, a great number of the congregations of the Christian churches—the churches which Barton W. Stone had led out of Presbyterianism and whose name "Christian" had been suggested to Stone by Elder Rice Haggard, a co-worker with O'Kelly—joined with the Disciples in one movement for Christian unity. There were probably three hundred of these congregations in Kentucky, Ohio, Indiana and Illinois. That there were so many is disputed by some Christian church writers, who allow only about fifty. But the number is immaterial. Whether there were three hundred or fifty or three, they greatly influenced the new fellowship in which they became partners. Barton W. Stone was their leader. Not all the followers of Stone came with him. Those who did not, remained with and helped to perpetuate the older communion to which Dr. Barrett and the Herald of Gospel Liberty now belong.

The Disciples do not claim that James O'Kelly had anything to do with the organizing of the body known as the Disciples of Christ, any more than John Wesley had or Roger Williams. Mr. Wright did not say that he was a leader in the movement "under the approved name of Disciples." It is a waste of words and temper to be denying that, Dr. Barrett. Mr. Wright distinctly says, that the leaders of these movements, "knew nothing of each other or his movement."

It is equally a waste of words and temper to be denying that there ever has been "any organic connection between the Christian Church, in which O'Kelly was a leader, and the Disciple Church in which Alexander Campbell was a leader." No one ever said there was such connection—no one ever dreamed there was! Certainly Mr. Wright made no suggestion that there had been any organic connection between the two.

But the Disciples, while not numbering James O'Kelly as a founder of their organization, will go right on giving honor to James O'Kelly as a pioneer voice speaking for unity, for liberty, for the open Bible and the name Christian.

Dr. Barrett will not mind if we do that, we are sure.—THE EDITORS.

The Book World

ONE WAY OUT, by William Carleton. No more interesting book has recently come out than this story of a New Englander who "emigrates" to America. The pseudonym, William Carleton, masks the interesting personality of a man who up to the age of thirty-eight had led the conventional life of a salaried clerk. Starting in at eighteen with a small clerkship with a large corporation, he is advanced gradually, all the while a mere cog in this particular machine, with the incessant grind of trying to get the place of the man ahead. The occasional advance of salary meant only living in a better class boarding house and more expensive amusements with never an opportunity to save. After his marriage to his wonderful wife Ruth, to whom this book is a constant tribute, they settle themselves in a surburban home near this New England metropolis among neighbors who know nothing else but to live at the limit of their salaries, establishing a standard that makes itself into a seemingly inexorable law. Always before them is the ghost of sickness especially after the birth of their boy and the other equally haunting fear of losing the coveted promotion. Carleton reaches a salary of thirty dollars per week, but the social life that has grown up among them still makes it impossible to save a dollar. With the introduction of new short-cut systems in business methods, many positions are dispensed with and the dreaded blow comes when Carleton asks for a raise in his salary, is informed that the man next below him will for a small increase of salary combine the two positions and do the work of both. So at thirty-eight he finds himself with no position and worse —no profession, for his clerical routine had no business value outside of the niche he had occupied with this particular firm. Unable to obtain any work, he is driven to desperate resolve at the sight of foreigners who emigrate to America and are able to earn a competency and become employers within a comparative number of years. So with the announcement that they intend to "emigrate" they secure a small flat in the top of a tenement house in "Little Italy" and Carleton starts life afresh as a day laborer. The book continues this most interesting story of how they solved the problem of saner living, and the benefits that come to all of them. It is a refreshing commentary on the uselessness of much that civilization—so-called—demands and which is in reality only a burden. (Boston: Small, Maynard and Company. Pp. 303. $1.20 net.)

HOME LIFE IN IRELAND by Robert Lynd. This is not Mr. Lynd's first book on things Irish but he has written no better. This is a sumptuous volume of well illustrated and beautifully printed pages bound in red and gilt. To one who has tramped among the peasantry of Ireland it comes with the welcome of sometime Irish friend with whom he has chatted by the way and who, with great good nature and keen insight into things Irish, sits him down to converse for an evening, doing the talking himself. The pictures of Irish life are mostly taken from the north but there is not one tone of Ulster prejudice in the book. Himself a Protestant the author is able to deal, nevertheless, in the fairest fashion with the Catholic majority in the island and to see the prejudices of both parties. But this is not a series of essays on Irish problems; it is a series of keen-witted and fine-fancied conversations about Irish life, types, customs and foibles with no end of admiration for the excellent qualities in the real Celtic character and appreciation of its genius. Mr. Lynd is an artist at writing because he is an artist at seeing sympathetically, yet with enough reserve, to allow the edge of criticism to cut kindly and without leaving a wound. The illustrations are not fancied. They are from accurate photographs and they illustrate because they are well chosen and representative. (Chicago: A. C. McClurg & Co. Pp. 318. $2.50 net.)

THOMAS AND ALEXANDER CAMPBELL, by A. McLean, President of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society. This little monograph of sixty-two pages is written in the graphic style of the beloved leader of the missionary work among the Disciples of Christ. It holds the reader fast until the end and presents pen portraits of the two great leaders that are vivid because they are discriminating yet sympathetic. Their faults as well as their virtues are set forth in a manful way and the ardor of an admirer is saved from hero worship by the keen mind of a disciple who is quite the equal of his masters. Especially does this little book make a contribution to the growing appreciation of Thomas Campbell. It is worth while to go back to the early inspirations that moved the mind of that good man and renew the spirit of the movement by an appeal to the spirit that gave it being. It is the fate of every teacher to have his ideas petrified more or less and narrowed to a literalism. The Disciples have been no exception to the rule. This appreciation of those who initiated their reform is a call to stick close to the charter. (For sale by the Foreign Christian Missionary Society, Box 884, Cincinnati. Twenty-five cents.)

THE ROOT OF EVIL, by Thomas Dixon. A dramatic story of New York life, business and social, with all its tragedies, defeats, false ambition and consequent suffering laid bare. The development of a gigantic drug combine is traced, showing the minor workings of like schemes and the ruin brought the progress of business methods that demand combination, at the expense of all else. James Stuart, a young Southerner, enters the practice of law in New York, ambitious for a career more to satisfy the longings of his sweetheart for wealth and power, than his own desire. His innate honesty keeps free from yielding to the subtle temptations put before him, though at the cost of a heart-breaking struggle in giving up his boyhood sweetheart, whose unhealthy craving for wealth and luxury makes her sell herself in marriage to a multi-millionaire. While some of the characters and scenes are a bit lurid and overdrawn, for instance where Stuart attempts to walk on the heads of the mob who will not listen to his pleading during a run on the bank, it offers a commentary on the shallowness of the struggle for wealth and the disproportionate happiness it brings. (New York: Doubleday, Page and Company. Pp. 406. $1.20 net.)

FOR GOD AND THE PEOPLE, by Walter Rauschenbusch. This is a book of prayers in which the author seeks to give expression to the religious emotions of the social awakening. He believes that a new type of Christian man is being created and that this man bears a striking family likeness to Jesus of Galilee. But the church is not equipped to express in its worship the aspirations of the latest incarnation of the spirit of Jesus. Its hymns and prayers employ the language of another age. It avoids reference to modern facts and contrivances. The situation calls for a new vocabulary of prayer. Those who feel the need of revitalizing the worship of the church will be profited by the reading of the prayers of this book. They will find recognition of the modern society of children who work, of children who live in the streets, of working men, employers, doctors, nurses, inventors and artists. The dependence of man upon man as well as the dependence of man upon God is strongly emphasized. (Boston: The Pilgrim Press. Pp. 126. $1.00.)

THE LAND OF LIVING MEN, by Ralph Waldo Trine. Problems directly and indirectly related to political economy and government are discussed in this volume, which lays bare many of the wrong practices that are undermining the first principles of our free form of government. The cause of these conditions is considered, as well as the agencies that are at work to further lessen the people's right to govern. Mr. Trine brings home to us very clearly the fact that the remedy is in the hands of the people, and decries the lack of interest in political affairs which is every man's duty, instead of letting indifference or absorption in one's own business shift the responsibility to those whose interest leads them into graft and corruption, such as has filled the pages of our papers of late years. In a supplementary chapter the author takes up the subject of the higher life of man and its consequent expression in the national life. (New York: Thomas Y. Crowell and Company. Pp. 288. $1.25 post paid.)

FATED TO WIN, by J. Breckenridge Ellis. Readers who delight in the stories of the Angles and Saxons during the time of their invasion of Britain will find in this a stirring hero tale of love and war. The strong, virile types of the manhood and womanhood of that day are well drawn, half barbarous, but with a certain code of honor that demanded the relinquishment of life itself, to preserve this integrity of custom. Usfrey, free-born, but becoming a serf of Port, feels the mighty through the chance of circumstances, bepromptings of the ambition for freedom and leadership stirring within him, and finally leads his companions against the enemy through his prowess at war, and wins not only this victory but the love of the lady Cuthberga who had become his wife through pique and a desire for revenge. The story of the Christ who was friend of all men is just becoming known to them, and its chastening effect on one of the warlike characters is brought out. (Chicago: Laird and Lee. Pp. 346. $1.50.)

THE REALLY DOLL, by Josefa Thrall. This story has very real personages and fairy-like happenings in it. Uncle Hugh and Second Cousin Emily bring about the delightful surprise of a "really doll" to cheer the convalescent hours of little motherless Linda. Her wish is fully gratified in Babette who brings with her a dear little grandmother who could easily play the part of a fairy godmother and then in true fairy lore style, Linda and her adopted family "live happily forever after." Mechanically this is one of the most beautifully children's books of the season with exquisite binding decorated in gold leaf. The pictures are by Hazel I. Frazee. (Chicago: The Orville Brewer Publishing Company 75 cents. post paid.)

INTRODUCTION TO THE STUDY OF THE BIBLE, by Peter Ainslie. The author of this little book practices what he preaches. He is a teacher of the Bible. He gives a chapter on the importance of Bible study, a chapter on other bibles than our own, and two chapters on methods of study. Directions are given for marking passages. Outline of the books of the Bible follow. Important verses are indicated. The book is to be commended to all who wish to study the Bible itself rather than books about the Bible. (Baltimore: Temple Seminary Press. Pp. 71)

Rainier of the Last Frontier

BY

JOHN MARVIN DEAN

AUTHOR OF

"THE PROMOTION, ETC."

Copyright 1910, By John Marvin Dean

CHAPTER XIII.

"Fagan Proves Himself Fagan."

How intricate the pattern of human affairs! Here is one, Sevier, of the Brigade Hospital Staff, compelled in his little conspiracy to weave into his plans Fagan's love of gold and Miss Benicia Royce's compassion for wounded men, Fagan's cupidity, her credulity. They were alike to minister to his own black end.

How well it all began to work: On the third day after the conspirators had talked in Calle Ermita, Miss Royce colors with conflicting emotions at receiving a rather unceremonious morning call at her pretty little quarters from Dr. Curt Sevier. He tells her that he has been asked to send a nurse and physician out to Malate 'barrio' on the San Blas trail to meet some fever stricken soldiers who have been left under guard by Gordon's Scouts. It was a rather rough ride but would she care to take the assignment and be ready to leave with Dr. Burns in a native "carromatta" within a half hour?

Benicia's eager assent was eloquent of a nature rarely given even to those born nurses of the Army Nurses Corps. To few nurses has ever been vouchsafed of Heaven so real and tender a compassion for human suffering. Accustomed as she was to tidings of disease and wounds and the sight of bodies racked with pain, she never failed to feel a rising flood of tenderness responding to each successive appeal.

When, with a light wrap over her arm and a small satchel in her hand she descended a half hour later in natty uniform to the hospital entrance she was surprised to find in the awaiting 'carromatta' not Dr. Burns, but Dr. Sevier.

His forceful eyes noted her color rise as he helped her to her seat.

"San Blas trail—Barrio Malate—Pronto, cochero," he said to the Visayan driver squatted before them, and then turned to his radiant companion: Burns couldn't well make it so I thought I would go personally. You're not averse, Miss Benicia?"

She responded graciously enough to please him and the coming crisis on the San Blas trail gave him a reckless buoyancy that soon charmed into musical rejoinders, repartee and laughter. As they rattled cheerily away over the rough stones of Calle Real a little urchin raced out of a cross street and legged it after them bawling piteously.

Sevier with reluctance directed the cochero to stop at Miss Bernicia's earnest request.

"It's little George Washington Rizal," she explained, as she smiled adorably at the dirty little rascal pattering up behind. "What is it, dear?"

Little George Rizal once abreast of the halted rig had nothing to say. His shiny brown face changed from drawn sorrow to stolid, fixed delight. Without hesitation he started up over the wheel on Miss Benicia's side.

The doctor interposed with as savage a word as he dared utter. With a thousand dollars in gold in the apparently innocent surgical case at his feet and with the girl at his side almost in his grasp for good, he did not relish the appearing of Benicia's little pet Filipino muchacho. "Vamoose, kid," he said sharply.

The little eight year old boy fell back from the hub with such a threat of tears that his old idol cried out, "O, doctor, let's take him out with us. There is no mother to worry about him you know. And I've promised him a ride so often. Could we?

"Just as you like, Miss Benicia," said Sevier coldly. But he did not regret the favor as the little fellow sprang in, for she bent toward him with such a look of acknowledgment that he drew a sharp breath to command himself.

The little carromatta rattled out past the last American sentry a half hour later. He was a big red-headed Irish infantryman and his face lit up as he saw the favorite nurse of the brigade in the rig. He brought his piece sharply to 'present' and smiled his admiration of her as the doctor saluted in response and Miss Royce bowed. Miss Royce was to think often of that fearless sunbrowned Irishman standing in salute of her at the edge of the lonely trail. The next two days brought him often to her mind, for it was only three miles beyond his post that the jungle on either side of the trail suddenly disgorged a half hundred ragged, nondescript figures who neatly halted the terrified driver of the carromatta, hauled him from his seat without ceremony and thrust wicked looking pistols and bolos into the faces of the physician and nurse.

The leading highwayman was a burly negro with a bandaged shoulder. Benicia's scream was one of real terror. Army nurse though she was, she found herself shutting out the grinning faces about her by closing her eyes while she clutched in piteous fear at Sevier's sleeve.

Hardly able to repress a thrill of fright himself, the guilty physician yet managed to play his part. Closing his hand protectingly upon one of hers he cried out,

"What does this mean? We are non-combatants on our way to relieve the sick. Give us back our driver and let us pass."

"You are a nervy man, doctor," responded the negro, with a wink designed only for Sevier. " But you can't bluff your way back to the enimies of the Republic Filipina—Vive El Presidente Aguinaldo!"

As prompt as a phalanx of 'supers' in an opera, came the response from the tatterdamalion insurgents clustered about the intercepted rig.

"Long live the Republic Filipina!"

"Madam, do not alarm yourself," continued Fagan, boldly staring at the now partially composed face of Benicia.

"We do not war on women. But hostages are useful to a man who has a price on his head. I trust that you will be sensible and understand that you are safer with our band of patriots than though you were in Iloilo at your work. A few weeks at most will be the length of time we shall detain you. Cochero, mount your seat and drive these Americans up this side trail to the spot where my Teniente will appoint you. 'Avante.'"

Stunned with her peril Benicia now found herself driven rapidly along a trail crossing the main trail at right angles. She was trying hard to think of the best way to remedy her situation but her mind was in a panic and the cool assurances of Sevier that it would all come out right were welcomed with eagerness as he still retained her hand and murmured his sentences in her ear.

They had traveled along the side trail for a hundred yards and were ascending a different grade before she could find her voice.

"Is—is it the renegade Fagan?" she fluttered, her terrified eyes falling in spite of herself upon the figure of the negro showing ahead of them.

"I regret to confirm your suspicions," murmured Sevier. "I do not think you ought to be deceived. It is undoubtedly Fagan. But do not despair, Benicia, do not despair. I swear I will have you safe home unharmed. I swear it. Do you believe me, Benicia?"

The caress in his voice at any other time would have alarmed her but it was grateful to her now and he, even with his plan at its most dangerous point, saw it and pressed her cold hand ardently. The carromatta rattled at last out of the narrow trail, went noiselessly through a glassy glade and finally halted in the midst of a group of crude nipa shelters. The litter on the ground, the burnt-out camp fires and the bamboo platforms with the most dilapidated of grass roofs, all told them they were in the temporary camp of Fagan, the most hated of the insurgent chiefs.

* * *

It was after hours of the most terrible fear strain of her life that night found Benicia lying sleeplessly in a hastily built shelter somewhat apart from the main camp. The insurgents had treated her kindly enough. They had prepared two meals for her but she had scarcely touched them.

Shortly after the arrival at the camp Sevier had been marched away with a squad of native soldiery in personal command of Fagan. With an awful fear in her heart that he was being led away to be shot, she saw him go and worshiped him in the shrine of her pure spirit as a hero of heroes when he turned before losing sight of her and gayly waved to her in reassuring gesture. He had not come back, but neither, thank God, had the negro commander.

There was something so purposeful and yet so catlike in the look and tread of Fagan that combined in her anguished mind, with all she had heard of him, caused her face to blanch and her body to grow quite rigid with fear as she thought of him.

And now it was close to 10 o'clock. The camp fires about which the men had boiled their rice in bamboo joints and roasted wild venison, were now only beds of embers from which the night wind occasionally resurrected a flash of sparks.

Back of her shack she heard the occasional stir of a man on guard.

No sleep was possible to her. She cuddled down in her now wrinkled uniform upon a pile of nipa leaves covered with a stolen cavalry blanket and found the tears of a great fear in her eyes

But nearby voices in altercation soon roused her to a sitting position. She gasped her only weapon, a long bladed pair of scissors, taken from her satchel, and tremblingly listened. For a time the voices—two in number, one cautious and the other strident—gave her no intelligent meaning. Then came a sentence in Fagan's accent:

"I reserve the right to change my mind." A lower voice, angry yet pleading spoke at length. It could be no other than Sevier's. Then Fagan's voice cut in sharply. "Why didn't you tell me what a prize package she was? Any man who would let her slip through his fingers is a fool—a blind idiot.

(Continued on page 24.)

For Valentine's Day

Out of a snow-cloud, cold and gray,
Something dropped on St. Valentine's day
Whirling and twirling, and soft and light,
Like wee little letters, all dainty and white;
And I guess the sky children were sending down
Their valentines straight to the children in town. —Ex.

Who Stole the Fish?

BY MISS Z. I. DAVIS.

"Mother, the boys want me to unite with the Good Will Missionary Band. They have 20 members and meet with the pastor once a week. Everything is done by the minister and his family to make us have a profitable and enjoyable time. Please may I join?"

"How much are the dues?" asked the widow, looking at him narrowly.

"Only 25 cents a month."

"That may not seem much to a boy who has his books, shoes, mittens and clothes all bought for him. After the rent is paid and the grocer bill met, my purse is empty. I am willing that you should join them if you will pay your own way," she said shortly.

"It takes all the quarters that I earn selling papers to buy tablets, and I don't know of any other way to get money," he answered disconsolately.

"Come," said his practical mother. "Idle hands are Satan's tools. Run down to the spring and fetch me a pail of water."

The pump stood near the kitchen door, but when soft water was wanted for washing, the spring that bubbled up at the foot of the hill never failed them, winter or summer.

Kenneth reluctantly grasped the pail and started down the slippery, frozen path. He was deeply absorbed in solving the problem of earning the missionary money. The society was the subject of conversation among the boys at noon and recess.

Just as he lifted the pail of water from the moss-grown rim, a man came along with a fish pole in his hand. "Do you keep minnows in there?" he asked. "We are going to fish through the ice and would be glad to buy bait of you every day."

"No," replied the boy, his face lighting up as a bright idea flashed through his mind. "But I can just as well as not."

"All right," said the angler. "Can you have some tomorrow morning for us? We will pay you well for them if you will."

The lad was silent for a moment. Where could they be obtained? Suddenly he remembered the little creek on the farm where his parents lived before his father died. It never froze over and the little fish glided about in the water all day near the old bridge.

"Yes," he said, "I will do my best to have them for you. If I fail, it will not be my fault."

"We will be here at 9 o'clock," replied the man, as he started across the field.

Kenneth almost ran up the long hill. Suppose that he could earn money enough to support his mother, so that she would not have to take in washing. She was growing paler every day. Only that morning he had heard her crying before God for help. "This opportunity is in answer to prayer," he mused.

"Mother," he began in an excited tone, "I am going in the country for minnows," he began, and then told her of his new plan.

It was nearly 8 o'clock when he returned. "Are they not pretty, mother," he asked, holding up a tin pail of the liveliest little fish imaginable.

As he started to empty them into the spring she called after him: "Lock up the hen house. Something disturbed the chickens last night."

Kenneth was up bright and early the next morning. He built a fire, set the tea kettle on and then started to the spring. But not a fish was in sight. With a clean stick he prodded the pebbly bottom and lower edges of the slats, but the bottomless barrel held nothing but water.

There were fresh tracks all around the spring that resembled those of a dog. It was indeed a keen disappointment to have his hopes so quickly dashed to the ground.

"I will get another pail of fish and then set a trap there tonight," he said in reply to his mother's question as to what he would do now.

The fishermen came, but were sorry about the boy's failure, and promised to come the next day.

The following morning Kenneth rose very early, and after lighting the kitchen fire, started toward the spring. He could scarcely believe his eyes. There was the thief fast in the trap. It was the most beautiful animal that he had ever seen. Gently approaching it, he snapped a chain about its neck and released its foot from the trap.

"Ah," exclaimed the fisherman upon seeing it, "you have something more valuable there than all the fish you could sell in a year."

"What is it?" asked Kenneth eagerly.

"A silver gray fox. Its pelt is worth $600, if it is worth a cent. I should not be surprised if it is the very one that escaped from the City Park. They have advertised for it and offer a large reward to the one who finds it."

Later Kenneth found it was the identical fox that was missing from the public gardens. He was given a large sum for its return and was glad that the beautiful animal could still have its life.

"Now I can join the Good Will Band and send out a missionary all myself," he exclaimed joyfully. "Even then there will be enough left to buy a pretty home for us, dear mother," he said.

The Junior Pulpit

BY "MARK WAYNE."

FOGGY WEATHER.

When we haven't anything else to talk about, we always talk about the weather. It's such a mysterious subject and always has something new for us. You never can tell what it is going to be tomorrow. You can't tell whence the weather comes or whither it goes. That's just the way with most people; you don't know where to find them or how to take them.

There are four kinds of Christians of which the weather reminds me. The first are Christians in no weather, wet or dry, shine or shower, blow or calm, warm or cold, they are always dreary, always selfish and cold and ugly. Then there are foul weather Christians, who curse and carouse until a really dangerous storm and then they begin to pray. Such Christians are very pious when they get sick, or are afraid of dying, but when the danger is over and the clouds are past they forget their prayers and their promises and are as bad as ever. A third kind are the fair weather Christians. They are good when the weather is good. When they are prosperous and in health and have money and friends, and when things go to suit them they are very nice people indeed. But when bad weather comes, stormy and cloudy, they lose their kindness and turn sour just as milk turns sour when it thunders.

But the best Christians are the Christians in all kinds of weather, who are always faithful to duty, always hopeful of success, always pleasant and lovable whether it is storm or shine, winter or summer.

Which kind of Christian are you?

Across the ocean, in London, and the rest of England, the main mischief of the weather is the fog, and the main mischief of the fog is the coal dust and soot. He have heard of darkness in Egypt that could be felt, but this kind of dark can actually be seen and smelt and tasted. This ugly fog shuts your eyes so that you can't see, and stops your ears so that you can't hear, and sticks big sooty patches all over your face and hands and crawls up your nose and throat so that you can smell and taste nothing but yellow fog; you can't find your way, so you get lost; you can't hear the horses so you get run over; you can hardly breathe so that you are nearly suffocated. And the brightest street lamp doesn't help you very far in all this thick gloom.

Now there are many kinds of darkness. The darkness of a dungeon, of a stormy day, of a starlight night, or of a black night, but none so bad as a London fog.

And so our souls go through many kinds of darkness; dungeons of pain, storms of affliction, nights of anxiety, or nights of black ignorance; but never was there so great darkness as the thick fog of sin. It gets in your eyes, your ears, your nose and throat; it blinds you, it deafens you, it sickens you, it suffocates you, and all the time it lasts it drags you nearer to death.

Jesus breathed upon his disciples and said: "Receive my Spirit." You know when the wind comes the fog lifts and rises and goes away. Boys and girls, let Jesus breathe upon you the breath of His Holy Spirit and drive out from your life the deadening terrible dark fog of sin.

The Daily Altar

An Aid to Private Devotion and Family Worship

SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 12.

Theme for the Day.—One who Overcame.

Scripture.—He that overcometh, I will make him a pillar in the temple of my God, and he shall go out thence no more; and I will write upon him the name of my God, and the name of the city of my God, the new Jerusalem which cometh down out of heaven from my God, and mine own new name.—Rev. 3:12.

Yes, this is he who ruled a world of men
As might some prophet of the older day,—
Brooding above the tempest and the fray
With deep-eyed thought and more than mortal ken.
A power was his beyond the touch of art
Or armed strength; it was his mighty heart.
—Richard Watson Gilder ("On the Life-Mask of Lincoln.")

Prayer.—Our divine Father, we give Thee thanks for the lives of those who have wrought great things in behalf of righteousness and the cause of humanity. We remember in love and reverence one whose name this day brings to our minds. We are all truer and braver men and women because of his life. And knowing his great faith in God and in the victory of the right, we are sure that he has an abiding place among the victors in the temple of our God. May we consecrate our lives to the best service we can render our age, our country and the kingdom of God. We ask in Christ's name.—Amen.

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 13.

Theme for the Day.—A Voice for the Voiceless.

Scripture.—Unto you, O men, I call, and my voice is to the sons of men.—Prov. 8:4.

They said therefore unto him, Who art thou? that we may give an answer to them that sent us. What sayest thou of thyself? He said, I am a voice.—John 1:22-23.

But he who from the darkling mass of men
Is on the wing of heavenly thought unborne
To finer ether, and becomes a voice
For all the voiceless, God anointed him:
His name shall be a star, his grave a shrine!
—Thomas Bailey Aldrich ("In Westminster Abbey.")

Prayer.—Holy Lord, we adore Thee for Thy gifts of grace to us. Thou hast sent us prophets and teachers to tell us of Thee, and speak in behalf of the Great Teacher. For these voices in witness of the truth we praise Thee. They have pointed us to the Light that lighteth every man. May our souls be ever open to their witness, and may we hear and repeat the message they bring. We recall with wonder the life and ministry of him who came as a voice in the desert to announce the coming Christ. Not less truly may we bear witness to the Savior, whose kingdom is at hand. In his name we pray.—Amen.

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 14.

Theme for the Day.—The Message of the Mountains.

Scripture.—Before the mountains were brought forth, or ever Thou hadst formed the earth and the world, even from everlasting to everlasting, Thou art God.—Psalm 90:2.

As the mountains are round about Jerusalem, so Jehovah is round about his people from this time forth and for evermore.—Psalm 125:2.

How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace.—Isa 52:7.

High on the glacial slopes we plant our feet
Beneath the gray crags insurmountable;
Care, like a burden, falling from our hearts;
Joy, like the wings of morning, spiriting
Our souls in ecstacy to outer worlds
Where the moon sails among the silver peaks
On the four winds of Heaven.
—Charles Warren Stoddard ("In the Sierras.")

Prayer.—O Lord, Thy righteousness is like the great mountains, and Thy mercy like the mighty deep. We are in awe at the thought of Thy loving kindness, and we look up to Thee as those who have trembled at Thy work in nature and in the soul of man. Help us to rise to nobler heights, and to dwell in wider spaces. We would breathe a purer air and gain a broader view. Then shall we lose our cares, and find a greater joy in the contemplation of Thy love. Lift us up, for Thy mercy's sake.—Amen.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 15.

Theme for the Day.—The Greatest.

Scripture.—Bless Jehovah, O my soul. O Jehovah my God, thou art very great; thou art clothed with honor and majesty.—Psalm 104:1.

Thine, O Jehovah, is the greatness, and the power, and the glory, and the victory, and the majesty; for all that is in the heavens and in the earth is thine; thine is the kingdom, O Jehovah, and thou art exalted as head above all.—1 Chron. 29:11.

It is said that the senses are great;
Greater than the senses is the mind:
Greater than the mind is the Reason;
But what is greater than the Reason, is HE.
—The Bhagavad-Gita ("The Yoga of Action.")

Prayer.—Our Father, we love to speak with Thee. It is an honor past all believing that Thou hearest and answerest our prayers. Men have adored Thee in all the nations and under every sky. They have called on Thee by all the hundred sacred names. But we have learned from Jesus to call Thee our Father, and we grow happy in the thought that in his name we can come very near to the God he loved. Give us truer appreciation of the faith of those to whom he has not yet spoken of Thee. And may we hasten to bring them his message of the Father of all. In his name we pray.—Amen.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 16.

Theme for the Day.—The Summons.

Scripture.—Awake and sing, ye that dwell in the dust, for thy dew is as the dew of herbs.—Isa. 26:19.

Now is salvation nearer to us than when we first believed. The night is far spent, and the day is at hand.—Rom. 13:11-12.

O souls that lie sleeping
In doubt and in night,
Wake, wake from you weeping!
Day comes, in despite
Of cavil or grieving.
Man's best of believing
Is but the receiving
Of heavenly light..
—Grace Denio Litchfield ("The Sunlight.")

Prayer.—We have wasted too much time in doubt and hesitation, our Father. With shame we confess that we have been dull of vision and unready to respond to Thy call Summon us forth to the work of the day. Save us from cowardice and refusal. Stir our spirits, even with suffering, that we may awaken truly to the work of God in the world. Then grant us the light that we may see and not walk in darkness, and we shall find peace in the dawning of the day. —Amen.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 17.

Theme for the Day.—Dawn upon the Mountains.

Scripture.—And he went and met him in the mount of God.—Ex. 4:27.

Until the day dawn, and the daystar arise in your hearts.—2 Pet. 1:19.

Look higher: then—perchance—thou mayest
—beyond
A hundred ever-rising mountain lines.
And past the range of Night and Shadow—see
The high-heaven dawn of more than mortal day
Strike on the Mount of Vision!
—Alfred Tennyson ("The Ancient Sage.")

Prayer.—Heavenly Father, we look up to Thee, who art enthroned upon the everlasting hills. We cannot doubt Thy love, for the proofs of it are unnumbered. When we have thought there was only darkness about us, suddenly the light has broken, the dawn has come. and we have found joy. Even so would we ever confirm our souls in the faith that Thou wilt shine upon us in every hour of darkness. And in this confidence we commit ourselves to Thee.—Amen.

SATURDAY. FEBRUARY 18.

Theme for the Day.—The Making of Man.

Scripture.—And God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him: male and female created he them.—Gen. 1:27.

And Jehovah God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul.—Gen. 2:7.

Ay, and heaven heard, and was with him, and gave
The gift that made him master and not slave;
Even in that stress and horror of his fate
His thronging cry came half articulate,
And some strange light, past knowing, past control,
Rose in his eyes, and shone, and was a soul.
—F. W. H. Myers ("From Brute to Man.")

Prayer.—Our Father who art in heaven, we have read in the sacred records of the past that Thou didst create man in Thy likeness. We have no key to unlock the secret of the hour, the manner of the duration of this transaction. We only know that out of the brute dust we have been made, in the likeness of God we are designed to be, and all between is the process of the divine creation. Save us from the boast that the work is done. May we not rest content till we gain something of the stature of Christ. In his name we pray.—Amen.

We have a season, the calmest and most delightful of the year, which we call the Indian summer. I often say the autumn of our life resembles that happy and serene weather, and am thankful for its rest and its sweet sunshine.—William Makepeace Thackeray.

The Moral Leaders of Israel

BY PROFESSOR HERBERT L. WILLETT

Section VIII. Ahijah of Shiloh (I Kings 11:26—12:15)

Topic for Sunday, February 19.

QUESTIONS.

1. What were some of the difficulties that confronted Solomon on his accession to the throne?
2. How did he meet these emergencies?
3. What important alliance did he make?
4. What were the chief building enterprises of Solomon's reign?
5. Where did he procure the materials for these structures?
6. What were the sources of his wealth?
7. What features of his rule lessened his popularity?
8. Of what political significance were Solomon's many wives?
9. What were the popular features of his reign?
10. With what three men did he have difficulty?
11. What is the picture of Solomon presented in the prophetic narratives?
12. In what regards does it suggest another opinion?
13. What was the nature of Solomon's wisdom?
14. In what respect was he a religious man?
15. What was the actual result of his building the temple?
16. How were the prophets treated in Solomon's reign?
17. What plan did they adopt to preserve the older faith?
18. What were the real causes of the revolt?
19. What were the relations of Ahijah with Jeroboam?
20. Describe the events of the assembly at Shechem.
21. What was Jeroboam's later attitude toward the prophets?
22. What other prophets are named in this period?

* * *

1. THE REIGN OF SOLOMON.

(1 Kings 2:12, 11:43.

When David died it was not strange that there should be some misgiving on the part of the loyal supporters of the throne, for Solomon was a youth, and there were dangerous elements both at home and abroad (cf. Psalm 2). But the young king dealt with the situation so firmly that his power was soon recognized by all. Adonijah, his designing brother, Joab, the unscrupulous captain in David's reign, and Shemei, the rebel, were put to death, while Abiathar, the priest, was removed to make room for the more friendly Zadok. The royal marriage contracted by Solomon with the daughter of the reigning Pharoah of Egypt must have given the young king unusual prestige. Not given to war, like his father, he turned his attention to building almost at once. He constructed the palace, the chief feature of which was the "House of the Forest of Lebanon," so-called from its pillars and cedar work. This took thirteen years. Then he built the Harem, which was known as "The House of the Daughter of Pharoah," after the chief wife. The temple took seven years for its completion. Then there were such additional enterprises as the fort Millo, the additional walls, and the store and garrison cities built in various parts of the kingdom. In order to carry out these plans, Solomon entered into a contract with his father's friend, Hiram of Tyre, to furnish cedar and stone in return for supplies of wheat and oil. He also established a sea trade with India, sending out his ships from the port of Eloth on the Gulf of Akaba. By means of this traffic, and the importation of horses and chariots in the trade with Egypt, Syria and the Hittites, Solomon acquired enormous private wealth. But in spite of his fame and popularity, there were features of his rule which awakened resentment. The change from the simple life of the age of Samuel and David was too rapid and violent. In the organization of his kingdom for administrative purposes the old tribal boundries were disregarded and a new system of royal districts took their place. But most distasteful of all was the corvee, or levy of workers required by the king for his extensive building operations, and the taxes needed in the maintenance of the harem and court which Solomon gathered about him. Even if the biblical numbers are greatly exaggerated (700 wives and 300 concubines) the public burden of such an establishment must have been very great. Of course these women had political significance. Many of them represented foreign alliances cemented by marriage. This form of polygamy has always been an important item in the diplomacy of oriental courts.

On the other hand there was much in the spectacular character of Solomon's rule to please an impressionable people like the Hebrews. Jerusalem became a beautiful city. The pageant of the court and the army was pleasing to a splendor-loving race. The achievements of the king in trade, organization and the enrichment of his kingdom, filled the people with pride. The visits of other rulers, like the Queen of Sheba, not only added to the brilliancy of life at the capital, but increased the reputation of Solomon. Even the adversaries who threatened to give him trouble—men like Hadad of Edom, Rezon of Zobah and Jeroboam of Ephraim, were compelled to take refuge under the protection of Egypt.

2. THE CHARACTER OF SOLOMON.

The impression made by the casual reading of the records of Solomon's life is that he made a good beginning, but under the influence of the court and harem he declined toward the close and became a despot and a voluptuary. Probably these impressions are due to the disappointment of the prophets at the results of Solomon's work.

The truth seems to be rather that he was a man of totally different character from his father David. He was far abler and shrewder in taking advantage of the opportunities of government for his own profit. To a naturally alert mind which made him observant of the phenomena of nature, he added the advantages of all the educational discipline the times afforded, perhaps under the instruction of Nathan, so that he bore the reputation of being the wisest man of his age. But his wisdom was of the nature of intellectual cleverness and political sagacity rather than breadth of vision and concern for the highest good.

As to his interest in religion, it was rather the recognition of its value as a necessary and picturesque feature of his kingdom than a personal relation with God, such as David had sought. In spite of the public and rather formal expressions of Solomon's piety, the impression made by the records is that he was not a deeply religious man in any sense, but rather a secularist, who desired to make religion as spectacular as possible, and therefore use it in the adornment of his capital and the enrichment of the external side of public life. He was a worshiper of Jehovah, the God of his father. But it was a part of his deliberate policy to enrich his city with the shrines of other gods, such as his many wives adored. In this conduct he sought to gain all the advantage which the presence of foreigners and the encouragement of other forms of worship would bring to his country.

Even the building of the temple, to which David had looked forward with such longing, was to Solomon hardly more than the completion of his plan for the architectural adornment of Jesusalem, and the addition of an elaborate scheme of religious ceremonies to the program of his court.

* * *

3. THE WORK OF THE PROPHETS.

Meantime the estate of the men of prophetic character was increasingly difficult. In the reign of David they had been honored and trusted. Nathan ranked higher even than the king, at least in David's regard. But in Solomon's reign all this was changed. The king was the state. He assumed the position of a true oriental despot. The priests, the public ministers of religion, whose elaborate vestments made them a picturesque feature of the court, were honored. But the prophets were given scant regard, and they felt that with their relegation to obscurity the dangers to the true religion were greatly increased.

The Moral Leaders of Israel is a Sunday School course for Young People's and Adult Bible Classes. It will continue throughout the year 1911. The publishers of THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY will supply classes of six or more with weekly copies of the paper containing these lessons, at $1 per year for each copy, or 30 cents per quarter. The class members will receive in addition to their Sunday-school lesson all the rich things provided every week in THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY. The papers distributed to the class on Sunday will contain the lesson for the following Sunday. Orders should be sent through the regular Sunday-school Treasurer if you wish to pay quarterly; or you may deal directly with the Publishers, enclosing remittance at the rate of $1.00 per year for each copy ordered. Be sure and give name of teacher or class member to whom papers shall be sent for distribution.

The apprehension felt by Nathan in connection with David's desire to build a temple was more than justified by events. The priests were attracted to Jerusalem by the protection and profit afforded by the great central religious establishment, and the rural districts were left without care. The Temple was not the only shrine, to be sure, for Solomon himself honored others. But it soon displaced all others in the public mind, and the prophets feared the results of such centralization. The entire drift of events was toward a strong, autocratic, secular state, like the neighboring nations. The despotism of the court was bad enough. The burdens of the people were sufficient cause for complaint. But still worse was the peril that threatened religion. Better by far a simpler government and a genuine regard for the national faith, such as had prevailed in Samuel's day, than all this wealth and ceremonial.

The people of the orient are naturally patient. They bear heavy burdens with small complaint, particularly if they can enjoy the pageantry of royal shows. If they had been left to themselves they might have endured even heavier burdens than those imposed by Solomon. But the prophets felt that the time to act was now, before the load became too heavy and the monarchy firmly established. They determined to curb the pride of the court, and failing in this, to fan public resentment into such a flame of revolt as should consume the fabric of absolutism. The death of Solomon gave them the occasion. Jeroboam the son of Nebat, a chief of levies of the tribe of Ephraim, was their instrument and Ahijah of Shiloh was their leader.

* * *

4. AHIJAH AND JEROBOAM. (1 Kings 11:26-12:15.)

During the final years of Solomon, Jeroboam had attracted the king's attention as a man of ability. In making the extension of the walls of Jerusalem and the construction of the fort Millo, Jeroboam was in charge of the workers of Ephraim and Manasseh. He seemed to the prophets the most likely man to entrust with their design, and accordingly Ahijah made his acquaintance and opened to him the plans of the group. In a long and earnest conference, perhaps only one of many, he made clear to him the opportunity offered, the basis of the prophetic dissatisfaction with the present tendency, and the promise of popular support as the result of the organizing work of the prophets. We are even told that Ahijah gave Jeroboam forcible illustration of the coming division of the kingdom by rending his own new mantle into twelve strips, of which he gave the young Ephraimite ten.

In spite of the secrecy which all concerned must have endeavored to maintain, the conspiracy was partly revealed, and Jeroboam had to save his life by flight to Egypt. But the work of preparation went on in his absence. The prophets did not intend to proceed to extreme measures without giving Prince Rehoboam a chance to save his throne. But they probably knew enough of his disposition to forecast the result, and they did not desire to be unprepared for whatever might happen. The fact that they appeared so slightly in the matter, and allowed the entire movement to assume the character of a political revolt is not only natural, but an indication of their wisdom.

At Solomon's death Jeroboam was recalled and Reboboam was summoned to a national assembly at Shechem, the ancient sanctuary in the north. There he was asked to submit his program or platform. Would he lighten the popular burdens, or follow the policy of his father? If he were willing to concede the popular demands, which the prophets had skilfully incited, there was hope for a return to the earlier simplicity of Israel's life. If not, then the decisive step must be taken.

The issue was made and Rehoboam submitted the popular demands first to the older men, who knew the changes from the days of David, and advised concession, and then to the young men who had grown up with him in the hot-house atmosphere of Solomon's court. They advised no compromise with the conservatives and the prince made the fatal choice. Instantly the cry of rebellion was raised, Rehoboam was compelled to escape for his life to Jerusalem, the overseer of the levies whom he sent to recall the people to allegiance to the house of David was stoned, and the breach was irreparable. Jeroboam was crowned soon after, and became king of the ten northern tribes. The prophets had accomplished their purpose. From the point of view of national unity and political power they had wrought unspeakable folly. The nation never recovered from the shock of that division. Henceforth it was destined to be only a second or third-rate state. But from the point of view of religious concern the nation was saved. And the price was not too heavy, for Israel's contribution to history was not political, but ethical and religious. Ahijah of Shiloh and his colleagues had done their work with courage and success.

* * *

5. ANOTHER PROPHETIC WORK.

That the prophets of the north and south acted in concert is shown by the refusal of Shemiah of Judah to allow Rehoboam to invade the realm of Jeroboam after the revolt (1 Kings 12:21-24). Later on, Ahijah voiced the bitter disappointment felt by the prophets at Jeroboam's refusal to follow their counsel. In fact the new king patterned his government as nearly as possible after that of Solomon. He set up shrines and bull-images of Jehovah at Bethel and Dan, he dislocated the calendar of the feasts, and inducted non-Levites into the places of the men who had withdrawn to the temple at Jerusalem. When his son fell sick, Jeroboam sent his wife in disguise to Shiloh to secure from the prophet a verdict on his recovery. But the indignant Ahijah used the opportunity to recall the hopes which Jeroboam had blasted, and the tragedy which awaited him (1 Kings 14:1-18). Nothing further is known of Ahijah. Prophetic traditions are preserved in 1 Kings 13, and in 2 Chron. 9:29 mention is made of a writing of Nathan regarding Solomon, a prophetic work by Ahijah of Shiloh, and certain oracles of Iddo the Seer concerning Jeroboam the son of Nebat.

* * *

FOLLOWING STUDIES.

The next two sections will deal with Elijah, and the two that follow with Elisha.

* * *

TOPICS FOR FURTHER STUDY, REPORTS OR PAPERS.

1. Solomon's treatment of Adonijah, Joab, Shemei and Abiathar.
2. The relations of Israel and Egypt in Solomon's period.
3. Solomon as a builder.
4. The character of Solomon.
5. The influence of the temple on the life of the nation.
6. The good and the evil results of the division of the nation.

Christian Endeavor Lesson

BY W. D. ENDRES

TOPIC FOR FEBRUARY 19.

Serenity: How to Get It; What It Accomplishes. Jno. 14:1; 16:33.

Often when the clear blue of the sky stretches over us with not a cloud nor so much as a thick atmosphere to obstruct our vision it has been described as serene. With the same word is an undisturbed body of water described which lies before the eye placid and calm. Applying the word with this general conception to our own minds and hearts, we say a person who has a bright clear vision unobscured by misgivings and uncertainties, and who meets his disappointments and difficulties with an untroubled soul, who approaches his task quietly and with poise is serene. This is his attitude not to any particular duty or phase of his life, but to life as a whole.

It comes only through a profound faith in God. The world in which we live is so large and mighty and bewildering, and we are so little and weak and puny, and the span of our lives is so short that to take God out of our consciousness is like robbing the pilot of his compass in midocean, with even the stars hid from his view by the clouds of an approaching storm. For be it remembered that storms burst upon the lives of us all. It is no wonder that multitudes are tossed on the high seas of life and that waves of adversity swallow up the thousands. They are troubled by their failures; they yield to the appetites of the flesh; they are caught in the snares which were craftily laid by others; they are hemmed in and hampered by their own ignorance; their own strength is only weakness and no source of strength is known to them. But where God is enthroned in the life, where God is made the author of the universe, the giver and protector of our lives and where the life of the individual is brought into subjection to Him, lived in the fear of God, with faith; where his justice, his providence, and his fatherhood prevails, the soul is anchored and refuses to be moved by the passing whirlwinds which overtake it. Not that trouble does not come to one who has faith but that faith gives him vision, a means of interpretation, a trust that refuses to be moved by the little eddies of the stream.

Serenity gives power. It enables one to maintain his own poise. It gives him vision entirely hidden to one who does not have it. The resultant assurance shuts out trouble and anixety and secures peace and tranquility. This naturally enough inspires confidence and trust on the part of these who are less strong. This opens into the two great avenues of service; the enrichment of our individual lives and the service which we might render to others. Here stretch before us the various fields of benevolence and charity, world-wide missions, evangelism, etc., etc.

The serene soul has sustaining power. It is easy to be induced to make lofty resolutions when the soul has been profoundly stirred, when the atmosphere is charged with it and scores of others are moving in that direction, but only the soul which is stayed on the eternal one can stand the varying experiences of the succeeding decades.

In the little world in which children have their existence, whosoever brings them up, there is nothing so finely perceived and so finely felt as injustice. It may be only small injustice that the child can be exposed to; but the child is small, and its rocking-horse stands as man hands high, according to scale, as a big-boned Irish hunter.—Charles Dickens.

Illinois Department

State Office, 24 Illinois National Bank Bldg., Springfield

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY is a national religious paper published by the Disciples of Christ in the interests of Christian unity and the Kingdom of God. While its circulation is nation-wide and impartially distributed among all the states, it recognizes a special obligation to the State of Illinois in which it is published. It desires particularly to serve the cause of Christ in Illinois by publishing its significant church news, by interpreting its religious life and by promoting the ideals of the Disciples within its borders. To this end the publishers of THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY maintain a state office at Springfield, the capital and central city. It is the purpose of the state editor to study the whole field of Illinois, visiting all the churches, reporting his observations and pointing the churches to ever higher ideals. Pastors and church workers are requested to co-operate by regularly sending items of news, clippings from local papers, parish papers, weekly leaflets, occasional paragraphs of sermons and any other information that will give to the state editor all the data for reporting and interpreting the progress of Christian work in the state. All communications to the editor may be addressed, 24 Illinois National Bank Building, Springfield. All business communications should be addressed to the Chicago office.

—The Congress

—Of Disciples of Christ

—Meets in Springfield,

—April 18, 19 and 20,

—West Side Church.

—Illinois will be hostess.

—It is not too early for preachers and laymen to begin preparations looking forward to a large attendance.

—A great program is prepared.

—Unquestionably, the Congress will be the largest and best in its history.

* * *

C. R. Mitchell of Eureka, has begun a pastorate for full term at Cooksville.

Evangelist E. N. Norton, is to hold a meeting at Raymond beginning January 30th.

James H. Brooks is available for a pastorate, or to assist in revival meetings. He can be addressed at Clayton, Ill.

H. J. Reynolds is having the assistance of Evangelist Sword in a meeting at Camp Point, just recently begun.

Stephen E. Fisher is holding a short meeting for the Webber Street Mission in Champaign.

The Sunday-school Union of Peoria listened to an address by R. A. Doan of Ohio, January 17th.

Casey church is being ministered to by J. A. Clemens, who has but recently become pastor there. He removed from Toledo to this point.

W. B. Slater of First Church, Moline, has a prayer-meeting with from thirty to fifty per cent of the entire membership present each week.

N. S. Haynes of Decatur, is pastor of the church at Mt. Zion in Macon county. The building just completed, will be dedicated very shortly by J. Fred Jones.

Heyworth received an offering of about $20.00 which will be increased and sent to Eureka College. This church, with its pastor, C. J. Robertson, observed Education Day.

George H. Brown has recently organized a brotherhood in his church at Charleston. The charter membership roll includes eighty-two names.

Rome G. Jones is pastor of the church at Washburn where there were forty-two additions during last year. Mr. Jones is ready to assist some church in a meeting if he is called at once.

Sidell Church observed Education Day. The pastor, P. F. York, preached on "Christian Culture and Eureka College," and received an offering of $23.00 for this school.

The Fisher meeting, with J. Frank Hollingsworth as pastor and evangelist, is continuing with splendid interest. The minister is greeted with crowded houses and his labor is being rewarded with additions.

S. Elwood Fisher, minister of the church at Dixon, is holding his own meeting. He is having assistance from Elmer E. Rice, in conducting the music. The latter is a member of Dixon Church.

Literberry Church, with C. G. Cantrall as minister, recently closed a three weeks' meeting, in which one hundred and seventeen were added. Charles W. Ross was the evangelist.

Major Griffith is conducting a revival at Allenville. The evangelist's wife and daughter are assisting in personal work and consequently, up to a recent date, there had been twenty-six additions, eleven of them by confession.

Centralia church, where J. S. Rosborough is minister, has a Sunday-school with an ambition to have seven hundred in attendance. They already have about five hundred and are in a contest with the Sunday-school at Litchfield.

H. L. Willett has been lecturing on the "Life of Jesus" during the past two weeks in the Wabash Avenue Church, Kansas City, of which L. J. Marshall is pastor. His series of six lectures was divided into two parts, using three evenings of each week.

Final results of the Sword and Rice meeting at Mt. Sterling, show forty-seven additions. Of this number, forty-one were by confession. The congregation, and minister, A. L. Cole, are very enthusiastic in their commendation of the evangelists.

Charles W. Ross, with Mr. Seniff as soloist and musical director, began a meeting the latter part of January, with A. E. Underwood and his congregation at Chapin. At the conclusion of this meeting, Mr. Ross will discontinue his evangelistic work, having accepted the church at Litchfield.

At the Field Workers' Convention held in St. Louis, which was composed of state Sunday-school secretaries, the I. W. Gill flag was awarded to Illinois, for having the largest mileage in travel of those participating in the great men's parade at Topeka, during the National Convention.

George W. Wise, pastor at DuQuoin, is co-operating with the ministers of the Methodist and Presbyterian churches in a union revival meeting. The evangelists are Hamilton and Peannam. Prospects are said to be favorable for a fine fellowship as well as for a considerable ingathering.

Kankakee church enjoys the largest prayer meeting in the city, which is said to be one of the most interesting features of the church. The pastor W. O. Livingstone, is receiving additions to the congregation nearly every Sunday. For the first four weeks of January there have been 12 additions.

Onarga Church, is doing an exemplary thing, in allowing its pastor, Milo W. Nethercutt, to hold a meeting in a neighboring church, unable to pay for an evangelist. Mr. Nethercutt is in a revival at Westville, while his own congregation is continuing his salary.

At Danville, First Church where William E. Adams is pastor, the official board is meeting five minutes before the morning service for prayer. Doubtless many a pastor would welcome the innovation in his church, especially so, if it were proposed voluntarily by the members of the official board.

Howett Street Church, Peoria, is in a meeting with splendid results so far. W. O. Harlow is evangelist. Early reports from the meeting indicate a prospect for large results. Mr. Price, the pastor, has been preparing the congregation for some time for this special effort.

Gibson City is in a meeting conducted by the pastor, with four added the first Sunday. This church accepted the cancelled date of Rock Island, for a "Team Work" banquet, and was greatly pleased by the presence of the committee and their addresses. Every man made friends for his cause and the vision of the local church was enlarged.

Gibson City already has a good brick building but the church's activity is causing its inadequacy to become apparent. Active Sunday-school classes are overflowing all the space it is possible for them to be given, and proper care for this department, as well as others, is causing the minister L. O. Lehman to have ambitions for a completer and more satisfactory edifice.

The Apportionment Plan has been adopted by the University Place Church, Champaign, for increasing the membership of the Sunday-school. The system works well in church finances. We shall watch to see whether it succeeds as well in increasing membership in the Sunday-school. The superintendent wants an enrollment of one thousand and he is levying each class for its proportionate share.

W. E. Harlow, who has been in a successful meeting at West Bluff Chapel, Peoria, Ill., is now leading a meeting at Howett Street Church, to be followed by services at Central Church. Education day was observed at Central Church, on Jan. 22, when four young women and two young men volunteered for the ministry and mission field.

The last report from the revival at Mackinaw, was fifty additions, forty-five of whom were by baptism. One of the interesting features of the meetings, is the large number of men being converted. Snively and Marks are assisting the pastor, Mr. Sweet. The latter has been granted an increase of salary of two hundred dollars, by the congregation.

Geo. F. Chandler is minister at Youngstown and has begun his second year under favorable circumstances. The Youngstown church recently held a sucessful meeting, with J. D. Wiliams, evangelist of the Third district. Mr. Williams is now at a meeting at Fowler. Results are being accomplished in his district. The offerings this year are fifty per cent larger than those of previous years.

Miss Alice Hornbeck has concluded a Sunday-school rally at Clinton, where Albert Schwartz is pastor. The good results of the rally are said to be evident and indications are that they will be permanent. The kindergarten department has introduced new methods and equipments for a completer and more scientific work. This congregation is to have a meeting in February, conducted by H. M. Barnett of Kansas.

Education Day was observed at Central Church, Peoria, January 22nd. At this service, two young men and four young women volunteered to enter the ministry or to go as missionaries to the foreign field. This church is happy in having four other young men who are contemplating the same decision. W. F. Turner, the pastor, is soon to be assisted in a meeting by Evangelist Harlow, after the latter has finished a two weeks' meeting at Howett Street Church.

Havana church, with Ralph V. Callaway as pastor, is having additions and the various departments of church work are reported in splendid condition. The Sunday-school has fulfilled the conditions entitling it to a front rank certificate.

Mechanicsburg Church observed Education Day and as a result will send a contribution of more than $20.00 to Eureka College. The Christian Endeavor Society supports a boy at the orphanage at Damoh, India. Forrest Mullins is the pastor.

Armington church recently closed a meeting held by the pastor, R. Burt Doan, which not only materially strengthened the church, but also gave occasion for the raising of one thousand dollars on the church building debt.

W. H. Cannon's church at Pittsfield, had a total number of additions during 1910 of 38, of which number 24 were baptisms. The congregation raised for all purposes, $4,300 of which amount, $1,500 was for missions and benevolence. During March, John R. Golden of West Side, Springfield, and J. W. Seniff will lead in a meeting for this congregation.

The church at Loraine will be pastorless after the first of April. J. F. Smith has been minister here for three years, during which time there was one hundred and nine additions. Mr. Smith can be secured for another pastorate at the expiration of his time with this congregation. His church has just concluded a meeting held by George P. Brunel, with seven additions.

B. W. Tate, pastor of the church at Pontiac, is making large preparations for a meeting in which he himself is to be evangelist, with the assistance of W. R. Cody, of Michigan, as musical director. Mr. Tate has an Endeavor Society from which organization visitors are sent each Sunday in the month to the aged and sick. These visitors find the homes of the "shut-ins," whether members of the church or not. Such a plan is bound to be of comfort to the ones visited, but doubtless the visitors will themselves be quite as greatly blessed.

J. A. Barnett has been pastor of Galesburg Church nearly four years. During the last year, the church raised for all purposes $4,100. More than 25 per cent of this was devoted to missions and benevolence. A year ago this church became a Living Link in the Foreign Society and supports Mrs. W. R. Hunt at Wuhu, China. During last year, there were twenty received into the membership, which just equals the loss by death and removal. During the entire pastorate, more than three hundred have been added to the congregation.

Kankakee Central Church is forced to have more room for its growing work. As a consequence of this the basement is to be reconstructed to give adequate room, particularly for the Sunday-school, which has gone beyond the point where it is possible to be accommodated in the present structure. With commendable zeal, the members have set about to provide the room and practically all the labor required has been donated without any solicitation, and considerable money has already been contributed for the furnishings. This congregation has an average attendance at the preaching services of 76 per cent of the number of members. The Sunday-school attendance is 66 per cent and the prayer-meeting has 22 per cent.

F. S. Nichols, minister at Table Grove, began February 5th an interesting series of Sunday evening services, which he calls "Life Work Series." After the first Sunday, he will have on succeeding evenings, addresses by a business man, a journalist, a farmer, a teacher, a home-keeper, a nurse, a physician and a lawyer. Each address is followed by an address of the pastor. "The Business Man" is followed by "The Ambitious Merchant," "The Journalist" by "The Editorial 'We'," "The Farmer" by "The Scent of the Clover Field," "The Teacher by "Jesus the Teacher," "The Home-Keeper" by "A Dinner of Herbs," "The Nurse" by "The Healing Ministry of Jesus," "The Physician" by "Luke the Physician," and "The Lawyer" by "The Prophet Lawyer." At each of these services, special music is also arranged for.

The following resolution was adopted by the brotherhood of First Church, Galesburg, at a recent meeting; "Whereas, we believe the hardworking postoffice employes should have the Lord's Day for rest, and, whereas, the National Letter Carriers Association and the Lord's Day Alliance unite in asking churches to secure for these men Sunday rest, and inasmuch as post offices are closed on Sunday in Colorado Springs, Toledo and Detroit, therefore, be it Resolved, That this organization, Brotherhood of Disciples of Christ No. 259, register its approval of the movement now on in Galesburg to close the postoffice on Sundays, and do hereby urge all members of the First Christian Church of Galesburg together with the members of its various auxiliaries to sign and send in the coupon to that effect as published and prescribed in our daily newspapers.

"Be it futher Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be submitted to our daily newspapers for publication and that a copy be published through our parish paper, 'The Galesburg Voice.'"

A glance through the new directory of Eureka Church, shows an interesting condition in this congregation. Several facts stand out conspicuously. The financial situation looks encouraging to one on the outside. There is an apparent conscience throughout the entire membership, toward the duty of contributing to the church's expenses and for the work carried on abroad. It would be difficult for some preachers to imagine a state of mind in their congregation to even permit a detailed financial statement to be printed in the annual directory. Eureka church does this. Out of a total of eight hundred members, there are very few who do not contribute to current expenses and to missions. It is observable, that those persons who support to missions are the same persons who support local work, and those who are sufficiently interested to contribute toward local expenses, are the same people who have evidently caught a vision of the universality of the religion of Jesus. The diretory prints opposite each member's name, two columns of financial figures, the first column shows the contributions throughout the year for current expenses, the second, the contribution for missions and benevolence. During the year, there was a total of $9,597.39 raised, of which amount $4,836,97 was for missions and benevolence. In addition to the above amount for missions, there were individual gifts from the congregation, to the Foreign Society, amounting to $1,169. It makes the church's whole contribution for missions and benevolence during the year, $6,005.97. There was a gain in membership of eighty, of which thirty-five were by confession. David H. Shields is minister here.

CHICAGO'S QUARTERLY ASSEMBLY

Notable Departing Address of George A. Campbell.

BY VAUGHAN DABNEY.

The quarterly assembly held Sunday afternoon, Jan. 30, at the First Methodist Church, will long be remembered by Chicago Disciples. The meeting was closed on time; the audience, large and appreciative; the fellowship rare; and the address by George A. Campbell, inspirational and beneficial.

Before calling the roll of churches O. F. Jordan, secretary of the City Missionary Society, made a telling talk about our Chicago work. He urged our occupancy of the growing suburb, especially the North Shore, and pleaded for a stronger work among the foreigners who are daily becoming a more potent factor in the industrial and political life of our city. Mr. Jordan cheered our hearts when he spoke of the increasing interest of our brotherhood in our Chicago problems, and voted the recent tentative offer of $750 made by Robert Hopkins, National Bible-school Superintendent. This amount is proffered on condition that the Cook County Sunday-schools raise a like amount, the total to be spent for special work among our foreign population.

Austin Church Leads.

Following this earnest talk Mr. Jordan called the roll of churches requesting them to stand and state the number composing the delegation. The Austin group was the largest, having over forty. Metropolitan Church came second. Other large delegations were those from West Pullman, Sheffield Ave., Douglas Park and Jackson Blvd.

The address of the afternoon was delivered by George A. Campbell who is leaving Austin for Hannibal, Mo. Mr. Campbell has seen active service as a Disciple minister in Chicago about fifteen years, and consequently can speak from an experience rich and deep. The message was delivered extempore. It was fresh and sweet in its virility; it was deeply devotional and prophetic. Mr. Campbell used no rhetorical device to charm, nor oratorical flight to enthuse. His delivery was not studied, but the words came directly from an overflowing heart, which beats and bleeds for our city.

The freshness of the message came from the great out-of-doors, in which Mr. Campbell dwells. He spoke of the stars, the snow, chasms and deserts, the hills, birds and brooks, and the great stretches of open fields. No grime and dust of the city dulled his speech, nor clouded its meaning, for the speaker lives in a high altitude above the dirt and fog.

And this freshness and sweetness was strengthened by the virile note, which was so in evidence. He discussed big things. He spoke to please no set of men. While not hesitating to tread upon the toes of the ultra-conservative, he was equally frank and direct in his remarks pertaining to criticism. But, with it all, the manly sense of fairness, relieved the speech from any spirit of censoriousness.

Devotional and Prophetic Message.

The devotional element was strong. In this simple definition of religion, the coming of Christ to man and the going of man to Christ; in his emphasis upon prayer, meditation; in his plea for a concept of the deep spiritual significance of the ordinances; in his elevation of the cross—in these phrases do we find warrant for such a statement.

The message also was prophetic. Mr. Campbell is a seer. He dreams. Looking far into the future he sees the establishment of the kingdom, where God's will shall be done on earth as in heaven.

Suffice it to say, that Chicago Disciples will long remember the final message of George A. Campbell. They will ever be strengthened when faint; cheered when despondent; aroused when indifferent, by this vigorous and wholesome interpretation of the fundamental ideals of the Disciples of Christ.

Following is a resume of the address:

MR. CAMPBELL'S ADDRESS.

Those of us gathered here this afternoon are followers of Christ who have found our service and fellowship among the Disciples of Christ. All of us at some supreme moment in our lives accepted Christ as our leader, and swearing allegiance to his leadership dedicated our lives to him and to his church. The years of our Christian service, the churches of our praise and worship, the circles of our fellowship, the friendships of spiritual communion, the culture and grace of soul and the missionary activity are those of the brotherhood of the Disciples.

So in a sense our dedication is not alone to Christ but to our brotherhood. Our service to the church universal and to the world entire is through the more limited circle we call the Christian church.

Christian Passion in the Metropolis.

Those of us here are trying to be true to our dedication of former years. We are trying to live the Christian passion and the principles of our brotherhood in the metropolitan atmosphere in which we live.

Many of our brethren who come up to this great city are not now with us and perhaps not of us. I do not censure them; for I cannot judge as to the forces that played upon them. Life has its tremendous tests. Were some of them engulfed in the maelstrom of Chicago's passion for pleasure and amusement? Were some drawn away from us by the terrific fight to eke out an existence? Were some spiritually unbalanced by the lure of gold? Were some lost in the mists of doubt because of the new learning that is upon us? Were some discouraged by our weakness in this city of wonderful proportions and thus found their way to stronger societies? No matter—many have left us; but we remain as representatives of our brotherhood. Possessing the principles of our fathers what are we going to do with them in this city and in this time, and what new note or message will we send back to our brethren because of our toil in this center of cosmopolitan aggregation? The heart of the world beats in our midst. When our message comes to that heart wherein will it prove effective, wherein will it be endangered, wherein will it be modified?

Disciples' Three Characteristic Notes.

Historically the three most distinctive characteristics of the Disciples are: 1. Their intense evangelism. 2. Their passion for union. 3. Their plea for the restoration of primitive Christianity.

Our evangelism has been our glory. Back of it were mighty motives and convictions. No one who at all appreciates the spiritual significance of our splendid evangelism could have the suspicion of a sneer concerning it.

Nevertheless it is true that the protracted meeting evangelism is now rarely successful in our metropolitan centers. This being true shall we surrender the passion for conquest. By no means. That course would lead to paralysis and death. We must adjust our methods to the manner and conditions of the people. Already we are stressing three forms for the spirit of evangelization to take. The children must be taught and led to the Christ and his church early, and then cultivated by illumined souls of the church. Secondly, our laymen must be called to the priesthood of service. Men in a city are lonely. They wish to make real friendships. The church men will find an opportunity in this deep soul hunger after companionship for very effective evangelism. I would like to call this the evangelism of friendship.

Then again there is the evangelism of the minister as pastor. Preaching is important, but in a city full of human tragedies, the work of the true and modern pastor is a most necessary factor in building souls and establishing a church. Thousands in our great centers are pouring into ministers' ears secrets they entrust to no one else. Thus the pastor becomes a prop to many a failing soul—nay, he becomes an inspiration that holds the soul to the path that leads up to God.

The Vision of a United Church.

The vision of our fathers for a united church was a most splendid and worthy one. The generation immediately before ours approached this problem of Christian union largely from the doctrinal side. There was much controversy and much bitterness.

In the centers we see so much of sin and moral degradation that denominational distinctions are not so greatly stressed. Creeds are allowed to fall into disuse. The strength of all churches is more given to combating the common foe—sin. Thus we are approaching the union question more from the human and practical side. We are all willing to co-operate to save our boys and girls from evil institutions and evil ways. We have not discarded the program of the fathers but we are bringing to it a new prayer, a new vision, a new emphasis, made possible to us by the environment of our tasks.

Primitive Christianity.

Our fathers did well to go back to the source of our Christianity for their authoritative word and spirit. It is still our passion to restore primitive and eternal Christianity. In our busy lives we are in danger of losing the meditative note that was so strong in the beginning of our religion and that is a necessary eternal note. If the meditative and reverential notes go, all is gone. But there are some gains to our plea that will come out of the modern time and out of the metropolitan life.

We will put Christ in his right place. Criticism in our brotherhood in recent years has obscured Christ. He is the all and in all of our religion. With the coming of historic criticism the conservative and radical have fought over him, much I think to his sorrow. Neither has any final word to say of this Living One. He is not dependent on the verdict of science as to dates and authorship. He is a living Spirit enthroned in the hearts and consciences of his people. He is the great fact of history pervading all its life. No criticism, no science, has any final word to say about religion. With metropolitan acumen we will call again our brotherhood to its spiritual faith and chide it for wasting time in its heat about the skeleton of our religion. Christ alone is sufficient, is eternal and primitive.

Two Primitive Ordinances.

Our fathers exalted the two ordinances they found in the New Testament. We have inherited these; and thus we have to do with them in a hyper-critical age. Do they bear fruit? is the searching question of our day. It is easy for that which was intended as a spiritual help to become a material curse. Baptism and the Lord's supper should be spiritualized. They stand for the deep primitive and eternal truths of Christianity.

They should be guarded and exalted with spiritual content. The thought back of either is enough to sweep us from our feet. They are dead forms unless we come to them with sanctified imagination.

The Christians in a city who weather the vast temptations that test the soul are almost uniformly controlled by the passion of sacrifice. They have learned the meaning of the cross. Here again is a primitive and eternal note. No life can be full and free unless it has its source in the cross. Before our brotherhood is controlled by a passion of surrender the city may have to send it the note of Calvary.

Human Woe in Superlative Degree.

The Disciples of the city see human want in its superlative degree. They see on every hand sin that has run its course, and thus is reaping its sad harvest. They are moved to give charity, to build play-houses, to change conditions, etc. This is well. The church must ever be concerned with the whole life. But when we have found ourselves in our modern complex life we shall regard the church as the voice and inspiration that, striking down into the deepest places of the soul, will create all necessary forms for the best human development. The primary emphasis is not to be put on institutionalism, but on the prophetic message of the church. The church is to be the centrality of life in that it deals with the springs of the soul The preaching of real religion that lays hold on God and then utters itself to the souls of men so that they are compelled to service is the function of the church.

Starting with Christ we will look up and say, "Not my will but thine be done;" starting with Christ we will look within and be made holy men for his holy church; starting with Christ we will look without and love our brother as ourself; starting with Christ we will look forward and hear him say, "Fear not little flock, it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom."

Take heart, every soul—for Christ said, "I will build my church." The issue is not in doubt.

Sixty Years the Standard
DR. PRICE'S CREAM BAKING POWDER
A Cream of Tartar Powder
Made from Grapes
NO ALUM

CHICAGO NOTES.

The installation exercises in connection with the pastoral office of Rev. Egbert Le Roy Dakin, of the Memorial Church, were held Sunday afternoon, Feb. 5. Mr. Dakin, of the Baptist communion, is the new associate minister and director of Religious Education. Representatives from the Baptists, Disciples and neighboring churches participated.

W. C. Pearce, of the International Sunday-school Association, gave an illustrated lecture on adult class work at the Metropolitan church on Sunday last. There were five additions on that date.

At the evening service of the Austin church January 29, Mr. Clark, of the Y. M. C. A. Training School, was the chief speaker. Mr. Clark has seen active service as a Methodist missionary in the Canadian northwest.

A male chorus was a novel feature at a recent service at the Evanston church. It is planned to have this chorus sing at least

(Continued on page 23.)

The Christian Century

Published Weekly by

The New Christian Century Co

700-714 East Fortieth St., Chicago, Ill.
United Religious Press Building.
Phone Douglas 3113.

Entered as Second-Class Matter Feb. 28, 1902, at the Post Office at Chicago, Illinois, Under Act of March 3, 1879.

EDITORS

CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON.
HERBERT L. WILLETT.

CONTRIBUTING EDITOR

SILAS JONES.

SUBSCRIPTIONS.

Subscription price $2.00. If paid strictly in advance $1.50 will be accepted. To ministers if paid strictly in advance, $1.00 per year. Single copy 5 cents.

EXPIRATIONS.

The label on the paper shows the month to which subscription is paid. List is revised monthly. Change of date on label is a receipt for remittance on subscription account.

DISCONTINUANCES.

Special Notice—In order that subscribers may not be annoyed by failure to receive the paper, it is not discontinued at expiration of time paid in advance (unless so ordered), but is continued pending instruction from the subscriber. If discontinuance is desired, prompt notice should be sent and all arrearages paid.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.

In ordering change of address give the old as well as the new. If the paper does not reach you regularly, notify us at once.

REMITTANCES

Should be sent by draft or money order payable to The New Christian Century Company. IF LOCAL CHECK IS SENT ADD TEN CENTS FOR EXCHANGE.

ADVERTISING.

Nothing but clean business and reliable firms advertised. Rates given on application.

Church Life

Granville Snell, who is in a successful meeting at Amazonia, Mo., dedicated their new church, January 29.

The church at Atlantic, Iowa, which is now holding revival services, celebrated "Home Coming Day" on January 22, which was largely attended.

John P. Sala, is conducting a series of evangelistic services at Central Church, Dayton, Ohio. He is assisted in the singing by J. H. Lewis.

S. B. Braden of Edon, Ohio, has just closed a meeting with the church at Cortland, Ohio. Forty-two were added to the church and the various departments of the work strengthened.

The School of Methods for Sunday-school teachers, held recently at Canton, Ohio, had an enrollment of seventy-five from out of the city and a large local attendance, and those in charge are greatly encouraged by this good beginning.

H. Gordon Bennett began a meeting at Walters, Okla., on January 29, with a good audience at the first service. This field has been without a pastor for six months but a good Sunday-school organization has kept the work going.

The present membership of the church is 725 resident and 105 non-resident. Five hundred and twenty members last year made some contribution to the work of the church. The church is now out of debt and is seeking to become a great missionary church.

The congregation at Beloit, Wis., is planning a new house of worship to be erected next summer. The church has grown so greatly since the coming of the new pastor, N. A. Borop, a few months ago, that an adequate place for services is necessary.

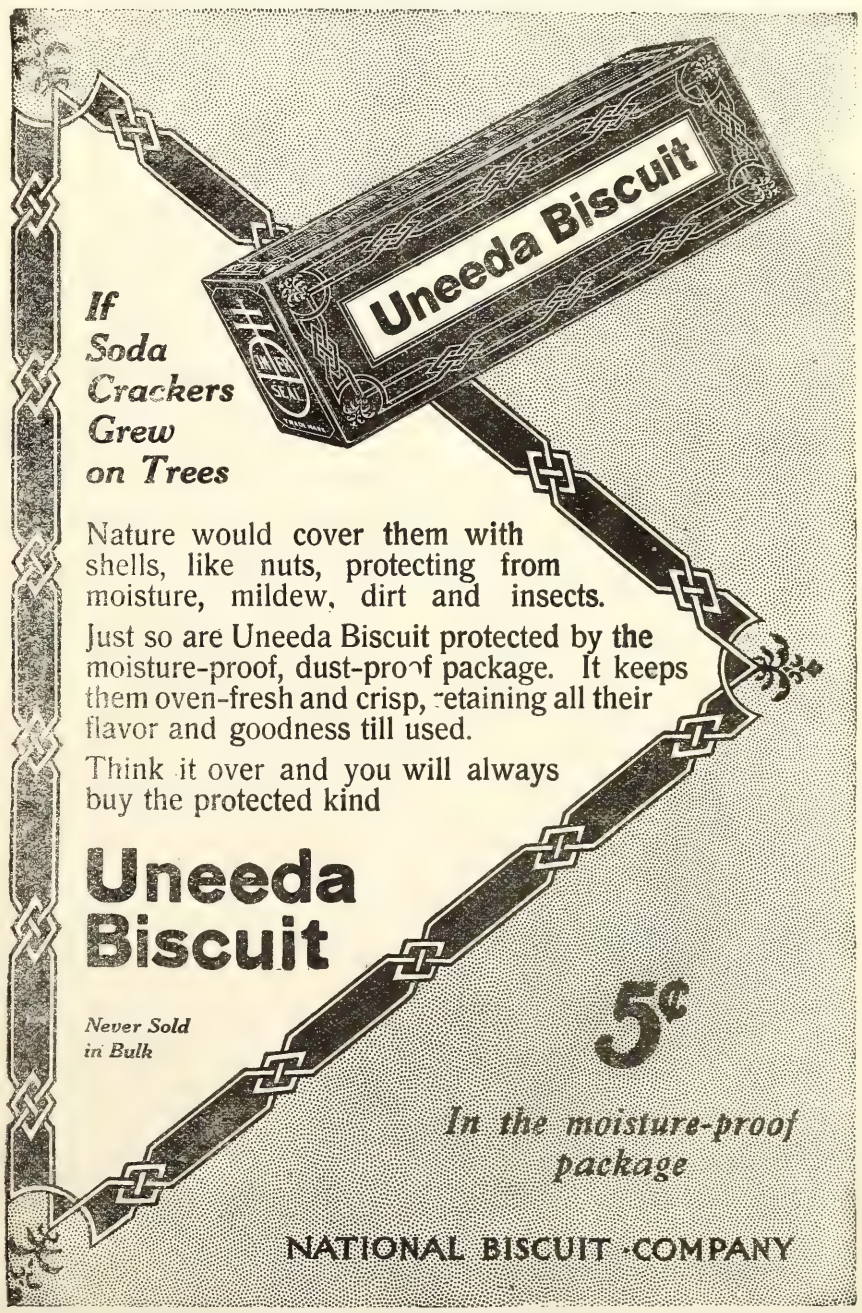
Following a two weeks' meeting at First Church Stockton, Cal., the work of remodeling the building will be started. The attendance has increased to such an extent, since J. K. Ballou assufed charge, that a larger auditorium and Sunday-school rooms are found necessary.

Burris A. Jenkins of Linwoor Blvd. Church, Kansas City, Mo., is giving a series of three lecture-sermons on "Great Poems." The subject on Jan. 22 was "The Vision of Sir Launfal" the music for the service being largely Wagnerian, and illustrative of the Holy Grail theme.

Second Church, Milwaukee, Wis., Mark Wayne Williams, pastor, is progressing in attendance, and the Sunday-school especially is growing. A series of stereopticon lectures on the time of Christ has recently filled the church on Sunday evenings. This congregation is working earnestly for a new church this year.

On Jan. 25, the congregation of First Church, Ft. Scott, Kans., gathered to hold a thanksgiving and jubilee meeting over the freeing of the church from all debts. This is the first time the church has been free from debt since the present edifice was built, and the members are much encouraged for the future work of the church.

C. J. Sebastian, pastor at Gas City, Ind., reports a good year in their work. Fifty have been added to the church membership; a men's class of over fifty organized; the enrollment of the women's class increased from about ten to over a hundred; a new organ



Uneeda Biscuit
If Soda Crackers Grew on Trees
Nature would cover them with shells, like nuts, protecting from moisture, mildew, dirt and insects.
Just so are Uneeda Biscuit protected by the moisture-proof, dust-proof package. It keeps them oven-fresh and crisp, retaining all their flavor and goodness till used.
Think it over and you will always buy the protected kind
Uneeda Biscuit
Never Sold in Bulk
5¢
In the moisture-proof package
NATIONAL BISCUIT COMPANY

Books

WHEN YOU WANT BOOKS

Send your order to us. We handle the books of all publishers, at the lowest prices. Your order will be promptly attended to.

THE NEW CHRISTIAN CENTURY COMPANY

700 East Fortieth Street - - - - - Chicago, Ill.

A California Business Man

placed $10,000 with the Foreign Christian Missionary Society on the Annuity Plan, and receives an annual income of $600 on the same. He states: "I am greatly pleased with the Annuity Plan. I have never made an investment that has given me more satisfaction both as a business transaction and the knowledge that it is helping to spread the gospel over the world. I intend to put more money into it just as soon as it is possible."

Couple with this the fact that he pays no taxes on this bond. Isn't it a fine investment?

For full information concerning the Annuity Plan, address the purchased, and many improvements made in the equipment of the church and Sunday-school.

FOREIGN CHRISTIAN MISSIONARY SOCIETY, Box 884, Cincinnati, Ohio

Frank Scattergood, pastor of Stow Corners Church, near Cuyahoga Falls, Ohio, planned a successful banquet recently at which sixty men were present, which is considered a record-breaking attendance for this conservative congregation. With a nucleus of forty members, in his men's class, a Brotherhood was organized.

A commission form of government has recently been adopted by First Church, South Bend, Ind., and the indications are at present that the plan will prove a great success. Five commissioners will head the departments of organization, membership, finance, literature and music, each one promoting the interests of his department. The plan will be given a thorough trial during the coming year and if it proves a success it will probably be adopted by other organizations.

The past year's work at Edon, Ohio, has been full of encouragement and hope. There has been a substantial increase both in the membership and spirit of the various organizations of the work. The sum of $2,202.00 was raised for all purposes. The church gave $110 for missions and $66 for local benevolences. The church has recently extended the present pastor, S. B. Braden, a call to minister for another year.

First Church, Fulton, Mo., T. E. Winter, pastor, is steadily growing even in its building period when it is worshiping in a public hall. The Sunday-school has been graded up to the Intermediate department. Sunday night services have taken in new life and interest and are a joy rather than a burden. The new house, a picture of which was presented to our readers recently, will be opened February 20.

Edgar Dewitt Jones, pastor of First Church, Bloomington, Ill., recently assisted W. F. Richardson, pastor of First Church, Kansas City, Mo., in a three weeks' meeting. Despite the fact that for more than a week the streets were a glare of ice making walking perilous and a wide-spread epidemic of sickness prevailed throughout the city, the meetings were well attended and thirty-five added to the membership. The members were greatly refreshed by the messages of truth and love given throughout the meetings by Mr. Jones.

C. C. Morrison, of The Christian Century, preached at Jefferson City, Mo., last Sunday. The church there is without a pastor but is trying to entice A. R. Liverett away from Cameron, Mo., where he has been singularly successful. The Jefferson City church is in a strategic position, with a splendid church house and a capable congregation. They are too much haunted with a heavy debt. The right kind of leadership would bring them into fairer conditions, and it is confidently believed by the church that Mr. Liverett is the man for them.

Englewood Church, Indianapolis, Ind., gives a splendid report for 1910. Expended for local work, $3,031.14; upon church debt, $1,798; for missions and benevolences, $286.08, making a total of $5,015.22, and a net gain to the membership of eighty-seven. There remains of a $4,000 church debt only $1,500. This has been done in two years' time and the pastor, E. C. Moorman, has had his salary increased each year. This church is the home of the Opportunity Class, taught by A. L. Orcutt, which is one of the largest adult classes in Indianapolis.

The annual dinner, business meeting and roll call of the Central Christian Church, Lebanon, Ind., L. E. Brown, pastor, was held Jan. 27. Over 350 people enjoyed the dinner provided by the ladies of the church. During the year the church raised $3,241.37; Sunday-school, $784.94; C. W. B. M. Aux. $320.38; Young Ladies' Circle, $90.10; Ladies' Aid Society, $147.31; Juniors, $20.00; making a total of $5,387.40. Of this amount $1,254.72 was for missions and benevolence. For the coming year two Living-links will be supported, one in China, through the Foreign Society, and one at Livingston, Tenn., through the C. W. B. M.

The Third Church, Indianapolis, Ind., is to try a very interesting experiment. Our new location is six blocks from our former building and we find ourselves surrounded by a new and densely populated environment. As a means to secure a hearing for W. J. Lhamon who is to begin a meeting with us February 12, we are to have an "Indoor Chautauqua or mid-winter assembly." We believe the idea is new, and as a means to advertise a meeting, we believe it will be a great success. If worthy of notice, we submit it for consideration of other churches. —Harry G. Hill.

The church at Fitzgerald, Ga., Everett Hollingworth, pastor, reports fifty-nine additions during the year, of which twenty-three were by baptism. The membership is now 226. Total amounts raised, $2,497.90, of which $500 went to reduce church debt. The third year of the present pastorate began September 1, and the pastor's salary has been increased $200. They are in a campaign to liquidate the debt and remodel the building, to afford needed accommodations to the growing Bible-school work. They have the largest church in town, and night audiences average 400 the year round.

The Helena, Mont., church held its annual banquet and congregational asembly January 25, and reports indicated advancement along all lines. The financial reports showed $3,500.00 raised for all purposes, about $500.00 of which went to missions and philanthropic purposes. The clerk's report showed a net increase of thirty-two in the membership. The church begins the new year entirely out of debt and all are optimistic of the future. The official board has been reorganized along more practical lines for effectual work. The finances of the church, being left completely with a board of five trustees and other members of the board, elders and deacons, will deal entirely with the spiritual affairs of the church, meeting regularly in counsel with the minister, to study the problems of attendance and organization. They are trying to impress upon the board that its real work is not raising money, but saving the people and training the church. Chas. W. Barnes is pastor of this church.

The Gentry family, of central Missouri, feel that they lost their moral leader, and the Disciples of central Missouri lost a rare and faithful member, when Mrs. Jael W. Gentry died at her home in Sedalia, on January 12. This woman, whom God permitted to live long, and inspired to live rightly, was in her eightieth year. She had been ill since last July with a complication of troubles induced by a life of great activity, especially within the church, and by declining years. Her life was so woven into that of the First Christian Church of Sedalia, that it feels it is losing a very part of its life in losing her. Mrs. Gentry was one of the pioneer Kentuckians who helped not only to make the Christian church in Kentucky, but to bring it over to Missouri and there to see it grow from infancy to a sturdy institution. She was a woman of strong religious convictions, but also of broad outlook, intellectual strength and vivacity, and of real moral fibre. She so impressed her strong personality upon her many descendents and friends that they will carry that impress with them through life. The profound influence that she had upon many of them increases rather than diminishes with her death. Such a life as this is not lived in vain.

A. R. Liverett, pastor at Cameron, Mo., sends the following good report: Have just completed two years' ministry at this place during which time we have received over 180 into the fellowship of the church. Spent over $3,000 on completing the church basement, beside raising money for other improvements. Our enrollment of members now stands at 687. The whole church board resigned and we had an election and reorganized the board. We are confident that this means more effective and sympathetic work. Our Sunday-school is doing good work under the leadership of T. W. Partin. We have an organized committee of seven who have oversight of the finances. S. D. Thompson is superintendent of this department and all indications are that he will more than make good. In many ways this is a delightful field.

HIRAM COLLEGE. Send for Illustrated Bulletin, Souvenir Mailing Card and Complete Catalog to PRES. MINER LEE BATES, HIRAM, O.

BELLS.

Steel Alloy Church and School Bells. Send for Catalogue. The C. S. BELL CO., Hillsboro, O

F. T. Ray, formerly of Hebron, Neb., has accepted the pastorate at Belleville, Kans.

B. F. Shoemaker has tendered his resignation at Nevada, Ia., to take effect March 1.

A. P. Johnson, of First Church, Chickasha, Okla., is assisting G. Lyle Smith in a meeting at El Reno, Okla.

C. M. Myers has received a call from the church at Caldwell, Kans., to continue with them.

Revival services began January 23, at Council Bluffs, Iowa. Robert O. Noah is in charge of the music.

W. G. Johnston, pastor at Greensburg, Ind., has resigned to take up city evangelistic work in St. Louis, Mo.

R. S. Robertson of Brunswick, Mo., has been called to the pastorate at Humboldt, Neb.

The series of meetings at East Liverpool Ohio, have been concluded, with a number of accessions.

R. W. Abberley recently conducted successful evangelistic meetings at Marshalltown, Ia.

A series of union meetings began February 6, at Keokuk, Iowa, to continue for a month. The services for the first week are to be held in First Church.

Large congregations attended the meetings conducted at Petoskey, Mich., by Lowell C. McPherson. Clyde Pickett is pastor of this congregation.

R. W. Lilley, pastor of First Church, Keokuk, Ia., delivered the address before the Y. M. C. A. meeting there on Jan. 29. His subject was, "The Cowardice of the Hero."

L. I. Mercer and J. K. Shellenberger addressed the Brotherhood at Massillon, Ohio, Jan. 29, the occasion being the first anniversary of its organization. The men had entire charge of the evening service.

R. L. Brown recently conducted a meeting at Mason City, Iowa, with the pastor, C. H. DeVoe. Much interest was manifested in the meetings and about seventy-five were added to the membership.

J. T. Brown has concluded a meeting at Kendallville, Ind., with the pastor, A. B. Houze, during which there were sixty-seven additions. Mr. Brown is now in a meeting at Red Key, Ind.

F. A. Bright is in the sixth year of his successful ministry at Waynesburg, Pa. With the Kendalls he held a three weeks' meeting in January, during which there were eighty additions.

Evangelistic meetings are in progress at Oakland, Cal., under the leadership of John Brewer and the pastor, T. A. Boyer. Later special work will be done in organizing the congregation for systematic Sunday-school work.

A union meeting is planned for the Brotherhood of First Church, Vincennes, Ind., with the Brotherhood of the Presbyterian church at that place. Dr. Charles Little, of Wabash, Ind., who is prominent in Presbyterian circles has been secured for the principal address, and it is hoped that more than three hundred men will be in attendance.

The work at Weatherford, Tex., where Owen Livengood ministers, is making good progress. The Sunday-school is nearing an enrollment of one hundred, and through earnest efforts on Mr. Livengood's part to increase the attendance at the church services, a substantial response has been made, which is encouraging to the workers there.

W. S. Myers and P. O. Gates have just closed a three weeks' meeting with I. H. Teel, pastor at Santa Cruz. The factional divisions of the past are now buried, and the church is now harmonious and happy. Forty-three were added to the membership in this meeting.

C. O. McMullen, who has taken charge of the work at Woodson Chapel, coming there from Mayville, Mo., has already instilled new life into the congregation by his energetic methods, and much encouragement is felt for future work This church had been without a pastor for some time before Mr. McMullin assumed charge.

The pastorate at Chillicothe, Mo., will be vacant March first, owing to the resignation of S. J. White, who has accepted a call to Guthrie, Okla. Since coming to this field three and a half years ago, Mr. White has accomplished much good. Three hundred members have been added to the church, the Sunday-school attendance increased one hundred per cent. Mr. White has also been active in temperance reforms and will be much missed both within and without the affiliations of his church.

Chicago Notes

(Continued from page 20.)

once a month. O. F. Jordan, minister, says that such a chorus introduced masculinity into the worship and is an inspiration both for pastor and people.

The Round Table Discussion on "Religious Education" led by Doctor Ames, proved exceedingly profitable for the ministers at their last regular meeting. Many laymen could well spend their time at some of these meetings.

R. W. Gentry is much encouraged over the work at Waukegan. Though he expects to leave there in June, he feels that if his successor tactfully handles the problem, that possibly a union of the two factions of the church may be effected, which would result in a strong organization. Since Waukegan is so closely related to Chicago, the Disciples of this city are deeply interested in the outcome of the matter. Mr. Gentry is doing a constructive piece of work in this field.

Announcements were out when the Christian Century was going to press, about the banquet for Geo. A. Campbell at the Great Northern on Tuesday at 6:30, February 7. Plates $1.50.

The annual dinner of the Monroe Street Church was held in the dining room Friday evening, January 27. A large company was in attendance. Reports were read from the various departments of the church. They were most encouraging. "For the first time to my knowledge," said the church treasurer, ""we have a balance in the treasury, with all bills paid."

After the dinner was finished—it was so exceptionally well prepared it almost finished the "eaters"—greetings were extended to those present by the pastor. R. W. Gentry and Mr. Morrison followed with most inspiring talks. G. A. Campbell, of Austin, was the special guest of the evening. He brought a serious, earnest message to the church, emphasizing the need and necessity of sane, wholesome, intense Christian passion in the church life. It was a most timely and helpful address. It will bear fruit. Mr. W. A. Kennedy closed the speech-making and urged all the members to give the pastor more substantial aid in the enlargement of the work for 1911.

Team Work Campaign

(Continued from page 10.)

church can never expect to make progress among the masses. Last, but not least, is the presentation of the varied interests represented by the Foreign Society, our agents abroad. This, as the others, emphasizes the "Team Work" idea, and shows the absolute necessity for the practice of unity at home in order to be able to preach it abroad. The missionaries are praying for unification of our interests at home, and the placing of the responsibility for the success or the failure of our united missionary and benevolent work upon the shoulders of every man, woman and child among the Disciples of Christ.

RAISE FIVE HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLARS FOR DRAKE UNIVERSITY

Where else can Disciples invest money in the cause of Christian education with the certainty of larger returns for all time? Drake University has made good; she enrolls over 1,800 students annually, 300 of whom are from other States and foreign countries; 200 are in the Bible department.

The location of Drake University is strategic. The surrounding influences, climatic, hygienic, social, political, moral and religious are wholesome and inspiring. Her home city, Des Moines, with near 100,000 population, has a spirit to rule herself; and is already giving to other cities her Commission Form of City Government. Des Moines society is quite thoroughly American. This Midland is free from the negro problem of the south, exempt from the Asiatic encroachments so disturbing to the west coast, and away from the extremes of wealth and poverty and the inherent labor troubles of the east.

Drake University is at the center of the world's largest and most fertile farden spot; the very base of missionary supplies both of men and means if we but win them for Christ. These home-owned fields of this great Midland are occupied by a people possessing the highest average of intelligence. The greatest lecturers on the platform today are largely employed in this Midland region. On national questions the Midland people hold the balance of power. No borderland or sectional question can carry without first presenting its claims and securing the consent of this people. Practically all the leading lecture bureaus of this country are owned and managed by former Drake Students.

The influence of the Christian Church is a large factor for righteousness in this city. Some of our leading churches are located here. Such pastors as C. S. Medbury, Finis Idleman and H. E. Van Horn minister to them. Where would a student go for higher ideals in the art of clothing and feeding the race and learning the lessons of higher living? Surely this is the place for a great University. Help us to provide the necessary Endowment for great success. We are already offered $100,000.00 on condition that we raise $400,000.00 additional soon. If you will help or assist others to give, kindly write us at once for instructions. Address.

Drake University, Des Moines, Ia.
J. H. Stockham, Comptroller.

An Encouraging Offer

The Japanese Mission Bible School of Los Angeles, California, is just two years old. It was started especially to instruct those who are already Christians for future Sunday-school teachers. There are no families and no children in the school, only a class of young men averaging about ten to fifteen in attendance. They do not take a collection regularly as most of the members have burdens and are studying to start some efficient work for the Japanese on the Pacific Coast. S. Hasegawa, the superintendent writes, "We share your sentiment fully in the American Mission work but are unable to help you satisfactorily. I gathered $2.10 yesterday and I tender you this as our Christmas present."

Brethren, if these Japanese student boys help us thus to Christianize America, what ought our great strong Bible-schools do? Many of them have not yet been heard from. Will not this generous cooperation of Brother Hasegawa and his little band touch their hearts and inspire them to secure the same liberal support on the part of their schools in our united effort to bring America to Christ?

ROBT. M. HOPKINS.

Front Rank Schools

We are glad to announce 431 front rank schools in line to date (January 28.) We trust we may receive many applications the coming week. We are glad to welcome West Washington and Wisconsin among the front rankers this week. Remember we issue the certificate this year if your school has reached any one of the six points and we will take pleasure in sending you literature to help you reach the others. Send applications to your State Bible School Superintendent or the National Superintendent.

ROBERT M. HOPKINS,
American Bible School Superintendent.

Rainier of the Last Frontier

(Continued from page 13.)

"What do I care for your thousand dollars. I'd give ten thousand for her myself if I had it. Stop your whining, Sevier. I have beaten you at your own game, that's all. I've got your girl and I've got your gold and I'm going to keep them both. And if you want me to speak plainly, let me say that she ought to be glad to get the admiration of a man, even though his skin is black. I'll do as well by her as a notorious old rake like you, Sabe, senor medico? How about the supremacy of the Anglo-Saxon, now?"

Cold with an awful horror, Benicia could yet hear, through her suddenly throbbing ears, a sudden wild shrieking of oaths, sounds of a furious struggle, a call for help and a wild excitement throughout the camp.

Men awakened suddenly, went crashing and calling about her shack. One or two, leaning over, peered in to make sure of her safety. Wild thoughts of flying for the jungle came to her. But she was too frightened to move. In trying to rise she found herself unable to stir.

As the noises outside died away, she again, fascinated, listened to the voice of Fagan.

"So you thought you could knife me, hey? How does your gag feel? Comfortable? Now, listen, you low-lived knife slinger, I'm not going to kill you. Somebody might find your dead body and think you had done credit to yourself in your death, and never know that you had hired Fagan for a thousand gold pesos to ambush you and make a hero out of you. If it hadn't been for that time you cut me out of that little Esquimaux beauty Kolano, on the Yukon, in '97, I might have played fair with you.

"But now I even things up. How do you like it, doctor? Shall I take the gag out? Tomorrow our sweet little friend will hear all about you and then she and Fagan will travel up into the hills, the beautiful honeymoon hills of this romantic country and we will ask you to accompany us for a day just to keep you from breaking into Iloilo with too much news. There's many a slip, doctor, many a slip, 'twixt the cup and the lip."

There was no response.

Gradually the camp settled down into quietness. The victim in her attitude of frozen fear, sat silent through the hours of the night. Above her the constellations wheeled, ah, so slowly. Around her slumbered the men with blood on their records and prices on their heads.

Outside her shack a little mahogany body cuddled sleepily into Dreamland.

It was George Washington Rizzal.

(To be continued.)

Bethany Graded Sunday School Lessons

International Course

Charles Clayton Morrison, Editor

The Bethany series is now developed to the point where it supplies the entire school—children, young people and adults. The publishers ask all Sunday-school workers carefully to consider the following outline of Bethany publications:

Beginners

Lessons prepared by FRANCES W. DANIELSON.

First Year—Teachers' Text Book—Part I, II, III, IV. Large Pictures (9x12 inches).
Beginners' Stories—(Illustrated folder for Pupils)—Part I, II, III, IV.
Second Year—Teachers' Text Book—Part I, II, III, IV. Large Pictures (9x12 inches)
Beginners' Stories—(Illustrated folder for Pupils)—Part I, II, III, IV.

Primary

Lessons prepared by MARION THOMAS

First Year—Teachers' Text Book, Part I, II, III, IV. (With picture supplement).
Primary Stories—(Illustrated folder for pupils)—Part I, II, III, IV.
Second Year—Teachers' Text Book—Part I, II, III, IV. Large Pictures—(6x8 inches).
Primary Stories—(Illustrated folder for pupils)—Part I, II, III, IV.

Junior

Lessons prepared by JOSEPHINE L. BALDWIN

First Year—Teachers' Text Book—Part I, II, III.
Pupils' Book for Work and Study—Part I, II, III. (With picture supplement).
Second Year—Teachers' Text Book—Part I, II, III, IV.
Pupils' Book for Work and Study—Part I, II, III, IV. (With picture supplement).

Intermediate

Lessons for first year prepared by MILTON S. LITTLEFIELD

Teachers' Text Book—Part I, II, III, IV.
Pupils' Text Book—Part I, II, III, IV. (With maps).

Young People's and Adult Bible Classes

Dr. Loa E. Scott's LIFE OF JESUS, in Fifty-two Lessons. Adapted to young people and adults. An easy, but thorough text.

Professor H. L. Willett's serial treatment of THE LEADERS OF ISRAEL, in The Christian Century. The Publishers will make special arrangements to furnish The Christian Century to classes desiring to use Dr. Willett's course.

The curriculum outlined above furnishes a comprehensive course of religious instruction. It comprises not only the biographies, history, literature, and teachings of the Bible, but also lessons on the history and heroes of the Christian Church, of missionary enterprises, philanthropic movements, and moral reforms.

These lessons afford a signal opportunity for the Sunday-schools of the Disciples to promote Christian union. Sixteen denominations have laid aside sectarianism to prepare the Bethany Graded Lessons for their schools.

THE GRADED LESSONS MAY BE BEGUN AT ANY TIME

Send Today for Order Blanks and Prospectus.

THE NEW CHRISTIAN CENTURY COMPANY
700 East Fortieth Street, Chicago, Ill.

The CHRISTIAN CENTURY

Bible College Library
Jan 1929

Volume XXVIII. March 2, 1911 Number 9

The Challenge of Heathenism

By W. Remfry Hunt, F. R. G. S.

A Little Journey to Lichfield

By Edgar De Witt Jones

THE NEW CHRISTIAN CENTURY COMPANY
700-714 East Fortieth Street Chicago, Illinois

The Christian World

A Department of Interdenominational Acquaintance.

The Moody Institute

D. L. Moody was preëminently the practical man in religion. He stood for what was simple and straightforward. He was a man of prayer, but he never asked the Lord to do the work of D. L. Moody. To him the practical was anything that built up Christian character. The Moody Institute of Chicago is one of his monuments. It represents his passion for men. His aim in life was to win men to Christ and in the institute students are trained for evangelism. The twenty-fifth anniversary of the institute was celebrated Feb. 5-12. During the week of the celebration gifts amounting to $32,000 were announced. The growth of the institute is demanding a larger equipment.

Not without trial did Mr. Moody come to his place of power among men. A story told by W. B. Jacobs reveals the poverty which the great evangelist endured in the early years of his ministry. He came into the commission house of B. F. Jacobs shabbily dressed and much discouraged. He said to Mr. Jacobs: "Jacobs, I am going to give it up." "Give up what? What is the matter? Are you not well?" "I am well enough," said the discouraged man. "The trouble is not with me, but with my wife. When I left home this morning my wife was hungry and there was not a thing in the house to eat and no money. I can stand it myself, but I cannot bring suffering upon those I love. I simply must give up my church work and go back to business." The answer of B. F. Jacobs was an order to one of his clerks to send flour and potatoes and groceries to the Moody home. Within a year Mr. Moody was engaged in his great campaign in England.

Presbyterian

There are many ministers who can discourse eloquently on why men do not go to church. They speak from experience. Dr. John Timothy Stone, of the Fourth Presbyterian Church of Chicago, can tell why men do go to church. His evening congregations at times have seven men to one woman. The explanation is that Dr. Stone has not only a message and great power in delivering it but he also knows how to send one man after another. His Men's Club does things. In the neighborhod of the Fourth Church, are thousands of young men who fill the boarding houses for blocks around. A committee of twenty young men was selected to make a thorough canvass of every house of each block. This committee was later increased to thirty. The work of canvassing was done systematically. By means of special diagrams and card indexes everything was checked up week by week. The discouraged young man was sought out. The sick received attention. The lonely found companionship. As a result the Men's Club soon grew to an active membership of over 700. 315 members were received into the church during eighteen months.

* * *

The Presbyterian Brotherhood has become a model for the brotherhoods of other denominations. The enthusiasm of its members and the moral and intellectual vigor of its leaders have given it a prominent place among religious organizations. Will it come up to the expectations of its friends? Will it use all the energy at its disposal in the service of the kingdom of God? The Continent sees danger in brotherhood ideals. It quotes with approval this epigram from Dr. Mackay: "'It is a beautiful thing to see a man take off his hat and bow to an ideal, but it is an infinitely finer thing for him to take off his coat and fall to work for it." This sentiment will do good service wherever men are organizing for the work of the church. The Continent continues:

How dangerous it is to have ideals! Men talk as if their ideals atone for deficient living. Quite on the contrary, they should realize, they are very much guiltier for having imagined in their minds a better or more useful life, if they have not sought to live it.

But if that thought of the better thing is denied and forgotten; if the man to whom the ideal appeals trifles and dawdles and will not follow its lure—then he has renounced his exaltation and stepped down again toward the brute level—the level where the thing that is satisfies.

The better a man lives, the loftier rises his sense of what he should do and be. The moral risk of being untrue to the ideals with which God has blessed him, is therefore always the greatest in the man already good.

The ideal of the brotherhood movement in all the churches is not simply passive cleanness, but aggressive goodness. The brotherhood call is to get something done. Brotherhood men ought to prove that Christianity can and will answer human need in all varied appeals of present-day want, social and individual, material and spiritual.

The only coin which will be accepted when the stewards of God's ideals return their talents must be in honest trials to bring to pass the dreams, fulfil the exhortations and make all ideals come true.

Religion in the Magazines

The Homiletic Review for February gives its opinion of the manner in which religious topics are discussed in the popular magazines. It finds that the subject of religion is too big for the average popular writer. With a volume of statistics, a pile of newspaper clippings, and two or three interviews with revivalists, he is equipped for the task of determining the place and power of religion in modern life. Many of the writers for the magazines, lacking sympathy and discretion, will do more harm than good. Some get hopelessly twisted as to the facts. In the Review's own words:

Bolce, in the Cosmopolitan, hears the professors saying unintelligible things and imagines that they are blasting at the Rock of Ages and grading a new road to heaven. Barry, in Pearson's, has learned somewhere that only one dollar of every twelve gets to the heathen, and that most of the missionaries, off guard, are mainly interested in the question, "How can we get our pay raised?" Watson, of Watson's Magazines, repeats the hoary advice, "For the saving of the world let us trust God!" And Dr. Green, in Hampton's, would have us believe that "the old South is the only part of the country where religion, in doctrine, in life, and in outward manifestation in church-going as a regular custom, is greatly in evidence." He will have it that "church-going and church-support are not keeping pace with the increase in our population." The present age is one of decaying faith, and an enfeebled ministry catches at the coat-tails of the professional, money-loving evangelist to save the church from imminent destruction.

One thing may be put down categorically. If there were a decline of interest in religion, we should never hear of it through "uplift magazines." For the first rule of the monthly that is to be popular, unchangeable like the laws of the Medes and Persians, is never to publish what is not interesting. The one thing it avoids like a pestilence is a dead issue, and it will move heaven and earth to get a timely story, and the more or less noisy act of publishing religious articles is, of itself, a flat contradiction of the allegation that the interest in religion is waning. Sometimes Saul is found among the prophets; but he never makes the mistake of slaying the dead and advertising his progress in circular letter. The truth is that this present movement proves that religion is very much alive, and that some writers have at last stumbled on the very fact, to them so new and astonishing, that there is no profit if a man lose his soul. Even flying machines may become out of date, but God is everlastingly the same. The absurd assumption of an occasional Daniel that churches and preachers and scholars were all hopelessly wrong until he began to uplift humanity (three months ago!) may go with the fervor of discovery. Some splendid and solid contributions in magazines like the Century, written by men like Washington Gladden and Henry van Dyke, will help to make up the lack of taste and essential truthfulness in others.

The Superman and Religion

The Superman was well known to the ancients. Plato described him accurately. The early disciples of Jesus encountered him daily. Those who would substitute the morals of the Superman for those of Christianity are innocent of any knowledge of history if they imagine they have something new to give to the world. Of this ideal of certain modern writers the Outlook says:

Every fine instinct, noble impulse, and large vision of truth revolts against the superman, that hideously perverted ideal of greatness which contemporary pessimists have fashioned out of egotism, conceit, brutality, and greed of power and pleasure; a figure more repulsive than the most revolting image of the evil forces personified by the imagination of the savage. The Superman is the incarnation of ruthless egotism, the personification of the antisocial vices, a nightmare which haunts the dreams of those whose minds tremble on the verge of insanity.

The Superman would be the ideal man if the devil were God; in a world in which Christ has lived the Superman is the devil in human form—a beast of prey clothed like a human being.

Unitarian

The Christian Register has a plain word to say concerning "free thought." Non-religious and immoral persons have foolishly boasted of their freedom and have railed at the church and moral ideals as vexations obstructions to the free spirit of man. The smaller the amount of information possessed by such persons the louder are the boasts. The religious fanatic imagines that only they are free who agree with him in creed. These are the words of the Register:

The phrase "free thought" is commonly used to describe the possibility of thinking without having a penalty attached to deviations from the customary route over which the mind travels in politics or religion. It is a mistake often made by free thinkers to claim that those who oppose them are not as free as they. A cardinal of the Roman Catholic Church may be as free in thought as any anarchist in America. He may, for what seems to him excellent reasons, choose what the free thinker would describe as the yoke of slavery. The cardinal might say he was willing to put on the yoke for the same reason that the milkmaid uses the yoke for the better distribution and carrying of her burdens. The freedom that we should desire is that which would make it possible for a man to choose to be a cardinal or an infidel with no penalty imposed upon him for his choice. This is the happy state towards which the world is drifting, and with freedom of choice, gradually reason will prevail and truth will be established. The Czar of Russia is not a free man or a free thinker because he could not abandon the faith of his fathers and retain his throne. A change of the law in England has emancipated the king from the bondage of the state church.

S. J.

The Christian Century

CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON AND HERBERT L. WILLETT, - - - - EDITORS

"The Plaintive Note"

"HE PREACHES CHRISTIAN UNION AS IF HE WERE PRAYING FOR IT—AS IF HE WERE JOINING WITH CHRIST HIMSELF IN THE PRAYER THAT ALL BELIEVERS MIGHT BE ONE."

This is the way a Disciple correspondent described a masterful address by a great missionary leader who was calling the scattered children of God back into one fold.

He contrasted it with his own preaching on the same theme, saying that he felt his own message had lacked "the plaintive note" which was so searching and persuasive in the address he had just listened to.

"I have not tried to persuade men's hearts of the duty of union and the sinfulness of division," he says, "but I have tried to convince them of my view of the Bible teaching on certain points of doctrine. I have been so insistent on my views that I have even alienated Christian people from myself and the church of which I was pastor.

"I recall now an evangelistic meeting I held in a town where the Disciples had no church. There were two thousand people in the town and six churches. I went there to establish a Christian church. I preached union constantly. By the time the meeting was three weeks old the leading backer of the enterprise, a merchant who had moved there from a strong Disciple church in an Ohio town years before, was being boycotted by Methodists, Presbyterians and Baptists because of his active connection with the meeting. This feeling was so intense that they drove him out of business in two years. I do not now believe that my preaching at that time aided the cause for which Christ prayed."

Happily the day of preaching Christian union in such a spirit is past, not for our correspondent alone but for the great majority of his Disciple brethren. Any instances to the contrary are mere sporadic survivals of a polemic age and are in no wise typical.

Ministers in representative churches of Disciples have gotten over preaching union through bitterness and strife. They share in that increasing spirit of group courtesy which is dominating all interchurch relationships today. The sense of their Ishmaelitism is fast fading out.

But with the passing of the belligerent type of preaching it is becoming more plain that we have failed to develop a positive appeal for unity. The enormous success attending our evangelistic propaganda has given us strong churches comparable to those of the denominations round about us.

In the sense of our independent strength, and with the displacement of our erstwhile polemical spirit by the new feeling of fraternal courtesy toward other Christians, our essential mission is in danger of being lost.

Our numbers, our wealth and our urbanity are likely to betray us into acquiescence with the sectarian order because of the comfortable and fruitful circumstances in which our own "denomination" finds itself.

* * *

Nothing but the recovery of the original plea for unity can save the Disciples themselves to their historic mission and make them a factor in the accomplishment of that mission.

We say "plea." The pleading note dropped out of our preaching in the polemical period. The belligerent note was dominant. The plaintive call of Thomas Campbell in the Declaration and Address was smothered in our era of debates over the Holy Spirit, baptism and church order. We spoke much of "our plea," but what we meant was our argument.

The earlier plea for the immediate practice of unity despite diversity of creed had taken on the form of an argument for a particular basis of unity without which no unity was deemed possible. The effect of this was to eclipse the great ideal which first called the Disciples into being. The wooing tenderness with which Thomas Campbell had given the "plea" its initial and classic statement gave place to a harsh legalism or an unimaginative literalism entirely foreign to the great founder's temper

No paradox exists in modern history more striking than that which overtook the Disciples. That Thomas Campbell's attempt to get away from the jangling and jarring of religious controversy and establish the unity and peace of the church should have eventuated in three quarter's of a century of bitter strife is little else than a trick in historical evolution.

That the originally tentative basis of union and fellowship should have crystallized into a hard and fast creed, unwritten, to be sure, but none the less definite and exclusive, is an unmistakable defeat of the deeper purposes of the author of the Declaration and Address.

* * *

The great need of the Christian union ideal is that some prophetic people shall plead for it. The churches are not kept apart because they cannot find a basis of union. They are kept apart because they do not seriously take to heart the duty of union or see the advantage to the kingdom of God of a united church.

It is an unfruitful exercise to debate the ultimate basis of union. No man can dream what that basis will be. All bodies will contribute their wisdom and Christian experience to the making of it. When it is determined it will probably be an elastic, progressive, tentative basis, not fixed, static and final.

A communion renders itself ridiculous and pathetic if it hugs to itself the conceit that its understanding of the Bible will be the ultimate basis of union. For it is inevitable that the coming together of the people of God from many denominations will in itself greatly modify and enrich each communion's understanding of the Bible.

Indeed, just here is one of the fruits of unity little discussed: A united church will enter at once into a richer knowledge of the revelation of God than is possible to a divided church. New light will break from God's word the moment His people are one.

And this means a new point of view, a re-arrangement of values, a discovery of new truth, an exaltation of hitherto neglected truth and the passing of much that has been held for truth. No man can forecast to what point of view the Holy Spirit of unity will lead the people of God when they come to look into one another's eyes as full brothers in the one faith. It is premature, therefore, and idle to debate now the final basis of union.

* * *

The extent of the responsibility of the Disciples of Christ is to see to it that they are practicing Christian unity now, in their actual relations with Christian people. No such burden has been laid upon them as that of finding the ultimate basis for a united church.

As a people we have wasted too much time arguing our basis of unity. It is a simpler task that is committed to us. We, the Disciples of Christ, who first discovered our Lord praying for a united church—have we preached unity as he prayed for it, as if we had prayed with him for it?

Have the denominations around us caught the plaintive note in our speech? With which have we impressed them most—our intense desire for unity or our intense desire for the acceptance of our basis of unity?

The words "Our Plea" are almost a trade-mark of the Disciples of Christ. But do we possess the vocabulary of a plea? Has not the task of persuading the divided church to turn from its schisms been left to adventitious causes, such as the economic, the missionary, the social, the spirit of the age and such like, instead of being prophetically advocated with tears and prayers by a people who had knelt with their Lord in prayer for it?

Preachers of the Disciples! If the belligerent note in your preaching has been silenced give the plaintive note its place! Urge the plea—not a platform, nor a basis! Woo the children of God back home; leave to the Father the making of the house to hold us all!

And you will catch this plaintive note not by training in eloquence, but by tarrying much with Christ while he prays and you pray with him "that they all may be one."

Social Survey

BY ALVA W. TAYLOR

"That They May Be One"

"Denominationalism as a principle is stricken to death," says Canon Hensley Henson, an Anglican clergyman. In the great Edinburgh Missionary Conference there were few apologists for denominationalism and none for sectarianism. The declaration of the Commission on Co-operation and Unity that the question of union was a moral question was accepted without revision. That meant that division is wrong and that it is a question of righteousness that the churches must deal with in the movement to get together. In the New York conference ten years ago most of the missionaries pleaded for union and most of the leaders on the home field for comity only. In the Edinburgh conference last June the missionaries denounced division as a sin, and the home leaders talked of the great necessity of getting together through a synthesis of the truths that each held, on the basis of the truths that all now hold in common. Union is coming by way of the mission field. The churches at home are less concerned just in the measure that they are less concerned in saving the world both at home and abroad. The missionary is up against an overwhelming problem. In the face of it opinions, traditions and forms of government count for little and the battle with heathenism for everything. The infant churches on the mission field, like those in the days of primitive Christianity, are surrounded by a world of heathen practice and they need all the help united effort can give. At home we are afflicted with a social inertia that makes movements away from the old moorings difficult. Out on the mission field the workers are filled with a great purpose and think less of forms than of getting the work done. Thus while they hold fast to eternal principles, they are much more ready to adopt working expedients. They are doing what Dr. J. P. Jones, for forty years a Presbyterian missionary in India, pleads that we all do: "Place more emphasis on the idea of the kingdom of God." We will then, as he adds, "cease to attach so much importance to forms of church organization," and, he might have added, as indeed he does in many ways, to creeds, opinions, traditional attachments and all else that divides.

Doing the Will to Know the Doctrine

Missionaries find no difficulty in co-operating in those things that all the world recognizes to be matters of Christian charity and righteousness. In these things does the kingdom of God consist and for them was the church founded. It is only in the measure that Christendom has become more concerned over the means by which the world is to be saved than over the salvation of the world that it has neglected "righteousness, peace and joy in the Holy Spirit," while tithing the anise and cummin of ologies and polities. What we need is less zeal for our ism and more for the weal of men. The Mission to Lepers finds no difficulty in working through all missions. The Christian Literature Societies of China and India and the Religious Tract Society find a world of good to do through all missions. Union is easy for doing famine or flood or epidemic relief work. Union and simultaneous evangelism has been successful in most of the fields. United protests have been presented against such crying social evils as the treatment of woman, the opium traffic, slavery, the Congo atrocities, the liquor trade, and in China and Japan on behalf of peace and the patriotism of the native Christians and the gaining for them of all the rights of citizenship. To build two medical schools where one would give more proficient training or where but one is needed would scarce be thought of on the mission field. There is no denominationalism in easing pain or the cure of bodies. Why should there be in "binding up the broken hearted" or in the cure of souls? In Pekin five great societies support a superb medical school. In Nankin a like enterprise is being projected. The new university in West China projects another. In India and Japan medical training is given through government schools. Hospitals are supported by separate missions, but all are conducted without question as to sectarian affiliation. All hospitals are union in their work. In Iloilo the Baptists and Presbyterians have recently united in a joint support of one. All medical associations are union on the mission field just as they are at home, though they are denominationally supported. We are not divided on doing good, but good is co-operative by nature and we can never do the most of it until we are united.

Knowledge Leads the Way

Sectarianism thrives best on ignorance. Knowledge leads to unity on all matters that require co-operation. Denominationalism is nurtured in childhood and in parochial and denominational institutions. If it were not, it could not long survive. The truth leads to freedom from all dividing bonds. China is today facing western civilization with all its good and bad. She is founding a national school system. The missionaries are confronted with the task of injecting Christian morals into the new learning of the empire. Immediately they are led to rise above denominational lines in giving general instruction. Equipment and an able teaching force cannot be furnished otherwise. The new Nankin University is an illustration. At Chengtu, in West China, a great union university is being founded by the co-operation of all the great Boards working there, and none will be debarred from a part in its management if they desire to join later. In North China, the British Congregationalists and the American Presbyterians have a joint Educational Association which manages four colleges. In Korea, the colleges are union institutions. Madras University has followed the older universities of the United States in becoming practically independent and interdenominational. In Shantung, China, the American Presbyterians, English Baptists and the Anglicans co-operate in the support of three colleges and are to unite them into a university after the English plan. All over China the movement for a standardization of mission schools of all grades is progressing, and secretaries to superintend it will be supported jointly. In India, government regulations compel this standardization. Industrial schools are rarely denominational in their work, and union schools for the training of native workers and even of missionaries are successful. Union gives breadth and efficiency and enlarges the usefulness of the schools. In China, the tendency is strong for union schools with seminaries grouped about them where special training is demanded on religious lines. This will be the plan at Nankin, and it follows the method of the Disciples in this country in establishing seminaries at the state universities in Missouri, Oregon and California. The Yale college at Hankow, Canton Christian College, and the projected national university, to be supported through Oxford and Cambridge, are examples of the Christian effort to have a part in the renaissance of China on grounds broader than those of any denominational effort. There are union theological schools in Tokio, Amoy and Bangalore under joint auspices of communions as far apart as Presbyterians and Wesleyans, while Congregationalists find it easy to enter such arrangements.

Denominational Unities

It is very natural for the union sentiment to operate for the amalgamation of the sub-divisions in each of the great denominations. This is taking place to a remarkable degree on the mission field. The best known instance is that of the Presbyterian and Reformed bodies in Japan. Six different bodies have united and taken the name "Church of Christ in Japan." It is very interesting to note the fate of the creedal demands in this union. The older missionaries insisted on the adoption of the main clauses of all the creeds represented by the varying bodies. This was effected, but it was found that the native churches were having nothing to do with the creedal formulation, so it was withdrawn and the Apostles Creed adopted with a short introduction that defined some doctrinal scruples of the leaders. It is safe to say, however, that even this has little real function in the churches and that the Japanese mind goes instinctively, as all other native and unprejudiced minds do, straight to the New Testament alone. The eight Presbyterian bodies in China have divided the empire into six synods and are moving toward a national Presbyterian Church in China. The six synods are union bodies. It is to be hoped they will be led to adopt the same name as their brethren in Japan, but it will probably be called the Presbyterian Church of China. It will have a membership of 40,000. In India seven bodies of the synodical form of organiaztion have united into the Presbyterian Church of India, while the four working in Korea have formed an independent Presbyterian Church of Korea. The republican or synodical form of the presbyterial bodies seems to make geographical unity easy. With the Episcopal government it is more difficult, as each church has a fealty to preserve. In Japan they have a working union that will ultimately come to be a national church with episcopal government. Steps are being taken for the same in China. The Lutheran churches in Japan, China and India have taken steps looking toward union also. The more democratic churches of congregational government have done less. Doubtless it is because there is less to do. The conferences serve practically the same function with them that the more formal associations do for the more highly organized polities. In India, the Baptists are effecting a national union. In Madagascar, Congregationalists and all other independent churches found union easy, and at Amoy, China, the same has been done. Methodists have united all their missions in Japan and a native bishop presides over them. It was done over the objections of the home societies and conferences and approved when it was apparent that the Japanese and missionaries would unite anyhow. Steps for a like union have been taken in China.

Editorial Table Talk

The Ministry and the Awakened Church

A college conference on the ministry and the awakened church was held under the auspices of the four coöperating divinity schools of Chicago—Garrett, McCormick, Chicago Theological and the University—at the Reynolds Club of the University February 3 to 5. Addresses were made by Rev. A. W. Wishart, Professor E. C. Moore, of the Harvard Divinity School and by Doctors Shaw, Stone, Gunsaulus, Professors Hoben, Ward, Hill, Hayes, Beckwith and Henderson, Mr. Messer, of the Y. M. C. A., Mr. Harry A. Wheeler, of the Association of Commerce, and others. Students from many colleges in the Middle West were present and enjoyed the hospitality of the University for the three days of the conference.

Two Sundays a Week

Solving the problem of Sunday observance by demanding an additional Sunday each week for rest and recreation is the unique proposal of The Watchman (Boston). Man needs two days a week subtracted from workaday activity—one for physical rest and social intercourse, the other for the worship of God, the cultivation of the inner life, and the service of others. The editor maintains that the original intention of the Sabbath day was rest, that of the Lord's day was worship and service. These two cannot be combined in one day. The article continues:

What Christians should do, instead of continuing the vain endeavor to induce the world to abandon the divinely ordained day of rest for the activities of the Christian Lord's Day, is to lend all their influence for the re-establishment of Saturday as a day of rest. It is already generally observed as a half-holiday, and there is a strong and growing tendency to make it a whole holiday. Several large corporations, like the Curtis Publishing company, the publishers of the Ladies' Home Journal, and we think, the National Cash Register Company of Dayton, O., give all their employes, except a few, to keep on necessary work, a full holiday every Saturday. It only needs the strong and definite approval of the Christian church, of the seventh day as a day for rest and recreation, to establish it definitely and generally as such a day.

The way would then be open for calling upon all to participate in the Lord's Day as a day for Christian worship and activity, a day to be devoted to attendance on public Christian worship, and a day for deeds of charity, fraternal helpfulness, and Christian love. We are not so sanguine as to imagine that all the people would at once accept the Christian meaning and use the First Day of the week, but we are confident that, if given Saturday as a day for rest and recreation, such multitudes would joyfully adopt the habits appropriate to the Christian Lord's Day that all the churches now built would be crowded to the doors with cheerful worshippers, the power of the church would be immeasurably increased, and the establishment of the kingdom of God on earth would soon be an accomplished fact.

Whether this sanguine prediction would come true or not, one thing is sure that the church could urge upon men and women the privileges of the Lord's day without that present persistent scruple that what these cribbed-up lives need most is fresh air and recreation.

Articles of Historic and Current Interest

The March number of the Century Magazine will interest all readers of The Christian Century. Two articles are especially appealing: That by Professor McGiffert dealing, in his Life of Luther, with the traffic in Indulgences which stirred the devout and passionate soul of Luther to deepest indignation. The theory of this traffic as held by the Roman church is explained, the campaign of Tetzel is described and compared in certain of its features to present day revivalism, the psychology of Luther contemplating the theory and practice of Indulgences is vividly and with keen insight set forth and the whole situation reconstructed and interpreted with rare literary power. The other article is by Professor E. A. Ross, the sociologist at the University of Wisconsin, on "Christianity in China." His social point of view brings into the light the very human aspects of the situation. He writes in deepest sympathy with Christianity, but without bias. Speaking of the lot of the Christian convert he says, "The break of the genuine convert with his past in China is far more abrupt than anything with which we are familiar. He turns his back on opium, gambling and unchastity, the besetting sins of his fellows. He abandons cheating, lying, backbiting, quarreling and filthy language, which are all too rife among the undisciplined common people. He shuns litigation, often the ruin of the villager. By withdrawing from the festivals in the ancestral hall and from the rites at the graves of his ancestors, he sunders himself from his clan and incurs persecution. Thus the converts become separatists, with the merits and defects of separatists. Cut off from the world and thrown on one another, they form a group apart, a body of Puritans that will one day be a precious nucleus of moral regeneration for China."

Women's Campaign Approaching Finish

That this continent-crossing campaign for enlisting Christian people in specific work can be "manned" by women as well as men, is becoming more assured each day. Mrs. Helen Barrett Montgomery started in October from Pacific coast cities to gather the women of the great centers of the country into a closer unity for mission work. She is now in the state of New York, having passed through Chicago, as all our readers know, in December. With the Woman's Jubilee as the organizing sentiment in her meetings, she has been enlisting thousands of Christian women in missionary work and deepening the consecration of those already committed to it. Large companies of women have greeted her and her companion travelers in all the cities. The meeting in Detroit seems to have stirred the city to its heart. In Cleveland 2,250 sat down to luncheon together. Washington, D. C., opened with a consecration service with 2,000 present, followed by parlor meetings, children's meetings, a meeting of 400 nurses from the hospitals, a meeting of the Congressional Woman's Club and a reception at the White House, the President and Mrs. Taft receiving. The offerings in money thus far are over a half-million dollars. It is expected that this Jubilee fund will reach a full million before the campaign closes. Preparations for a climacteric celebration in New York City are now going on. Mrs. William Bayard Craig, wife of the minister of the Lenox Avenue Union Church of Disciples, is taking active leadership in the plans.

All Around Exchange of Pulpits

The one hundred and one Presbyterian ministers of Chicago presbytery exchanged pulpits on a recent Sunday. The formal purpose of this all-around shift was that a letter prepared by the presbytery might be the more impressively read to the congregations of all the churches. The visiting minister bore the character of an ambassador in a way it was felt the home pastor could not assume. A paragraph of the letter reads as follows:

We feel deepest satisfaction that our beloved church stands in the forefront of all those who are looking over and beyond denominational lines to the larger interests of the kingdom and are seeking to wisely and intelligently foster and encourage all interdenominational activities, which have for their end the overthrow of evil and the winning of our fellow men to a living personal faith in Jesus Christ our Lord. Not less but more of this brotherly love and brotherly coöperation do we crave for the days to come. Not less but more of large hearted benevolence and broad minded fellowship do we hope to witness in the church of our choice—a church which can only be true to her traditions as she exemplifies the spirit of "unity in essentials, liberty in non-essentials—in all things charity."

The presbytery urged the importance of caring for the sources of spiritual life and progress—the quiet hour with God, the family altar, grace at the table, the church prayer-meeting, the public worship of God and the religious observance of the Lord's day. The reading of the letter was followed by the visiting minister's sermon. The influence of this striking device was thoroughly wholesome and it is likely to become an annual practice.

Methodists Frankly Criticise Revival

It is somewhat startling to find a Methodist newspaper or Methodist pastors suggesting a criticism of revivalistic enterprises of any sort. The Methodist church is so committed to the revival method by tradition and temperament that incipient criticisms of a particular meeting are usually smothered by the faith that somehow the objectionable features will be providentially over-ruled for good. This attitude is not wholly unworthy of admiration. But when The Northwestern Christian Advocate entertains doubts of sufficient strength to prompt it to send an inquiry to every Chicago Methodist pastor asking each to tell what results the recent Chapman-Alexander meetings brought to his church, his community and the city as a whole, and when these pastors frankly state that, for the most part, the results are negligible in their churches, it is time for some one to arise and ask if the $50,000 spent in this evangelistic campaign could not have been spent to better advantage for the kingdom of God. Forty Methodist pastors responded to the Northwestern's questionaire. Their replies are summarized as follows:

ADDITIONS TO MEMBERSHIP.

Twenty-two report "none"; one reports ninety; one reports forty; one reports thirty-six; one reports thirty; one reports twenty-one; one reports twenty; and the remaining twelve show lesser numbers aggregating thirty-four. Total for forty churches, 271.

ADDITIONS TO SUNDAY-SCHOOL.

Thirty-five report "none"; one reports six; one "cannot tell"; one has "largest [attendance] in the history of the school"; one "cannot accommodate any more"; one, "some increase."

ATTENDANCE UPON MORNING SERVICE.

Thirty-six report "no increase"; one reports an increase; one, "the congregation fills the house"; two, "slight increase."

ATTENDANCE UPON EVENING WORSHIP.

Thirty-eight report "no increase"; one reports "some increase"; one reports, "best we have had."

ATTENDANCE UPON MIDWEEK PRAYER MEETING.

Thirty-five report "no increase"; two report "better attendance"; two report "some increase"; one reports "gratifying increase."

INCREASED RELIGIOUS INTEREST IN CHURCH AND COMMUNITY.

Twenty-one report no change; thirteen report "slight increase"; five report "marked increase"; one reports the influence to have been less than favorable.

A general criticism is that while the attendance at group and tabernacle meetings was large, there were relatively few of the unconverted present. One pastor says that while "the meetings were profitable, they did not reach the class it was hoped they would." Another reports that at the meetings he attended when those who professed religion were asked to stand up, "nearly everyone in the house rose." Still another says that "the people were not stirred by the meeting and Christians attended for the most part from a sense of duty."

The unfavorable opinions expressed are so numerous and so revealing that we cannot do better than to quote their gist as the Northwestern presents it:

"The net result was the scattering of our evening audience, the breaking of the prayer meeting habit on the part of some, and the discouragement of the people as to the advisability or possibility of revival meetings. From our standpoint the meetings were most unfortunate." "I have been unable to see that the meetings have had any noticeable effect upon our church or vicinity, though I do not mean by this to discredit the meetings." "My church received but little benefit from them." "My experience in the city is that these big meetings are of no benefit directly to any church. They create an atmosphere for a little while and that vanishes with the evangelist." "Our church was in a group meeting, but our people were not generally interested, and bore the work rather as a burden. So far as our church was concerned the meetings seemed to interrupt rather than help us." "The meetings seemed all right, but did not get below the surface. I think they played to the press too much." "We are not as well off either in attendance at the services on Sunday or at prayer meeting as we were before the meetings began. It will take us some weeks to get back to normal again and much hard work." "The Gipsy Smith meetings of a year ago, although three times the distance from us and attended by only a very few of our people, yielded far greater results. There seems to be a reason." "Three churches united with ours, and I have talked with each pastor. They all express themselves as greatly disappointed that so little was accomplished." "The meetings of our group had neither dignity nor power enough to attract those who were nearer than we; hence they did not affect us." "They were no benefit to my church, nor can I see that they were any benefit to the community. Giving up our Sunday evening services for a month has almost depleted our Sunday evening congregations. The people have become more confirmed in their opposition to revivals, and there is not any more interest in religion now than before the meetings." "It is doubtful whether this community derived from the meetings any profit worthy of note." "The preaching and singing seemed right; but the work was not thorough enough; the method of card-signing does not touch the spot nor help people." "I think we had a perfect machine, but not much real power. The meetings failed to touch the man outside the church and also failed to move the church attendant to a decision for Christ.' '

It is becoming clearer and more clear as new leaders and novel methods are "tried out" in this great city that the methods of mass evangelism are totally inadequate to meet the complex situation. Torrey, Gipsy Smith, Chapman—for three consecutive seasons these leaders have in turn inspired and disappointed the hopes of Chicago churches that this city might be stirred with new religious life. The Laymen's Evangelistic Council put virtually unlimited funds back of these enterprises. It has been our hope that these consecrated lay leaders, to whom and to whose organization everybody in Chicago church life defers, might be led by the consistent failure of traditional evangelism to work out a new line of attack reckoning with the absorbing community and social problems as well as that of individual salvation. It is in this direction, we believe, that their highest service may be rendered.

Concerning An Unpublished Editorial

Some good news that reached The Christian Century office just as we were making ready for the press last week spoiled an editorial which had been painfully composed for the most prominent space in the paper.

We say "painfully," for the article dealt with a scandal, a scandal that, it seemed to the editors, should be frankly confessed in the public print to the end that it might be removed, if possible, and intelligent plans made to effectively preclude its recurrence. The whole sorry matter was about the Disciples' neglected obligation to the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America.

This organization is the meeting point for all the evangelical bodies of Christians in the land—representing perhaps twenty million people. It is the biggest achievement in the direction of Christian unity in modern times. It has been in existence nearly three years. It has more than fulfilled the promises and hopes of its pioneer promoters. The expenses of doing its work are apportioned among the constituent denominations on the basis of numerical strength and amount to about one-tenth of a cent per year for each church member.

For the Disciples, on the basis of 1,250,000 members, this would amount to $1,250. During 1909 the Disciples paid $141.75. During 1910, $183.08. In 1910 every constituent body in the Federal Council paid its entire apportionment excepting the Disciples and the Colored Baptists! That was the scandal.

Our unpublished editorial recited the facts and made an appeal to the brotherhood to remove the scandal by sending at once contributions of money to this office which we would account for and forward to the executive office. As an inspiration, we announced a gift by Mr. R. A. Long of $267, one by the Chicago Christian Business Men's Association of $100, and a personal pledge of $25.

Then came a letter from Dr. J. H. Garrison of St. Louis, saying that he had been conducting a correspondence campaign among the church's leaders and had received so much of the amount needed to balance the account of 1910 that he felt sure of the remainder. And so our readers will not see that editorial.

But such facts as are in the possession of the few should not be kept hidden from the larger brotherhood. No matter how humbling it may be in the eyes of our Christian neighbors, it is less so than a repetition of our delinquency will be.

No utterance of the Commission of the Disciples' Council on Christian Union will be even listened to by the Christian world if we ignore our duty toward the Federation movement. That the Commission itself recognizes this was evidenced by its unwillingness, at its meeting in St. Louis recently, to formulate and publish an overture on Christian unity until this Federation scandal was removed.

The Commission showed clear discernment when it took the four drafts of such an overture, submitted by as many members for approval, and voted to publish them as tracts to circulate among the Disciples! In its embarrassment it could not do otherwise.

It is perfectly clear, of course, to those who know the heart of the Disciples of Christ that their delinquency in this matter does not for a moment measure their interest in the Federation enterprise. They simply do not have any mechanism for attending to this sort of thing, that is all there is to it. Manifestly no missionary society could appropriate the needed amount from its funds.

Unhappily the Council on Christian Union was started off at Topeka last fall without any provision being made for funds except for publication purposes.

This incident will do good in the long run if it calls attention again to the Disciples' great need of an organization, properly constituted, through which the brotherhood can exercise its will in the multitude of opportunities and obligations constantly arising.

Meanwhile we have no doubt Dr. Garrison will be glad to receive additional gifts. If the fund for 1910 is complete, these gifts will apply on the 1911 account now due.

Some Pertinent Inquiries

(Concluded from last week.)

11. Ought we to appeal to members of other churches to come out from among them and unite with us?

Not unless the churches with which they are affiliated are so unfaithful to the Christian ideal that they have ceased to be worthy of the Christian name. Proselyting is a hindrance rather than a help to the realization of our ideals in any community. It is unfraternal, disingenuous and sure to provoke the retaliation it deserves. At the same time we should always welcome those who upon their own conviction of Christian duty, and especially the duty of promoting Christian unity, come to us with the feeeling that their testimony can be more emphatic and their labors more abundant in our churches than elsewhere. We have always to remember, however, that Christian unity can only prevail at last as the membership of all the churches is pervaded by a sense of obligation to realize it, and a desire to bear witness to its value and urgency.

12. If not, ought we to secretly hope they will, and rejoice when they do?

This is sufficiently answered in the previous statement.

13. Does our plea for union mean the influencing of denominationalists to forsake their churches and unite with our people?

In some instances this will be the results of our efforts, but it is not the means by which Christian unity will ultimately come about. The realization of that hope lies not in the consolidation of all people into one church, made up of those who have forsaken the other churches, but rather in the gradual approach and unification of the churches themselves.

14. If not, then is our main effort and hope to so influence the denominations as such that they will gradually and eventually restore Christian union by reforming themselves, or uniting with our movement as a body?

As already indicated, Christian unity will come about through the gradual integration of those religious bodies nearest to each other. When the spirit of union pervades the church, it will form for itself its own body, which will be none of those now in existence. The Disciples of Christ have no reason to expect that the Christian world will unite with them in an organizational sense, but they have every reason to hope that they may be a profoundly useful instrument in the hands of God for the accomplishment of that unity among the scattered forces of the Christian world to which our Savior directed, the thought of his disciples, and for which Paul labored.

15. Are not both these last named methods pursued by our people?

Undoubtedly many of our people are still hoping that the Christian world is going to unite with the Disciples. To this hope the very rapid growth of our churches during a period of unusual evangelistic success gave sanction. A study of more recent statistics, however, reveals the groundless character of such an interpretation of our future. And few of the more intelligent Disciples would now claim that this is to be the method by which unity will come to realization. Rather is it our task to bear insistent testimony by word, example and influence, so that we may be as truly the apostles of Christian unity wherever we are placed as were the Friends of peace, the Moravians of world-wide missions, or the Baptists of the apostolic ordinances.

16. Does the New Testament offer any hope to the unimmersed?

The New Testament does not discuss the question. It everywhere teaches that those who follow our Lord according to their best understanding of his will are his disciples and citizens of the kingdom of heaven. Any one whose life conforms to this ideal is included in the fellowship of the saints. The hope of the Gospel is the possession of all those who in the spirit of loyalty to Christ seek to accomplish his will in the world. They may disagree as to methods of operation, the character of ordinances, or the relative merits of different organizations, but in all things they will endeavor to realize in their lives and in the society about them the ideals of Jesus.

Our Debt to Lutheranism

The Lutherans of the United States increased from 1,231,072 in 1890 to 2,243,486 in 1910. This large increase is due to immigration. The presence of over two million persons calling themselves members of the Lutheran churches is a fact of importance to every citizen and especially to the citizen who is also a disciple of Jesus. In many ways our Lutheran fellow citizens have contributed to the better life of the nation. They have beautiful houses of worship, they delight in the order and dignity of the house of God, they are careful to instruct their children in religion, and they give of their means to send the gospel to those who are yet in ignorance of it.

The debt we owe to Lutheranism is a greater one, however, than a study of the influence of Lutheran fellow citizens upon our political and religious life can disclose. The larger part of this debt was contracted before there were Lutherans in America. To learn what our obligation is we must go back to the beginning of the Reformation and study the giant figure who was the incarnation of protest against religious formalism and tyranny. Martin Luther is the hero of Protestantism. No one church can lay exclusive claim to him. What he said and did the entire Protestant world reflects in its thought and practice. We have not discarded all his errors. And the truth he announced is still cherished among free men.

"A Christian man is the most free lord of all, and subject to none." "Every man is a free and fully competent judge of all those who will teach him, and is inwardly taught of God alone." "There now, let us each make a creed for himself." In words of this sort Luther asserted the liberty of a Christian man. That he did not always remember such sentiments has not changed the fact that he uttered them in all sincerity and that the world has never lost the ideal of Christian freedom. Luther put king and cobbler on a level. No power under the sun can impeach an honest man studying his Bible. All believers are priests unto God and may minister to those who need to learn of God. He says further: "I will preach, I will talk, I will write, but I will force and constrain no man with violence; for faith is by nature voluntary and uncompelled."

The doctrine of salvation by faith meant to Luther that no institution or priest should come between God and the human soul. "We must have absolutely no regard to human laws and ordinances, old tradition, usage, custom, and such like, whether instituted by pope, emperor, princes or bishop, even though half the world, or the whole world, have held to them, and even though they have been observed for a year or a thousand years. For the soul of a man is an eternal thing, above everything that is temporal; therefore it must be ruled and controlled by the eternal word. It is a shameful thing to rule the conscience with human law and long usage in place of God." Hence he concludes that a Christian community has not only the power but is under obligation to "avoid, flee from, depose, withdraw from the authority exercised by bishop, abbots, monasteries, foundations, and the like, such as now exist."

Luther was not the first to translate the Bible into German, but his version is so simple and vigorous that he may with truth be regarded as the man who gave Germany the Bible. The importance which he attached to the Bible is shown by the quotations given above. He believed that the mind of man was made for the truth of God and that the truth was contained in the Bible. He studied with care the writings of Paul. The epistle to the Galatians was an especial favorite with him. The place which Paul has had in the thought of Protestantism is due in no small measure to the interest of Luther in his writings. Even the misinterpretations of Paul are sometimes to be ascribed to Luther's influence. The reformer's emphasis on faith has led some to disparage good deeds. He himself said, "Good works do not make a man good, but a good man does good works. Bad works do not make a man bad, but a bad man does bad works. * * * We do not reject good works; nay, we embrace them and teach them in the highest degree. It is not on their own account that we condemn them, but on account of this impious addition to them, and the perverse notion of seeking justification by them."

The consistent disciple of Luther will respect his own experience. He will not profess to have a faith which he does not have. The creed he publicly accepts will be in a real sense his own creed. It will be the expression of his deepest convictions. He will refuse to conform unless his inner life demands conformity. His conduct will be marked by enthusiasm. In so far as the churches of the present demand the agreement of the outer with the inner, they are truly Protestant. They have seized upon the most significant aspect of Luther's teaching. [Midweek service, March 8. Matt. 7:15-29.] S. J.

A Little Journey to Lichfield

And Other Johnsonian Shrines

BY EDGAR DE WITT JONES

When one has been for ten years an admirer, and in a small way, a student of a celebrity, naturally enough he experiences some thrills when, for the first time, he visits the shrines made famous by his hero. Accordingly, when our train whistled for Lichfield, Staffordshire, England, and I knew I was soon to pass along the very streets over which the burly figure of Dr. Johnson had often bowled, I was conscious of an elation acutely felt but difficult to describe. Ten minutes later, the omnibus with our party of six was rattling into Market street, where we got our first glimpse of the statues of Johnson and Boswell. The former was erected in 1838, the latter in 1908 and both are a credit to the birthplace of a man whose name is interwoven forever with that of his biographer. We put up at the "George" hotel where Farquarson wrote his comedy, "The Beaux' Stratagem" and on our departure the next day, we felt ourselves in entire agreement with Boswell who stayed there in 1779 and wrote: "We found at the George as good accommodation as we could wish to have."

It was past six o'clock when after a hearty dinner we made a bee line for the Johnson birthplace. To our dismay we found the door locked and on it a notice informing us that the place closed at five o'clock. But whoever heard of such a notice stumping an American sightseer! We gained admittance easy enough and the good woman in charge permitted us to wander from room to room at our own sweet will and fancy.

The house is about three hundred years old and thanks to the vigilance of the Johnson loving Lichfielders most admirably well kept. Old Michael Johnson, father of Samuel, kept a bookshop in the room on the first floor to the right and one can readily imagine young Sam as an ungainly boy, browsing about the shelves.

The room immediately over the shop and facing Market street and St. Mary's Square, is the one in which Dr. Johnson was born. It is described as "the only room in the house which remains in the same state as when occupied by the Doctor's father." In this room one sees some interesting relics. The old scholar's breakfast table and chair, a china drinking cup from which, I suppose, he consumed gallons of tea; his snuffbox and much used cribbage board and a silver penholder given to him by Edmund Burke. There are many other relics, letters, manuscripts, and the like, but we could not linger long in that house. There were many other places to visit and the time was short. I was anxious to talk with a local authority on Johnson. "Who is he?" I inquired. There were several, I was told. First, there was an alderman, A. C. Lomax, a life-long student of the great doctor, but he was very old and infirm and one could not hope to have an interview with him. "And after him?" I asked. "Why, Councillor Raby, to be sure of th 'Tower House.'" He was quite as great an authority as Mr. Lomax and would be glad to see me. In company with my lawyer friend, of our party, we set out for "Tower House" where Mr. J. T. Raby, Justice of the Peace, Fellow of the Royal Institute of Journalists, and member of the Johnson Birthplace Committee, welcomed us ever so hospitably. There in his library for two blessed hours and a half we sat and listened to his pleasant flow of running comment on the old doctor.

Then he showed us some of his library treasures, first putting into my hands a copy of Goldsmith's Deserted Village (1786) and dedicated to the Earl of Charlemont. The copy has a cash value of ten pounds but I cannot imagine Mr. Raby parting with it for twice that sum. Next, I looked through a first edition of Johnson's smaller dictionary (1756, 2 volumes.) I examined this volume with no small show of interest and with reason. Two weeks before I had purchased in Mr. Hays' famous bookstore under the John Knox House, Edinburgh, a sixth edition of the large dictionary in two volumes from the library of Melville Whyte and bearing his book-plates. Mr. Raby also exhibited for us his splendid twelve volume set of Johnson's Complete Works (1816) edited by Chambers, and many other fascinating volumes, also prints and rare pamphlets. Nor was this all. Mr. Raby insisted that we must view Lichfield by moonlight and that he would point out some famous places which we, in our hurried tour, had missed. So after lighting his pipe and selecting a stout walking stick, he set out with us on one of the fairest of moonlit nights that Lichfield or any other place ever saw. Under the spell of those romantic moonbeams, we looked on the spot where Garrick lived for twenty years. We had no difficulty in reading the inscription of the wall tablet:

Rev. Edgar DeWitt Jones.

ON THIS SITE STOOD,
THE HOUSE OF DAVID GARRICK,
BORN 1716,
DIED 1779,
PULLED DOWN IN 1856.
EDUCATED AT LICHFIELD GRAMMAR SCHOOL, BURIED AT WESTMINSTER ABBEY.

We stood by Dame Oliver's school where Johnson was first taught to read. It was Dame Oliver who, when Samuel was starting for Oxford came to take leave of him, bringing with her a huge hunk of gingerbread as a parting gift. Mr. Raby's good strong cane pointed us out an old house once a popular inn, where the notorious Dick Turpin used to pay frequent court to one of his numerous lady-loves; likewise Stone House where Mrs. Castrell lived at the time of Johnson's and Boswell's visits in 1776. She, it will be recalled, was the wife of the Stratford clergyman who so ruthlessly cut down Shakespeare's mulberry tree because the coming of so many people to see it annoyed him.

We walked slowly around the great cathedral, one of the finest in England, and again Mr. Raby's good stick was put in service to point out the "Dean's Walk" where the unfortunate Major Andre once paid court to Miss Honora Sneyd, during her stay at the Dean's palace.

It was while we lingered in the vicinity of the great cathedral that glorious night, that the watchman made his round and we heard delightedly his measured cry: "Eleven o'clock, fine night and all's well." How romantically strange and far away, such a sound falls upon an American's ears!

Mr. Raby is a charming gentleman, and my lawyer friend and I will never forget that evening spent in his company. I brought away an autograph copy of the "Bi-Centenary of the Birth of Dr. Samuel Johnson," which he edited. It was midnight when we got back to the "George," where I found in the pocket of the overcoat I had left hanging on the hall rack, a handsome brass knocker fashioned into a bust of old Doctor Johnson and ornamented with scenes from his life. I appreciated greatly the souvenir, which I knew came from one of our party, nor could I help but note the fitness of the symbol for after all the dear old doctor was something of "a knocker" sure enough.

London added largely to our Johnsonian experiences. There my lawyer friend has a friend who is something of a connoisseur of books and pictures and china. And to shorten a long story he quite overwhelmed me by presenting me with a set of Johnson's complete works (12 vols. Edition of 1801). The next day that precious set was on its way ahead of me to good old Bloomington, Illinois.

Then, of course, we visited "Ye Olde Cheshire Cheese." What London visitor with even the slightest of literary bent does not? I am aware that doubt has been raised in some minds as to the Johnson traditions that cluster now so thickly about this famous old inn, but it would seem there is little ground for such suspicions. True, Boswell does not mention "Ye Cheshire," but it should be borne in mind that Boswell's acquaintance with the doctor began when the latter was an old man and after he had given up his house in Gough Square. There is a little volume published by the corporation that controls the inn entitled, "The Book of the Cheese," that quite clearly establishes the claim that the place was once just what tradition says—headquarters for the old scholar and his friends.

So we went to the "Cheese" for lunch, the six of us, comprising two young ladies—The School Teacher and The Librarian, and four men—The Lawyer, The Merchant, The Y. M. C. A. Secretary and The Parson. The "Johnsonian corner" was already occupied, but shortly our party got seats at the table in the "cozy corner" and not having time to order of the celebrated pudding, we asked for pancakes, coffee and cheese. The place is decidedly interesting and on the day we were there also decidedly "smelly."

While we were waiting for our order, The Parson bought a copy of "The Book of the Cheese," and suggested that each one contribute a verse of doggerel to the fly leaf.

At the time perhaps none of us was aware of how frequently this very thing was done by the old Cheshire Cheesites, but it was, and in later years a "Rhyme Club" used to meet there regularly. It was in the old Cheshire Cheese that a dispute once arose about who could make the quickest a good couplet. One said:

"I, Sylvester,
Kiss'd your sister."

The other's retort was:

"I, Ben Johnson,
Kiss'd your wife."

"But that's not a rhyme," said Sylvester
"No," said Johnson, "but it's true."

Quite unconscious of how faithfully we were following a precedent, the six of us contributed a verse amidst much good natured chaffing. It was voted by five to one that The Parson should start the verses so he wrote:

"I do not think it is a sin,
To sit in Doctor Johnson's inn."

The Lawyer next tried his hand:

"I wonder would our parson pale,
If I should order musty ale."

Then The Merchant wrote:

"We find ourselves within a shrine,
Made unsanitary by time."

The School Teacher's turn was next:

"But as we round the table dined,
We all agreed we wouldn't mind."

Following this The Y. M. C. A. Secretary wrote:

"I wonder what my folks would say,
If they should find me here today."

Then The Librarian wrote down the couplet climacteric:

"Whene'er I think, 'Here sat Dickens,'
My heart, and pulse and liver quickens."

By this time the pancakes and coffee had come, but some of our party seemed to have lost their appetities, and unkind remarks and even slanderous things were said about the personal appearance of those pancakes. The cheese, however, was very fine, and despite the "smelly" atmosphere of the place, we thoroughly enjoyed the experience and ate with actual relish. Of course, we bought some of the blue-bordered plates and postcards galore! Who does not?

It was in the Cheshire Cheese that the party got their one big joke on The Parson, whom they had several times characterized as suffering with "Johnsonitis." It came about this way: The Parson had suggested that each one autograph the book referred to above, and the suggestion was straightway carried out. When suddenly there was uproarious laughter, for it was discovered that The Parson had written (quite unconsciously) his name, "Edgar DeWitt Johnson," whereupon The Lawyer ventured the remark that it was a case of "too much Johnson." This sally quite broke up our dinner party at Ye Olde Cheshire Cheese in Fleet street, London, and climaxed completely our visit to shrines Johnsonian.

Bloomington, Ill.

THE CHALLENGE OF HEATHENISM

BY W. REMFRY HUNT, F. R. G. S.

It is among the most extraordinary phenomena of history that heathenism has existed so long in the arena of the oldest civilizations, and that it has maintained so vigorous and defiant an opposition to the more modern and progressive conditions. The thoughtful student is at once challenged to the solution of the problem. The mere appeal to racial diagnosis, to environment, and to the science of heredity is not its clearest answer. The fact of heathenism is its own demonstration. It is sin in its essence as well as in its results.

In heathen lands one is continually surprised at the absence of common sense. Reason and intelligence seem to be set at nought by the tremendous contradictions and antagonisms which not only loom up in the pagan mind, but manifest themselves in all the ramifications of social, moral, and intellectual life. Heathenism presents both an anachronism and an enigma.

The night-lands of pagan gloom are full of the "will-o'-the-wisp" lights of heathen creation. The masses are haunted day and night by fears of demons who are thought to be ever on the alert to alight upon them. They believe that these spirits cause public calamities and are bent upon the ruin of mankind. A thousand millions of the human race are thus enslaved. It is as sad as it is full of pity. There is no such idea as a deity of love and compassion. This thought does not belong to heathen lands.

The Million Temples of Paganism, be they for fetish or devil-worship, represent countless idols of wood, stone, gold, silver, brass, and even pasteboard, and they represent the grossest and vilest ideas and passions. They are monsters of iniquity. Their hideous faces and brutal attitudes strik terror into the hearts of the enforced devottes. Never once is the worship of these grotesque images to be identified with any sense of love to them, but is ever associated with penances and offerings to appease incarnate hate and to be absolved from the terror of nameless punishment.

Christless lands are cheerless, hopeless, and homeless lands. Their Bethlehem is an inferno, their temples named as hells, and their deities born of demonology. There is no sparkle or blossom in child-life, nor is there any sanctity in motherhood. The greatest inequalities and injustices rest in all their systems upon woman. Polygamy and polyandry are common. There is no sense of pure refinement, and even natural affection is at an awful discount. Their songs are a wail and their music a dirge. Like their scentless violets, their lives, also, are without fragrance. Their residences are lit with a dim religious light, gleaming from the pagan shrines. Even brigands may be suppliants at the altars of their patron deities to aid them in their robberies. From earliest childhood the little ones are taught to keep the incense burning at the heathen family altars. Their religion enters into every phase of their social life, and the gods, as in ancient Greece and Rome, are employed in their markets. It is astounding when one thinks of the array of facts which might be amassed to prove the absolute and awful degradation to which the sons of men have descended in these fairest lands of the Orient.

Rev. W. Remfry Hunt.

Instead of a Christmastide, the Chinese celebrate the devil's birthday. The greatest and most popular temple in a city is usually dedicated to the "God of the Eastern Hell." It is their prima ecclesia. This is surely even in his dreams. The temple above described is the demon shrine to which rich and poor, official and student, mothers and their children, seem to be irresistibly allured. It is usually built on the best site of the city. The pedestrians who have lost their way are invariably directed via the "Eastern Hell Great Deity Temple." Its painted walls and its minarets stand out in sharp relief against the sky-line. Its doleful bells muffle out calls to prayer. Its practices stir up sated lusts, and the weird litanies of its chanted priests entice the soul to the worship of its falsities. Most of the priests, like the medicine-men, sorcerers, and witches, are illiterate, criminal, and often of ill repute.

Worse Than Dante Ever Saw

Some of the scenes in these temples are pathetic in the extreme. We have seen men and women linking ugly hooks into their eyelids, these hooks supporting incense urns while the fumes and heat scorched their bodies. Others, en route to the temples, will hook into their arms or cheeks lighted urns with sticks of lucky incense. The longer the distance traveled there is the grater merit. Racked with frenzy, and demon possessed, they indulge in mock sacrifices and pour out libations. Some of them, under self-imposed mental and physical torture, foam at the mouth and rage with the most vehement cursing. Others sit mute and dazed watching those who prostrate themselves with loud incantations upon the floors of the temples. It is believed that these services prevent blight, contagion, and disaster. In place of the thought of Divine commiseration, their thoughts gravitate to the sensual, selfish, and dark vagaries of demonolgy.

Heathen devotees may be devoted, but the are deluded and defeated worshipers. The volume and variety of their costly offerings are amazing. It is a significant fact that they do not believe in a religion that costs nothing. It is well for missions that the vicarious and sacrificial element seems to be inseparable from their faith. It is not without value that their perverted altars are sprinkled with atoning blood, and that their primitive worship is lit with strange fires. But it is marvelous that where faith is credulity, and where love is such an unknown quality, such wealth of devotion should be offered at the shrines of crystallized heathenism.

Where Hope is Despair,

It suggests the trenchant thought that when this same devotion is illuminated and sanctified by redeeming grace there will be some magnificent surprises brought to our vision by these Eastern converts, as they show to us the intensity of their consecration. With what heart-searching and humiliation have we watched the whole-hearted, generous, and sacrificial giving of the heathen to their deities! With a thrill of joy, too, we have witnessed this splendid grace of giving among the redeemed in China. With what warmth the missionary apostle speaks of "this grace also" abounding in the hearts and lives of those who were spoken of as "my joy and crown"! It is a beautiful eulogy on these newly-won converts, and it is a searching exhortation to us.

One of the saddest moments of my missionary experiences was on the occasion of my being asked by a heathen devotee the pertinent question: "In contrast with our humble worship of the 'pu-shas'—heathen deities—how much per cent per capita, do your enlightened and honorable countrymen give to their heavenly religions?" It brought the blush of shame to my face, and silenced me. It is stated that many of the heathen are assessed at twenty per cent of their incomes. In the light of all the joys, the culture, the temporal blessings, the spiritual light and life that are ours, what shall we reply to this burning question inspired in a heathen breast?

The Summons and Call.

It is nearly two millenniums since the church of Christ was organized under the Great Commission as its imperial charter. Its commission was universal and perpetual. As an endowed and endued institution, it should comply with the conditions of its charter, or cease to exist. These are its inexorable, irrevocable, and supreme alternatives. Only as the church is engaged in its mission can it rightfully claim the continued presence of its Founder and Lord. It is linked to its perpetual infusion of power, suffusion of heat, and diffusion of light, by the Holy Spirit, in the exact ratio of the sacrificial investment of its life. This is its fundamental principle.

Again, the native Press is a great formative factor. It is alive to the fact that China is in a great transition stage. It is advocating the sending out of "spiritual bloodhounds" to seek a new religion; and, moreover, it is highly favorable to the synthetic attitude taken by Japan in regard to what the future religion of the state shall be. The Chino-Japanese literature is liberating forces which it cannot control. Ideas are gaining ground among the millions of students, that a grand materialistic and powerful state can be maintained without God. Nothing can so effectively riddle this false situation with shafts of light, as a sound, safe, and scientific Christian literature.

Situation is Unique.

The situation is unique. It is the nick of time to work. Never was there greater need for teachers, evangelists, leaders. The crisis demands that the best-equipped and strongest men and women be sent into the foreign field. The late Professor Henry Drummond saw in China the greatest mission field in the the world he was a seer. He saw that nothing but the gospel could save China. No culture is too great, no genius too high, and no gifts in genuine consecration too simple, to devote to the peerless service of the mission field. For young men and women, who combine all the modern culture, the consecrated spirit and the Christlike life, who have the highest originality and power, and who will capitalize their personality into a passion for saving men, who will lift up Jesus, though they themselves be lifted upon a cross, who have the enduement in the blessed gifts and power of the Holy Spirit in their lives—to such there is a career in the foreign mission field, at least as great and as rational as there is at home.

In the light of these truths it should behoove the church to see to it that in the fervid atmosphere of that master-passion for the unsaved heathen—the compassion of the Lord Jesus Christ—that its seed is scattered where it will germinate into life and beauty. Only as we give are we enriched and enlarged. In the eighth and ninth chapters of 2 Corinthians the apostle emphasizes the fellowship of ministering to the saints. Although the apostle is dealing with "an episode of his day," he is also calling attention to and emphasizing principles that are eternal and applicable to all places and to all times. The liberality of the Macedonians was commended as the proof of their love and the pledge of their discipleship. The explanation of the Divine secret was: "They first gave their own selves to the Lord." Afterwards it was a perfectly natural thing that they gave of their substance to the apostles (the missionaries) by the will of God.

"The rudiments of empire here,
Are plastic yet and warm;
The chaos of a mighty world
Is rounding into form."

Wuhu, China.

A HOUSE OF SORROW

The Cook County Hospital In Chicago.

BY FRANCES KINGDON.

Over on the west side of the city there stands a large red brick building which holds more suffering and misery than any other place in Chicago. Every hour an ambulance drives up to one of its side entrances and two policemen carry in on a stretcher some poor, maimed and broken body. Now "Jim O'Connor," who had a dizzy spell while working on a skyscraper and fell over and broke his back; now "Tony Guiseppo," who, chasing a boy for stealing newspapers off his stand, got so mixed up under a street car that both his legs were cut off; now old "Colonel Whitehouse," venerable boot black in a down town office building, who awoke one morning with pneumonia; now "Mary Johnson," who could not scrub floors another day, "with the cancer that bad;" now young "Tillie Larsen," who got blood poisoning in a canning factory; now a janitor's wife who had broken her hip while carrying garbage pails up and down icy back porches for her husband. All these are brought to the emergency entrance, but there are others who come to another door—little children, led or carried by a relative or an officer of the law, some with spinal trouble, rickets, or other diseases too frightful to be mentioned, whose wan faces and shrunken forms speak of a world that has not been gentle or kind to them. Then later, after twilight, there will come, with head tossed boldly or drooping and ashamed, "Hulda Peterson," "Maggie McGuire," and "Lizzie Smith," who have been turned out on the streets by some man or woman and who have no place to await their coming pain but this big red building.

Stands Between Death and the City Streets.

It is the County Hospital, and there are at present 1,700 sick paupers there. Creatures without any money, helpless, suffering and diseased, who have cast themselves upon the only refuge a great city offers them, a place where they can be taken care of and which will stand between them and death on the streets. Each day eighty new patients are admitted, and one hundred applicants turned away. Why turned away? "Because," says one of the officials, "they are not really sick but are suffering from that complaint of the idle rich, and only think they are sick, or because they are impostors, who want to get in and loaf and have three square meals a day." But what if they are really sick? and the question worries you, as you look around the waiting room where these hundred applicants are waiting on the benches for their medical examination. Why shouldn't they be diseased? Have not some of them slept out on the streets for many nights; have not others been breathing foul air for years in their slum homes, and the rest never known a day when they had enough to eat? They have not the appearance of lazy, well fed tramps but look as if they were sick, body and soul.

Later, when you walk through one medical ward after another and read on almost every chart hanging at the foot of each patient's bed the statement, "brought in an ambulance," or "carried in on a stretcher," you realize that a pauper must be very sick, indeed, to be admitted to this hospital, and you notice also that he must continue very ill to remain there, as so many charts record the fact that the patient is "delirious," "very restless," "out of head," "much fever," etc., and then you wonder how he can be otherwise when there are 130 sick people in the same ward with him. Of course, if he is dangerously sick and "may die," as the interne says, he can be removed to a "private" room, where he can have the privilege of passing away "quietly," with six other dying patients. If it happens that all the beds in the wards are taken, besides those in the "private" rooms, he may have to die on a cot in a dirty attic, a sort of store room or lumber room up under the eaves of the building, or have to breathe his last on a cot out in one of the cold bleak corridors, where the noise from other floors, the elevators and countless passing footsteps silence the death rattle in his throat. Sometimes, in summer, when two or three dozen cases of heat prostration are carried into the hospital every day, the patient goes through the death agony alone, in a corner on the floor of one of the corridors, with not a pillow under his head or a blanket over him—just a pauper, a mere bundle of rags, which any one passing by might step on before he is carried off to the morgue.

Get Used to Death.

Speaking of death, and they do die in the County Hospital, from ten to fifteen every day, it does not seem to depress the other patients, because, as an attendant says, "they get used to it." "We send a policeman to notify the patient's family when he is dying or dead and they can take care of the body afterward or we will bury it in the "Potter's Field." This sounds humane, but the visitor waiting in the office of the building may be surprised to hear the following conversation on the telephone: "William Dennis?" "Wait a minute, I'll see how he is." Walks over to the alphabetical list of patients with their ward number hanging on the wall and returning says, "Yes, he is gone." "Well, I can't help it if you are his wife. If you don't believe me you can come over and see for yourself. He's gone." "Why, gone to the morgue, died last night."

When you ask the internes about these "three square meals a day" at the County Hospital, they will make a wry face and sometimes say, "Don't ask me about the food at this place. It's awful. Bad enough even for a pauper who has lived off scraps and chuck wagons. The kitchens are pretty dirty places, and we can't afford to pay the cooks enough to make them get up a decent meal, so it's pretty hard to handle the diet question." Rather a startling statement, especially when you walk through the tuberculosis wards and are told by some one that there isn't any hope for any of the patients in the ward, all being in the last stages of the disease, although "their lives are being prolonged by good nourishing food."

Over the closed doors of Ward 20 and Ward 22 there hangs at present a great white sheet, saturated with the strongest of disinfectants and when you ask the inevitable "Why," the answer is grim and brief, "Small-pox. Three cases developed here; 240 men quarantined; two doctors in attendance; no nurses." When you shrink back, frightened at such close proximity to this horror, and inquire about other contagious diseases it does not make you feel better to be told how many contagious diseases develop in the hospital, and that the wing set aside for them is so crowded that many have to be sent to Dunning or an overflow building out on the Drainage Canal.

After you have walked through the County Hospital for an hour you begin to feel very unhappy. In the children's ward you find little tots wearing night clothes that look as if they came out of the rag bag, and up in the "play room"—cruel travesty of word—a place the size of a small bed room, are little children, dressed in the rags they had on when they came, trying to amuse themselves with a game they could make out of the bed covers. Up in the maternity ward, dirty and cheerless, and you are sure, unsanitary, you find white faced women resting on beds that make you shudder and say things about the laundry. The attendant admits that the conditions in this ward are the worst in the hospital, "far from satisfactory," he says, "but we have never lost a patient here in eight years." Then you turn and gaze blankly at the long shelf of babies fastened to the wall, eighty born every month, and sixty without a father; row after row of poor little mites, with only a gum label stuck on their leg to tell their identity, and at last you discover a lovely little child, older than any of the others. "Yes," says a nurse in the room, "she is five months old, but her mother died here and we have taken a fancy to her and don't want to give her up until she is adopted by a good family." Then you look closely at a very small baby and ask rather fearfully if it is going to live and the answer is, "No, it will probably die tonight; the mother died a few days ago."

The Visitors.

At the entrance door, as you are leaving the hospital, you see a queer throng of people who have been patiently waiting an hour for the time when visitors are admitted to see their friends. They have no flowers or plants in their arms, but are carrying bits of food to supplement those "three square meals a day," and when you remember the answer given you for some indignant remark made over conditions at the Hospital, which implied how much better off all the patients are there than in the squalor and dirt of their homes and how contented they are, you begin to talk to different ones in this crowd and then are told just what those sick ones you have left behind really think of the County Hospital. Strange to say, the two stories do not agree.

Riding home in the car you think very hard about that little sum of three million of dollars tucked away somewhere for the sick poor of your great city—the money which was voted by ballot last November to go toward "splendid hospital equipment," and stand between the penniless sick and their pain. Will it give the dying poor a comfortable quiet bed where they can make their peace with God alone? Will the fever-tossed patient have a better chance to fight his disease without so much unnecessary pain? Will feeble old people and weak convalescent young folks be given nourishing, tempting food so that they can more quickly gain the strength they need? Will the bodies of little suffering children be clothed in clean, sanitary night dresses, and afterwards when they have left their beds of pain will a big sunny play room, with all the toys that can bring color to their faces and happiness to their eyes, be furnished them? Will the babies, who are to be future citizens of a big city, be given a better, healthier start in life? Will their mothers, who, alas, are registered as "single," have the opportunity to come back to life and hope in clean, cheery surroundings? All these questions and more, you want to ask, but only time and a Board of Commissioners can answer them.

MISSION WORK IN MANILA

Eleventh Letter on Journey to Mission Stations.

BY SECRETARY F. M. RAINS.

We reached Manila, December 27. We had been at sea twenty days. It was a joy to take B. L. Kershner by the hand and to be so heartily welcomed to Manila. We went at once to our Mission House.

Let me tell you something about this Mission House. This is one of the busiest mission centers I have seen on this long trip. Things "are doing" here and no mistake. We bought it in 1907 for $12,500. Some changes and improvements have brought the total cost up to almost $15,000. A business man in Manila told me it is worth $25,000. It saves not less than $1,800 rent every year. It is in one of the best locations in the city—on Azcarraga Street, one of the best streets—and growing in popularity and importance. It will soon be what is known as a "park street," which will increase its value. Our missionaries made a "big hit" in getting hold of this property. They are to be commended. The lot is 100 feet by 156 feet. The first story of the building is stone. The second story is of hard, heavy wood, so heavy that it will not float, and so hard that you cannot drive a nail into it. It is enclosed by stone wall and iron fence. The building is one of the best I have ever seen. Everything about it is first-class. It was built by wealthy people for a great home, but financial reverses forced them to sell. If we had built it ourselves we could not have better suited our purpose.

Two Missionary Families.

Two missionary families live here, each having their own separate home. These are B. L. Kershner and Leslie Wolfe. Besides, a native evangelist and his family live in the Mission House, and twelve boys use part of it for a dormitory. Thirty people live in this building all the time. It is a Christian colony.

And this is not all. Note the following work conducted in this building. Services are held on the first floor, also on the second.

1. The Bible College is conducted here. Thirty young men are trained daily for evangelistic service. Some of these are now preaching. This is the special task of B. L. Kershner, who is most capable. He is especially fitted for this high service. He is a brother of F. D. Kershner, President of Milligan College, Tennessee.

2. A Primary School is also conducted by Miss Longan. She has not been on the field very long, but here she finds an important field for labor. Miss Longan is a granddaughter of the lamented G. W. Longan, so well known in Missouri.

3. The American Church holds its services in the Mission House. This is at 10:30 every Sunday morning. The number is not large, but loyal. They are from Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, Kansas and possibly some other states.

4. The American Sunday-school meets at 9:30 every Sunday morning. It is not large, but important.

5. There is a preaching service at 10:00 a. m. Sunday in English to the students.

6. A Sunday-school in Tagalog at 9:00 a. m. Sunday. This is growing and important—good music and lively interest.

7. There is an evangelistic service in Tagalog on the first floor, while the American Church is meeting on the second floor.

8. The native church meets at 6 o'clock in the evening for the communion service and regular preaching. This is a delightful service. The attendance is large—about 200 members in this congregation.

9. At five o'clock Sunday evening the largest Sunday-school of the day is held in Tagalog.

10. At eight o'clock in the evening an evangelistic service is conducted in English.

Four Churches in Manila.

We have four organized churches in Manila, and once each month they meet in the Mission House for a union communion service. At this service a missionary offering is taken for the local Tagalog Christian Missionary Society. The missionaries have nothing to do with this society except in an advisory way. This plan helps to self-support and self-management—two important items.

Do you know of more Christian activities conducted in any building in the world of similar size and cost? I do not. It is a lighthouse blazing out on the dark sea of humanity, day and night, seven full days in the week. Here many conferences are held, here numerous committees hold their sessions. There is not a more important missionary center than our own Mission House in all the Philippine Islands.

Have you kept up with our wonderful growth in this land? Only about ten years ago W. H. Hanna and H. P. Williams opened the gospel campaign. It was vigorous. We have had only a few missionaries from the first. There has been much to discourage and impede the work, and yet we have nearly 5,000 members. The growth under all the circumstances is simply marvelous. Last year, for example, there were more than one thousand baptisms. What field equals it even? What field in America, with all its well-organized churches, with its elegant church buildings, its strong preachers, large Sunday-schools and with light and knowledge pouring in from every side is even equal in the larger number won for our Lord? Remember, 5,000 members is as many as we had in the whole state of Kansas in 1880. It is more than we have in many of the states in the home-land. We can have 50,000 members here in ten years if we will help these brethren as they ought to be helped.

March Offering a Test.

The March Offering should reflect our faith in the power of the gospel. There have been few better examples of that power than we have before our eyes in this land.

One of the important elements of our success has been the large number of consecrated Filipino evangelists. The missionaries have been wise in their selection and training. I mention two whom I have met, as examples. Emiliano Quijano is twenty-five years of age. He is well educated, having the degree of B. A. from a Spanish college. He knows the Bible and our plea well. I am told that no other native preacher in the country is his equal in scholarship and general influence. He preaches for our First Church in Manila. He receives no salary. He delights to tell the old, old story. This good man is in the service of the government, in the Audit Department. He was baptized October 12, 1903. With $40 to $50 per month we could have him giving all his time to the work of the ministry. He ought to be employed. But where will the funds come from?

Another example: Simon Rivera was the first Tagalog baptized in Manila. H. P. Williams baptized him August 21, 1902. That is where Dewey sank the Spanish fleet. Rivera is a man of sterling character, thirty-one years of age, has a wife and two children, has baptized about 200, and more than any other Filipino evangelist. His salary is the modest sum of $15 per month. We have thirty-three such men in these islands and we must have many more.

Wonderful changes for good have been effected in this country since the American government took hold ten years ago. A few may be mentioned, as follows:

1. The lotteries have been closed. 2. The number of saloons have been reduced. 3. The opium traffic has been stopped. 4. Many new Protestant churches have been built. 5. American Bible Society, Y. M. C. A. and other such institutions have been established. 6. An educational system of high rank is being perfected. 7. Sanitary improvements are very great. 8. A law against games of chance has been passed. There is no more gambling or horse racing. 9. Now there are many more legal marriages. 10. The moral tone is improving every year and in every direction.

We are just leaving for Vigan and Laoag, about 240 miles north. Hope to reach Shanghai, China, February 1, and Tokyo, Japan, about March 1, and Bolenge, Africa, June 1, and Cincinnati, August 1.

F. M. RAINS, Secretary.

Manila, P. I., Jan. 3, 1911.

Dr. Aked

Likes the California Crowds—Gives Out An Interview.

Dr. Charles F. Aked, pastor of the Fifth Avenue Baptist Church, New York (the Rockefeller church), holds an especially interesting place in the Disciples' eyes for he began his ministry as a preacher among the Disciples of England with whom he was from youth identified. An interview recently given out has been widely commented upon in the daily press.

When the engagement was made with Dr. Aked to preach three Sundays for First Congregational Church, San Francisco, it was understood that he was dissatisfied with the situation in New York. After his first Sunday at the San Francisco Church—February 12, Dr. Aked sent a telegram to the New York correspondent of the Central News, London, in which he said, "The crowds, the enthusiasm and the spirit of the people are very exciting, and I find the prospects singularly attractive."

It now transpires that just before leaving New York, Dr. Aked gave to this representative of the Central News a statement which was not to be made public until after the beginning of his engagement in San Francisco. The statement follows:

Project Broken Down.

"The great project we had in hand has completely broken down. We had in mind something that would have given us one of the biggest churches in American Protestantism, perhaps in the Protestantism of the world. It was not until last Saturday that we realized the impossibility of this, and now we are just where we were and that is nowhere; and so far as I can see there is no outlet, and I fear very little hope. It had been arranged to build a new church on the present site, but that was against my judgment. For more than a year I argued persistently against it. In the end I yielded my judgment to theirs, or, rather, to speak more correctly, I agreed to act on their judgment, my own remained. That has been one of the weaknesses of my ministry here. I have felt that they knew and I did not know and I had to yield to their experience and knowledge.

"There has been much talk of my being asked to go back to England, but I have not been asked to go back. But I must candidly confess that my heart is in English movements and English religious papers appeal more to me than do American movements and American religious papers. English movement I understand, American movements I do not understand. In England I felt strong enough to dogmatize about this or that; I might be wrong, probably I often was, but at the same time I had convictions and even if I was wrong, I could give reasons for the faith that was in me and go ahead bravely and hopefully.

Not Asked Back to England.

"It is quite useless my friends writing to me and sympathetic persons in the English press writing paragraphs about my return. No church in England has made me an offer, probably they all suppose that I am settled here for the remainder of my natural life. Nearly four years ago it was reported that I had become an American citizen and I tried to correct that in a speech I made in Liverpool Town Hall. I have not become an American citizen."

(To a San Francisco reporter Dr. Aked explained that the reason he had not become an American citizen was because he had not been here long enough, "I took out my first papers," he added, "shortly after arriving in New York, and expect to complete the process of becoming naturalized when the legal time arrives.")

"I have made many friendships here which are infinitely precious to me. It is a question for me whether I can bring myself to accept the limitations of my present position for the sake of these friendships that are so dear and for the sake of the little good I can do in New York, or whether I shall have to break with these associations for the sake of some larger work elsewhere.

Salary Not a Question.

"The question of salary does not weigh with me. It is perfectly true that the church has just raised my salary to $12,000 from $10,000, but I would rather have a third or quarter of that salary as I used to have, and feel I was doing some good in the world, than have a big salary and feel that I am, compared with my English life, wasting my time.

"The trustees have understood from the first that I could not contemplate a permanent ministry under present conditions Now I do not see how present conditions are to be remedied and I have to sit down and consider whether I can accept present conditions for the remainder of my natural life, or whether I shall listen to proposals from some other city or some other country. I shall be away from New York for four weeks and during that time the matter will have my most earnest thought."

The Unification Committee

The committee on the unification of various missionary and philanthropic interests will meet at the Grand Hotel, Cincinnati, Ohio, at 1 o'clock p. m., March 7th. It will probably remain in session on March 8th. The committee extends a very cordial invitation to persons especially interested in its work and who may care to do so, to attend any of the sessions of its meeting, with the view of offering any suggestions they may care to present. To those who can not or do not care to attend the meetings, a cordial invitation is extended to communicate any suggestions they may wish to make bearing upon the committee's work in writing. All communications on the subject of the committee's work should be in the hands of the chairman or secretary of the committee by the 5th of March, or should be addressed to the chairman or secretary of the committee, in care of the Grand Hotel, Cincinnati, not later than March 7th.

A. B. PHILPUTT, Chairman.

J. H. MOHORTER, Secretary.

How I Got Home From Betang

By Mrs. A. L. Shelton.

Tell you how I got home from Batang? Well I can, but I don't want to; I'm home now, resting and playing and just looking at these beautiful, clean American things, at the pretty churches and listening to the music that makes the tears come whenever I hear it. It seems to me it would be easy to be good in America.

We left Batang, October 8th. As I couldn't walk I was carried down stairs and put into the sedan chair (I fell down a mountain gully with a horse on top of my leg and it smashed a bit—I mean my leg, not the horse.) Dr. Shelton's was draped around with a few red silk strips, my chair was likewise decorated, fire crackers were fired and we were off. Many of the natives went a piece outside the city with us. But the best sight was a long line of Dr. Shelton's opium patients standing in a row giving him the Chinese goodbye. Then his Tibetan teacher, with tears in his eyes, telling him to "go slowly."

It was hardest to leave Mrs. Ogden and the dear little babies. We were off on the long journey to America. I couldn't walk one step, so every night I was carried on a man's back into the inns, and every morning carried out and put in the chair for the day. Most days the traveling was pleasant, though we had one snow storm, rain a day or so, and strong wind one day, so strong I thought I would be blown off the mountain road, but I wasn't. We met caravan after caravan of loaded yak and I was always sure one of their big horns would stick into my chair and rip it to pieces, but perhaps they were as afraid of me as I was of them.

I don't know how to tell you of our going away. It was sad and joyful, too. It was hard to leave Mr. and Mrs. Ogden and the children, but it was good to know that so many Tibetans were friends and were sorrowful to see us leave. The women ran along by the chair giving me milk to drink in a bowl, with bits of butter on the edges, and we all cried. Perhaps they are dirty and I wouldn't have cared so much a year or two ago, but sometimes a greater love than you have known before grasps you and you love more abundantly, and we love them even more than they love us, though I think they felt the love, as little children feel it. Many of the women took off their rings and gave to me as a parting gift, great to them, but of how much more value to me, showing the love they felt. It was much in money from people so very poor as they. I don't know the way to tell you how we felt. It was not ourselves that inspired it, but He whom we serve, within us, that made us feel so close to them. It was much to us that the close of our first term of service was like this. It isn't easy to live in that land, no, but there are compensations, and you feel that you want to return, for the Master seems nearer over there than here. Go, why don't you go? You can travel where my babies have been. No money! Faith and prayers would bring more than we could use.

We have been very happy since coming home, meeting our friends once more, but oh, so grieved to hear of the death of Mr. Ogden's baby boy. Are you praying for them over there now? Their hearts are very sad and we wish we might have been with them at such a time. We are safely home. We feel that we have been marvelously protected on all the long journey and sent home for a purpose.

Mr. Murayama, Miss Oldham's evangelist, in Tokyo, Japan, was called to Kobe to speak at a Sunday-school convention. He spoke to more than eight hundred children and teachers. He is one of the very few who has been enthusiastic over Sunday-school work from the beginning of his ministry and has helped show others the great need of it.

Rainier of the Last Frontier

BY
JOHN MARVIN DEAN
AUTHOR OF
"THE PROMOTION, ETC."

Copyright 1910, By John Marvin Dean

CHAPTER XV. (Continued.)

"But Bino's pitching had put some ginger into our fellows and while I was looking down between my toes I heard a crack and saw the ball going into the crowd in right field while Happy Hogan of B. Company of our regiment, who was playing center-field for Iloilo, went all around the circuit for a home-run. It was all we got that inning, but it looked a lot better than a goose-egg, and I skinned the cat so often that I lost my wad. I didn't know it was gone until after the game."

"Bino held those Molo sluggers down in their half of the third. They got a man on second but they couldn't get him home. Iloilo got another run in their half and the 'lectricity began to flow around amongst us dough boys pretty lively."

"Well, Bino kept on holding 'em they just couldn't solve him. Along about the fifth inning a fellow back of me say, "That pitcher working for Iloilo looks a heap like a fellow that use to put 'em over for Galveston in the Southern League. Seems to me his name was Garrison, wasn't it? I seen him pitch against New Orleans in '96."

When he says that I looked old Bino over, every move, like a hawk, an' I could see pretty soon that he had all the ear marks of a 'prefesh.' You know how to tell 'em, Charley. Theres' a sort of I-feel-at-home-heer action about those fellows that's worked in the big leagues that gives 'em away every time.

'Pipe that off to the crowd,' says I to the fellow behind me, and pretty soon it had spread like wild fire that Long Rod Garrison, who pitched Galveston to the pennant just before the war, was on the mound for Iloilo. Break the news to mother; how it took the starch out of those artillery boys.

"The next inning their pitcher took a balloon ascension an' when he got back to earth the score stood eight to seven and there was one long howl from us infantry that raised the fear prickles on the 'Khakiaks' for five square miles. But there the game stuck from the sixth to the ninth and when the Molo batters came up for their last bat we didn't take our eyes off the play long enough to bite a plug. Their first man up, Sweeney, got life on the first pass old Bino had given, but that Y. M. C. A. fellow caught him at second with a snap throw that had as flat a trajectory as my old brown Krag-Jorgenson.

That Rainier guy can play some ball, all right. Well, that was one down. Bino struck the next man out. But up comes Miller and pastes one on the nose for two bags.

We held our breath when the next fellow connected with a low ball and lifted it out into left center.

It was a sky scraper all right but Hogan got under it and clamped on to it with a grin that I could see myself 'way up by first base. In raced our fellows and out came Molo.

I looked at our batting order and I saw the next three men were the poorest we had. They were the bottom of the batting order. It seemed an awful thing to think of that eight to seven score and those weak stickers up.

One run would tie it up an' two would win it. But I knew it was no use to hope, Charley, with those three coming to bat.

The first was Baker. When he stepped to the plate there was a silence you could cut with a knife. I could see by the way he twitched his leg that he was too scared to do anything. That Molo pitcher seen it, too, and curved 'em right over the plate while Baker slapped the air with his bat three times and then sneaked out of the limelight.

Collins of A. Company of the Sixty-first come next. He's a poor hitter but a nervy little guy and he pretty near worked that Molo pitcher for a pass. But Kilroy called him out on strikes and waved him to the bench after Baker. Us Iloilo rooters forgot all about Kilroy's being an officer an' we roasted him for fair. I reckon Collins was out, all right. But we wanted that game, an' wanted it bad.

I could even see the old colonel up in the stand shaking his fist at Kilroy while those lady nurses hissed like a lot of geese. But the artillery bunch along the third base line went dippy by the dozen."

"We had just one chance left and that was Eyetalian George. You remember him, Charley He ust to be in the Q. M. D. and got a transfer to L of the Seventh. He was up next an' I knew he couldn't hit a flock of barns with a repeating shot gun. I had played against him more than once. I just let out a groan when I seen him walk up to the plate. But, Charley-old-horse, the unexpected happens once in a while, little Georgie dropped a bunt as neat as a needle and dusted to first base like a Congressman drawing his first salary check. Their catcher got the ball, straightened himself up, and lammed her like a bullet to first base. But George had beat it by the flip of a kodak-shutter an' rooted on the bag with the whole population of Iloilo calling him pet names an' silver dollars raining all over him. Oh, the buckets of joy for me! There was a chance left to tie or win. I craned my neck out to see who was coming next. It was our catcher, Rainier, the Y. M. C. A. man. What's he been doing with the willow? asks I of Fatty Sesson who had been checking up the hits. Fatty looked at his paper and says, "Up three times, walked once, fanned once, and flew out to center.'"

"It looked mighty dubious as Rainier came up and faced their pitcher. He hadn't made a hit yet but still there was something about the way he planted himself at the plate that gave me a little speck of hope. He looked like a hard man to whiff an' the crowd give him a generous hand and yelled, 'What's the matter with the Sky Pilot? He's all right!' Well, he grinned an' let the first one go by. 'Strike one' yells Kilroy, aan' the red-trimmings over by third fairly writhed with derision. But the next ball, Charley, was a hoss of another color. That Molo pitcher held it up to his face so long I reckon it must have been a spitter. I saw Rainier step out to meet her before she 'broke' and then I saw him swing. It was a nice new ball, a nice new ball. An' it made a nice white streak clean over second base. As clean a single, old chum, as ever I've seen. When the smoke cleared away there was Eyetalian George roosting on third and Rainier dusting his pants off with his cap on first. Yell! Did we yell? Don't ask me. I beat any solo-screecher you ever heard in a high-toned church an' so did everybody else in the regiment. And then when we all knew we couldn't howl another note up comes old Bino himself to bat and then we soared and soared and threw away our hats and did circus stunts by wholesale."

"But the Molo pitcher was a wise guy. He jest waited till our breath was spent an' a dead silence had settled down on us again. The game was all in old Bino's hands and he knew it. I've seen Bino's old phiz many a time when he was hanging around town. We all liked the old booze fighter but we didn't none of us think of calling him handsome. Not much. But, Charley, when Bino was standing there at the plate and looking out under his visor at that Molo pitcher there was something in his face that gave me a start.

He looked like a different man, somehow. His mouth was as firm as old Cap. Bridgman's, his eyes stared out like he knew he was as good as any galoot on the field, an' as different from his old caved-in shuffle as you can imagine. Charley, I knew by the way he looked that Bino was going to hit that next ball. And he knew it, too. Now, remember, I was out near first base. I saw the ball shoot out of the pitcher's hand and flash toward Bino. I saw him take a terrific swing and then I heard sweet music the only kind of a sound that fits into the ninth inning of a ball game with two men on, two gone and a hit needed to win, the music of the crack of hardwood against horsehide that meant that old Bino the Bottle Buster, had connected safely.

Go? where did the ball go? did you ask, Charley? Ask me something easy. That ball hasn't come back yet. It was on the rise when it cleared Lefty Miller's head out in center field an' the last I saw of it was when it bounded off the corrugated iron on the roof of the corral.

"As soon as Bino, hit the pellet he legged it for first while Eyetalian George an' Rainier sizzled in over the home plate an' tucked the game away for Iloilo. I was at the first bag when Bino got there, an' he no sooner struck his spikes into the canvass than we lifted him up an' began the obsequies. Did we whoop it up? Did we? All the yelling that we had done up to date in that game was dead silence compared to what we let loose as we paraded Bino up to the grand stand. We stirred up the dust like a hasty pudding. We tore long strips out of the atmosphere, we hit high C with spontaneous unanimity an' went from there on up until every man's voice sizzled out in a hiss.

Honest, Charley, there's no use trying to let you know how we celebrated.

But we played it to the limit, you bet. One feller said to me afterward, Bill, old boy, I was on the Maine when she blew up in Havana harbor, but it wasn't a firecracker to what Rod Garrison touched off in us when he soaked that ball over onto the corral."

"Well, to wind this yarn up, Charley, a kind of queer thing happened as we began to quiet down after the game. Old Bino had kicked and squirmed so much that at last we set him down, but not until eight different commands had paraded him and yelled their heads off shouting 'What's the matter with Garrison? He's all right!' But just as we set him down, an' he was starting to push his way through us off the field, a sergeant of C Company pushed a bottle of whiskey under his nose and says hearty like, 'Take one on me, comrade. It's all yours.' Now what do you think old Bino did, Charley? I never was so surprised in all my life."

"'Much obliged to you, suh,' says Bino, in that down-south-in-Dixie drawl of his, 'Much obliged to you. But I don't use the stuff any mo.'" And with that up comes this Rainier guy and the last I saw of Bino he was working his way through that crowd arm-in-arm with the Sky Pilot, and it looked to me as if they as headed for the Y. M. C. A. tent.

Talk about miracles, Charley! When Bino turned that sergeant's good whiskey down, I seen a miracle myself.

(To be continued.)

Mother

Listen! Can you not still hear
How she taught you your first prayer?
O, the voice that was so dear,
And the hopes that were so fair!
Ask yourself what she would say
If she guessed or if she knew—
Listen! Listen! Through her tears
Still she calls across the years—
Calls forgivingly to you.

—S. E. Kiser, in Chicago Record-Herald.

How Molly Beat the Redcoats

BY FRED MYRON COLBY.

A chubby, bright-eyed, saucy-looking girl of thirteen or fourteen years was busy working a sampler one long ago summer afternoon in the sitting room of an old house in the Waxhaw region of the Carolinas, when she was disturbed by the sharp gallop of hoofs coming up the road. The girl glanced up from her variously colored crewels with which she was representing the prodigal son foraging among the swine for the husks he had despised in his father's home. Through the open window she descried a tall, thin, gangling figure mounted on a "grass pony," a horse of the South Carolina swamps, dash past the house, and between the beat of his horse's hoofs she caught his hurried warning:

"Tarleton's coming! Tarleton's coming! and forty thousand redcoats with him riding like the wind."

The girl's cheek turned suddenly pale at that dread announcement, and she threw down the sampler, leaving the poor prodigal with an eye of cobalt blue looking out wistfully over the group of struggling swine. Too well she knew what the coming of Tarleton meant. For months the name of that fierce and daring Briton had been one to frighten patriot households, for he and his redcoat troopers gave scant mercy.

Moreover there was an extra reason why little Molly Gardner should fear Tarleton's coming. Her brother John bearing a message from the Swamp Fox to Gen. Nathaniel Greene, had arrived at the house that morning, and at that very moment was in the kitchen eating a hurried lunch her mother had prepared. To warn him and hasten his departure was her first thought, and she accordingly rushed into the kitchen just as her brother was finishing the remnant of a chicken that had been set before him.

"Oh, John," she cried, "the British are coming. What will you do?" Mrs. Gardner sprang to the side of her son as if to shield him from the approaching danger. "You must flee; Tarleton will hang you if he finds you here."

"Yes, I must flee, but where?" said the young patriot as coolly as though there were no British within a hundred miles. "I left my horse in the pasture to nibble his dinner while I was having mine, and I could not possibly reach him in time. You see they are not far away."

He pointed through the window to where a dust cloud could be seen far down the road undoubtedly caused by a large party of galloping horses.

"Then you must hide where the British cannot find you," cried Molly. "Come with me to the cellar," as a happy thought flashed into her active mind; "I know of just the place. They will never think to look for you there."

The young patriot seemed a little doubtful, but he followed his sister to the great cellar one side of which was lined by a row of casks and barrels, a large number of which were empty, and somewhat higher than the others stood a tierce which held the family supply of meat and which was nearly half filled with brine and salted pork.

"Get in there, John," said his sister, "it will hold you, and you will not pickle in a short time. I will cover it over and place a piece of pork on top. They will never dream of you being inside. It is the only place."

The brother obeyed without a word, and in a moment he was ensconced inside, and Molly had replaced the heavy cover, leaving a piece of meat on the outside as though the tierce was more than full.

"Don't move, John," she cried, and then she flew up the stairs and was sitting serenely on the piazza, stitching her sampler for dear life when the dragoons arrived. Their leader, a splendidly dressed officer, with a determined mouth and a pair of dark flashing eyes, halted his horse in front of her, and lifting his cap with mock gallantry, asked her if any of the men folks of the house were at home.

Moly's heart was in her mouth and she felt frightened enough to run and hide, but she looked the Briton unflinchingly in the face as she answered:

"My brother is a soldier, sir, and he is doing a soldier's duty." Surely, she thought, it is his duty to save his life.

"Ah, ha, so he is a rebel, and you are doubtless a rebel, too. But we shall have to ask your hospitality for a time. The service of his Majesty requires a temporary occupation of your property."

At his command the dragoons dismounted, and a large number of them followed their leader into the house, where they were confronted by Mrs. Gardner.

"I suppose we are your prisoners, sir," said the patriot woman. "It is very brave to make war on women."

Tarleton bit his lip, and the angry blood swept over his swarthy cheek, but only for a moment. "We are in the service of our king," he answered, "and we are looking for a rebel messenger who we have good reason to believe is hiding in this house."

"Then you will have to find him," declared Mrs. Gardner. "Molly, show Colonel Tarleton about the house, while I prepare a lunch for his Majesty's soldiers."

This unlooked-for show of hospitality on the part of the patriot housewife had the effect to put the British in good humor, and guided by Molly, Tarleton and his men went up into the chambers where every closet and hiding place were thoroughly examined, the men even sounding the walls with their swords. But the most careful search failed to reveal any sign of one in concealment.

"Now, girl lead us to the cellar," commanded Tarleton. "If there is one of Marion's messengers in hiding here we must find him."

Molly was all of a tremble, but she bravely concealed her feelings, and opened the cellar door. Half a dozen of the dragoons followed their leader down the stairs. A row of wine casks along the side of the cellar attracted their attention.

"The rebels have good wine in their cellars it seems," declared Tarleton; "you shall have a taste of it, my men, if we find the rebel."

"Perhaps you will find him in the potato bin," said Molly, sarcastically, "but if he was a Briton I should tap one of the wine casks."

Tarleton looked at her darkly, but he refrained from saying anything. He was approaching the meat tierce, and laid his hand upon the cover.

Suddenly there was an outcry and the soldiers all sprang forward. Molly had surreptitiously withdrawn the spigot to one of the wine barrels, and the liquor was running to waste on the cellar floor.

"We mustn't lose all this good wine," cried the soldiers, and one of them strove to check the outflow with his fingers.

"Run for a pitcher, quick!" some one cried.

One of the soldiers ran up stairs and brought down a large earthen pitcher, with which they succeeded in catching some of the wine. By the time this little flurry was over the whole crowd was ready to ascend to the kitchen. Molly's little ruse had succeeded in diverting their attention from any further search in the cellar.

Mrs. Gardner now announced that dinner was ready, and presently the British dragoons were playing the gallant trencher men, none of them suspecting that the object of their search had been within a few feet of them while they were engaged in saving the wine.

It seemed a long and tedious time to Molly before the dragoons were ready to leave, and she was in mortal terror for fear they might go to the cellar again for more wine. But Tarleton was a strict disciplinarian and kept his men from over drinking. When they had partaken of an excellent repast, the Briton very gallantly withdrew, and shortly, to Molly's intense relief, the whole group galloped away.

As soon as she was assured that they had really gone, she hastened into the cellar to release her brother from his cramped quarters.

"You have saved my life, Molly," said the young courier as he scrambled out of the pork barrel. "I am not quite pickled, but I certainly should have been if you had not set that wine barrel to running just as you did. It was a happy thought. Wouldn't Tarleton like to see me now?"

And gaily laughing over the adventure the brave Continental kissed his mother and sister goodbye. He easily found his horse, and riding away carried his message successfully to General Greene. And as it happened, upon the fortunate delivery of that very message, depended in a large measure the after success of the patriot cause in the Carolinas.

Molly lived long years after the war was over, and married and had children of her own. One of her great-granddaughters is living today, and has in her possession a memento of the day when her great grandmother beat Colonel Tarleton in a game of hide and seek—a small, slender dagger which dropped from the famous officer's belt as he sprang upon his horse to ride away after his unavailing search for the hidden patriot.

It is a noble and great thing to cover the blemishes and to excuse the failings of a friend; to draw a curtain before his stains, and to display his perfections; to bury his weaknesses in silence, but to proclaim his virtues upon the housetop.—Robert South.

The Daily Altar

An Aid to Private Devotion and Family Worship

SUNDAY, MARCH 5.

Theme for the Day.—The Divine Denial.

Concerning this thing I besought the Lord thrice, that it might depart from me. And he hath said unto me, My grace is sufficient for thee; for my power is made perfect in weakness. Most gladly therefore will I rather glory in my weaknesses, that the power of Christ may rest upon me. 2 Cor. 12:8, 9.

I thank Thee, Lord, for mine unanswered prayers,
Unanswered save Thy quiet, kindly "Nay;"
Yet it seemed hard among my heavy cares
That bitter day.

I wanted health; but Thou didst bid me sound
The secret treasuries of pain,
And in the moans and groans my heart oft found
Thy Christ again.
—Oliver Huckel ("I Thank Thee, Lord").

Prayer.—Holy Father, we rejoice in the comfort of prayer. Not that we wish to bring to Thee merely the needs of our lives in unceasing requests. Rather would we find joy in such companionship with Thee as shall calm our souls and sustain us in all our experiences. And if trouble should befall us, and we should pass through days of suffering, teach us the confidence that knows Thy abiding presence and seeks the discipline and culture that sorrow alone can bring. As our Saviour was made perfect through suffering, so may we gain the blessing of strength, and know the grace that is sufficient. We ask in Christ's name. Amen.

MONDAY, MARCH 6.

Theme for the Day.—The Wonder of Seeds.

Scripture.—And God said, Let the earth put forth grass, herbs yielding seed and fruit-trees bearing fruit after their kind, wherein is the seed thereof, upon the earth; and it was so. Gen. 1:11.

And he said, So is the kingdom of God, as if a man should cast seed upon the earth; and should sleep and rise night and day, and the seed should spring up and grow, he knoweth not how. Mark 4:26, 27.

Isn't it wonderful, when you think,
How a little seed asleep,
Out of the earth new life will drink,
And carefully upward creep?
A seed, we say, is a simple thing,
The germ of a flower or weed—
But all earth's workmen, laboring,
With all the help that wealth could bring,
Never could make a seed.
—Julian S. Cutler ("Wonderful").

Prayer.—Our Father, we rejoice in the works of Thy hands, and most of all in the living things thou hast created. The marvel of nature, as it comes again to life in the abundant spring fills us with joy and astonishment. And as the seed wakens to life and beauty, so may we, the children of God through faith in Jesus, bring forth the holy produce of the divine sowing within us, first the blade, then the ear, then the full grain. We ask in the name of the Good Sower. Amen.

TUESDAY, MARCH 7.

Theme for the Day.—Mountain Heights and Pleasant Valleys.

Scripture.—And the word of Jehovah came unto me, saying, Son of man, set thy face toward the mountains of Israel. Ezek. 6:1, 2.

I went down into the garden of nuts, to see the green plants of the valley, to see whether the vine budded. Song of Solomon 6:11.

Fain would I scale the heights that lead to God,
But my feet stumble and my steps are weak,
Warm are the valleys, and the hills are bleak
Here where I linger, flowers make soft the sod,
But those far paths that martyr feet have trod
Are sharp with flints, and from their farthest peak
The still, small voice but faintly seems to speak,
While here the drowsy lilies dream and nod.
—Louise Chandler Moulton ("Afar from God").

Prayer.—We thank Thee, our God, for the difficult things to which we must set our faces and our feet in the journey of life. We know that the soft and easy way is not the one that can make the servant of God strong and of good courage. Help us to face the mountain heights with firmness and high hope. May we not turn back from any strain or toil of the road, knowing that at the mountain heights we may have the pure air of eternity and may see the far-stretching land of God. We take Thy hand, good Father, and go onward in hope. Amen.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 8.

Theme for the Day.—Forgiveness and Strength.

Scripture.—Jehovah is my light and my salvation, whom shall I fear? Jehovah is the strength of my life, of whom shall I be afraid? Psalm 27:1.

And I said, I will confess my transgressions unto Jehovah; and thou forgavest the iniquity of my sin. Psalm 32:5.

It is not that I feel less weak, but Thou
Wilt be my strength; it is not that I see
Less sin, but more of pardoning love with Thee,
And all-sufficient grace. Enough! And now
All fluttering thought is stilled; I only rest,
And feel that Thou are near, and know that I am blessed.
—Frances Ridley Havergal ("Peace.").

Prayer.—We offer to Thee the sacrifices of praise, our Father, and lift up our hearts in thanksgiving. In all our weakness and sin Thou hast been to us power and pardon, and our hearts have been made content with Thy grace. Save us, we beseech Thee, from fear and discontent. Take away from us disquiet and despair. May the clear shining of Thy face make light our way. Bring us at last with joy to Thy holy habitation. We pray in our Saviour's name. Amen.

THURSDAY, MARCH 9.

Theme for the Day.—The Marvel of God's Greatness.

Scripture.—That doeth great things past finding out, yea, marvelous things without number. Job 9:10.

Behold the half was not told me. 1 Kings 10:7.

For this I know,—
That our faiths are foolish by falling below,
Not coming above, what God will show;
That his commonest thing hides a wonder vast,
To whose beauty our eyes have never passed;
That his face in the present, or in the to-be,
Outshines the best that we think we see.
—William Channing Gannett ("Aunt Phillis' Guest").

Prayer.—O God, Thou art glorious beyond all our imagining. Whenever we have tried to fathom Thy wisdom and power, our minds grow faint at their boundless measure. Yet this vastness of Thy life fills us with a solemn and holy joy, for Thou hast not been unmindful of even our small estate. We take courage in Thy thought of us, and aspire to nobler things in the future. Save us from unworthy aims, and fill us with the spirit of the highest good. Amen.

FRIDAY, MARCH 10.

Theme for the Day.—The Good Companion.

Scripture.—Hold thou me up and I shall be safe. Psalm 119-117.

Even there shall thy hand lead me, and thy right hand shall hold me. Psalm 139:10.

Stand with me near my side,
High on the breast of the hill,
Here where the view is wide,
Here where the air is still.
How can I understand
This silence, these leagues of light,
Save as I hold your hand,
You, who are half my sight?
—Percy C. Ainsworth ("The Road").

Prayer.—O God, we have read of Thy dealings with Thy people in the past. Thou didst lead them like a flock in the wilderness, and they came to the land of their rest. Thou hast held the hands of Thy saints in all the years, and they have been upheld by Thy strength. Take our hands in Thine own, we pray Thee, and lead us like little children. For Thou knowest the way we take, and wilt bring us to the city that we seek. We commit our souls to Thee for this day. Amen.

SATURDAY, MARCH 11.

Theme for the Day.—The Sister Nations.

Scripture.—The envy also of Ephraim shall depart, and they that vex Judah shall be cut off; Ephraim shall not envy Judah, and Judah shall not vex Ephraim. Isa. 11:15.

Two Empires by the sea,
Two Nations great and Free
One anthem raise.
One race of ancient fame,
One tongue, one faith, we claim
One God, whose glorious Name
We love and praise.
—George Huntington ("Hymn of Peace").

Prayer.—O God of nations, we bless Thee for the good will which prevails among the peoples of the world. Though wars still arise from time to time, they grow less as Thy will is known and revered. Most of all we thank Thee for the bonds of friendship that bind us to the Mother Country of our English race. Out of ancient discords and conflicts Thou hast brought us unto peace and mutual helpfulness. Restrain us, we beseech Thee, from harsh words and unjust suspicions. May we seek to promote good will among all men. And may we have a share in the interpretation of the Brotherhood of Man, in the spirit of the Fatherhood of God. Amen.

The Moral Leaders of Israel

BY PROFESSOR HERBERT L. WILLETT

Section XI. Elisha, the Pastor of Israel. (2 Kings 4:8-37)

Study for March 12, 1911.

QUESTIONS.

1. Is it possible to judge accurately regarding the character of Elisha?
2. What two contrasted elements appear in his life?
3. Where did Elisha live?
4. In the reigns of what kings was he active?
5. What incidents are connected in his life with Jericho and Bethel respectively?
6. What was the cause of the expedition against Moab?
7. Describe the route taken by the allied forces, and the outcome of the campaign.
8. What part did Elisha have in this enterprise?
9. What important biblical monument is connected with this incident?
10. Where was Shunem?
11. What did the family of Shunem provide for Elisha?
12. What misfortune befell the child that was born at the prophet's intercession?
13. What did Elisha do to restore the child?
14. What explanation can you offer to account for this narrative?
15. What are some of the other miracle stories told regarding Elisha?
16. On what basis do you suppose they rested?
17. Would such a character as that of the prophet attract to itself traditions of this nature?
18. Was the real service of Elisha to his times and to religion dependent upon these wonder incidents?
19. What led Naaman, the Syrian, to visit Samaria?
20. Why was the king of Israel alarmed at his coming?
21. In what way was Naaman himself disappointed?
22. What relation was there between his bathing in the Jordan and his recovery from the leprosy?
23. How was the servant of the prophet discovered in his fraudulent attempt to secure a reward?
24. What took place at Dothan and what light does it throw on Elisha's character?

* * *

1. THE SUCCESSOR OF ELIJAH.

The character of Elisha, the farmer of Abel-meholah who had been the companion of Elijah for many years, and who was destined at the prophet's departure to be his successor, is difficult to analyze with accuracy. In spite of the fact that a large amount of tradition has gathered about his name, we know comparatively little of the man himself. Our sources indicate that he was a singular combination of pastoral sympathy and fierce prophetic vindictiveness. If he was more friendly with the people than Elijah had been, he was at the same time even more relentless in his efforts to extirpate the evil practices that were still too prevalent in the nation.

He seems to have lived at some retreat in Mt. Carmel, perhaps the place where Elijah's great victory was gained over the priests and prophets of the Baals. From this place he went forth on his journeys to various towns in the nation. His coming and going were remarked with interest by the people who delighted in his presence. Later on, if indications are correct, he had his home in Samaria, the capital. His work fell in the reigns of Jehoram (851-842 B. C.), Jehu (842-814), Jehoahaz (814-797) and Joash (797-781). Thus for more than fifty years he was the conspicuous representative of the worship of Jehovah. In the earlier portion of his ministry the service of the local Baals was still permitted, in spite of the reforms of Elijah. But in the later time, after the rise of Jehu, idolatry of this sort was completely suppressed by the bloody measures of reform which the prophets under Elisha's leadership inspired.

On his return from the scene of Elijah's farewell to Israel, he was hailed by the prophetic groups as their new leader. He assured them that it would be useless for them to search for the departed prophet, who, they imagined, might have wandered away into the desert (2 Kings 2:15-18). At Jericho, he found a means of sweetening the brackish waters of the spring, which has ever since borne the name of "Elisha's Fountain" (2 Kings 2:19-22). Something of the fierceness of his nature was revealed even thus early by his imprecation upon the youths at Bethel, who had mocked his tonsured head, and whose death by wild beasts was attributed to the prophet's curse (2 Kings 2:23-35).

* * *

2. THE EXPEDITION AGAINST MOAB (2 Kings 3:4-27).

As early as the days of Omri and Ahab the country of Moab had been subjected to Israel and had paid an annual tribute in wool and sheep. But Mesha, the king of the land, asserted his claim to independence and refused further levies.

Jehoram of Israel summoned his friend Jehoshaphat of Judah, who was perhaps under such obligations to Israel as to be practically a war-vassal, and together they planned the expedition against Moab. Their route was not across the Jordan and against the strongly intrenched northern frontier of Moab, but southward through Judah and across the territories of Edom south of the Dead Sea. For though Edom had regained something of its former power, it was still in a measure, subject to Judah.

The prophetic writers of Kings were chiefly concerned in this expedition because of the part Elisha played in it. In passing through the hot, dry region, south of the Dead Sea, the host nearly perished for lack of water. Finally Elisha was summoned to give his council. After uttering his disapproval of the king of Israel as a member of the family of Ahab, he demanded a minstrel by whose help he might secure the prophetic trance. Then he bade them dig trenches by which the waters from the heavy rains on the uplands of Edom might be brought down to the camp. By this device the army was saved.

The Moabites attempted an attack upon the Hebrew camp under the mistaken impression that conflict had arisen between its different sections. The result was a total defeat of the Moabites and the destruction of most of their cities, Kir-hareseth being the only survivor, according to the biblical account.

The king of Moab, in desperate straits, gathered his choicest warriors and made a determined dash to penetrate to the king of Edom, his ancient ally, either to take vengeance for his present perfidy, or in confidence that he would turn again to friendship in such an emergency. But all in vain; he could not break the line. And finally, as a last resort, he offered up his oldest son as a sacrifice on the walls of his one surviving city.

So tremendous an invocation as this was believed to be irresistible, and even the Hebrew writers admit that Israel was defeated and compelled to return to its own land.

The Moabite stone is the monumental witness of the historicity of this narrative in its main particulars. King Mesha recorded the outcome of this campaign on a tablet, which is now one of the prized possessions of the Louvre at Paris.

* * *

3. THE BOY AT SHUNEM (2 Kings 4:8-37).

The section which forms the theme of our special study this week is an admirable illustration of the impression Elisha made upon the people of Israel, and the sympathetic assistance he offered them in their times of need. Nothing could better illustrate his pastoral function as a kindly interested friend than the story of the household at Shunem.

The Moral Leaders of Israel is a Sunday School course for Young People's and Adult Bible Classes. It will continue throughout the year 1911. The publishers of THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY will supply classes of six or more with weekly copies of the paper containing these lessons, at $1 per year for each copy, or 30 cents per quarter. The class members will receive in addition to their Sunday-school lesson all the rich things provided every week in THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY. The papers distributed to the class on Sunday will contain the lesson for the following Sunday. Orders should be sent through the regular Sunday-school Treasurer if you wish to pay quarterly; or you may deal directly with the Publishers, enclosing remittance at the rate of $1.00 per year for each copy ordered. Be sure and give name of teacher or class member to whom papers shall be sent for distribution.

On the prophet's journeys to and from Carmel he had frequently to pass through the village of Shunem, which lies at the foot of Little Hermon on the borders of the plain of Esdraelon.

In this town there lived a woman, probably the wife of the sheikh, who offered the hospitality of her home whenever the prophet passed that way. Finally she suggested to her husband that it would be well for them to add to their simple home a chamber which Elisha might occupy whenever he desired. This was accordingly done, and the room was provided with bed, table, stool and candlestick.

The prophet, feeling that some return was due to such a spirit of good will, asked the woman what he could do for her. With the influence which he had in Israel, it would have been easy to make request of the king or the general of the army. Perhaps there was some position to which she wished her husband promoted. But she declined all offers and insisted that her life was sufficiently happy, dwelling as she did among her own people. But the prophet's servant. Gehazi, suggested that as there was no child in the family, this would be a blessing beyond all other prizes. And through the prophet's prayer, the woman bore a son whose presence crowned the household at Shunem with its greatest joy.

But in the time of harvest the boy, working among the reapers, was stricken with the heat. The father sent him to the house, thinking little of the incident. But the child, we are told, died before noon. The woman in despair started at once for the mountain retreat of the prophet. She would accept no substitute, but demanded that Elisha himself come with her. The efforts of the servant, Gehazi, to arouse the child were unavailing. And even Elisha found the struggle a desperate one. But he brought the living child to his mother, and thus deepened her obligation to him and Jehovah.

It has often been suggested that this story is the duplicate of that found in the life of Elijah (1 Kings 17). That it was understood to be an actual revival of a dead child there can be no doubt. Nor did ancient Israel perceive anything inconsistent with the order of nature in such an act performed by a prophet like Elisha.

A subsequent incident is related of this same woman of Shunem, in connection with the restoration of her property following a period of absence from the country (2 Kings 8:1-6).

* * *

4. NAAMAN, THE SYRIAN (2 Kings 5:1-27).

Around a character so impressive as that of Elisha there grew up many traditions of miracle-working. The cleansing of the fountain at Jericho, the visitation of death upon the youths at Bethel, the increased supply of oil for the wife of one of the dead prophets (2 Kings 4:1-7), the healing of the poisoned pottage (2 Kings 4:39-41), the feeding of a hundred men with a limited supply of bread, fruits, and grain (2 Kings 8:42-44), the miraculous recovery of an axe from the waters of the Jordan (2 Kings 6:1-7), and other acts of similar character were only deemed the expected proofs of prophetic power, as that and later generations reflected on the actual services of Elisha to his people. No doubt the basis of these beliefs was the strong personality of the prophet, and his actual healing of diseases.

An instance of the sort is given in connection with the relations of Israel to Syria, the chief political problem of the time. The greatest captain of Ben-hadad, king of Syria, was Naaman. But he fell under the affliction of leprosy. A maiden of his household, whose home was in Israel, told such stories of the prophet's power to heal disease that the warrior came with a retinue, bearing gifts and a letter from the Syrian king to Jehoram asking for the recovery of the captain's health.

The king of Israel was in fear of some trick to involve him in war with his strong rival. But Elisha sent word that he would deal with the case, and bade Naaman go wash in the Jordan seven times. This proved effective, in spite of the captain's disinclination to plunge in the muddy waters of Israel.

Elisha refused all rewards, but Gehazi, his servant, more avaricious, secured from the courtier a sum of money and certain garments, only to incur the prophets's wrath and the curse of hereditary leprosy. But the later appearance of Gehazi at the court of Israel makes, somewhat questionable, the lasting effect of the prophet's reproof. (2 Kings 8:1-6).

* * *

5. THE PROPHET AT DOTHAN (2 Kings 6:8-23).

This is another of the romantic narratives collected regarding Elisha. His advice to the king of Israel had proved so effective that the Syrians wished to secure him as prisoner and thus prevent their further defeats. They surrounded the town of Dothan where he was lodging, and in the morning his servant was paralyzed with fear at the sight of the gathered Syrian host.

But the prophet assured him that the hosts of God were still more powerful. And the servant saw with opened eyes the mountains round about filled with divine horses and chariots. The prophet struck blind the Syrian force and led it helpless to Samaria. And when the king would have fallen upon these enemies and cut them to pieces, the prophet forbade this act and commanded Jehoram to give his prisoners food and drink and set them at liberty. This act of clemency sounds much like that recorded of Ahab when he rendered such kindness to Ben-hadad and his army. (1 Kings 20:29-34).

* * *

FOLLOWING STUDIES.

The section for next week will deal with "The Reforms of Elisha."

The two that follow will be given to "The Judean School of Prophets" and "The Prophets of the Northern Kingdom" respectively. Then will come "Amos of Tekoa" and "The Moral Program of Amos."

* * *

TOPICS FOR SPECIAL STUDY, REPORTS AND PAPERS.

1. The political background of Elisha's ministry.
2. The miracle-stories relating to Elisha.
3. The story of the Moabite stone.
4. The picture of Hebrew life presented by the narrative of the woman of Shunem.
5. The relation of Israel and Syria in this period.
6. The character of Gehazi.

* * *

LITERATURE.

Wade: "Old Testament History." Kent: "History of the Hebrew People," vol. II. Cornill: "History of the People of Israel." H. P. Smith: "Old Testament History." Kittel: "History of the Hebrews." Price: "The Old Testament and the Monuments." Henry van Dyke: "The House of Rimmon" (a drama). Articles in the encyclopedias and Bible dictionaries on "Elisha" and the other topics involved in this study.

Christian Endeavor Lesson

BY W. D. ENDRES

TOPIC FOR MARCH 12.

First Aid for the Tempted. Heb. 2:14-18.

There are thousands of people who tumble headlong into sin before they even realize that they are so much as being tempted. The first aid to the tempted is ability, on his part, to recognize a temptation when it comes before him. In these days nearly every genuine has a counterfeit. Deception is a fine art. It is the despair of the business man. He frequently insists that he cannot live up to his moral ideals and succeed in business. Opportunities for gain for enjoyment, for fame, for power, and for prestige come often in gilded forms. They are so apparently harmless that one often finds himself ensnared in ways of evil doing when his intentions are of the very best. Most of us can guard ourselves pretty well when we think we are in the danger zone, but many of us do not realize that we are never out of that zone. That is why we are caught off our guard. There is great need for Paul's admonition: "Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall." There is a possibility and even a danger on the part of all of yielding to temptation.

Ability to descern temptations in their sly and subtle forms depends upon the heart's desire for fellowship with God. Within certain limitation, we all get what we most want. The best teacher is not the one who knows the most and can tell it in intelligent way, but he who can and does create within the young person an unquenchable thirst for knowledge. If the desire is once fixed knowledge will be secured. This truth finds a parallel in our spiritual experiences. If there is a deep and searching desire to know the will of God and to make the life conform to the spiritual ideals, the path of duty for the most part will be discovered. Every young person has some time in his life gone either to his pastor or one of the elders of the church and asked if it were in keeping with his Christian duty to do certain things. Many have taken the advice and acted upon it, even when it was adverse to their earnest desires. Others have heard the advice and acted to the contrary even when their own judgment confirms the advice given. The former is an example of one whose heart's desire is to know and live in conformity with the will of God, and in action, gives instead of takes the benefit of the doubt. The other is an example of the one who would like to bring the life into conformity if it does not become too inconvenient. To the one temptations may come by the score and there is little danger of yielding but the latter will be a constant victim of them. That is why we say that the prerequisite for the discovery of temptations in whatever disguise must be a sincere desire for the fellowship of God. This is the first and greatest aid which can be given to the tempted.

If you have a thing to do, do it, and get it off your mind, and then it won't bother you.—General Gordon.

The supreme happiness of life is the conviction of being loved for yourself, or, more correctly, being loved in spite of yourself.—Victor Hugo.

If you are looking for that which is best in the men and women with whom you come in contact; if you are seeking also to give them that which is best in yourself; if you are looking for friendship which shall help you to know yourself as you are and to fulfill yourself as you ought to be; if you are looking for a love which shall not be a flattering dream and a madness of desire, but a true comradeship and a mutual inspiration to all nobility of living—then you are surely on the ascending path.—Henry van Dyke.

Illinois Department

State Office, 24 Illinois National Bank Bldg., Springfield

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY is a national religious paper published by the Disciples of Christ in the interests of Christian unity and the Kingdom of God. While its circulation is nation-wide and impartially distributed among all the states, it recognizes a special obligation to the State of Illinois in which it is published. It desires particularly to serve the cause of Christ in Illinois by publishing its significant church news, by interpreting its religious life and by promoting the ideals of the Disciples within its borders. To this end the publishers of THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY maintain a state office at Springfield, the capital and central city. It is the purpose of the state editor to study the whole field of Illinois, visiting all the churches, reporting his observations and pointing the churches to ever higher ideals. Pastors and church workers are requested to co-operate by regularly sending items of news, clippings from local papers, parish papers, weekly leaflets, occasional paragraphs of sermons and any other information that will give to the state editor all the data for reporting and interpreting the progress of Christian work in the state. All communications to the editor may be addressed, 24 Illinois National Bank Building, Springfield. All business communications should be addressed to the Chicago office.

Revival meetings were begun at Sheldon church, February 6.

N. S. Haynes, whose home is in Decatur, will return to the North in March. He has been spending the winter in Florida.

Toluca church, will be ministered to by J. T. Moore of Canton, Mo., who will give the congregation his full time.

H. J. Hostetler has resigned his pastorate at Virden and will accept another pastorate after April 1.

E. C. Sitts, who has been with the congregation at Chambersburg for nearly three years, has resigned and will accept another pastorate.

The Sword meeting at Camp Point had reached six additions at last report. Mr. Sword is being assisted by J. G. Hostetter as singer and the local church ladies quartette.

Douglas Park Church, Chicago, recently observed Christian Endeavor Day and the young people who gave the program were dressed in oriental costumes.

Oblong church is being served half time by J. I. O'Neil, who, after a short stay in Indiana, has returned to Illinois where he was at one time, pastor at Keensburg.

D. W. Conner is in a meeting at Palestine with seven additions at last report. The revival began without preparations, but prospects are favorable for results.

The Sunday-school at Tallula is ambitious to become a front rank school and is rapidly approaching the goal. The work of C. E. French as pastor is prospering.

Sullivan church has extended a call to R. H. Robertson of Shelbyville, to become its pastor. The call has been accepted and Mr. Robertson has accordingly resigned his charge at Shelbyville.

Decision Day was observed at Oakwood Sunday, Feb. 19. H. D. Williams, the present pastor, after a short discourse presented the plea and seven confessions were made by pupils from the Sunday-school.

The Sunday-school at Rossville is striving to join the front rank schools by March 1. All classes in the school except one are organized and a home department will be started in the near future.

Evangelist E. M. Norton is in a successful revival at Raymond. There were seven additions when the meeting was but little more than a week old, congregations were increasing and interest was advancing.

Deaconesses were elected in the congregation at Mt. Sterling. A. L. Cole is the pastor and is continuing the evangelistic appeal since the close of the Sword-Rice meeting, with frequent additions.

Th church at Ashland has recently secured J. Morgan as pastor. His work begins there, the first of February. C. W. Johnson of Chicago, will become pastor of the church at Lynnville.

Berlin church is without a pastor since the removal of J. W. Bolton, who has purchased a home in Mississippi. Mr. Bolton served through a period of five years with this church.

C. C. Wisher who preaches at Saybrook, has a training class with an enrollment of fifty-eight. One of the most encouraging departments of the work here, is the Sunday-school.

Jackson Boulevard Church, Chicago, where Austin Hunter is pastor, has not missed a Sunday for six months without additions, and the Sunday-school averages fifty more in attendance than during last year.

R. S. Campbell will be released by the Virginia church, to become pastor at Girard. His ministry at the latter place will begin next month. Meanwhile, the congregation is repairing and renewing the church building and parsonage.

C. H. Hands is pastor of the church at Flanagan. This congregation observed Education Day and made an offering to Eureka College of $54.50. A lecture course was fostered by the church and the treasurer had money on hand after all expenses were met.

The church at Carlinville has invited its pastor, J. W. Porter, to remain with them another year with increased salary. Mr. Porter is assisting Guy B. Williamson in a meeting at Waverly where the latter is pastor.

The Rockford meeting is securing results, with W. B. Clemmer, the pastor, doing the preaching and J. P. Garmong as singer. There were eighteen additions on a recent Sunday, most of whom were by confession and nearly all adults.

Atlanta church recently observed decision day, at which time there were nine confessions. The Sunday-school has an attendance of nearly two hundred and on offering of more than $7.00. In the evening, Lincoln aniversary services were conducted by the pastor, Robert H. Newton.

The pastor and family at Argenta, gave a musical program in the church February 23, assisted by the three Hickman sisters of Decatur and a local male quartette. The minister is Major Griffith, who not long since, held an excellent meeting with the congregation.

C. R. Woolford's class of men at Blandinsville had an average attendance last year of fifty-six. During the last two and one-half years it has enrolled more than two hundred different men. They furnish ten pieces for the orchestra. On January 31, they held a very enjoyable banquet.

George W. Wise is pastor of the church at DuQuoin, where a fine union meeting is in progress, the Disciple, Methodist and Presbyterian churches uniting. Nearly two hundred conversions were reported. The evangelist is J. S. Hamilton. The meeting was only well started at last reports and anticipations were high for many more conversions.

The dedication of the new $20,000 church at Leroy, where Ransom D. Brown ministers, took place February 26. Mr. Brown has been in the hospital at Bloomington through a serious illness. He is now convalescent and able to be at home and at work again. He was assisted in the dedication of the church by Claude E. Hill, of Valparaiso, Indiana.

S. Elwood Fisher's meeting with his home congregation at Dixon, is meeting with good results. There were nine additions with others about decided to come. Mr. Rice, who is a member of the congregation is the leader of music and is giving complete satisfaction.

Bloomington First Church, will have W. F. Richardson for an evangelistic campaign, beginning near the middle of March. The services will last for three weeks. In this church, while Edgar D. Jones was assisting Mr. Richardson in a meeting at Kansas City, H. H. Peters, of Eureka, was supply minister.

At Virginia, where R. S. Campbell is pastor, an unusual County Anti-Saloon League rally was held. The assembly was in the Catholic church and the presiding officer was the priest. Another Catholic, John S. Cuneen, a machinist of Chicago, was a principal speaker. G. W. Martin, Disciple minister at Beardstown, delivered an address on the program.

Robert W. Moore has been invited by the church at White Hall to remain a second year with increase of salary. The Sunday-school at this place is entering upon a campaign, in order to double the school in number and efficiency. On a recent Sunday evening, the Christian Endeavor Society had charge of the services and rendered a program in honor of the thirtieth anniversary of the organization.

W. H. Waggoner is holding a missionary institute at Lovington with A. L. Huff, the minister. The work at this church is prospering. Among the interesting departments are a Junior Endeavor Society with an attendance of thirty-eight and a Sunday-school with an enrollment of about two hundred. Mr. Waggoner closed a splendid institute at Lincoln, prior to his Lovington appointment. He will be at Arrowsmith, Moweaqua and Mason City during successive weeks.

Princeton church Brotherhood, has undertaken the study and discussion of present day problems of importance. During February they had a debate which was engaged in by four of the leading attorneys of the city. The question debated was, Resolved: that the ends of justice would be more fully met, if three-fourths of the jury agreeing, could render a verdict. C. C. Carpenter is the minister here. He was recently invited to address the men's class of the Methodist church.

B. H. Sealock has resigned and will leave Petersburg April 1. He has been with the church for several years and has done a work of unquestionable value in the community. During his pastorate, a new church has been built and the congregation materially strengthened. The activities on behalf of men have been unusually successful. Mr. Sealock has not yet decided where he will locate. His retirement from this pastorate, opens up an opportunity for a good church to s cure a well-equipped minister.

The pastor at Cameron is being assisted in a series of meetings by Lizzie C. Goodlander. The meeting is being held for the cultivation of the church membership, but evangelistic sermons are also being preached. The Cameron church is one of the oldest in Illinois, dating back to the year 1831 and will celebrate its eightieth anniversary next April. During the early part of the meetings, the pastor was ill and ministers from nearby cities assisted in the services. Among these were C. W. Cummings of Knoxville,

D. E. Hughes of Monmouth and Robert W. Moore of Abingdon. Miss Goodlander who is assisting in this meeting is available, on liberal terms, for services as singing evangelist. She can be addressed at Cameron or Drakesville, Iowa.

Alvin church, where E. E. Hartley is pastor, has succeeded in accomplishing a unique work. The congregation believes in holding its auditorium sacred for the purpose of worship. Accordingly, a special building was erected, entirely removed from the regular church edifice, to be used for social purposes only. Th project was planned and financed by the Ladies' Aid Society, but it is to be for the use of all departments of the church. If the sanctity of our houses of worship, were jealously safeguarded, worship would be, in many instances, much more inspiring and meaningful than at present. There are too few holy places for people today. We tread on holy ground with sandals unremoved and accordingly forget the sacredness of the spot on which we stand. The spirit of reverence would be very greatly enhanced, if we had places set apart, where quiet and reverence were demanded. It will always be impossible to inspire a reverential attitude in a place where levity and frivolity are customary. The Alvin church is to be congratulated on its enterprise, in separating its social pleasures from the serious function of worship. It may easily be predicted that the edifice of worship will come to take on a new meaning, to those who come there for prayer and praise alone.

Meeting at Decatur with Dr. Powell

We have just closed a ten days' meeting at the Central Church in Decatur, with Dr. E. L. Powell of Louisville, Ky. It was a very enjoyable and profitable meeting. We had no particular organization for the meeting. We announced it thoroughly through the press and by mailing a card to each family of the church. The people turned out en masse. There was not a service that they did not completely fill the house. The aisles were filled with chairs and the Sunday-school rooms opened to accommodate the audiences. A large number of people from other churches were in constant attendance. We greeted many of the most prominent members from our sister churches each evening.

Rev. E. L. Powell.

One of our chief objects in holding these meetings was to present to the whole community the great fundamentals of Christianity and deepen and strengthen the life of the church. In this we succeeded beyond expectation. Brother Powell fully lived up to his reputation as a preacher. His message was rugged and full of masculine power. His men's meeting on Sunday afternoon filled the church with as representative a company of men as I have ever seen gathered together in our city.

There were forty additions to the church. Not a single service passed without additions. Many people we have long wanted to see in the church came.

Personally, Brother Powell is a most delightful and companionable man. The men of the First Presbyterian Church, entertained him one evening at supper. They had a hundred men present and he captured them with his kindly Christian fellowship and eloquent after dinner speech. One of the leading men of the Presbyterian church later gave a luncheon at the hotel for him, when he again met the leading men of the Millikin University.

Upon the whole, Brother Powell's visit has given Christianity in our community a place of greater popularity and power. He will always be remembered, honored and admired in our community by all who stand for the best things. O. W. Lawrence.

J. M. Rhodes on Union

J. M. Rhodes, of Barry, read a paper on organic unity before the Pike County Ministerial Association on January 9th. He argues strongly for unity on the basis of efficiency and economy, saying that there are many problems impossible to be grappled with successfully by a divided church, and while we are one in history, one in heredity and one in blood, we should be one in church unity. He cites the negro problem as in itself so vast and complicated and portentous, as to challenge the nation and of sufficient import to compel a united church for its solution. In the face of problems like this there is a vast amount of money being wasted in building houses and supporting needless men, which ought to be utilized for a much greater work than the church is now accomplishing. There is not a financial institution in all the land that would tolerate such waste of money and time, as is being complacently expended by the church in all parts of the world.

Speaking of federation, which he heartily endorses, he finds a parallel in our national life, for his statement is that federation is a means toward the end for which the Disciples have been pleading. As federation was the forerunner of union, in the forming of these United States, so is federation among the churches to be looked upon as a movement for a close and permanent unification of the religious interests of the country. He pleads for a liberal exchange of ministers in the pulpits, for coöperation in union services of all kinds, for fraternal effort in works of charity, for the spirit of John the Baptist with reference to all our denominations, which will admit that "I must decrease but he must increase," for a surrender of whatever individual credal claim to apostolic succession we may possess, and for a realization that denominationalism is an evil and not to be perpetuated. He well says, that the representative of any denomination that proposes to give up nothing, and puts forth anything peculiar to itself, as a basis of unity, is thereby disqualified to sit in any body and pass judgment on a question, such as the need of organic church unity. In addition to the exaltation of Christ, he submits that the love of God in the hearts of good and unselfish men will bring about unity.

Chicago

By Vaughn Dabney.

Mr. E. M. Bowman was the chief speaker at the Disciples ministers' meeting on Monday, Feb. 20. He brought encouraging reports concerning the follow-up movement of the Laymen's Missionary Movement. Churches are doubling their offerings for home and foreign missions. In some instances business men are giving ten and twenty per cent of their income to the work: one man

(Continued on page 22.)

The Christian Century

Published Weekly by

The New Christian Century Co

700-714 East Fortieth St., Chicago, Ill.
United Religious Press Building.
Phone Douglas 3113.

Entered as Second-Class Matter Feb. 28, 1902, at the Post Office at Chicago, Illinois, Under Act of March 3, 1879.

EDITORS

Charles Clayton Morrison.
Herbert L. Willett.

CONTRIBUTING EDITOR

Silas Jones.

SUBSCRIPTIONS.

Subscription price $2.00. If paid strictly in advance $1.50 will be accepted. To ministers if paid strictly in advance, $1.00 per year. Single copy 5 cents.

EXPIRATIONS.

The label on the paper shows the month to which subscription is paid. List is revised monthly. Change of date on label is a receipt for remittance on subscription account.

DISCONTINUANCES.

Special Notice—In order that subscribers may not be annoyed by failure to receive the paper, it is not discontinued at expiration of time paid in advance (unless so ordered), but is continued pending instruction from the subscriber. If discontinuance is desired, prompt notice should be sent and all arrearages paid.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.

In ordering change of address give the old as well as the new If the paper does not reach you regularly, notify us at once.

REMITTANCES

Should be sent by draft or money order payable to The New Christian Century Company. IF LOCAL CHECK IS SENT ADD TEN CENTS FOR EXCHANGE.

ADVERTISING.

Nothing but clean business and reliable firms advertised. Rates given on application.

Church Life

G. B. Kellum has begun his work as city missionary at Tacoma, Wash.

The annual convention of Missouri churches will be held this year at Cape Girardeau.

W. R. Jinnett of Manilla, Ind., has closed his meeting at Clark's Hill, Ind. with a number of additions.

There have been about one hundred accessions at Elwood, Ind., as the result of the meeting led by E. W. Wilhite.

R. S. Robertson has resigned at Brunswick, Mo. to take the work at Humboldt, Neb. He began there on Feb. 1.

Samuel Jackson of Portland, Ore., is in a month's campaign of special meetings at Moscow, Idaho.

Meetings are in progress at Wellington, Kan. E. C. Cassity of Enid, Okla. has charge of the music.

A. K. Williams, formerly of Galena, Kan., has accepted the pastorate of Central Church, Joplin, Mo.

A. Burns of Morristown, Ind., has resigned the pastorate of Plum Creek Church to accept the work at Fairland, Ind.

Finis S. Idleman, pastor of Central Church Des Moines, Ia., addressed a meeting of the Volunteers of America on a recent evening.

M. M. Ammunson, pastor of Sterling Place Church, Brooklyn, N. Y. reports six additions to his church recently.

Large audiences are attending the union meetings being held at First Church, Keokuk, Ia.

An evangelistic campaign is in progress at Trenton, Mo. S. G. Fisher, the pastor, is assisted by W. W. Burks of Nevada, Mo. Forty-three have been added.

Central City, Neb. church which has been pastorless since the removal of D. A. Youtsey a year ago, has called Virgil E. Shirley of Minden, Neb., to the pastorate.

The church at Olympia, Wash. is having a series of meetings, the pastor J. M. Orrick, being assisted by Evangelists Baker and Saunders.

There have been fifty additions at last report in the meeting at First Church, Steubenville, Ohio. J. E. Sturgis had charge of the singing.

William Chapple, for ten years connected with the Bartholomew (Ind.) County Missionary association as evangelist, has tendered his resignation.

The pastorate at New Cumberland, W. Va., left vacant by the removal of U. E. Hootman to Cameron, W. Va., has been filled by H. A. Neilson.

Orville E. Hamilton is in a good meeting at Manhattan, Kan. The services were held in the opera house in order that the large crowds attending might be accommodated.

M. F. Horn, formerly of Eugene, Ore., is now pastor of the church at Aberdeen, Wash. recently dedicated by J. W. Baker, who has closed a meeting there with thirty-six additions.

Lowell C. McPherson began a meeting at First Church, Danbury, Conn. an Feb.12, with the pastor Elmer Jay Teegarden. Large audiences and increasing interest have marked the progress of the meeting.

Work is progressing at Rockdale, Tex., where A. M. Chisolm ministers. Homer T. Wilson delivered a series of lectures there last week which were of much interest to the congregation.

The five congregations of Topeka, Kan., with their pastors, are working faithfully in the meeting conducted there by Charles Reign Scoville. During the first eight days of the meeting 170 were added.

Herbert Yeuell will begin a meeting with his brother, Claris Yeuell, at Paulding, Ohio, March 2. The work is prospering well at this place, good offerings having been taken recently for both home and foreign missions.

The Disciples Missionary Union of New York City has issued the first copy of a monthly bulletin called "Our Mission." It deals with the city mission work carried on by the ten Disciple Churches of Greater New York.

Z. T. Sweeney dedicated the new church at Falls City, Neb. on Feb. 5. This edifice, which has a seating capacity of about four hundred, is a handsome, convenient structure and will greatly aid in the development of the work there.

The men's brotherhood of North Side Church, Omaha, Neb., held their annual meetingg on Feb. 17. The address of the evening was given by H. H. Harmon, pastor of First Church, Lincoln, Neb. who was accompanied by a delegation from the brotherhood of his church.

Dr. Herbert Martin of New York City has been chosen to the professorship of Philosophy in Drake University succeeding Professor Bruce E. Shepperd who retires next June on a Carnegie pension. Dr. Martin will be a strong addition to Drake's splendid faculty.

The meeting at Urichsville, O., was held with encouraging results, under the leadership of I. J. Cahill. At last report forty-four had been added to the church. The past month has seen the best financial record in the history of the church.

Granville Snell has closed his meeting at Amazonia, Mo. As a result of this meeting, twenty-three were added to the church, their new building was dedicated free from debt and the official board was reorganized. Mr. Snell is now in a meeting at Oxford, Mo.

H. Gordon Bennett is in a meeting at Walters, Okla, with crowded houses and a number of additions. Mr. Bennett is conducting evangelistic meetings throughout southern Oklahoma, under the direction of the state board. His headquarters are Lawton, Okla.

Jefferson Street Church, Buffalo, N. Y. rejoices in the fact that about half of the amount required for the new Sunday-school plant has been pledged. That a new building and equipment is much needed is shown by the fact that 490 were present on a recent Sunday.

John T. Brown recently held a short meeting at Kendallville, Ind. with sixty-seven additions. He is now in a meeting at Red Key, Ind., with large audiences and a number of additions. Two hundred were turned away from one of the services on account of lack of room, and the Sunday-school attendance has greatly increased.

Third Church, Indianapolis, Ind. has undertaken the support of the Russian mission in New York city, a congregation composed entirely of Russians, and ministered to by John Johnson, a native of North Russia. A school of instruction is maintained in connection with this work where English is taught.

Wm. Bayard Craig spoke at the Lenox Avenue Church, New York on Feb. 19, on the subject, "Becoming a Christian on Christ's Terms." The evening service commemorated Washington's birthday, the sermon subject being, "The Christian Patriot." Mr. Craig discussed also the need of reasonable restrictions on immigration.

A union missionary rally was held at First Church, Springfield, Mo., Feb. 15 and participated in by First, Central and South Street Churches, and many of the churches throughout the country. Addresses were given by E. W. Allen and several missionaries from China and the Philippines. All of the sessions were full of interest and proved of much benefit to those attending.

At the triennial convention of the New York district of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions recently a telegram was read from Mrs. M. E. Harlan, national secretary of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions of Indianapolis, urging the New York district to raise $50,000 as a jubilee offering. The convention sent a reply saying that they would do their utmost to raise this amount, 80 per cent of which is to be used in mission work in New York City.

Our Columbus, Ohio, churches have decided to raise $1,000 this year for Foreign Missions, to support the hospital at Chu Cheo, China. This action was taken by the representatives of the different congregations at the close of the great Laymen's Missionary Convention held at Columbus, February 13-15. Dr. Elliott Osgood is the medical missionary at Chu Cheo. J. M. Tisdale of Kentucky has recently given $5,000 to build the new hospital there. Dr. Osgood baptized forty-eight converts there the last of December.

Education Day was appropriately observed at Flanagan, Ill. The offering for Eureka College will total $54.50. The Christian Endeavor Society rendered the prepared program of the F. C. M. Society in a very effective manner Sunday, Feb. 5, the offering $8.20. The Eureka Glee Club rendered one of their concert entertainments Feb. 13th. The local lecture course closed a very successful series of winter entertainments with a balance in the treasury, the first time in the experience of the community when such a result has been attained. This work was organized and carried forward under the direction of C. H. Hands, the local minister.

"The Barney Oldfield of Talkdom" is the characterization given Finis Idleman, pastor Central Church, Des Moines, by a reporter of a daily paper of that city. "Mr. Idleman exceeds the speed limit in straightaway English. He is the terror of stenographers and church editors who attempt to take sermon notes. He can talk a two mile a minute pace and pass distance signboards of his sermon heads with lightning speed, but when he has finished the race, you have comprehended the sermon theme, caught the religious fervor of the preacher and your brain is working with accelerated speed unusual at a church service."

A personal letter from H. A. Denton of Troy, N. Y., volunteers a word of praise for his predecessor in the pastorate there, Cecil J. Armstrong, now of Monroe, Wis. He says Mr. Armstrong left things in good condition there and is held in high esteem in the community. It is more usual for the pastor to describe the church's condition as at low ebb when his pastorate began. This generous and just attitude of Mr. Denton toward his predecessor is worthy of mention. The Troy church is taking advance steps forward. The organization of a Brotherhood with various committees bids fair to develop the men and utilize their energy for the church and social service.

Dr. Errett Gates, whose letters on the early days of the Campbells are being followed with keen interest by our readers, has been spending several months in Berlin, studying in university and library. He writes that he is just moving to Marburg and plans to return to this country about June 1., sailing from Liverpool, Professor G. D. Edwards, of the Bible College of Missouri, accompanied by Mrs. Edwards and their son and Rev. and Mrs. James M. Philputt of St. Louis have been with Dr. Gates in Berlin. The Edwards' go on to Egypt and Palestine, sailing from Naples March 5. The Philputts start on a trip through Italy March 1. They have been abroad more than a year, traveling very widely and studying the last five months at Berlin.

Arthur N. Lindsey who is in the fifth year of his pastorate at Clinton, Mo., has held three successful meetings with his church during that time. In the last one of four weeks, recently closed, forty-two were added. When Mr. Lindsey took charge of this pastorate the field was a very unpromising one, the congregation being small and the equipment inadequate, but through his persistent and consecrated efforts this church is now one of the leading ones in Henry county. Three years ago he organized a Men's class which has grown to a membership of three hundred and has exerted a deep influence in the spiritual life of the community. The task now before the congregation is the erection of a new building and it is expected that this will be accomplished during the coming summer.

Union Avenue Church, Saint Louis, Mo., is planning to introduce institutional features, among which are parlors, club-rooms, a library and swimming pool for the use of the young people of the neighborhood. This is the first of the large West End churches to inaugurate such an enterprise, although many churches in the poorer neighborhoods have made provision for this feature of development. The pastor, B. A. Abbott gives as his

DR. PRICE'S
Cream Baking Powder
is the most efficient and perfect of leavening agents.
MADE FROM PURE CREAM OF TARTAR
No alum, lime or ammonia.

opinion that the children of the rich and moderately well-to-do classes are in need of this attention, so that they may be interested in something of educational value, instead of playing about the street and attending picture shows, which are for the most part the only places of amusement open to them. Mr. Abbott expects also to offer the rooms of his church for civic and sociological meetings, so that it may fill its purpose in giving real service to the community.

H. F. Lutz is in a meeting with the South Geddes Street Church, Syracuse, N. Y.

George A. Campbell was greeted by large congregations at his initial services at the First Church, Hannibal, Mo., on Feb. 12.

Delphos L. Berry reports four recent baptisms at Forest Avenue Church, Muskegon, Mich. All auxiliaries of departmental work are in healthy condition.

Central Church, Des Moines, Iowa, was visited on Sunday, Feb. 26, by Oliver W. Stewart of Chicago who spoke in the advocacy of national temperance.

The sixty-seventh quarterly convention of the Chicago Union of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions will be held at Memorial Church on Tuesday, March 2.

Nelson H. Trimble, pastor at Gary, Ind., preached on "Jesus Christ and the Labor Situation" recently treating the subject from a scriptural standpoint.

W. J. Lhamon, who was one of the leading speakers at the indoor Chautauqua held at the Third Church, Indianapolis, Ind., recently, followed this with a week of evangelistic services with this church.

Garry L. Cook, superintendent of Sunday-school work in Indiana, spoke on "The Modern Bible School and the Community" at a recent banquet given by the Loyal Women's Class of Hillside Church, Indianapolis, Ind.

First Church, Saint Louis, is preparing to remain as a place of worship in the downtown district and will be extensively remodeled and repaired. This church is known throughout Missouri and the Mississippi Valley and is a historic structure.

The marriage of Royal L. Handley, formerly office editor of The Christian Century, is an event which this chronicler has overlooked. Mr. and Mrs. Handley are residing in Chicago near the University while he is completing his graduate course there. He preaches each Sunday at Gurnee, Ill.

For some plans for the union of First Church, Grand Rapids, Mich., with a Baptist congregation there have been discussed and favorable progress is being made. The congregation of Lyon St. Church which has had a building project under way, may also consider joining in the union plan. This would give a combined membership of 1,000 persons.

Ministers of the churches in the Calumet region held a meeting with C. J. Sharpe at Hammond, Ind., on Feb. 15, church conditions in that vicinity being discussed. The work at Gary is moving on well under the leadership of Nelson H. Trimble and wife. Mrs. Trimble is now in a successful meeting at Tolleston.

Beginning Feb. 19, Richmond Avenue Church, Buffalo, N. Y. held a week of special dedication services. This congregation has now a well equipped building where much institutional work can be carried forward, and with commodious quarters for the Sunday-school. The pastor, R. H. Miller, was assisted in the dedication services by Z. T. Sweeney and pastors of the neighboring churches.

Because of the nearness in time and place of the Northern Illinois Ministerial Institute and the Congress of Disciples the committee in charge of the Institute has arranged to consolidate with the Congress at Springfield. The Institute will have the opening session, Tuesday afternoon, April 11, and the time will be devoted to the discussion of some ministerial problems and to business.

The Loyal Sons Class of the Litchfield, Ill., Sunday-school has an enrollment of 94 and a splendid progressive spirit prevails among them. Their publicity committee has issued a straightforward, manly letter asking young men to join them and seventy members have responded to this letter. The Litchfield school is a live growing organization having an attendance of about 500.

A meeting of the executive committee and ministers of the seventh district of Missouri was held at St. Joseph, Mo., on Feb. 13 and 14. About thirty pastors were present and encouraging reports were read. The most important item of business was the organization of a district ministerial alliance which will mean much to the coöperative work. I. J. Spencer of Lexington, Ky., who is assisting C. M. Chilton in a meeting at St. Joseph was present and gave an excellent address on "The Place of Christ in Preaching and Life."

The Disciples church at Elliott, Ia., is showing the spririt of fraternity in boosting their Methodist brethren in the latter's building enterprise. In the Central Christian Advocate appears a report of the dedication of the church and an acknowledgement of the good spirit and practical help of the Christian church. The article says: "The people of the Christian church have stood nobly by this enterprise from the start. Many hundreds of the dollars subscribed have come from this people, and so splendidly have they stood by the work, in both sentiment and financial help, that at the evening service the Methodist people by a rising vote and the Chautauqua salute, assured them of return help when in the near future they shall build a house to supplant the building in which they now worship and which has become too small, although it is not an old structure." This kind of spirit among Christian people is the prerequisite to a realization of more ultimate union ideals.

First Church, Joplin, Mo., G. J. Chapman pastor, has been in a meeting with home forces one week. This meeting is primarily for the education of the church members, but it is evident, however, that there will be a number of accessions to the church. The members are encouraged with the attendance of these meetings as this church has been crowded to its limit and many turned away. The church is harmonious, praying earnestly and working together enthusiastically. The local choir is rendering help to the revival. The protestant churches of Joplin have united in an enthusiastic church attendance campaign, systematically arranged. This most practical service will begin by the pastors of the several churches exchanging pulpits. On the evening of Feb. 24, First church is to have a gathering of the old time members, the program being arranged by themselves. This will be a most happy and profitable service. All who were members during J. M. Rudy's pastorate and prior to that time will sit down to supper together in the church parlors. Following the supper an appropriate program wil be rendered in the auditorium and will be open to the public. C. Z. Burr of Kansas City, one of the earliest pastors of the church, will be present and deliver the leading address. Letters from other former pastors will be received and read and some of the charter members of the church will tell of the early struggles and victories of the church.

It is a real accomplishment to state the ideals of the Disciples of Christ in such fashion as to really represent them without reflecting unjustly upon other Christian people. The statement printed on the calendar of the Wilshire Boulevard Church of Los Angeles, W. C. Bower, minister, comes nearer doing this than many others we have seen. It reads as follows:

The Christian Church (Disciples of Christ) stands for:

1. The ultimate and earliest possible union of all the followers of Christ. It believes such union to be both desirable and practicable.
2. As its contribution toward the solution of the problem of Christian unity, it proposes as a basis of unity no credal statement or form of ecclesiastcal organization, but personal faith in the personal Christ.
3. It accepts the Scriptures of the New Testament as its only rule of faith and practice.
4. It is its desire to be free from all denominational bias, and to be known simply as a body of non-sectarian followers of Christ.
5. It is in full accord with all evangelical Christian bodies with reference to the fundamental and common beliefs of Protestant Christianity.
7. In particular, the Wilshire Boulevard Christian Church stands for every neighborhood interest. It will be glad to serve as a medium of neighborhood acquaintance, and to otherwise serve the community in every way within its power.

W. A. Diggins of Colfax, Wash. is holding a meeting at Albion, Wash.

F. J. Stinson of Edwards, Kan., has accepted a call to the pastorate of Stafford, Kan.

A steady, permanent growth marks the progress of the work at Prosser, Wash., where Lee Furgeson ministers. Five were added on Feb. 12.

Andrew P. Johnson, pastor at Chickasha, Okla., is conducting a meeting at Marlow, Okla. He recently concluded a meeting at El Reno with thirty additions.

A. R. Spicer, formerly of Dixon, Ill., is doing a good work at Lawton, Okla. In the ten months of his ministry there, 130 have been added at the regular services.

A missionary rally in the interest of the foreign work was held Feb. 9 at Bethany Church, Evansville, Ind. A. L. Shelton, recently returned from seven years' service in Tibet, was one of the principal speakers.

A movement for an organization of the Sunday-school workers of a number of Protestant churches in Salt Lake City, Utah is under way and enthusiastic meetings have been held recently in Central Church.

The meeting at Carterville, Ill., has been concluded, resulting in seventeen addition. J. E. Pritchett, the pastor, was assisted by Charles E. Mc Vay, who has returned to his home at Hardy, Neb. where he can be reached by those desiring his services.

The board of trustees of the chair of Biblical literature of Drury College, Springfield, Mo., are taking steps toward a permanent organization of that department and to the work of raising a permament endowment fund of $40,000. This department is now in charge of A. P. Finley and under his supervision and instruction. It has increased encouragingly and now has an enrollment of 117 pupils.

C. C. Wilson, of First Church, Milwaukee, reports things "picking up" generally there. A newly launched men's class had Cecil J. Armstrong, of Monroe, Wis., for chief speaker at a banquet recently. The Sunday-school is increasing. A three weeks' meeting will be held before Easter, conducted by the pastor and the Kendalls. May 14-21 will witness their celebration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of First Church.

Second Church (colored) Indianapolis, Ind., was dedicated on Feb. 6. A. L. Orcutt, of the ministerial board of relief and C. C. Smith of Cincinnati, Ohio, secretary of negro work among the Disciples, officiated at the services which were attended by many visitors. The church was erected at a cost of $10,000 and of a remaining indebtedness of $4,000, $2,500 was secured on the day of dedication. H. L. Herod is pastor of this congregation.

Chicago

(Continued from page 19.)

gave up his business entirely and is now devoting all his time to this cause. In this city from Apr. 20-25 will be conducted missionary conferences of this Laymen's movement. These meetings will be held in the north-west and south-east sides of the city, and also in the loop district. Among the speakers will be J. Campbell White of New York and Col. Elijah W. Halford of Washington, D. C. These meetings will give a practical demonstration of how a standard missionary church may be developed.

Thus the extensive National Missionary Campaign of 1909-1910, is to be followed by this intensive educational campaign for the benefit of the men already interested.

At the last regular ministers' meeting the following resolutions relative to George A. Campbell were unanimously adopted.

Resolutions.

Rev. Geo. A Campbell has been identified with the ministry of the Disciples in Chicago for the past fifteen years. He was the first pastor at Douglas Park and since that time for twelve years has been the pastor of the Austin Church. His church was organized under his leadership and has been brought through many difficulties by his devotion and skill and is now self-supporting, united and well housed in a new building.

Mr. Campbell has been an active and helpful member of this Ministers' Association and development of the Disciples Social Union. We deeply regard his removal from Chicago, his withdrawal from our various interests and from our ministerial fellowship; but we wish him the greatest success in his new field at Hannibal, Mo., and pray for the extension there of the same great spiritual urgency and vision which have attended his work in Chicago.

E. S. Ames,
Austin Hunter,
Vaughan Dabney,
Committee.

Indiana Secretary's Letter

An experience of six weeks as missionary secretary has confirmed some definite convictions which I held concerning the scope of the work. I have felt that the position offered an opportunity for a larger service than the mere details of securing the necessary funds to meet the immediate demands. The work should be educational along two lines. First, a missionary propaganda should be persistently followed up through the entire year. The churches should be given a vision of the world-wide missionary enterprise. They ought to have definite knowledge of the opportunities for missionary effort at home and abroad. They need, too, the inspiration and encouragement of the great movements within the church for more effective work among the heathen people. They should also have knowledge of the smaller fields at our own door. The missionary secretary should become a specialist and be able to render assistance to the loyal pastors who are trying to lead their people to a proper appreciation of the real business of the church under the great commission. I fear we do not properly estimate the value of this phase of the work done by our missionary secretaries.

Rev. L. E. Murray, Indiana's New Secretary.

Another subject upon which Christian people need special instruction today is the importance of systematic giving for missions. I believe the efforts of the secretary might be properly directed to this end. When our people can be persuaded to raise their missionary money like they raise the money for local expenses, by weekly contributions, our missionary treasuries will receive dollar where they now receive dimes. This pla will also remove the occasion for the criticism we sometimes hear that there are to many appeals. Instead of the spasmodic occasional giving in response to an earnes appeal from an enthusiast there will be constant stream of revenue without the nec essity of a "special appeal." It will mak it easy to give in much larger sums than w now think possible. Weekly or monthly contributions for missions ought to be urged upon our churches both for their own sake and for the sake of the missionary cause. Many of our best churches have already placed their missionary work on this substantial and sensible basis.

I have another conviction that has been strengthened by my brief experience in this work. I have for a long time been heartily in favor of the unification of our missionary interests as far as practicable and as rapidly as possible. I am convinced that we need to simplify our machinery and bring our forces into closer co-operation.

The state secretary should be concerned for the larger interests of the world-wide field. My own message to the churches is world-wide in its scope. State missions receive proper emphasis as an important part of the larger work comprehended in the Lord's commission to His disciples. Education and agitation along these lines ought to bear fruit in a few years in larger offerings and in the richer spiritual experiences of Christian people.

Education, unification and enlargement would make a good watchword for an aggressive persistent missionary campaign. I pray for grace and wisdom to serve the churches to the glory of the Master in this new field of labor. May I not ask the united prayers of my brethren of the ministry in Indiana that our hopes for larger and better things for Indiana may be fully realized.

MATILDA DODD'S GIFT TO DRAKE UNIVERSITY.

You have all read of the wonderful progress of Drake University, in her caring for over 1,800 students annually and providing for their instruction with a faculty of 160 members. But do you realize that the expense of maintenance exceeds $500.00 per day?

While Gen. Drake so generously gave the school $230.000.00, yet its great success has only been possible by large sacrifices on the part of others. Mrs. Matilda Dodd was the first woman to provide in a large way for its support. She endowed the Matilda Dodd Chair with $50,000.00. Eighteen years ago she began to build up this fund and has not wearied, but almost every year has added to the same. Mrs. Dodd is now 83 and rejoices daily in that she has thus been enabled to encourage and help so many young people to a fuller life of service.

What Sister Dodd has done many others among us can the more readily do. We have been prospered in this goodly land and have enjoyed the blessings that come from trained teachers and ministers, all of whom were educated by the sacrifices of others. What contribution shall we make toward the world's betterment?

To meet the growing demands Drake University must now secure $500,000.00 additional endowment. $100,000.00 of this amount has already been pledged on condition that the balance be raised soon. No other school in the country does so much work with the resources at her command. Her location and opportunities for the future are unequaled. If you wish to give or assist others to help, write today for instructions. Address,

Drake University, Des Moines, Iowa.
J. H. Stockham, Comptroller.

NEWS ITEMS.

The State Convention will be held at Columbus, May 15, 16, and 17.

The semi-annual convention of the churches of Johnson county was held at Franklin, bruary 9. Thirteen of the sixteen churches the county were represented. The state retary was present and addressed the convention. The missionary secretary of the unty was instructed to try to secure an fering from every church in the county for ate missions.

Bartholomew county convention will be ld at Columbus, February 25, to which e secretary has an invitation.

Several preachers have recently come to us om other states. We are glad to welcome em. We need a few more to supply our cant pulpits. Thomas A. Young from nnessee has taken the work at Elkhart d is leading the church to larger things. E. Dubber has come to us from Colorado d has the work well in hand at Bedford. D. Bryant of Virginia takes the work at iddletown. W. T. Walker at Mt. Vernon d S. D. Colyer at Wabash are new men in e state. W. D. Phillips from Ohio is doing ings at Proseyville and expresses an interest the state work.

Andrew Leitch of Butler College takes e work at Danville. J. M. Alexander of urray, Ky., will come to Crawfordsville arch 1. W. G. Johnson will leave Greensurg the first of March.

L. E. MURRAY, Cor. Sec.

Ministerial Relief Notes

The first receipts of the Board of Ministerial Relief for the present year to the permanent fund was the gift of R. A. Long nd family of $500. This is Brother Long's hird contribution to this fund, the total being $2,000. Brother Long was among the rst contributors to this work and has not nly made these contributions to the permanent fund, but has been a faithful and beral supporter in his contributions to the eneral fund.

A few days ago we received from Mrs. arrie S. Sewell of Louisville, Kentucky, 1,000 on the annuity plan. Sister Sewell as wisely invested this sum for her own se while she lives here and also provided or its use in the support of the work of he Lord when she goes to that rest that remaineth to the people of God.

This week through Miss Judson, treasurer f the C. W. B. M., we received from Mrs. Eva E. McElflesh of Centralia, Washington, 100 on the annunty plan. This is a like wise provision in the interest of spiritual business.

Our permanent fund now amounts to $29,-59.32; of this amount $2,800 is annuity noney. Notwithstanding the large Pittsburg Convention receipts last year and the very small Topeka Convention receipts this year, we are at this date about $300 ahead of the same date last year.

Our one dollar a day proposition is working. Don't fail to have your part in the solution of this proposition.

A. L. ORCUTT, President,
Board of Ministerial Relief.

Dallas, Texas, Co-operative Campaign

A city campaign of considerable significance is now on in Dallas, Texas. It gives promise for giving splendid emphasis for Christian union among the Christian churches in the city. It is a coöperative work. The church boards of the city compose the city mission board. One laymen with his substitute and the pastor from every church compose an executive board, which meets every week to plan and push the city evangelization. State Evangelist, W. A. Boggess is superintending and helping to launch thoroughly the campaign, raised $2,500 as a backing for the year's work, help strengthen several of the weaker churches, establish some new ones, and leave the work, thus launched, in the hands of a permanent city evangelist. The campaign began in January and already one of the new churches has been nicely helped forward. A protracted meeting is now in progress at North Dallas Church, conducted by J. O. Shelburne of the Central Church, with the superintendent of the city campaign, to the end that the North Dallas work may be helped forward to an easy basis. Other pastors and evangelists of the city will aid in meetings without cost to the campaign, thus making every meeting pay for itself, as the evangelization proceeds. There are several splendid localities in the city where new plants are expected to be established. A tent is being purchased for use in these meetings. Already over $1500 has been raised. The meeting in the North end progresses nicely, plans for other meetings are being pushed vigorously, splendid enthusiasm prevails and a most telling coöperative work for permament results gives promise of the most successful work in the history of Dallas.

Front Rank Statement

To date there are 634 Front Rank Bible Schools in line. It is encouraging to note that each week the table shows an increase over the preceding week. Some of our schools that receive the certificate with but one seal have been so enthused that they have made special efforts to reach the first five seals. It will be an inspiration to your school to have a Front Rank certificate hung on the walls of your Bible-school room. Your certificate awaits you. Fill out the application blank without further delay and send to your state superintendent or the American superintendent. We are ready to help you in any way if you will let your wants and wishes be known. We ought to have at least one hundred certificates out by this time and we trust you will send in your application just as soon as you have complied with at least one requirement. ROBT. M. HOPKINS,
American Bible School Superintendent.

HIRAM COLLEGE Send for Illustrated Bulletin Souvenir Mailing Card and Complete Catalog to PRES. MINER LEE BATES. HIRAM. O.

YESTERDAY AND TO-DAY IN FOODS.

About a century ago the beneficial effects to the digestion, and the appetite, of foods made from coarse flour was discovered by Dr. Sylvester Graham. Flour thus made was named Graham flour, after Dr. Graham.

In those days Graham flour contained a great deal of nourishment, and stimulated and strengthened digestion and appetite, but was so coarse that it was almost "like taking medicine" to eat it.

But to-day the Graham Crackers baked by the National Biscuit Company have a most delicious nut-like flavor and are a toothsome delicacy as well as being healthful. This is due to perfected modern processes which preserve all the natural goodness, sweetness and healthfulness of the wheat. They are packed by the National Biscuit Company under their well-known In-er-Seal Trade-Mark in moisture- and dust-proof packages, thus retaining crispness and flavor

BOWLDEN BELLS FOR CHURCH AND SCHOOL

Sweet Tone Far Sounding Durable
Catalogue Free.
AMERICAN BELL & FOUNDRY CO., NORTHVILLE, MICH.

BELLS.
Steel Alloy Church and School Bells. Send for Catalogue. The C. S. BELL CO., Hillsboro, O

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS.

UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.
WRITE TO CINCINNATI BELL FOUNDRY CO., CINCINNATI, O.
(Please mention this paper.)

WE READ and clip for you daily everything printed in the current country and city press of America pertaining to the subject of particular interest to you.
NEWSPAPERS contain many items daily which would inform you exclusively of where you can secure new business, an order or a contract; where a new store has been started, a new firm incorporated or a contract is to be let. A daily press clipping service means more business
FOR YOU. Send Stamp for Booklet
THE CONSOLIDATED PRESS CLIPPING CO.
615 North American Bldg., Chicago, U. S. A.

SEND for EASTER SUPPLIES

The new Easter Cantata entitled
"THE EASTER HEART"
was written by
MRS. JESSIE BROWN POUNDS
and is in some respects the best concert exercise that she has ever prepared. It is designed for use by the young people of the Churches of Christ in behalf of Orphanage work in Mission fields.

We have some very attractive helps to aid the young people in raising their Easter offering. These are an "Easter Egg Envelope," and an "Easter Heart;" the latter is a little blood-red heart containing 100 golden stars, and is to be worn as a badge of service by a boy or girl while raising an Easter offering.

Order as many of all these supplies as you will need. They will be sent, prepaid free of charge. Address,
CHRISTIAN WOMAN'S BOARD OF MISSIONS
(YOUNG PEOPLE'S DEPARTMENT)
Missionary Training School Indianapolis, Ind.

Books
WHEN YOU WANT BOOKS
Send your order to us. We handle the books of all publishers, at the lowest prices. Your order will be promptly attended to.
THE NEW CHRISTIAN CENTURY COMPANY
700 East Fortieth Street - - - - Chicago, Ill.

Portland, 1911

The executive committee of the 1911 convention to be held in Portland, Ore., has established temporary headquarters at the First Christian Church, 292 Park Street. All communications concerning convention matters may be sent to the secretary at that address.

Letters of inquiry and requests for literature have already begun to come in. Oklahoma and North Carolina are among the first heard from. Judging from this there is to be a widespread representation. Doubtless many from the Eastern and Southern extremities of our country will avail themselves of this rare opportunity to visit the great Northwest.

On the lips of the old settlers on this coast one often hears the expression, "Back in the states" used in reference to the lands east of the Rockies. To the newcomer it sounds queer at first, and like a relic of the days when these lands of the setting sun were not numbered among the "states" of the union.

Think of the vast empire which is here represented! Think of the wonderful resources that have already been developed; and who cannot foresee the time when vast millions will some day people its hills and valleys, and make glad its waste places.

The last census reveals the fact that great streams of humanity are pouring into this section. They come from all places, from the bleak New England coast to the orange groves of Florida; from the great inland states—everywhere in fact.

We, of the church of the living Christ, believe that we should be on the alert for Him whose servants we are.

We are anxious that this inviting, prosperous land shall be His. The future welfare of His kingdom is in the hands of the men and women of this generation. The Northwest of the next generation will be largely what we make it. We as a people have just celebrated our 100th anniversary, yet there never has been a gathering of our missionary forces in the Pacific Northwest in all this time; only once has there been such a convention on this entire coast, and that six years ago. How much we need the inspiration of these great throngs in this remote section of our land! We are anxious that the western people shall see us at our best.

So many people fail to realize the newness of things in this western country and how rapidly things must move to keep pace with the development of new towns and cities which spring into existence as if by magic. Here are vast fields of opportunity for the church of Christ. Frontier work calls loudly for the helping hand.

Then, too, side by side with the work of the few self-sustaining churches of the large cities is the mission church with its crying needs. We must plant good strong churches and build suitable church houses in all these needy places if we are to hold our own.

A woman from one of our best churches in one of the large cities of the Middle West came to Portland recently, and was very much surprised to find that we had no great churches and no costly houses of worship belonging to our people. She visited first one church, then another, and drew comparisons between conditions here and "back home." She missed the great throng and the numerous accessories of the strong church. She could not feel at home—and so dropped out of sight to join the vast army of those who never identify themselves with the young and struggling band in a new and difficult field. This is by no means an isolated case. It is true of thousands who are lost absolutely to the church.

We are hoping that the convention of this year will strengthen our cause on this entire coast. THOMAS G. PICTON, Sec'y.

292 Park Street,
Portland, Oregon.

Good Meeting at Marshalltown, Iowa

The Central Church of Christ of this city closed today a glorious meeting. The evangelist was R. W. Abberley and J. Ross Miller was leader of song. Almost everything that could made a meeting a failure was encountered. The meeting began with the minister and his wife both sick in bed. Several nights in the height of the meeting both evangelists were sick in bed. The preaching on these nights was done by the minister, and additions were made in spite of the handicap, for these men do not make additions to themselves but to the Lord and His word.

The visible results of the four weeks follow: In all there were 90 additions. Of this number 26 were by letter, 62 by confession, 15 from the denominations, 69 were adults, 35 were men. The church is greatly strengthened, not only by the additions, but by the splendid gospel preaching of Mr. Abberley. He is a master of the Gospel, believes and preaches it all, and never leaves a quibble in the mind of any of his hearers as to the truth of his teaching. He shows the greatest regard for the convictions of others, yet convinces the people of the error of creeds. The audiences were twice the size of any other meeting ever held by this church.

Mr. Miller is a splendid soloist and song leader. No church can do better than to secure these two men to help in evangelistic work. Had we been able to carry on this meeting without the handicap of sickness a great many more would undoubtedly have been won. The church here has what all who see it pronounce the best and most complete building in our brotherhood. The congregation is a unit and happy in its work. We are looking forward to a great work together.

C. H. MORRIS.

Notes From the Foreign Society

A large number of churches are making the every member canvass for the March offering. This method is proving to be a great success. The plan is to have a strong missionary committee and then have this committee together with other canvassers go out two by two and visit the entire membership.

H. C. Saum reports four baptisms in one of the villages near Bilaspur, India. He reports the work in the villages much advanced.

H. P. Williams baptized our first converts at Manila, P. I., August 21, 1902. Since that time about five-thousand have become obedient to the gospel. A great work has been done with only a small missionary force, and a comparatively small outlay of money.

January 10, 1911, the new church at Pasuquin, Philippine Islands, was dedicated by F. M. Rains. This was his first experience in this service in the Orient. We are not advised as to the amount of money raised on this occasion. He married a young Philipino couple in the church on the same day.

Our missionaries first preached the gospel at Laoag, P. I., January 29. 1903. W. H. Hanna baptised the first convert. Now we have about twenty churches in that region. The work is growing in every direction. The great need is well trained evangelists. This need will be met as we develop and equip our training schools.

The Damoh, India, Orphanage makes a fine showing for Christian work done. During the years from 1894 to 1910 one hundred and sixty-one boys were "settled" that is, they went out to their life work. Of this number one hundred and thirty-four were Christians. The total number enrolled during the six years above mentioned were six hundred and twenty-three, and of this number three hundred and fifty-seven were baptised. Sixteen went to the Bible College, and nineteen became teachers. Of course, many died and some did not succeed. However, a great work has been done for which we should praise the Lord.

The Christian mission in Manila, P. I. could use to great advantage any Sunday-school picture cards or charts that might be out of date for the churches in the States. We are greatly in need of these things. Anyone desiring to help in this way should address Miss Mamie Longan, 608 Azcarraga St., Manila, P. I.

Cincinnati, O. STEPHEN J. COREY, Sect.

A Little Nonsense

The Witching Hour.

Claire—"Jack told me he wanted to see you the worst possible way."

Ethyl—"And what did you say?"

Claire—"I told him to come to breakfast some morning."—Brooklyn Life.

The Reform He Needed.

Earnest but Prosy Street-corner Orator—"I want land reform; I want housing reform; I want educational reform; I want—"

Bored Voice—"Chloroform."—Manchester

Taking Father's Job.

"Why should you beg? You are both young and strong."

"That is right, but my father is old and unable to support me."

No Trouble at All.

"Have any serious trouble with your new automobile?" "Not a bit. So far I haven't hit a single man without being able to get away before he got my number."—Cleveland Leader.

Bethany Graded Lessons

CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON, Editor

International Interdenominational

Sixteen denominations have united to prepare a non-sectarian body of literature for the new Graded Lessons authorized by the International Committee. Complete editorial rights belong to the Disciples in this great united enterprise.

The result is a most practical, fascinating, scientific and artistic series of lesson helps for teachers and pupils.

Disciples of Christ have a signal opportunity to practice Christian union by the use of the Bethany Graded Lessons.

Send today for prospectus.

The New Christian Century Co
700 E. Fortieth St. CHICAGO.

The CHRISTIAN CENTURY

Bible College Library
Mar 12 '11

Volume XXVIII. March 9, 1911 Number 10

A Humbled Nation

Editorial

Baptism and Fellowship

By Rev. W. L. Hayden

A Veiled God

By Rev. T. E. Winter

THE NEW CHRISTIAN CENTURY COMPANY
700-714 East Fortieth Street Chicago, Illinois

The Christian World

A Department of Interdenominational Acquaintance.

Baptist

Men like the late Edward Goodman, who died Feb. 14, 1911, are the glory of the church. His colaborers pay tribute to him as "publisher, denominational leader, Christian." He was a member of the First Church of Chicago from Sept. 1, 1856 to the day of his death. From 1853 to 1901 he was part proprietor of The Standard and he labored with zeal and patience to produce a paper worthy of the denomination he loved. He knew how to give encouragement to his pastor. Young ministers found in him a helpful friend. As trustee of the Baptist Theological Union and as trustee of the University of Chicago he was found faithful. His faithfulness was not that of the man who is satisfied with attention to the forms of service but that of one who gives time and strength for the promotion of the enterprises committed to his charge. "To Mr. Goodman," says the editor of The Standard, "the life of Christ's disciple meant service and having found the place where he could serve he stood fast."

* * *

July, 1813, Adoniram Judson landed in Burma and began the work of American Baptists in that oldest of Baptist mission fields. The Judson Centennial campaign will be inaugurated in a great public service in New York, March 16, under the auspicies of the Judson Centennial Commission. The missionaries of Burma have appointed a committee of fifteen, including missionaries and native converts, which has proposed a tentative plan for the celebration in Burma of the centennial of Judson's landing. They propose that meetings be held at Rangoon, Mandalay, Ava, and other places, that a memoir of Judson be prepared in Burmese and Karen, and that $33,000 be collected to strengthen the work in Burma.

The Church in India

A few weeks ago Lord Curzon, in his rectoral address in Glasgow, expressed his opinion that the East is unlikely to accept Christianity. One reason for this opinion was that the East sees in Christianity something hostile to that revival of self-consciousness which the man of the East holds as his dearest possession. Sir Andrew Fraser, ex-governor of Bengal, who has spent thirty-seven years in the service of the Crown in India, promptly replied to Lord Curzon in these words:

Lord Curzon has forgotten the progress of events. He has gone back to something that he read long ago about missions or something that was written of the beginnings of mission work. There was a time when missionaries thought that Christianity was English, and they went forward with the determination to teach nothing but the English language. But all that has passed away. Missionaries do not now call on native Christians to drop their nationality when they are baptized. Surely no man who has studied Christianity believes that any man of any nation is called on to drop his nationality when he is called on to acknowledge Christ.

The men of India, according to Sir Andrew Fraser, are demanding the Christian Scriptures as a result of the revival of self-consciousness. The Indian Church has developed into "a self-supporting, self-propagating and self-governing church." In his book, "Among Indian Rajahs and Ryots," the same authority says:

I belive that the influence of Christianity is growing in a most remarkable manner. There is an opportunity now such as never before existed. There is toleration, nay, rather a welcoming, of Christian teaching which is without precedent. I think this opportunity exists as much among the higher and more educated as among the depressed and ignorant classes.

The Downtown Church

"I'm tired of inspirational addresses—I want to know how to get on to the job." With this enphatic statement from a prominent Chicago laymen Charles Stelzle begins his account of the conferences he has been holding on the downtown church problem. The same practical demand is thus expressed, "It's a good thing to hear what our missionaries are doing among exceptional populations in this and other countries, but we want direction in the work that we should be doing right in this town and in our own communities." The Presbyterians, as the article in The Continent shows, have made some serious attempts to solve the downtown problems of the church. Mr. Stelzle's own conclusions are in part as follows:

It becomes quite clear in the discussion that the downtown church must give the entire church its modern message to the masses. Here the ecclesiasticism and formalism which have crept into the church must be eliminated, and the pure, strong note of hope and good cheer must be sounded. This means a return to the fundamentals of the gospels and the setting aside of non-essentials in the doctrines of the church. The church must restate its position in the language which the man on the street can understand.

It was also very apparent that the solution of the downtown problem is largely —indeed, almost entirely—a question of leadership. It is principally a matter of securing the right kind of men to do the work. The ordinary minister has not been trained to do it. It requires a postgraduate course in a highly specialized school to fit him for the executive and social tasks by which he is confronted in the city.

Toronto Church Census

A census of the religious forces of Toronto shows that the church of England leads with 79,906 adherents, the Methodists follow with 59,881 and the Presbyterians with 58,138. There are 30,542 Roman Catholics, 17,889 Baptists, 10,595 Jews, 3,753 Congregationalists, 2,499 members of the Salvation Army, and 342 Unitarians.

Haeckel on Church and State

Professor Ernst Haeckel is not generally considered an advocate of pure and undefiled religion. When the announcement was made recently of his withdrawal from the Lutheran Church, many people were surprised to learn that he had not long ago separated himself from the church. His withdrawal was a protest against the union of church and state. His feeling is thus stated:

Thus the separation of church and state, and also the absolute separation of church and school, appear to be more pressingly presented to us than ever before. In many civilized countries this separation, most important and useful to the state and the school, has been long ago effected; in Germany, on the contrary, it stumbles over the most stiff-necked opposition. We must now more than ever seek by every lawful means in our power to bring about this separation. For now the mighty power of the Catholic and Evangelical clergy, by a close union with the reactionary feudal nobility, is strengthened to a most dangerous degree. Both use in true Jesuitical way the cloak of religion for the veiling of their selfish interests and their lust of power. The notorious Black-Blue Block threatens the foundation of our mental and spiritual freedom. Although these political considerations are for me by far the most powerful motives for consequent present withdrawal from the church, yet they are re-enforced by a sense of disgust at the sham-holy hypocrisy and the old Byzantine sneaking, cringing treachery, which in the splendors of the showy new emperor-throne threatens to lead us all to a general and dangerous demoralization. This compulsory education into an external church-doom destroys the noblest qualifications for any true and inward religion.

United Presbyterian

Cheap wits in the church and out of it have made their jokes about the contribution box. Even serious minded disciples of the Lord have been known to speak lightly of it. To the covetous man who has not lost all sense of shame the contribution box is a cause of distress. "But the truth is," says the United Presbyterian, "that this same contribution box has served a magnificant purpose in this world, and is even now so inextricably mixed up with church life and activity that it is absolutely essential to the continuance of the existence and influence of the church." "The hope of the world lies in the contribution box." Its usefulness is thus described:

The contribution box is a means of grace. It is twice that. It is a means of grace to those whom it enriches, for, in spite of all that the jokers have said, it has made multitudes of people rich toward God, and it has so transformed their lives as to make them rich in worldly things. By giving the Gospel to men who were in darkness, it has opened their eyes; it has healed the hurt in their hearts; it has blessed the world with freedom; it has deluged the world with light; it has stayed the hearts of the people with hope; it has purified the world with the word of God, redeemed it with the cross of Calvary, and soothed it with infinite love. If the ballot box is the palladium of our liberty, and the jury box of our rights, then is the contribution box the paladium of the world's happiness. But it is also a means of grace to those who contribute. Giving is a grace that lifts us up into the likeness of and fellowship with God.

* * *

The idea that denominationalism is wasteful and sinful is not the peculiar property of any one religious body. The conviction is gaining ground everywhere that some way must be found by which the confusion of division can be lessened. Prof. J. E. Wishart, writing in the United Presbyterian takes issue with those who believe denominational divisions make for efficiency. He says:

The assertion that our denominational divisions make Christian work more effective, is one that likewise needs to be proved. Of course the church is an army, and an army needs to be organized; healthy emulation among the different divisions is of value, to be sure; but all that could be realized in a united church. That congregations of the same community are likely to have some spirit of rivalry is all too true, and this spirit is increased by the fact that they do not bear the same name and subscribe to the same creed. I doubt whether this spirit is healthy or even Christian, as it is usually developed by our denominational system. Too often there is strife and jealousy and gossip in larger measure than provocation to love and good works. Indeed neighboring churches of the same creed have enough of this spirit of rivalry in both its good and bad aspects to show that sectarianism is not necessary in order to maintain it. S. J.

Mary, Mary, take the parrot down-stairs at once. The master has lost his collar button."—The Christian Register.

The Christian Century
CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON AND HERBERT L. WILLETT, ... EDITORS

An Instructive and Hopeful Parallel

A striking coincidence of view was disclosed recently by The Christian Evangelist and The Christian Century. A series of fifteen questions was submitted to both papers, neither being informed that the other had received them. Curiously enough their answers were published simultaneously. Some of these questions go to the root of our conception of the Disciples' mission and of the policy by which they can best realize that mission.

A comparison of the respective replies reveals a number of very encouraging arguments. We advise our readers who have access to the Christian Evangelist to make a comparison in detail. The first question was the most crucial of the lot. The treatment of it by the Christian Evangelist is so significant and heartening that it deserves to be lifted out of the obscure corner in which it appeared and given the most prominent position in the paper—perhaps just above the bumptious motto with the spirit of which it is in so decided contrast.

The question as submitted to both papers reads, "Are we, the Disciples of Christ, a denomination?" Both as a study in coincident expression, and as an encouragement to our readers who are growing familiar with the point of view involved, we reproduce both answers in parallel columns.

The Christian Evangelist.

It depends on the sense in which the word "denomination" is used. In the sense popularly attributed to the word,—that of a distinct body of religious people holding to certain distinctive principles,—we are, of course, a denomination. If, however, the term signifies a distinct religious body, based on principles which are denominational in their character, instead of catholic and universal, in that sense we have sought not to be a denomination. How far we may have failed in this effort, time will tell. It is at least creditable that we have aspired to occupy undenominational ground. But we should be humble in our claims in this respect, and very teachable in learning from others who attempt to show us wherein our basis is denominational.

The Christian Century.

The test of our denominational character does not lie in these things, [journals, colleges, societies, property, etc.] but in our attitude toward the principle of division whereon the denominational order is based. The united church, when it comes, will have machinery and colleges and property and all such, but it will not on that account be a denomination. A denomination accepts the denominational order and justifies its own exclusiveness—the Episcopalian denomination because it possesses the historic episcopate, the Presbyterian denomination on the ground of its creed and polity, the Baptist denomination because of its dogma of immersion, and so forth. Unlike them, the Disciples protest against the denominational order and strive to practice Christian unity. If they have not yet attained in practice to their ideal, if they, like the denominations, arrogate to themselves the right to select from among Christ's people those whom they will fellowship and reject others, they have not yet shaken off denominationalism. But in their long-accustomed and persistent sensitiveness to being called a denomination lies the hope that their ideal will yet be realized in practice.

* * *

The Christian Century is well convinced that the most important words the Disciples of Christ can say to themselves just now are the words reproduced in either of the above columns. The question whether or not we are a denomination is pregnant with the most far-reaching issues. In other days it was a favorite question in our discussions. In recent years it has been laid on the shelf and only brought into our controversies with a sly wink of sophistication and superiority by those partisans who have smugly decided that we are, of course, a denomination.

But it is by no means a dead issue. It is still the most radical question the Disciples can put to themselves.

If our answer is, "Yes, we are a denomination," we betray the fact that we have succumbed to the temptation inherent in our numerical prosperity, the success of our organization and our evangelism. We frankly confess to our failure, whether through inablity or apostasy, to practice Christian union.

If our answer is, "No, we are not a denomination," we classify ourselves inevitably with those denominational dogmatists who make the Bible and their understanding of the Bible identical, and the will of Christ and their understanding of his will identical. And this kind of denominationalism is the hardest-shelled of all.

In either of these answers the historic goal of the Disciples of Christ is defeated.

* * *

But if instead of answering the question by yes or no, our reply is, "We are striving not to be a denomination," we have left the way open for our goal to be truly attained. In the spirit of this answer we recognize that, living in the midst of a denominationally organized church we may unwittingly be found acting in some points on the denominational principle.

Perhaps we have not yet entirely shaken off denominational practices. But by such an answer we pledge ourselves to abandon every such practice whenever we see its denominational character. We believe the principle underlying the denominational order is anti-Christ, and in loyalty to our Master we cannot consent to participate in it.

This conception of the Disciples leaves the way open for continuous revision of our views and practices, for new adjustments as conditions change, as the temper of the religious world changes and as new light breaks from the word of God.

This is the answer of open-mindedness, of true discipleship. It forbids dogmatism. It implies no fixed, ingeniously contrived "platform." And perhaps more important than all else, it rolls away that unendurable burden of providing, this far in advance, an "ultimate basis" of union for all the people of God. Our task is much simpler: it is to strive now to practice undenominational Christianity in all our relations with Christ's people.

* * *

The sense of the immediate possibility of Christian union for all who wish truly to practice it, is the distinctive quality of the Disciple's plea and spirit. With others, Christian unity is a far-off divine event. With Disciples it is an instant duty and privilege. We do not need to wait for "time to tell" us whether or not we have succeeded in practicing unity . It is our duty to know now. Time will not tell us anything about our present duty.

Nor do we need to wait for "time to tell" us whether our present practice will be the ultimate basis of unity; we can safely enough predict that it will not be the ultimate basis. But the admission that the present practice of Christian union is not ultimate in nowise invalidates it as the present duty.

* * *

The Christian Century can hardly refrain from calling attention to the basic position this conception holds in its interpretation of the ideals of the Disciples. To this paper this conception is not an incidental sentiment to be contradicted, perhaps, on another page or when the writer is in a less humble mood. It is fundamental and far-reaching. It is the logical first premise of all our thought about the Disciples. It is the essence of our definition of this brotherhood. In nearly every issue we are saying that the Disciples of Christ are those Christians who believe in the practicability and duty of Christian union and strive to practice it.

In this striving to practice Christian union the Disciples have abandoned many denominational characteristics:

They have abandoned denominational creeds.

They have abandoned denominational names.

They have abandoned denominational forms of baptism.

They have abandoned denominational communion.

But they have not yet abandoned denominational membership.

Whereas they assume authority to select from among Christ's people those whom they will admit to the fellowship of their churches, rejecting others, they are yet, so far forth, denominational in their practice.

This practice, too, will be abandoned with all others of like sectarian character. We have not already attained our ideal—an undenominational church of Christ—neither are we already perfect, but we strive on, that we may apprehend that for which, as a people, we were apprehended by Christ Jesus.

Social Survey

BY ALVA W. TAYLOR

Union Indeed

[Professor Taylor's conception of the word "social," frankly includes Christian missions. His survey of missionary progress in the issue of February 9, was a veritable thesaurus of information. Last week's discussion of unity on the mission field is resumed in this issue and will be continued next week, accompanied by an editorial interpretation.—THE EDITORS.]

The union of denominational families is not final. It is a step forward, but it preserves all the main lines of division. Geographical union, or that union between neighboring churches which crosses all lines of division is union indeed. The Centenary Conference at Shanghai declared that "in planting the Church of Christ on Chinese soil we desire only to plant one church, under the sole control of the Lord Jesus Christ." It set about seeking to realize its declaration by organizing "The Christian Federation of China" to "encourage the sentiment and practice of union" and "to hasten the establishment of the kingdom of God in China." They appointed committees to stimulate sub-denominational unities and to organize all possible forms of interdenominational effort. In Japan, the Evangelical Alliance is being reorganized into a like federation. At Nairobe, in East Africa, eight missions met in such an effort, and they represented the widest kind of variants. In West China, this plan of an advisory council has been tried ten years and it has issued now a declaration favoring "one Protestant Christian Church for West China." They practice a free exchange of members by granting letters just as the churches of one communion do, and even the Baptists join in the fraternal concord of it. In India, after resolutions had been passed by nearly every mission in the land, praying and pledging for union, a great conference was held at Jubbulpore in 1909, in which all the great bodies working in the empire, except the Episcopalian, Lutheran and Baptist, united. The Federation of Christian Churches in India was organized. It welcomes to membership "all churches and societies that believe in God through Jesus Christ . . . and that accept the Word of God as contained in the Old and New Testament . . . as the supreme rule of faith and practice." They appointed provincial councils, after the order of the Chinese, as unifying committees and directed them to procure union in work wherever possible, to cultivate a sense of oneness in the native mind and to make an effort to provide for mutual exchange of members between all mission churches. But the most notable example is that of the South India United Church. The Congregational bodies of South India had united previously to 1907. In that year they invited the Presbyterian bodies to affiliate with them. The latter accepted the overture and asked for release from the synod of the Presbyterian Church of India. This was granted and a union church of 140,000 members was organized under the above name. Today the Lutheran and German Reformed churches are negotiating for a place in the new union church. This is significant because it is accomplished in the oldest of all Protestant mission fields and the one that has been most continuously and successfully worked. It gives hope that like periods of occupation and growing strength of native churches will bring the same consummation in every mission field.

The Lines of Least Resistance

The question of union is not one of more love and fealty to Christ so much as it is one of less love and fealty to the denomination. The plea that the various denominations present various phases of truth that fit the demands of various types of mind, falls down utterly before the facts. We do not find nearly so much of "various types of mind" in the various churches as we do a system of indoctrination and an unthinking acceptance of the church that one happened to be born in or that happened to catch and challenge attention. On the mission field the practice of delimitation of territory annuls such a plea. If Methodists should have one province in the Philippines and the Baptists another, is it because the people of one province are better reached by Methodist polity and another by Baptist immersion? It is simply because the two churches are there, and when they meet the real problem they find one quite as godd as the other for solving it. Missions are saddled with our home divisions and are trying to meet the issue on the lines of least resistance. They parcel out the territory because there is enough for all and denominational loyalties do not require that they overlap for the sake of getting work to do. They find it easy to pray together, so where they are near one another they do so, and union prayer-meetings are the rule on the mission fields. There are schools in China and India where they meet to study the language together. Mission presses are finding no denominational limits necessary, and there are not only union publication houses but denominational presses are working for all societies. Books are translated by union committees and used by all. Hymn books are issued for common use in Japan and West China and many other fields are moving for the same usage. Year books are issued by the united missions of Japan, West China and South India. The Chinese Recorder and Missionary Journal, the West China Missionary News, and the United Church Herald of South India are union papers, and many other journals are co-operative in their contributions. In every mission field union conferences are held and common problems discussed.

Breaking Down the Walls of Division

Union will not be the thing of a day nor will it ever be effected by resolution. It will not come by ecclesiastical agreement, but through the gradual drawing together of the churches, under the inspiration of a great common objective and through the actual co-operation in common tasks. The walls of division were builded high and like battlements. The overwhelming need of the missionary task is drawing all workers into a fellowship in the common task. There are yet missionaries who are not ready to declare for union, but only for unity. The Episcopalians have rarely united in even real unity work. They are not in the Indian Federation nor the Philippine agreement for the delimitation of territory. Lutherans have not gone far in union work, and Baptists, especially our Southern Baptists, usually hold aloof. But great conferences like the Decennial Conference of India, the fourth of which will be held next year; the South African General Conference, three of which have already been held; the Shanghai Conference; the many smaller national and provincial associational meetings; the city associations that are organized in almost every city missionary center; the sectional conferences, such as those on woman's work, on medical, industrial and educational work, and the great international conference on work among the Mohammedans, all steadily break down the walls. They make missionaries acquainted with one another and impress them with the common problem and the power of united effort. Boards of Arbitration are appointed in India, West China, and South Africa. In the first, thirty missions co-operate, and all Boards but those of the Episcopal and American Baptists join. In the second, all missions co-operate, and in the last, all but the Episcopal. These Boards prevent duplication of effort and prevent all friction. Bishop Selwyn started things right in the South Seas by insisting that there was room for all without duplication. There each denomination has usually been left to its own territory. In the Philippines, all but the Episcopalians have entered the "Iglesia Evangelica" and divide the field. In Japan, all but the High Church Anglican and American Episcopalians are in the union for the promotion of "The Christian Movement in Japan." In Korea, the Methodist and Presbyterian missions have divided the land and each transferred to the other all members in the territories assigned, and that without friction. The next great question is that of mutual reception of church letters. In West China it is operative. India is pushing for it. It is inevitable in every field where the churches are scattered and the impact of heathenism so great that to leave a man out of direct church relationship means almost certain loss of his life to the old heathenism.

The Unifying Power of a Great Objective

One of the dramatic moments of the Edinburgh Conference was when a Chinaman addressed the gathering with his plea for union, reminding us that it mattered not what our traditional differences meant to us, they meant nothing to China. The old is breaking up and the new is coming in like a flood-tide. China needs a united church to help cement her national unity and so does India. She needs the ideals of unity, and Christianity needs to present a solid front for the task before it. We must not allow "National Churches" to spring up else we shall see them weighted down with the philosophies of Orientalism and become degenerate, as have the old Coptic and Armenian churches. To avoid it, the church must be found truly international. In this time of universal and world movements, we need a world-wide church to fight the battles of peace with the weapons of peace. Bishop Roots says we must lead the Chinese churches into union or forfeit our leadership. In Japan, the Independent churches are for a union of all the Protestant bodies and as the missions become self-supporting churches they will doubtless banish the distinctions we impose upon them and unite. Their only danger is that of a "National" or established church. Our federation movements may well lead us to ask if there is really anything involved that makes federation possible and organic union impossible. Our denominational units are survivals. Each arose by contending for something that has practically become common property of all today. We are preserving the forms while having given the spirit to all Christendom. Polities and creedal differences will be barriers yet, but not insuperable barriers once we have great enough an objective. Jesus prayed for the oneness of his disciples that the world might believe that he was sent of God for its salvation. Whenever Christendom comes to care more for the salvation of the world than it does for saving it through stated creeds and by certain denominational loyalties, it will find the common ground quite broad enough for the task. The Edinburgh Commission on Co-operation and Union found many difficulties in the way of union, but declared that somewhere beneath them all must be found the deeper unities and the true spirit of Christ, in which alone we can answer his prayer.

Editorial Table Talk

United Action for Christian Journalism

Four churches of West Pullman (Chicago) held a union meeting last Sunday evening on behalf of religious journalism. The Methodist pastor preached the sermon taking as his text, "Thou shalt love God with all thy mind." Upon it he based a strong appeal for the habitual reading of Christian literature in the home, especially a Christian weekly paper devoted to current progress and thought in the church. The four pastors had secured bundles of sample copies of their denominational papers, distributed them to their respective flocks and then and there started a campaign for subscriptions. Charles A. Pierce, pastor of the Disciples' church, will gather a good list of subscribers for The Christian Century and perhaps other papers. This is putting the religious paper in the place it deserves in the church's thought. A good Christian paper keeps the congregation in touch with the wider Christian world and interprets local events and problems in the light of the common task of the kingdom of God. It is the pastor's best assistant if he learns to make use of it. There should be a Christian newspaper day in the church's calendar, when the pastor should present the church paper privilege with the same urgency as that which characterizes a missionary or evangelistic appeal. And if this cause of Christian journalism can be pleaded in an enthusiastic union meeting, so much the better.

Good Chances For Two Illinois Cities

Two Illinois cities, Springfield and Chicago, have the past week, had significant experiences. The capital city chose her list of nominees for the four commissionerships under her new form of government. It is reported that of the eight nominees, six are men of the highest probity and ability. The two nominees for mayor offer the people a fair chance to vote for either a gangster or an out and out public servant. In Chicago the direct primary law was tried out for the first time in a mayoralty campaign. On the democratic side there were three candidates. Mr. Graham, the avowed candidate of the organization, is said to have spent close to $150,000 in the most extravagant efforts at getting the nomination ever seen in this city. Mr. Dunne, ex-mayor and champion of municipal ownership, and Mr. Harrison, also an ex-mayor, were the other candidates. The latter won over the former by a plurality of less than 2,000, while Mr. Graham was left far behind both of his competitors.

In the Republican party a most significant fight was waged. Mr. Merriam, professor in the University of Chicago, city alderman for a term, chairman of a commission to investigate public expenditures—a commission that did what it was appointed to do and with startling results—this Mr. Merriam was nominated over four other candidates by a long lead over his nearest competitor. The voters in April will thus have a chance to elect a new type of mayor for this metropolis. Mr. Merriam announces, as he begins his campaign, that he will direct it himself, instead of committing his prospects to the Republican organization.

One of the almost pathetic features of the campaign was the quiet way in which it was assumed all around that the present mayor would not again be a candidate.

The Moral Leadership of a Great Newspaper

Every right-minded citizen who has been following the progress of the Lorimer case in the United States Senate will feel like extending an appreciative word to the Chicago Tribune for its whole-souled, persistent, courageous and consummate conduct of this affair from the very start. It will be recalled that it was due to the Tribune's initiative that the confession of Charles A. White was given to the public. This confession brought down the others like a row of ten pins. The Tribune has quailed before no risk. It has far outstripped the officers of the law in exploring the dark mazes of these unspeakable transactions. It brought an interpreting insight to the facts as they were gradually disclosed, which kept their moral aspect constantly before the people. In doing so the Tribune and the press generally has developed a conscious moral standard by which to judge political affairs, higher and more clean-cut than public intelligence possessed before. The Lorimer case has thus been a moral education. This defining of the people's thought and quickening of the people's conscience is more important than the unseating of Mr. Lorimer would have been. In the end it will make impossible many Lorimers. If it has not provided the cure for this one case it will provide prevention for many others in the future. Despite our humbling as a nation, we see more clearly than ever the wide extent and nature of the moral malady that afflicts us. And that is, for Americans, the sure guarantee of an effective remedy!

Times Have Surely Changed

No alert pastor will overlook the extraordinary opportunity offered by the six successive prayer-meeting topics now current for broadening the minds of his people and advancing the cause of unity. After all's said, the basic difficulty in the way of union is lack of acquaintance. As denominations we are strangers to one another. Our denominational machinery and newspapers tend to keep us provincial, clannish. When the committee on topics for the midweek service outlined this course of study and appreciation of the great evangelical denominations they rendered a service as important as it was brave. Now that the course is on the calendar it should not be touched merely with the pastor's finger tips. Here is a chance for him to refresh and deepen his own knowledge of church history in his preparation for leadership of these meetings. He can hardly afford to read less than one book on each denomination. A number of requests have come to this office for advice as to literature. For popular and yet fairly thorough treatment there is nothing better than The Story of the Churches series published by Baker and Taylor, giving a volume to each of the denominations. Any moderately thoughtful layman would read these volumes as eagerly as a novel if they were once put into his hand. Dr. Gates' "Story of the Disciples" in this series is the most readable history of the Disciples yet put out.

The mood in which this study is to be undertaken is especially fortunate. Each theme is the acknowledgement of a "debt"—"Our Debt to Lutheranism," etc. This puts the student on the lookout for the good to praise, not for the bad to criticise. Thus the attitude of appreciation and unity will be cultivated. The plan adopted by Rev. O. F. Jordan in Evanston, Chicago, described on another page is worthy of emulation in any community.

Surely we have gone a long way from the old habits of "fighting the sects." And God be thanked that we have!

A Question of the Largest Service

In the Missionary Intelligencer for March, appears an earnest protest by Rev. J. E. Lynn, of Pueblo, against further participation by Pres. A. McLean in missionary rallies. His point is well taken. The two and three months of onerous traveling in the long itinerary, subjected to irregularities of eating and sleeping, combined with the many small tasks of drudgery involved in the exhibit and other preparations is a self-imposed discipline in which President McLean has more than served his time. It is not a question of mere dignity, however, as Mr. Lynn points out, but of larger service. Mr. McLean should be set free henceforth to serve his brethren by his pen. In the years of practical secretarial administration the president of the Foreign Missionary Society has marvelously kept a growing mind. The temptation inherent in every secretary's life to become a mere machinist has been in his case successfully resisted. He has ever been a man of books. He has read widely, in all fields of human interest. A college professor is not more up-to-date in his knowledge of current literature and event than he. He has taken and held consistently the world view. Human problems have occupied him more than the petty technical discussions of ecclesiastics. If he has kept the windows of his soul open in all directions his brethren have come to feel that he has tarried longest at the window opening toward Jerusalem. The spiritual quality of all his writings, his talkings and his pleadings for missionary response is distinctive. Without withdrawing him from his practical direction of the Foreign society, The Christian Century joins with Mr. Lynn in the hope that he may be given more leisure to impart the inspiration of his rich experience and knowledge to the brotherhood which he has served and led with more distinction than any man in the last generation.

Bishop Anderson's Vision of Unity

An audience of twenty-five hundred people heard Bishop Charles P. Anderson on "A Vision of Christian Unity" in Orchestra Hall, Chicago, a week ago Sunday night. Bishop Anderson's forceful and broad-visioned address on this theme at the Laymen's Missionary Congress last May brought him into such prominence as an advocate of unity that he was made chairman of the committee for enlisting Christendom in a world conference on unity, a committee appointed by the Episcopal convention last October. The address at Orchestra Hall was given at the regular meeting of the Sunday Evening Club. Bishop Anderson spoke in electric tones of his faith in the outcome of the vision of a united church. He contended that the fundamental unities of the churches "bulked immeasurably larger than the disunities." The thesis of his address was, that unity to be worth anything must be brought about on a basis of comprehension, not compromise. The fetching expression of his Laymen's Congress speech—"unity not on minimums, but on maximums"—recurred again and again. He said:

All the schisms have been the result of the separation of two complementary truths, equally true, yet considered separately, antagonistic. Such are the sovereignty of God and the free will of man, the doctrine of faith against the doctrine of works, the high church and the low church ideas. Neither of the complementary truths of any of these pairs can conquer the others. But unconsciously the sects are getting mingled, their respective visions widening beyond the single truths to take in both. In these days we don't try to show how much we love God by how much we hate our fellow Christians.

The Bishop took up one after another the conflicting views of authority vs. freedom of the local church, the minister as priest vs. the minister as prophet, and ritualistic vs. extemporaneous worship. These conflicting ideas are to be solved, he argued, not by one side yielding to the other, but by each contributing its truth to a larger unity including both. The two most irritating questions in the rapproachment of the denominations—baptism and the historic episcopate— he did not refer to.

A Complimentary Slur

The Christian Century is always sure of one good reader, at least, in the editor of the Journal and Messenger, a Baptist newspaper. Hardly a week goes by that spicy comments on the activities or teaching of the Disciples, as reported in this paper, may not be found in the pages of our Cincinnati contemporary. The editor seems to possess as little scruple about making correct representations of his Christian brethren and fellow-craftsmen as a writer on religious themes could be imagined to have. In a column comment on one of Doctor Gates' articles on the early days of the Campbells, we counted seven specific statements that were untrue, not to mention the anything but gracious spirit in which the entire editorial was conceived. More recently, the editor cast his accustomed slur upon the Disciples because they had succeeded in maintaining one body with many differences of opinion. He says:

Instead of union, the word "disciple" stands for disunion and sectism. As we have said before, there is the sect supporting The Christian Standard, another supporting The Christian Evangelist, a third supporting The Octographic Review, another wedded to The Christian Leader, another standing by The Gospel Advocate, still another following the lead of The Christian Century, which is trying to lead the whole scattered people into the camp of some other denomination, it matters little which one, so that there be a "union." Just now the last named paper is looking toward the Congregationalists, and it can see so many things in common between "Disciples" and Congregationalists, that it seems "the easiest thing in the world" to bring about the union. But the Congregationalists have not spoken; at least have not spoken so loudly that their neighbors can hear. The Christian Century says of them that "both bodies accept the Bible as the word of God, and wish to follow its teachings. Both own Jesus Christ as their divine head and Savior, and hold his will supreme in their lives. Whatever he commands, Congregationalists and Disciples stand ready to do." Now why should not people who are so much alike unite and form one denomination? One obstacle is that The Christian Century does not represent a sufficiently large constituency. Too many "disciples" do not think as that paper does. There is no class of people calling themselves by the same name (or no name) which is so diverse in faith and practice as is that which talks most loudly about "organic union;" and the longer the time given them, the less they agree, the more diverse they become. As they have been going on for the past thirty years, they will soon have only one word in common, namely, "union;" a word to conjure with.

It does not concern us to reply to the statements of alleged fact in such loose writing as the editor of the Journal and Messenger indulges in. It is profitable only to call attention to the unwitting compliment in the above screed. According to our critic, the Disciples are accomplishing what they set out to accomplish, namely the unifying of Christians of diverse opinions into one body bound by the common faith. We could wish that the compliment were even more justly deserved than it is. However, nobody should know better than the Journal and Messenger that when you scratch a Disciple you find a good deal more than verbal loyalty beneath his skin!

The Humbling of the Nation

On Wednesday of last week the Senate of the United States, by a vote of forty-six to forty, voted down a resolution to declare vacant the seat of William Lorimer in that body.

Thus ended in defeat the earnest efforts of a body of men in our highest governmental chamber to defend the Senate from the presence and record of a man whose entire political history has been a disgrace to honest and high-minded politics.

It was a significant coincidence that the day on which the vote was taken was the first day of Lent, the day when several sections of the Christian church begin prayer for the sins in their own lives and in the lives of others that crucify the Lord afresh and put him to an open shame.

It was the hope of many, even those who were not convinced of Mr. Lorimer's guilty knowledge of the crimes that helped to secure for him his seat in the Senate, that his sensitiveness to public opinion would lead him to resign a position which cannot escape the overwhelming censure of the nation. But those who have watched his career made light of any such possibility.

Men of his type are not likely to feel the shame that compels a man of honor to make what atonement he can for his conduct.

The most pathetic feature of this unhappy case is the effort to divert attention from the real issue—the purchase of a seat in the highest legislative body in the world by corrupt methods clearly revealed in the public hearings of the case—by the frequent plea that in private life Mr. Lorimer is a respectable man.

He is charged with the seizure of a high office by processes of disgraceful bribery, which, if not actually organized and practiced by him, were incapable of organization and practice without his knowledge. The answer is that he does not beat his wife, and is fond of his children.

He is charged with the corruption of Illinois politics, not only in the present incident, but through a series of years in which the name of the "Blond Boss" has been the synonym of indirection and trickery. The response is, that he has never come home drunk at night, and that his neighbors are friendly to him.

He is charged with political alliances with men who are the notorious agents of misrule, indecency and vice in this city, men whose names are passwords in the underworld of the red-light sections of Chicago. And the answer is, that Lorimer was such a genial comrade that these rascals simply could not help buying up votes in his behalf.

It has been the astonishment and grief of the nation to see men of reputation and honorable service in the Senate standing as the defenders of this tainted politician of Illinois. Are they less sensitive than American statesmen should be to the honor of the nation, or are they anxious to avoid the precedent of inquiring too closely into the credentials of the members of the Senate? Mr. Cullom showed a fine sense of wrath when it was suggested that his own election might be proved to be as indirect as that of Lorimer. Yet he was overborne by the blandishments or threats of the organization in his state, and voted for his colleague.

An incident of this sort can only have one result. It will hasten by years the election of Senators by direct vote. If left to the judgment of the people of Illinois today, Mr. Lorimer's seat would be declared vacant by a tidal wave of righteous indignation.

And the whole nation is of the same mind. One governor wired a friend, a senator from his state, in words that might have come from any one of the commonwealths:

"Dispatches from Washington tonight state that you are undecided as to how you will vote on Lorimer case. The integrity and good name of the United States senate is involved in your vote on this question. Honest elections and clean government in Illinois and the honor and reputation of the whole nation at home and abroad are also at stake. On behalf of the good name of our state and in the interest of decent government I urge you to vote to declare Senator Lorimer's election void."

The days hasten on when the sealing of a record will be impossible in any important governmental body. If the disgrace and humiliation of the present condition can bring that time the sooner, we may discern some small good in the evil of the present hour.

Our Debt to Presbyterianism

Presbyterianism is identified with Calvinism, in the minds of many. It is more than Calvinism, but Presbyterians have ever been ready to acknowledge their debt to the great Genevan reformer. "There is no system which equals Calvinism," says a great American preacher, "in intensifying to the last degree ideas of moral excellence and purity of character. There never was a system since the world began which puts upon man such motives to holiness, or which builds batteries which sweep the whole ground of sin with such horrible artillery."

Calvin aimed at precision in the statement of Christian doctrine. Indefinite and inaccurate articles of religion were intolerable to him. He believed that God had given a revelation of his will which enabled the theologian to construct a consistent system of doctrine. The fact that Calvin had beliefs which made him a persecutor of those who disagreed with him, and the further fact that his theories of sin and redemption do not meet the unqualified approval of present day thinkers should not be so emphasized that we overlook the service rendered by Calvin by his insistence upon clear and bold treatment of the great problems of religion. He dared to think before the world. He challenged the conclusions of the dominant party of his day. He gave a reason for the faith that was in him.

The ministry has been honored among the Presbyterians. They have demanded that only men properly qualified mentally and spiritually be vouched for as ministers of their churches. They have also provided generously for the education of candidates for the ministry. The standard set by the Presbyterians has been used by members of other churches in determining the fitness of men to be accredited as preachers of the gospel. It has been fortunate for American Christianity that not all churches have had the Presbyterian standard of education for their ministers, for many useful preachers and a few really great ones would have been lost to the church if this standard had prevailed in all the churches.

The patriotism of the Presbyterians has been of a high order. In 1776, a Tory rector of Trinity Church wrote: "I do not know one Presbyterian minister, nor have I been able, after strict inquiry, to hear of any, who did not, by preaching and every effort in their power, promote all the measures of the Continental Congress, however extravagant." Not only in America, but also in other lands, Calvinists have been found arraigned against tyranny. "It would be hard to overrate the debt of civil liberty which mankind owes to John Calvin," is the testimony of John Fiske. The belief that God is righteous and that he is the ruler of the earth does not permit men to submit without protest to the will of kings who choose to trample upon human rights. Kings and popes find Calvinists stubborn subjects.

The dignity and worth of the individual are further supported by the system of government of the Presbyterians. "The Northumberland peasant," says an English writer, "is largely influenced by a form of Christianity that not only recognizes that he is a man, but that, without ceasing to be a laboring man, tending the sheep or following the plow, he can be chosen, and is chosen, and found worthy, to be an elder of the church." The elder who prayed, "Grant that I may always be right, for thou knowest I am hard to turn," was the sort of man to be a tyrant in the church, but, as his brethren were equally hard to turn, there were definite limits to his power.

Calvin thought it was the business of the government to enforce the practice of morality. The Calvinistic churches have exercised strict discipline over their members. This discipline has often been denounced as inquisitorial. Its value to the Scottish people is defended by Bishop Creighton: "Without it the wild borderfolk would never have been changed into the sterling, upright people with whom we are familiar. If the idea of righteousness which was enforced by Presbyterianism was narrow and not altogether lively, it still upheld a high idea of rectitude, and the Kirk did a civilizing work which there was no other agency to undertake. There can be no doubt that its discipline retained all the strength of character which had been generated in the unquiet times of border warfare; there can be little doubt that only a stern and vigorous system could have given a moral direction to that strength. The records of the Kirk session tell us more of the process of the purification of national character than they do of religious fanaticism."

[Midweek Service. March 15. Luke 9:51-56; Acts 10:34, 35; Eph. 11:22.] S. J.

Biblical Problems

BY PROFESSOR WILLETT.

Was it the divine plan that Jesus should come into the world for the express purpose of being crucified? Was the death of Jesus on the Cross the supreme object of his coming, or an incidental result of his life and preaching?
Subscriber and Teacher of Bible Class.

It was in no way essential to the divine purpose that the life of Jesus should have been lived in the precise terms in which history has recorded it. The crucifixion of Jesus was not an essential part of his work. It was only the best expression of his purpose, which was also the divine purpose. The Jewish people in whose national life he lived were accustomed to the idea of sin as affected remedially by sacrifice. It was natural, therefore, that the death of Christ should be construed by his first interpreters, themselves Jews, as the supreme sacrifice of history, and that form of expression pervades the New Testament. Its value lies in its suggestiveness rather than its actual interpretative power. It is the life of Jesus rather than his death that is significant. Without the life the death would have had no efficiency. Apart from the death, the life would have been only partly revealed. It was the sacrificial death of Jesus that gave the crowning attestation to his redemptive and sacrificial life.

What is the virtue in the blood of Christ as shed on Calvary in the remission of sins? How is it that "the blood of Jesus Christ his son cleanseth us from all sin?" (1 John 1:7). Inquirer.

Here, again, the Jewish forms of expression obtrude themselves upon the great moral drama of Christ's work. The blood of Christ as shed in his physical death was not the agent in the accomplishment of human betterment. But it was so admirable a symbol of the outpouring of his life for humanity, that to those impressed with the significance of blood offerings it became determinative of a whole body of teachings. Of course there is no power in the shedding of blood, either animal or human, to change the character and ennoble the life. But there is tremendous power in the life, teaching and example of Jesus as these are revealed in the pages of the New Testament to shame man out of his sin, to reveal the pathway of obedience and union with God, and thus to provide an atonement, a means of renewed friendship between the human and the divine.

How can we justify God's blessings on Abraham after his deception concerning his wife? H. M. B.

We cannot judge the character of Abraham by modern standards of morality, which are the product of the long centuries of prophetic and Christian teaching. The elements of deception, cleverness and ability to get the better of opponents were regarded not as reprehensible, but admirable qualities among the early Hebrews. The deceptions practiced by Abraham, David and others were actual recommendations of their characters to the people who heard the story of their lives told over and over at the evening firesides of Israel. It was only gradually that the greater elements of moral character came to take precedence of these types of cleverness and success, and the actual grandeur of these patriarchal characters slowly appeared.

Is there any reference to the Hebrew people on the monuments of Egypt? It would seem that so important an event as the exodus should have left some impression about the records of that land. B. M.

There is only one reference to Israel on the monuments of Egypt so far as known at the present time. Unfortunately, this reference does not bear upon the story of the exodus. It is found upon the so-called Meneptah Stele and merely refers to Israel as one of the peoples of Southern Palestine that has been made to suffer by recent Egyptian successes in that region. Far from bearing upon the problem of Israel's life in Egypt, it is actually perplexing considering the fact that it places at least some of the Hebrews in Palestine at a time when, so far as the biblical records go, they were still in Egypt or at the farthest on their desert journey. The meaning of this brief and unsatisfactory reference to Israel can only be cleared up in the light of further studies. It would seem to indicate that even during the period of the sojourn in Egypt, there was still a body of Israelites resident in Canaan, and that upon these the hand of Egyptian invasion had fallen.

Immersion-baptism and Fellowship

A Plea for the Revival of the Catholic Spirit of the Fathers

BY W. L. HAYDEN.

The author of this article has for many years felt the fundamental inconsistency in the prevailing practice of the Diciples of Christ in pleading for Christian union and claiming to practice it, while at the same time limiting fellowship in their churches to those Christians who have been immersed. He contends earnestly for the immersionist construction of the Bible teaching on baptism, adopting, we believe, the more or less original view that immersion-baptism was originated by John the Baptist, instead of being an already prevalent custom which John and the apostles of Christ after him utilized. Mr. Hayden has written out his views in systematic form under three chapters: The Authenticity of the Commission, Jesus and Baptism, Baptism and Fellowship. After reading the instructive article on the last named subject, presented below, and another to be published next week,many will no doubt be prompted to ask this veteran Disciple preacher to publish his chapters in a brochure for general distribution.—THE EDITORS.

The disturbing and vexatious question of baptism can be eliminated from the Christian union problem only by a deeper and broader view of the whole sweep of Christian teaching, such as will make clear the distinction between the essential and the formal in the religion of Christ.

While yielding not "one jot or tittle" of the word of God on the outward symbolism of this rite, there must be a deeper appreciation of the weightier matters of justice, mercy and faith.

Nothing is of greater importance to the success of the Disciples' century-old restoration movement than a firmer grasp of the ground principles of true catholicity in teaching and practice in our contact with other religious bodies.

We must return to the larger vision and more scriptural comprehension possessed by the great leaders of our movement for union.

Pioneer Utterances.

It will be helpful to refresh our minds on the pioneer utterances of Alexander Campbell on this question of religious fellowship.

In 1826 Mr. Campbell said: "I frankly own that my full conviction is, that there are many pedobaptist congregations of whose Christianity I think as highly as of most Baptist congregations, and with whom I could wish to be on the very same terms of Christian communion on which I stand with the whole Baptist society.

"This plan of making our own nest and fluttering over our own brood, of building our own tent and of confining all goodness and grace to our noble selves and the elect few who are like us, is the quintessence of sublimated phariseeism. Were this a new creature, or a society of them, with all their imperfections and frailties and errors in sentiment, in views and opinions, they ought to receive one another and the strong to support the infirmities of the weak and not to please themselves. To lock ourselves up in the band-box of our own little circle to associate with a few units, tens or hundreds" [or thousands and millions] "as the pure church, as the elect, is real Protestant monkery; it is evangelical phariseeism."

Who Is a Christian?

In 1837 the question as to "Christians among the sects" was pressed upon Mr. Campbell. Asked who is a Christian, he answered:

"Every one that believes in his heart that Jesus of Nazareth is the Messiah, the son of God, repents of his sins and obeys him in all things according to his measure of knowledge of his will. * * * I cannot make any one duty the standard of Christian state or character, not even immersion into the name of the Father, of the Son and of the Holy Spirit, and in my heart regard all that have been sprinkled in infancy without their own knowledge and consent, as aliens from Christ and the well-grounded hope of heaven.

"It is the image of Christ, the Christian looks for and loves; and this does not consist in being exact in a few items, but in general devotion to the whole truth as far as known.

"There is no occasion for making immersion, on a profession of the faith, absolutely essential to a Christian—though it may be greatly essential to his sanctification and comfort.

"We have, in Paul's style, the inward and outward Jews; and may we not have the inward and outward Christians? As the same Apostle reasons on circumcision (Rom. 2: 25-29) so we would reason on baptism.

"We all agree that he who wilfully or neg-ligently perverts the outward, cannot have the inward. But can he who, through a simple mistake, involving no perversity of mind, has misapprehended the outward baptism, yet submitting to it according to his view of it, have the inward baptism which changes his state and has praise of God though not of all men? To which I answer, in my opinion, it is possible."—Alexander Campbell in Millenial Harbinger, 1837, pp. 411, 412-414-507.

Rev. W. L. Hayden.

To bring out the principle contained in Rom. 2: 25-29 in its application to baptism the passage is here transcribed with the substitutions that are obviously suggested in adaptation of it to this dispensation of grace.

For baptism verily profiteth, if thou keep the law of Christ, but if thou be a breaker of the law of liberty, thy baptism is made unbaptism. Therefore, if the unbaptized keep the righteousness of faith, shall not his unbaptism be counted for baptism? And shall not unbaptism which is through a simple mistake, if it fulfill the law, condemn thee who by the letter and baptism dost transgress the law? For he is not a Christian who is one outwardly only, neither is that baptism which is merely outward in form. But he is a Christian who is one inwardly also, and baptism is that of the heart, in the spirit and not in the letter only, whose praise is not of some men but rather of God.

Thus Mr. Campbell reasoned from this principle as under the law to its proper use under the gospel, not to excuse the unbaptized for their neglect in not understanding its proper meaning, but to rebuke Christians who by the letter and baptism miss the essential spirit of it by a harsh judgment and deny fellowship to those who are less favored in their opportunity to know what the will of the Lord is concerning the ordinance.

This spirit of Christian charity will fellowship all sincere followers of the Christ and leave the matter of baptism to adjust itself in the light of an increasing knowledge with unprejudiced mind. It was in this kindly spirit that T. Campbell said: "Our intention, therefore, with respect to all the churches of Christ, is perfectly amicable. We heartily wish their reformation but by no means their hurt or confusion."

Revival of Fathers' Catholic Spirit.

A genuine revival of the Catholic spirit of our fathers in this divine impulse for the reunion of the people of God regardless of denominational lines and formal differences is the greatest need of the present day among the Disciples.

The Campbell restoration and the Lutheran reformation are grounded on the same granite rock, viz., the supremacy of the inspired scriptures in religion and individual interpretation under the accepted laws of language and an accordant experience. Creedal differences are minimized and explicit statements of the New Testament are emphasized in the common faith. Personal convictions based on a "thus saith the Lord" are sacredly respected and essential Christian character is recognized by calling devout believers in other religious bodies, "our dear brethren of all denominations."

A Test of Our Century's Work.

This splendid movement with its century of grand achievement will prove a conspicuous failure, if it does not bring together in harmonious relations and effectual coöperation the whole body of devoted Christians irrespective of distinguishing names and hitherto divisive creeds. It is confronted with the undeniable fact that millions of as consecrated, loving, zealous and self-sacrificing men and women as are in this world have accepted what they honestly regard as a form of baptism which Disciples find no warrant for in the word of God. Fifty years of experience in debating the issues clustering about this "first formal and comprehensive act" of faith, have clearly shown that the controversy can never be ended by discussing these differences. The sum of it all is the fixing in the minds of good people the conviction that a great deal can be said on both sides of these issues and, therefore, they never can be definitely determined. Thus the form of baptism is regarded as an opinion that should be optional with the individual.

A question of highest practical interest is heavily pressing upon the minds of an increasing number of preachers and thinkers among the Disciples, viz.: Shall this movement for Christian union which is the controlling reason for our existence, be wrecked over the formal act of initial obedience, or shall we be able to find some way of eliminating the vexing features of it from the problem of union? These are the alternatives of the situation.

The talent of success is nothing more than doing what you can do well, and doing well whatever you can do.—Longfellow.

The Veiled Glory of God

The Father's Goodness Shown in His Concealments

BY T. E. WINTER.

There is nothing that this age needs more than a conviction of the reality of God's presence in the world. We read with joy of the time when man could catch the sound of God's footfall and hear his voice as in human speech as He walked in the garden in the evening time, yet fear seizes our hearts at times, as we say, "No more does He walk among us—no more speak humanly to us." We need to know that He is as truly in our world today as of old—in its activities, back of, underneath and within all its splendid progress; and that if we incline our ear we shall hear His voice and our souls shall live. As in the early creation morn the "stars sang together and all the sons of God shouted for joy," so today in the world about us are just as real evidences of God's creative activity in which we should rejoice.

Natural Law a Divine Legislation.

Every natural law whose operation is made known to us is as much a piece of divine legislation as if it were freshly graved by an angel's hand on a tablet of stone. We need to place more emphasis upon adventitious evidence than upon the inherent. We thought we could believe in God as a visitor to our world and its activity better than as our companion and co-worker. But this latter was the faith of Jesus and should be ours.

We may not see flame-wrapped Mt. Sinai,
Nor hear His footfall by our side;
But still He speaks, in earth, and sea, and sky,—
The earth is with His glory filled.

God's Prophets in Modern World.

Carlyle more than once cried out in perplexity of mind and anguish of soul, "If God would only speak again." That cry is the human spirit's cry for light,—for assurance that its beliefs are true; it is the voice of humanity, crying unto the prophet asking, "Watchman, what of the night?" Has God forsaken his people? No. No. If God has ever spoken in the world. He speaks today. God has his prophets in the world today as truly as in the olden time; men who speak His will; men who affirm the supremacy of conscience; who call men from selfishness and dishonesty to higher ideals and to more efficient service. Every age has its own prophets, its own interpreters of God, for God is "not the God of the dead but of the living." God speaks, but do our dull ears hear His voice and understand the message?

God's Presence Intangible.

After all the centuries that have come and gone since Jacob dreamed, how many still must exclaim in his words, "surely God is in this place and I knew it not!" It is because His presence is intangible. In the weakness of humanity many still say, as Israel said to Aaron, "Up make us Gods that shall go before us!" But people who cry out for such certainty forget that, in the very nature of things, it is impossible. For the infinite can never express itself fully in the finite. "God is spirit, and those who worship Him must worship Him in spirit and in truth." The intangible spirit cannot become tangible; "a spirit hath not flesh and bones as ye see me have," said Jesus. This search for a tangibly present God was carried on by Job in vain; he said:

"Oh that I knew where I might find him!
Behold I go forward, but he is not there;
And backward, but I cannot perceive Him:
On the left hand when He doth work, but I cannot behold Him:
He hideth himself on the right hand, that I cannot see Him."

Everywhere he could see the work, but nowhere the worker.

Moral Character Depends on Invisible God.

Moreover if God were to reveal Himself as a human personality reveals itself, by tangible presence as well as by spiritual and intellectual influences, moral freedom would disappear from the world. The human will would be destroyed, and with its destruction personality would vanish. The old Hebrew conception was correct, "No man can see God and live;" i. e.,—see Him in actual, tangible presence. It has not been long since in the Russian Court the respect for the Czar and the awe which his presence inspired were so great that when he appeared in any assemblage of men they were struck dumb. They lost their power of self-expression. This feebly illustrates what would happen if God were suddenly to reveal His presence indisputably to men. An appalling silence would fall upon the world. Men would lose the power of self-expressing, every will would be subjugated, freedom would disappear from our world as inevitably, and as quickly, as the dew vanishes before the morning sun. Men would be mere machines, operated by the power of the divine will. We cannot understand what it would be or mean to see God face to face. Certain we are that the world of mortals, of persons, of choices and actions producing character, would be wholly annihilated.

Rev. T. E. Winter.

God's Appearance Veiled in Personality.

It is because of this that God is not tangibly present to us. When He did appear among men in a form which could be recognized, and with a voice that used human language, it was veiled in a personality. God veils Himself in nature and in human nature.

Ruskin has written helpfully about the "Ethics of Dust," but a recent writer in the Searchlight discourses on what he calls the "mechanics of dust." Few realize the vast amount of it floating in the athosphere or are aware of the important mission it performs. John Aitken, of Scotland, was the first to count and estimate the multitude of dust particles, and by the effective little instrument which he used he concluded that a cubic inch of the air of Glasgow contained 7,500,000 dust particles. The smallest number he ever counted to a cubic inch of air was 3,400. Without this floating dust, we are told, the sky would not be blue, there would be no raindrops, no clouds, no gorgeous sunsets, no brilliant sunrises. The instant the sun passed out of sight there would be darkness. It is to the reflection of the sun's rays from the innumerable dust particles that we owe the twilight glow and the sunset hues.

God Hidden by the Dust.

The dust softens the light of the sun. So God transmits His glory through finite and human atmospheres and media, that we may the better receive it.

"Through silence, gloom and star-strown paths of night,
The breathless hours like phantoms stole away.
Black lay the earth, in primal blackness wrapt,
Ere the great miracle once more was wrought.
A chill wind freshened in the pallid East,
And brought sea-smell of newly-blossomed foam,
And stirred the leaves and branch-hung nests of birds.
Fainter the glowworm's lantern glimmered now
In the marsh-land and on the forest's hem,
And the slow dawn with purple laced sky,
Where sky and sea lay sharply, edge to edge.
The purple melted, changed to violet,
And that to every delicate sea-shell tinge,
Blush-pink, deep cinnabar; then no change was,
Save that the air had in it sense of wings,
Till suddenly the heavens were all aflame,
And it was morning. O great miracle!
O radiance and splendor of the Throne,
Daily vouchsafed to us! Yet, saith the fool,
'There is no God!'"

Christ is God Veiled.

Just so Christ is God veiled. You well recall the scene of transfiguration. The vision granted to Peter, James and John on "the holy mount," as Peter calls it, was of the nature of an unveiling of Christ before those disciples; they beheld the matchless beauty and splendor of his divine glory. Then, while beholding the King in his beauty, they heard the Father's voice saying, "This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased, hear ye Him." And the record says, "they fell on their faces, and were sore afraid." The unveiling of Christ! But even then let us remember that Christ was God veiled—God manifest in the flesh, as the New Testament writer puts it.

Saul's Experience Near Damascus.

Again you recall the experience of Saul of Tarsus on the Damascus road. How that having letters of authority he was on his way to that city to persecute even unto death any whom he might find there who were followers of the Nazarene. Let him tell us what occurred. "As I made my journey, and drew nigh unto Damascus, about noon, suddenly there shone from heaven a great light about me. And I fell onto the ground, and heard a voice saying unto me, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? And I answered, Who are thou, Lord? And he said, I am Jesus of Nazareth whom thou persecutest." It was the vision of the unveiled Christ—of the glory of his divine nature. But again let me say Christ was but a veiling of God; and if the glory of the Christ must be veiled, how can we ever expect to see God with our physical eyes and live? To meet God on the highway as we meet a man, coming into His tangible presence, would first of all be impossible; and in the second place it would be to us unendurable—we could not endure the glory of his infinite presence. No, God does not come to us in the highway, but He does come by a thousand by-ways instead.

Jesus' Glory Veiled from Men.

If Jesus veiled his glory from men, shedding it forth quickly, unobstrusively, yet most beautifully, in human speech and action, speaking truth and sympathy and love to hungering souls, performing deeds of mercy and kindness in a spirit radiant with love, disclosing the divine in purity, beauty and devotion, how much more does God disclose Himself through the same media!

And thus God comes to us in nature and in human nature; thus mercifully veils Himself that we may behold as much of his glory and power as is best for us. The whole world about us is but the garment of God; all nature, vocal with buzz of bee, song of bird, murmur of sea, or sigh of wind, does but bring to our ear His whisperings of love. These indeed "are but the outskirts of His ways, and how small a whisper do we hear of him! But the thunder of His power who can understand? And the glory of his presence who can endure?—(Job. 25:14.)

"A fire-mist and a planet,
A crystal and a cell;
A jelly-fish and a saurian,
And caves where the cave men dwell;
Then a sense of law and of beauty
And a face turned from the clod.
Some call it evolution,
And others call it God.

A haze on the far horizon,
The infinite tender sky,
The ripe, rich fruits of the cornfields,
And the wild geese sailing high;
And over all upland and lowland
The charm of the golden-rod.
Some of us call it Autumn,
And others call it God.

Like tides on a crescent sea-beach,
When the moon is new and thin,
Into our hearts high yearnings
Come welling and surging in.
Come from the mystic ocean,
Whose rim no foot has trod.
Some of us call it longing,
And others call it God.

A picket frozen on duty,
A mother starved for her brood,
Socrates drinking the hemlock,
And Jesus on the rood;
And millions who, humble and nameless,
The straight, hard pathway trod.
Some call it consecration,
And others call it God."

MOUNTAINS AND MISSIONS

A Call to the Church to Take the Wider View.

E. B. BARNES.

Jesus was a man of the mountain. He loved its solitude; it was to him a house of prayer.

"Cold mountains and the midnight air, Witnessed the fervor of his prayer."

It was from his rocky pulpit that he gave us the sermon on the mount. "From an exceeding high mountain," Satan showed him all the kingdoms of the world and the glory of them. Luke tells us that "he continued all night in prayer to God," in one of these favorite hills. On a mountain he was transfigured. On a "hill that is called Calvary," Jesus was crucified. On a mountain in Galilee he met his disciples, and gave to them his parting command to preach the gospel to every creature. From that mountain he ascended to his Father.

A Popular Phrase.

We hear much in our time of the mountain-top vision. The phrase is popular because it has meaning. There is something in standing where the view is unobstructed, of getting out where the air is as fresh as the dew, and where the glory of the sky is undimmed by smoking infernos. Even in thought, the mountain is an elixir to the multitudes who spend their days in toil and grime. Their lives are passed in narrow and stifling circles, and mountains to them speak of immensities of which it is a joy to dream. The open spaces of mountain and sea—and I take it that the effect upon the beholder is the same, a man's soul enlarges under the contemplation of vastness in great deeps or from great heights—have, in a way, written their poetry on thousands of these tired hearts. When they can spend a holiday beside the trampling surf, or under cloudy castles they have a fellowship with the sublime which passes for worship. A new view in any man's life is a transformation that may end in moral and spiritual revolution.

Church Suffering for Air.

This mountain-top vision is the daily need of the kingdom of God. The church suffers for want of air and room in which to exercise her powers. There is nothing more disheartening today that the church's satisfaction with a window for light, and a porthole for air. This is why we have men in the kingdom who are mere hangers-on, camp-followers, door-keepers, men content with trivial positions who ought to be at the front, and exercising their kindly gifts among their fellows for the advancement of the cause of Christ. The same men begin on Monday to carry out schemes in the world of industry with a vigor and enthusiasm that promises the largest success, even if that success should mean a shortening of their lives. Among the men of the world they are leaders. In the church their service is perfunctory and even dead. They suffer from spiritual near-sightedness. They ought to have the vision that cannot content itself with the trivial. Our interest in the divine enterprise, as expressed by our forty cents per member, would become a reproach in the majority but knew and saw. As ever, "My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge." There can be no great forward movement in any church until there is first a great upward movement. And it is not poetry to speak of the heights as the church's vantage ground. What was so frequent in the life of Christ must have some meaning for us. The great souls, the great leaders must have a height from which to project themselves and great movements upon the attention of the world.

The Self-Satisfied Church.

The self-satisfied church needs the new vision more than any other. Between the missionary church and the non-missionary there is as real a difference as there is between the boy soldier and his mimic battles and a Waterloo. The new conceptions of the church's work and mission is the solution of that problem. I have seen a congregation distressed because the choir sang an anthem wretchedly, or because the soloist broke down. The feeling prevailed that the service had been ruined. But I have seen several congregations break down miserably on the first Sunday in March, and few regrets were expressed. The failure in the one case was unpardonable, in the other the failure was taken for granted. The musical taste had been developed; the missionary conscience was dormant. I think it will be found true generally that where there is little spiritual life in a congregation and consequently, no missionary life, the attention will be given to the incidentals of the church's work, such as music and elaborate services. The emphasis has to be placed somewhere, but where the vision is enlarged is will not be on secondary matters. Have we never noticed, in the great cities, the churches are losing their power to attract the people or to save them, that money is depended upon to supply the lack, and a dozen schemes are exploited in the hope of doing what all feel the church ought to be doing, but cannot or will not? Again, here the new outlook is needed, a courage to face the world and win it for Christ; and that new inspiration will transform the energies of any church, and swing it into the column that is moving out to the conquest of the world. A second sight is better for the church than a philanthropist. With it the philanthropy is assured; without it, impossible. The self-satisfied need to see with Christ's eyes, to hear with his ears, to understand with his heart, to feel the pain of the world's woe as he felt it, and thereafter they are in fellowship with him and the world for which he died. No more can such a church live to itself. Once on the mountain there is no danger of returning to the cave. There is something universal in the mountain; it can never partake of anything trivial; it lifts us all into the vast, and sets us clear of the world under the light of solemn stars. We are for the time on the frontiers of the universe, and at the gates of the infinite. This is why in the presence of such sublimities man is dumb: he is on his way to the third heaven where utterance is unlawful. He sees his own insignificance, and his speech would betray the uncouthness of the country whence he came. But, from another point of view, he is greater than all the immensities, greater than mountains, more precious than all the stars, more enduring than the heavens into which he looked, and into which the generations from Abraham have looked. Greater, because he is made in the image of God, and is one of the family of the All-Father. Bound are we to the lowest of the sons of men because we are kin to the highest.

The Artlessness of China.

There are people in our churches who smile at the artlessness of China in believing that the bounds of her empire may be maintained by the great wall. The exclusiveness of that country is the jest of the civilized world. Ah, say they, the blindness of the heathen Chinese! After all it was only the selfishness of that nation that tried to keep their people at home, and all others in their homes. But I think I have seen some enlightened Christians attempting to rear a Chinese wall around congregations to keep all interest, and all money from overflowing to the dark places of the earth. It was an imaginary line that we call prejudice or selfishness or ignorance, but it was as insuperable as the great wall that contains enough material to build a wall around our globe five or six feet high. As China must fail to define her boundaries by walls, though she may succeed in preserving her territory by other means, so any church must fail in the attempt to bound the kingdom of God by Atlantic or Pacific frontiers. Contraction is a death-policy in Christianity. It is like good news from a far country to read that "of Christ's kingdom there shall be no end." The Moravians read it better. "To Christ's kingdom there shall be no frontier."

Every day the church should hear the call of God, "O Zion, that bringest good tidings, lift up thy voice with strength; lift it up, be not afraid; say unto the cities of Judah, Behold your God!"

Richmond, Ky.

Our Readers' Opinions

A Mistaken Inference

Editors Christian Century: I thank you for the excellent print of my article, "A Question of Translation," in Christian Century of Feb. 23.

But, that bracketed editorial note! Will you please let me make a little protest against the misrepresentation—unintentional on your part—in that note? The article does not intimate at all as to the meaning of the transferred word "baptize." It simply contends for a translation of the Greek word into plain English by representative scholars. The definition of the word baptidzo, or "baptize," was carefully avoided.

Then again, the writer of the article, does not, nor never did, hold that the Greek word for "baptize" "means simply to immerse." The writer most earnestly believes with all real scholars and the editors of The Christian Century, that the Greek word transferred "baptize" means far more in the New Testament than to "simply immerse." Therefore, the editorial note appended to the article greatly misrepresents my convictions on the subject.

Having spent more than a dozen years in editorial work, I, too know what a bracketed editorial note can do for an article sometimes. Truly your brother,

Plattsburg, Mo. JAMES C. CREEL.

[Before writing the editorial note referred to by Mr. Creel we had noticed that he did not give a definite translation of the Greek baptidzo. Inasmuch as the same general point has been made many times, notably by Alexander Campbell, with the assumption that the Greek word should have been translated simply "immerse," it was natural for us to read this same implication into Mr. Creel's argument. We were evidently mistaken in this, however. In view of our error we will be pleased to give our correspondent space in which to name the word that should have been used by the translators in place of "baptize." It is our opinion that no single English word fully expresses the meaning of the Greek word as used by New Testament writers. The root meaning, the etymological meaning, as everybody knows, was immerse or bathe or an equivalent. But through the use of the form for religious purposes the word finally took into itself all the meaning possessed by the religious act. What this meaning was is a subject on which our readers will be pleased to hear from Mr. Creel or any other contributors.—THE EDITORS.]

Which Kind of Baptism?

Editor Christian Century: In your issue of Feb. 23, E. L. Frazier asks the question, "Is baptism a part of the process of becoming a Christian?" But he fails to say whether he means literal water baptism, or figurative Spirit baptism. Then, when you answer that baptism is a part of the process of becoming a Christian, you fail to make any distinction between those who have become Christians in character and those who are merely Christians in name. Now, it seems to me, that Prof. Willett makes this distinction clear, in giving his explanation of Spirit baptism in your issue of Feb. 16. In doing this, he clearly teaches that Christian character is formed by the process of Holy Spirit baptism; and the water baptism practiced by the Apostles was merely for the purpose of distinguishing the first Christians from other religious sects then existing. Then the real and vital question is this, "Is water baptism a part of the process of becoming a Christian in character?"

Fulton, Mo. W. H. THOMAS.

[The editors had in mind the ceremonial act of baptism in replying to Mr. Frasier's inquiry, not the Holy Spirit baptism. It did not seem relevant to make the distinction between Christians "in character" and Christians "in name." Of course neither our querist nor the editors could have had merely nominal Christians in mind. There seems to be nothing in Professor Willett's statement referred to above, to warrant the inference that "water baptism was merely for the purpose of distinguishing the first Christians from other religious sects."—THE EDITORS.]

Not Local or Obscure

Editors Christian Century: Dr. Errett Gates in writing about Campbell's imprisonment speaks of an "obscure and local journal of no particular consequence" etc. Is he not slightly tripping? It is a small matter, of course, but facts are facts. He refers to "Chamber's Edinburgh Journal," a popular weekly, which at the time he is referring to had 90,000 circulation and was sold at the London News office. It used to be delivered to subscribers, of whom my father was one, and usually contained a serial by Charles Dickens. Unless it was "Punch" there was no more popular weekly in London at that time. It was one of the pet projects of William and Robert Chambers, the noted publishers.

Kansas City. J. W. MONSER.

Paul on Christian Union

In Paul's day there were so-called disciples who knew nothing of God's purpose with man, who had a false conception of salvation and who did not understand what Paul meant by faith. These men said to the Gentile Christians, "Except ye be circumcised and keep the law ye cannot be saved." By the keeping of the law they meant that the Gentiles should comply with the Jewish regulations in regard to washing, eating and the observing of holy days. Innocent as these practices seemed on the surface to be, especially in consideration of the fact that Peter and the other Apostles did conform to the above regulations, yet Paul saw that this teaching was subversive of Christianity. This teaching he opposed everywhere, but perhaps a little more explicitly in the letter to the Colossians than elsewhere. This may be because this is one of his later letters and the conflict had grown more intense. It is however more probable that he speaks more plainly of these matters here because this church had not had the benefit of his personal teaching. What he says is so plain that comment would not be needed if it were not for a stupid error in the text. In the 12th verse of the 2nd chapter, we find "buried with him" where it should read washed with him. As the text now is, the course of the thought is, Ye need no bodily circumcision for ye have been spiritually circumcised; ye need no bodily burial for ye have been spiritually buried. But there was no one advocating the burying of living people. It is clear that it should read symbaptisthentes (washed with) instead of syntaphentes, (buried with). This change made, every thing becomes plain. Paul would have these people be on their guard against those that would rob them of the great treasure of their faith. They should keep in mind that they were made full or complete in Jesus. He said substantially to them. If any man should say to one of you, To be well pleasing to God you must be circumcised, the answer must be, I need no fleshly circumcision, which could be of no moral value. In Jesus I have the true circumcision, that is, the putting away of the fleshly lusts and desires. If any one should say to you, You need to wash or to be baptized, the answer must be, I am being raised out of a sordid life into a pure life through the faith that is of the working of God. This is the washing or baptism that every unclean life needs and it is the only baptism that has moral value or is in any way needful. If any one begins to judge your Christian standing by meat and drink and the keeping of days, you must utterly refuse to allow these to be criteria or standards of moral measure.

Thus Paul urged the all-sufficiency of Jesus. Only through faith, that is, through making Jesus our ideal can we attain to the character which God intended us to have. Every thing aside from this faith was to Paul a beggarly element of the world, a carnal ordinance, a command or doctrine of men. Those who subjected themselves to ordinances turned away from the faith, that is, ceased to "hold fast the Head, from whom all the body, being supplied and knit together through the joints and bands, increaseth with the increase of God." (Col. 2:19.)

When they no longer hold the Head the body must go to pieces. So Paul taught and history has sadly confirmed his view. By making Jesus our ideal we can all unite and be one body, and union can be effected in no other way. H. C. GARVIN.

Eldon, Mo.

The Second Question

Editors Christian Century: I thank you for your candid and plain answer to my inquiry, "Is baptism a part of the process of becoming a Christian?" You say baptism is a part of the process of becoming a Christian. That it was a part of the process by which New Testament converts to Christianity became Christians, and it is a part of the process by which present-day converts become Christians. I am happy, and many others will be happy to know that you think so.

This being the case, is one who has not been baptized a Christian?

I wish your answer to this may be as plain, positive and satisfying.

St. Peterseburg, Fla. E. L. FRAZIER.

[This question, we regret to say after giving Mr. Frazier so good a reputation as a question maker, is, as he himself can see, ambiguous and indefinite. Of course it will depend on what one. In the form in which the question is worded it is quite impossible to answer it in any fashion. We suspect, however, that we can formulate the question which is really in our correspondent's mind: May one who has not been baptized be a Christian? If to answer this question will help any, we reply unhesitatingly, yes. If our wording has failed to bring out the point Mr. Frazier had in mind, we shall be pleased to have him formulate his inquiry again.—THE EDITORS.]

Guilty

A police court judge in a Louisiana town had before him, one hot Monday morning in July, a number of negroes committed for various offenses.

The room was very hot and very close. The judge was hurying the cases through in the hope of getting into better air, when a perspiring negro was shoved up.

"What are you charged with?" asked the judge.

"'Deed, boss, I ain't 'cused of nothin' only fragrancy."

"Guilty!" howled the judge. "Take him away."

The Book World

LORDS OF INDUSTRY, MAZZINI AND OTHER ESSAYS. These two volumes, by the lamented Henry D. Lloyd, include some nineteen essays and addresses. The ten in the first named are upon industrial and economic subjects and the nine in the last named are literary. Both bear the stamp of the author's fine literary ability and keen powers of discrimination and both are athrob with his passion for humanity. Henry D. Lloyd was the John the Baptist of our present day literary crusade against social and economic evils. These essays are issued in book form by his literary executors. The author doubtless thought those of the first volume of passing worth only but time proves them of much more. It will be remembered that his large volume on "Wealth versus Commonwealth," issued many years ago, was a monument of painstaking erudition and an unanswerable indictment of the methods of the Standard Oil monopoly. It was backed by court records and bore the stamp of authority. It was issued in a time when all the popular writers were singing the praises of the "Lords of Industry" without discrimination as to the methods they used and it was much frowned upon. Today there are few but that accept all he revealed as unquestionable fact and magazines, weeklies and books have added tons of material to his. The "Lords of Industry" treats chiefly of the concrete facts of monopoly and its effects upon the weal of the consumer. The one entitled "Mazzini and Other Essays" is of quite another type. It is concerned with the same theme of human weal and industrial democracy but is literary and ethical in its treatment. The appreciation of the prophet Mazzini is glowing and to it are added essays on "Emerson's Wit and Humor," "No Mean City," "The Scholar and Contemporary Practical Questions," etc. Both books are immensely worth while to the student of social and industrial questions. (New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.50 each.)

CAN THE WORLD BE WON FOR CHRIST, by Norman Maclean. This volume was inspired by the great Edinburgh Conference and much of its material collected there. It is by the pastor of a Scotch church that has been to the forefront in missionary giving. He writes with fervency. The style of the book is that of a ready speaker, on fire with his theme. The matter is fitted best for the reading of those who are already convinced of the duty and practicability of the missionary task. If it at times seems that the things undone loom large and the obstructions in the way appear very formidable, it is because the writer is at the forefront in the campaign and ready to deal with them in closest contact. There is no pessimism however, but only the call to the church to get together and grapple with its God-given task with a heroism that is Pauline. The chapters on "The Call to Union" and "The Great Opportunity" are written with exceptional power. (New York: Hodder and Stoughton. Pp. 194. $125 net.)

REVOLUTION (and other essays) by Jack London. This volume takes the title of the first essay. Jack London is a fiery socialist and a brilliant writer. His stories flash with genius and delineate a life full of the red blood of animal strength. He is a disciple of the big stick, but rarely speaks softly. Yet he is a warm-hearted pleader for men and an implacable hater of those who use strength to undo their kind. The first chapter of this volume is an account of the world-wide growth of the socialistic propaganda and is written with unconcealed gratification. Other essays are "The Dignity of Dollars," "Goliath," "The Golden Poppy," "These Bones Shall Rise Again," "What Life Means to Me," "The Somnambulists," "The Shrinkage of the Planet," etc. One on "The House Beautiful" is Ruskinian in its sense of artistic honesty and full of wholesome common sense in its plea for simplicity in the things of life that life itself may be the chief thing. (New York: The Macmillan Company. Pp. 399. $1.50.)

CHRISTIANITY AND NON-CHRISTIAN RELIGIONS COMPARED, by Edward A. Marshall. An ingenious little handbook for students of comparative religion and Christian missions. The ten chief religions of the world are compared under a large variety of topics and under an arrangement that enables the reader to turn unerringly to any theme upon which he desires information. This is done by arranging a crossed system of classification by which, for instance, if one wishes to see what these religions or anyone of them teach in regard to "The Poor," he turns to that general topic at the head of the page and under it, in paragraph form, is the gist of what each faith teaches. For such condensation the summaries are very fair though the statements of Christianity's fundamentals are decidedly of the ultra orthodox kind. Some sixty different topics are treated in this comparative manner and the book is useful for quick and ready reference. Bible school teachers and students will find it helpful. (Chicago: The Colportage Association, Moody Bible Institute. Pp. 79. 50 cents.)

THE LEVER. by William Dana Orcutt. Those who read a book entitled "World Corportion" which was recently given wide circulation, will find many of the same ideas inculcated in this dramatic story of New York business life. Robert Gorham, a financier and promoter of the best type, undertakes a gigantic combine to be carried on for the public welfare as well as for private gain. The "wheels within wheels" of modern business life do not prove a strong foundation to build upon, for the self-interest and envy of his associates are the crumbling pillars that finally bring about the downfall of the structure. However, the book brings out the possibilities of an idealistic state in which coöperation instead of competition would be the ruling quality, a condition that can be brought about only by the elimination of greed and avarice in the individual. A beautiful love story of nature life runs through the book, and brings out the noblest qualities in the characters. (New York: Harper & Brothers. Pp. 318. $1.50 postpaid.)

NATIONAL PERILS AND HOPES, by Dr. Wilbur F. Crafts, superintendent of the International Reform Bureau. This little book is crammed full of information for those who have enlisted in the war against the current, most manifest and curable evils. Dr. Crafts is a militant spirit and goes to battle well panoplied. The subjects here treated are those of liquor, murder, divorce, lynchings, labor riots, municipal misrule, Sabbath desecration, impure shows and yellow journalism. In these nine things he claims we surpass the world. He endeavors to reveal the most apparent causes for the fact and calls for a co-operation of church and state, of moral courage and law, to overcome them. Preachers, editors, teachers and all others who are interested in helping the old world along will find it a valuable compendium and an incentive to effort. (Cleveland, Ohio: F. M. Barton. Pp. 152.)

ON THE FIRING LINE by Jenkin Lloyd Jones. The large-minded, great-hearted head of Abraham Lincoln Center and pastor of All-Souls Church, has here put into a little volume of 134 pages three addresses on temperance and several letters, addressed to workingmen, saloon-keepers, etc., on the question of temperance. The addresses, or essays as they might be better called perhaps, are written in his picturesque style and ring true to good-sense and a sound moral discrimination. This great lover of Lincoln possesses his hero's quality of love for men and never poisons his arrow with human hate when he goes out to battle with sin. Every temperance advocate should read this little book and so should every victim of the cup. It is a striking plea for the abolition of the saloon and its pity for the poor victims of the traffic will win their own hearts while softening the righteous judgments of those who are in the holy war on the grogery. (Chicago: The Unity Pub. Co., 50 cents.)

ADVANCE IN THE ANTILLES, by Howard B. Grase. Another book, as the title suggests, treating of the evangelization of other peoples through the Christian faith The study is by no means a pretentious one; it does not lay claim to any exhaustive study. Rather is it intended for missionary classes and young people's missionary movements. For such work it is admirably adapted. The style is most simple, and withal pleasing. It is more readable to the average person than most missionary books. The islands of Cuba and Porto Rico are given entire attention. The historical, social, and industrial conditions are set forth, both past and present. The awakening in these islands is emphasized. The author argues that a great opportunity is had at our very door for effective missionary work, and he urges a wider study and larger interest in these, our next door needy neighbors. (New York: Young People's Missionary Movement.)

THE LAST AMERICAN FRONTIER, by F. L. Paxson, Junior Professor of American History, University of Michigan. Whether there is sufficient reason for another book on this subject may be questioned. There is indication that the author has relied upon sources little used and relatively inaccessible. The forces that have shaped the history of the country beyond the Mississippi are pointed out and their social and industrial significance duly recognized. The delightful feature about the book, which is nothing more than the author claims, a sketch, is the picturesque character maintained throughout. Those who are historically inclined will find in this book a unique treatment of an abused subject; especially will it prove most fascinating after one has labored through a large field of purely historical data. (New York: The Macmillan Company. Pp. 402. $1.50 net.)

THE PHANTOM OF THE OPERA, by Gaston Leroux. Lovers of the mystery story will find a most entertaining plot in this story of love and terror. The Grand Opera House of Paris is the scene of the plot, and with its peculiar subterrannean architecture lends itself easily to the mysterious happenings that keep the reader's interest keen in every chapter until the close. The mysterious disappearance of Christine Daae from the stage while singing Marguerite in Faust, the search by her lover, Raoul de Chagny, with the Persian, down through the intricate substructure of the opera house to the domain of the opera ghost are a succession of thrilling adventures which seem well-nigh unexplainable. The double page pictures in full color are by the well-known artist, Andre Castaigne. (Indianapolis: The Bobbs-Merrill Company. Pp. 357. $1.25 net.)

Rainier of the Last Frontier

BY
JOHN MARVIN DEAN
AUTHOR OF
"THE PROMOTION, ETC."

Copyright 1910, By John Marvin Dean

CHAPTER XVI.

On Fagan's Trail.

The early morning is the choicest part of the Filipino day. The first flares of the dawn-fires kindle on the gleaming breasts of innumerable brilliant birds and the palms, the spires of bamboo, the mangos and the manzanita, all waver between dark green shadows and high-lights of golden orange. The humble "casas" of the peasantry are at that hour glorified into a chasm that the later hours will not sustain. Cheerful noises too, greet the traveler on the trails, from the first groups of workers sallying out from the towns to the rice fields and "tuba" groves. To the east, there will be an intense jagged line of bluest peaks beneath the melting sky. To the west a paler coloring will mark another range. Or, perhaps the great sea will show itself as a vast bed of opal fires.

Homeward bound for his Iloilo tent, Rainier came down through a most glorious morning from a five days' trip into the foothills. His heart was as light as an anxious lover's is permitted to be, for he had opened up his fifth branch of the Association at the important garrison of Santa Anna. Men and officers had received him heartily, and two men—Christian fellows—had been detailed to look after the newly opened branch by the commanding officer. Yes, Rainier was glad of heart that his inexperienced work was proving so acceptable. His task was beginning to grip him with its greatness. At first he had entered the work as a temporary help to McPurney. But now he found himself so devotedly attached to his unique position with its leverage upon the life of the troops, that he deferred even contemplating in his own mind the time when McBurney should return from Manila and assume once more the Association's activities in the Visagas. Would he be content to drop back from the task of helping men directly as he was now doing into the old work of a "war-special?"

The night shadows were still lingering in the narrow valley of the Verde, as he urged his pony forward, hoping to make San Vicente, before the full day would scorch his path. Out of those ravine shadows there came up the trail the sound of drumming feet.

A little breathless Visayan boy was running madly toward him, his scanty "camisa," ballooning about his neck.

Instinctively Rainier pulled in. His practiced eye had caught a protest in even that ridiculous little child figure, flying toward him.

As he came nearer Raineier recognized the little fellow. He was a little lad, whom he had often seen around the Brigade hospital. His father and mother were apparently unknown, for he was daily fed by the nurses of the staff. He remembered vividly seeing Miss Royce give the child an impulsive kiss on one occasion. He sprang out of his saddle to the ground.

"What is it, nino?" he demanded sharply.

The little fellow, gasping for breath, lifted up in his tiny fist a crumpled blue paper.

It was evidently a piece of paper torn from the covering of a roll of bandages.

As Rainier took it his eye first noted its Greek cross of red and beneath the cross a hasty scribble in pencil. It said:

"Fagan's band are just off the main trail, about a mile and a half east of San Blas. I have been captured and am in his camp now. It is about three o'clock a. m. Soldiers please hurry. Bernicia Royce."

In a flash little George Washington Rizal was left crying in the road. A gold-piece fell in the dust at his toes and Rainier was galloping on toward the San Blas trail.

As the little Cagayan pony stretched himself almost flat in the response to the lash of his rider, Rainier was muttering his plans aloud and trying to hold his mind from snapping with the awful situation.

"I'll turn off to the southeast at the next "barrio." It's over two hours since she wrote that note. I'll pick up Sergeant Manlicher and eighteen men at Vicente. The other troops are too far away. But San Blas and Passi should be notified by 'phone from Vicente. Also Iloilo. We'll strike the San Blas main trail in another half hour at the most."

Out of the ravine of the Verde galloped Rainier. He swerved to the east at an abandoned cluster of bamboo houses and rode over a bad trail, into the outskirts of San Vicente, emptying the chambers of his revolver to arouse the garrison.

"I came near killing you, you blanked lunatic," shouted a sentry angrily, as Rainier shot past his challenge.

The pistol did the work. As Rainier's pony clattered across the place there poured out of the "convento" the entire little garrison of San Vicente, a sergeant, two corporals and scarcely a dozen men. Out they came with all the assurance of a battalion, each man in a different stage of dressing, but all grasping their long rifles. There were big purposeful-looking cartridge belts gleaming around their waists.

Manlicher's eyes flashed with recognition as he saw the rider. He knew Rainier by sight and admired him as a practical religious worker.

In a dozen terse sentences, Rainier explained the situation to the huddled groups of soldiers in the "plaza," while all around them the awakened and alarmed dogs and Visayans lent their chorus of noises.

As he finished, not a man spoke, but Corporal Klein sprang back into the barracks to telephone nearby garrisions and arouse the whole country to the fight, and the rest rushed pell-mell for the ponies in the improvised "corral" back of the "convento."

Manlicher had seen to it that his men were furnished with mounts at the cost of the town and thanks to his efficiency, Rainier dashed out of San Vicente at the head of seventeen horsemen, within exactly twelve minutes from the time he had reached the plaza.

He who has seen American men aroused at a woman's peril and answering to a woman's cry, knows what faces these humble knights wore as they went recklessly down the slope toward the coming rifle debate.

"Soldiers please hurry!" she had written. They were muttering it to themselves as they kicked their startled, straining little steeds into a mad scramble over the stony trail.

Soldiers please hurry!

As they thought of that piteous sentence their left hands clamped to their awkward guns, with a vigor like the steel they grasped and their faces set in a wrath that linked them to the spirits of history's most terrible avengers.

The line lengthened as the best horses forged ahead, but Rainier and the sergeant held the head of the line, as they rattled into the main San Blas trail and rode east more slowly, searching for a cross trail into the brush.

"God help us," prayed the sergeant in Rainier's ear as they rode side by side. "We haven't got time to beat up this whole country. God has got to help us. Pray for us, Pilot. We've got to find that camp. THERE'S THE CROSS TRAIL, NOW! COME ON, MEN!"

Both Manlicher and Rainier had seen the trail as the sergeant finished his appeal and both turned their horses into it.

Instantly the air crashed into a hundred rifle reports and the savage yells of men.

The result was terrible.

Manlicher fell with a dozen bullets riddling him. He was to live many a year after, but Rainier, as he saw the distorted face of the sergeant plunging past him over his horse's neck, believed the man slain.

Rainier felt himself sinking to the ground, at the hot blast of the ambushed enemy. Gun barrels had been poked almost into his face from the manzanita brush and his Khaki tunic was blackened with the flame of the nearest one.

He found himself in a daze, trying to rise from a dead pony, uninjured but caught, while the rifles of Fagan's men were answered by the crash of the Krag-Jorgenson pieces, in the hands of Manlicher's men, over his prostrate body.

It was an awful moment. Behind him were crowding fearlessly up, the little group of soldiers, the narrow trail blocked with the body of Manlicher and Rainier's fallen mount.

One by one the men opened up from the saddle, firing at a foe that kept to cover and only giving an occasional glimpse of an active brown figure.

It was a hundred rifles against a dozen, but the men fired back into the sound of the guns with a reckless bravery that was superb. They even called out to the enemy in taunting phrases, some cursing, some jeering.

"Come out into the open and fight, you pock-marked thieves, you liver-spotted coyotes!" choked one man, brandishing his smoking rifle toward the jungle.

Rainier, looking back through the smoke, saw him pay for his defiance by plunging to the trail and writhing in a death agony. The sight gave him fresh strength and he wrenched himself at last loose and limped out into the main trail calling to the men to fall back out of the impossible position.

Three men had been tumbled from the horses, wounded. One at least was killed. Manlicher was lying quietly with his face turned up to the sunlight and bright red streams flowing from his temple, his cheek and his thigh.

All about hissed and shrilled the intermittent shots from the brush.

Dragging their wounded down the trail with them, the survivors of the little band fell back a scant hundred yards, some still proudly sitting their ponies and turning to send shots into the deadly jungle.

(To be continued.)

Going to Bed

BY H. O. SPELMAN.

Little Brown Bettie
Is going to bed;
Now give me your hand,
Take care where you tread.
This is a river,
I'll jump you across,
Now give me your arms
And I'll give you a toss.
Into the bed you go,
Under the spread, just so,
'Neath the warm covers
White as the snow.

Little Brown Bettie
Is going to sleep;
Now drop down your curtains,
Don't let your eyes peep.
Head on your pillow,
Hands by your side,
The fairies will take you
A long, long ride.
Into the west you go,
There you will rest, just so,
Guest of the fairies,
Till the cock crow.

Atlantic, Iowa.

Annie's Story

By Alice Turner Curtis.

Crack! crack! went the lamp chimney, as Annie lighted the big lamp.

"It was poor glass," she said, as she carefully picked up the pieces, "or else 'twas blown by a careless workman."

"Blown?" asked Mary, putting down her box of paper dolls and coming to the table.

"Yes, my dear. I used to live close by the big glass-works, and lamp chimneys are made by blowing glass into shape, like this." And Annie gave a puff and a long breath, and then looked down at Mary's surprised face and laughed aloud.

"I can tell you a story about lamp chimneys," she said, "but not tonight. To-morrow afternoon you bring Miss Constance round to my back porch, and I will tell you how glass is made." And with a proud little nod of her head, Annie stepped briskly across the room and closed the door softly behind her.

The next afternoon Constance and Mary found Annie waiting for them on the back porch. She had a basket full of stockings to be darned, and as she talked she worked busily. "I always knew about glass," she began, "because my father and brothers earned their living making it. Your folks can tell you how it is made of pure sand, and lime, and a kind of soda, all mixed and melted in a big clay pot over a fierce fire till it bubbles like boiling molasses.

"Now my father, being a glass-blower, had a long iron tube which he called a blowpipe, It had a mouthpiece at one end, and it swelled out like a bowl at the other end. He'd dip the bowl end into the pot of melted glass and twist it round a bit till it gathered up a bit of the melted glass. Then as he took it out he'd blow through the pipe. The glass would swell out like a bubble, and my father would swing the blowpipe back and forth steady, and the bubble would lengthen down a bit, about the shape of a lamp chimney. Then he'd put in into a sort of mold, give his pipe a twist, and blow again. The glass bubble would stick to the sides of the mold and be shaped in a jiffy, and the last blow would swell out the lower part, and there's your lamp chimney!"

"My!" exclaimed Constance. "Do men blow every chimney?"

"When my father worked they did," replied Annie, "but my brother is foreman in the shop now, and he tells me that some clever man has fixed machines to send air into the glass, and save the men's breath."

"Just think that glass is made out of sand," said Constance, "and can be blown into bubbles, just as we blow soap-bubbles!"

"Much the same way, my dear," said Annie. "I had great advantages as a small girl in having a father who knew how to do such things."

"Yes, indeed!" responded Mary.

"But my mother, too! She was a clever woman," continued Annie. "She taught me to put the smooth darns in my stockings. I was lucky in my parents," and Annie laughed happily.

"I'll teach you both to darn if your mother says the word," she concluded. "And now when you see a lamp chimney you'll recall what I told you about glass."

"Yes, indeed, Annie!" said Constance, admiringly; and Mary added:

"I wish our father could make lamp chimneys, Annie," which Annie felt was a very proper wish, and bade them a smiling good-by.—Youth's Companion.

The Chimney

BY M. S. HOSMER.

The chimney is a wondrous place,
Good for so many things;
Little swallows live in it,
I hear their whirring wings.

They build their little nests inside
The chimney broad and deep;
It makes a warm and cosy home
Where little birds can sleep.

If I creep inside the fireplace
And look up through the chimney high,
At night I see the stars shine
Away up in the sky.

When it snows, down through the chimney
To the hearth the snowflakes fall,
But they melt away so quickly
I can't catch them at all.

Sometimes a fire is burning
In the fireplace big and wide;
I like to sit and watch it,
With my dog by my side.

747 S. Fowler St., Los Angeles, Cal.

The Junior Pulpit

BY "MARK WAYNE."

A JAPANESE TALE.

There is a Japanese story about a woodcutter who went every day to work in the forest. He had a fearful lump on the left side of his head, which was disagreeable enough in itself, but to make matters worse everybody used to mock at him and call him "lump-head." However, he didn't get cross and sour because of it, but was as jolly and happy as a lark. One day when he was taking his after-dinner nap in a big hollow tree he was awakened by a lot of squeaky voices, and when he looked he saw a crowd of funny little dwarfs who were feasting and having a happy time.

They all set up a cheer, and made him come out in the middle of the ring and dance for them. Well, because he was such a happy fellow, and wasn't afraid, he danced so finely that the dwarfs all clapped their hands and offered to do anything that he wished. so he said: "Well, take this lump off my head" and as soon as he said it the lump was off. They then let him go and he trotted home again, singing and dancing because he no longer was lump-head.

There was in the village another wood-cutter who had a lump on the right side of his head. But he used to be sullen and sour about it, and snapped and snarled and grumbled so that he was quite unbearable. When he heard how the happy wood-cutter had lost the lump from the left side of his head he immediately set out for the wood and finding the hollow tree where the other had slept, he soon fell asleep himself. He awoke at the noise of squeaking and jabbering, and saw the circle of ugly little dwarfs feasting on the green. They shouted when they saw him, and dragged him out and told him to dance. But he was so frightened that he could scarcely stand straight, much less dance, and when he did try to hop around he was so awkward and clumsy that you could tell he never had been jolly in all his life. The dwarfs were very angry at him, and because he was so cross and unsociable, instead of taking the lump off the right side of his head, they put the lump which the other wood-cutter had lost, on to the left side of his head; and so he went sorrowfully home with a lump on each side of his head. And I think he was crosser and sourer and meaner every day because of it.

Now girls and boys, most of us have got some kind of lump or other on our heads, an ugly nose, or squint eyes, or crooked jaws, or big ears, or other things we can't help very well. Maybe you are lame, or not strong, or not very quick at studies, or not very rich, or not very attractive naturally. Some people who are this way go, like the second wood-cutter, and mope and sulk about their misfortune until instead of one lump they are sure to get another lump at least, and to be just twice as badly off. But if you are like the first wood-cutter, you will not notice your misfortune but make yourself just as cheery and happy and sunny as possible. And I daresay that lump will be taken off your head; but even if it is not, everybody will forget all about it, and it will be just as though you never had it at all.

The Daily Altar

An Aid to Private Devotion and Family Worship

SUNDAY, MARCH 12.

Theme for the Day.—Wounded for Our Transgressions.

Scripture.—And we shall say unto him, what are these wounds between thy hands? Then he shall answer, Those with which I was wounded in the house of my friends.—Zech. 13:6.

My Redeemer and my Lord,
I beseech Thee, I entreat Thee,
Guide me in each act and word,
That hereafter I may meet Thee,
Watching, waiting, hoping, yearning,
With my lamp well trimmed and burning!
Interceding
With these bleeding
Wounds upon Thy hands and side,
For all who have lived and erred
Thou hast suffered, Thou hast died,
Scourged, and mocked, and crucified,
And in the grave hast Thou been buried!
—H. W. Longfellow ("The Golden Legend").

Prayer.—Holy and righteous God, Thou hast made known to us in the sad experiences of our Savior all the tragedy and the cost of sin. In the wounds he bore, and the death to which he came, we behold the proofs that human selfishness is the great destroyer of peace and happiness. We beseech Thee, gracious Father, to make us more sensitive to the approach of temptation, and stronger to resist it. May the death of Christ mean more to us, as the symbol of the death that we too must die to all that is unholy and displeasing to Thee. And may his resurrection likewise mean to us the arousal to a new life of purity and power. We ask in His name. Amen.

MONDAY, MARCH 13.

Theme for the Day.—The Lure of the Unattained.

Scripture.—He hath made everything beautiful in its time; but also He hath set the world in their hearts.—Eccl. 3:11.

The eye is not satisfied with seeing, nor the ear filled with hearing.—Eccl. 1:8.

And the heat of the desert shall burn you,
The snow-field and ice-flow shall bite;
Yet hometide nor fireside shall turn you,—
I have woven a spell on your sight:

Ye shall gaze, to the last of your being,
Ye shall toil, ye shall travel and spend,
For the Thing That Is Just Beyond Seeing
And the Thing That Comes After the End!
—Charles Buxton Going ("The Spell of the Road").

Prayer.—O Lord, we thank Thee for the daily satisfactions that come to us in the multitude of blessings Thou hast provided. Yet we are not satisfied with even the best that we have. There is a yearning within us for what is as yet unattained. Thou hast set the world in our hearts, and we have a sense of longing to know and to experience fuller life. This too, is a part of Thy great gift to us. And we are sure that it means fulfillment in the aftertime. Fill us with this divine unrest, so that we may not grow content with half-fulfilled duties and second-rate blessings. So shall we be satisfied at last in perfect life. Amen.

TUESDAY, MARCH 14.

Theme for the Day.—The Martyr.

Scripture.—And they stoned Stephen, calling upon the Lord, and saying, Lord Jesus, receive my spirit. And he kneeled down, and cried with a loud voice. Lord, lay not this sin to their charge. And when he had said this, he fell asleep.—Acts 7:59:60.

Like Stephen, an unquenched fire,
He heeded not reviling tones,
Nor sold his heart to idle moans,
Though cursed, and scorned, and hissed, with stones:
But looking upward, full of grace,
He prayed, and from a happy place
God's glory smote him on the face.
—Alfred Tennyson ("Victorious Faith").

Prayer.—O Lord, Thou hast made clear to us something of the worth of our holy faith by the price which Thy servants have been willing to pay to establish it. We live in other times, and death is not required of us to purchase the freedom of our Christian hope. And we ask our hearts the question, Would we be willing, like the saints of old, to endure suffering and death for the Christ we love? Guide us with Thy might, we pray Thee, that we may be able to prove, by the service we render and the hardships we are willing to endure, that we also are worthy of the name we bear. For Christ's sake. Amen.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 15.

Theme for the Day.—The Mount of Glory.

Scripture.—And after six days Jesus taketh with him Peter, and James, and John, his brother, and bringeth them up into a high mountain apart; and he was transfigured before them. And his face did shine as the sun, and his raiment was white as the light.—Matt. 17:1-2.

The old world knelt in homage due,
The prophets near in reverence drew,
Law ceased its missions to fulfill,
And Love was Lord on Tabor's hill.

Still, as for refuge, we may turn
Where Tabor's shining glories burn,—
The soul of antique Israel gone,
And nothing left but Christ alone.
—John Hay ("Mount Tabor").

Prayer.—Our Father, we too have beheld the glory of our Lord, even though we were not with him upon the holy mountain. We know that we have not followed cunningly devised fables, for we have been the eyewitnesses of His majesty as He has wrought the wonders of His grace in our own lives and throughout the world. Only we long to share something of His purity and power, that the transfiguration of our lives may prove to others that the power of Christ is as great today as in the past. Give us this token of Thy salvation, O God. We ask in Jesus' name. Amen.

THURSDAY, MARCH 16.

Theme for the Day.—The True Freedom.

Scripture.—Jesus answered them, Verily, verily, I say unto you, Every one that committeth sin is the bond-servant of sin. . . . If therefore the Son shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed.—John 8:34-36.

Freedom of body is an empty shell
Wherein men crawl whose souls are held with gyves;
For Freedom is a spirit, and she dwells
As often in a jail as on the hills.
—Elsa Barker ("Breshkovskaya").

Prayer.—Our heavenly Father, we adore Thee for the mercy Thou hast made known to us in Christ Jesus our Lord. Thou hast shown us that it is possible to be freed from evil habits, low ideals and unholy thoughts through the power of prayer and the grace of Thy love. We cannot easily bring ourselves to take this great truth in all its meaning to our hearts. We cannot quite believe that Christ can really free us from all sin. O make us willing to try the great experiment of commitment to Him, and make our hearts glad in the freedom he helps us to gain. We pray as His friends. Amen.

FRIDAY, MARCH 17.

Theme for the Day.—Love's Assurance.

Scripture.—And we know and have believed the love which God hath for us. God is love, and he that abideth in love abideth in God, and God abideth in him. Herein is love made perfect with us, that we may have boldness in the day of judgment, because as he is, even so are we in this world. —1 John 4:16-17.

And God is love; and those He loves are blest;
Now thou dost understand
The least thou hast is better than the best
That thou didst hope for; now upon thine eyes
The new life opens fair;
Before thy feet the blessed journey lies
Through homelands everywhere;
And heaven to thee is all a sweet surprise.
—Washington Gladden ("Awakening").

Prayer.—O God, we pour out our souls in utter thankfulness to Thee, for Thou hast made us understand Thy love for us, and Thy willingness to have us trust ourselves completely to Thy care. It seems a mercy past all our deserving, and we cannot yet convince ourselves that it is true. Yet our friend and Savior, Jesus Thy Son, has assured us of its truth, and we cannot doubt his word. What new surprises of joy await us we cannot even guess. But we are sure Thou leadest us all the way, and life grows richer to the close. Accept our gratitude in Jesus' name. Amen.

SATURDAY, MARCH 18.

Theme for the Day.—The Light Bringer

Scripture.—Arise, shine, for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee, ... And nations shall come to thy light, and kings to the brightness of thy rising.—Isa.60:1-3.

The Savior comes! by ancient bards foretold!
Hear him, ye deaf, and all ye blind, behold!
He from thick films shall purge the visual ray,
And on the sightless eyeball pour the day;
'Tis he the obstructed paths of sound shall clear,
And bid new music charm the unfolding ear.
—Alexander Pope ("Messiah").

Prayer.—Into the darkness of our lives Thou hast shined, O Light of the World. No more do we walk in darkness and the shadow of death. We have come forth as from a prison house, and our souls have been made to rejoice in the light of Thy presence. Keep us this day without sin, we beseech Thee. May the Word be lamp to our feet and a light to our path. Enable us to make clearer the pathway of those who walk with us the road of life. And bring us at the end to the fuller light of the eternal day. We ask in Jesus' name. Amen.

CONDENSED WISDOM.

Shun delays; they breed remorse.—Napoleon.

The unerring school for the direction of taste is nature.—H. E. Rensburg.

There are as many ways of being happy as there are people in the world.—Edwin Pugh.

The Moral Leaders of Israel

BY PROFESSOR HERBERT L. WILLETT

Section XII. The Reforms of Elisha (2 Kings 9:1-36)

Study for March 19, 1911.

QUESTIONS.

1. With what nation was Israel usually at war during this period?
2. What city was the chief sufferer from Syrian invasion?
3. What was the condition of the people during the siege?
4. What remarkable prediction did Elisha make concerning the siege?
5. How was the suffering of Samaria brought to an end?
6. Who brought the news of the Syrian departure?
7. What was the cause of the panic in the Syrian army?
8. Give the details of the visit of Elisha to Damascus, as recorded in the Book of Kings?
9. What difficulties are encountered in connection with this narrative?
10. Why did Elisha resort to the unusual expedient of calling another man to the throne of Israel?
11. What qualities did Jehu possess that led Elisha to consider him the right man for the place?
12. What were the circumstances of Jehu's summons?
13. What measures did he take to insure the success of his efforts to obtain the throne of Israel?
14. What two members of the royal family of Israel did Jehu put to death?
15. Why did he include Ahaziah and the other princes of Judah in his program of extermination?
16. What was the significance of Jezebel's taunt to Jehu, "Thou Zimri?"
17. What message did Jehu send to the officials of Samaria? What was their response?
18. What was the significance of Jehu's friendly meeting with Jehonadab, the son of Rechab?
19. Under what pretext did Jehu secure the attendance of the Baal worshipers in Samaria?
20. What summary treatment of them followed?
21. What do you think of the ethics of Jehu's conduct?
22. How did the prophets regard his bloody measures of reform?
23. Do you think the work of Jehu resulted in good or evil to Israel?
24. What was the view of the later prophet Hosea regarding his conduct?
25. Give the incidents of the visit of Joash to the death-bed of Elisha.
26. What would you regard as the contributions of Elisha to the political, social, and religious life of Israel?

1. DAYS OF FAMINE. (2 Kings 6:24; 7:20.)

The war between Ben-hadad of Syria and Jehoram or Joram, the son of Ahab of Israel went on. The Syrians besieged Samaria and reduced it to such straits that the people were compelled at times to resort to the awful devices of cannibalism. In the sullen temper bred by these sufferings the court officials and the king were inclined to blame Elisha for their misfortunes, though the reason for this attitude is difficult to understand. Was it because he had counselled the kindly treatment of the Syrian soldiers sent for his arrest at Dothan? At this time he seems to have been living in Samaria whither he had perhaps come from Carmel to reside.

When the siege was at its sorest point and all hope of rescue or relief had been abandoned Elisha astonished everyone with the prediction that within a few days there should be a deliverance. The king, who in the distress of the hour wore sackcloth under his royal robes, could not believe the prediction, and one of his captains openly scouted the seemingly impossible prophecy. But in some strange way, as we are told, the Syrian army was suddenly seized with one of those night panics so common in ancient warfare, and imagining that they heard the approach of the army, conjectured that the king of Israel had hired Egyptian and Hittite alies. In terror the Syrians fled, leaving their camp, and weapons, garments, horses and asses, and whatever they possessed. The entire road to Jordan from Samaria was marked by the tokens of their headlong flight.

The discovery of this fortunate relief of Samaria was made by four lepers who stole out at night to beg some scraps of food from the Syrian camp. They came with their good news to the king, who could hardly be persuaded that the enemy had fled. The prediction of Elisha was completely verified that Samaria should have plenty of provision and that prices would suddenly decline. The captain who had doubted his word was placed by the king at the gate of the city, but was trampled in the rush of the people to secure the abandoned provisions and treasure.

2. ELISHA IN DAMASCUS. (2 Kings 8:7-15.)

The story of Elisha's visit to Damascus and his interview with Hazael, the officer of Ben-hadad the king, is difficult to understand. How to account for the presence of the prophet in a foreign capital, particularly as he was known to be the friend and chief counsellor of the king of Israel, is a matter of perplexity. Perhaps in this instance, as in others, we have only the tradition of a later time, which attempts to widen the sphere of Elisha's influence and to increase the honors which came as the result of his activity and leadership.

The story proceeds to note the fact that Hazael came from his master with an enormous present of all the valuable sorts of things for which Damascus was famous, to the extent of forty camel loads. The purpose of this embassy was to learn the outcome of Ben-hadad's sickness. Elisha replied to Hazael that there was no reason why the king should not recover, but yet he would die and not live. He further went on to intimate that Hazael himself would succeed the reigning king, and would be the instrument of terrible Syrian depredations on the frontier of Israel. The courtier returned to his master with the assurance that he should surely recover. But on the following day he took pains to fulfil the latter part of Elisha's statement by smothering the king with a wet face-cover. It is possible that the ravages of Hazael referred to by the prophet Amos (Amos 1:3-5) were in the mind of the author of this narrative, who wished to bring the events within the predictive scope of Elisha's work.

3. THE CALL OF JEHU. (2 Kings 9:1-13.)

A part of the program suggested in connection with the later years of the prophet, Elisha, included the anointing of Hazael as king of Syria, and of Jehu to be king of Israel. (1 Kings 19:16). Whether this was a statement included by the prophets in view of the actual facts of later times or a real prediction is immaterial. Certain it is that when Elisha became convinced that the house of Ahab could not be trusted to restore the worship of Jehovah to its proper place, he turned elsewhere and took one in whose fidelity he felt he could place reliance.

Jehu, who is usually called the son of Nimshi, was one of the chief captains of the army. He had been close to Ahab as a soldier of merit and faithfulness, and was with the king on the day when the memorable interview took place between the latter and Elijah in the field of Naboth (2 Kings 9:25, 26).

Joram, the king of Israel, had been besieging Ramoth-Gilead, but being wounded, had retired to his summer palace at Jezreel for recovery, taking with him his nephew, Ahaziah of Judah, who had come at his summons to assist him against the Syrians. When the kings departed, Jehu was left, apparently in charge of the siege. A portion of the city of Ramoth-Gilead had already fallen into the hands of Israel, but perhaps the citadel remained to be reduced.

The Moral Leaders of Israel is a Sunday School course for Young People's and Adult Bible Classes. It will continue throughout the year 1911. The publishers of THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY will supply classes of six or more with weekly copies of the paper containing these lessons, at $1 per year for each copy, or 30 cents per quarter. The class members will receive in addition to their Sunday-school lesson all the rich things provided every week in THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY. The papers distributed to the class on Sunday will contain the lesson for the following Sunday. Orders should be sent through the regular Sunday-school Treasurer if you wish to pay quarterly; or you may deal directly with the Publishers, enclosing remittance at the rate of $1.00 per year for each copy ordered. Be sure and give name of teacher or class member to whom papers shall be sent for distribution.

One day there appeared suddenly in the circle of officers standing about Jehu, a young man whose garb and manner showed him to be a member of the prophetic group. He strode up to Jehu and informed him that he had a secret message to deliver. The captain took him into the house where he was staying, and there was told that he was to become king of Israel, and was to take up the task of restoring the true worship and avenging the blood of the martyrs who had perished in the persecutions waged by the house of Ahab against the true faith.

When he had delivered this message, the prophet rushed away again in hot haste and Jehu came forth to his astonished fellow officers answering their eager inquiries regarding the mission of the crazy messenger with the words, "He spake to me saying, Thus saith the Lord, I have anointed thee king over Israel!" Thereupon the soldiers with enthusiasm cast their garments on the staircase of the public building where they were met, and placing Jehu upon them, blew the trumpet and proclaimed him king.

In accordance with his vigorous character Jehu took immediate steps to secure the authority thus so strangely promised him. He gave strict orders that no one was to be permitted to leave the city save himself and the chosen company he selected. Then he mounted his chariot and accompanied by a troop of warriors on whom he could place implicit dependence, he rode in furious haste toward Jezreel. That was one of the memorable journeys chronicled in the Old Testament.

Arrived within sight of the walls of Jezreel, the watchman on the tower saw him coming and recognized at once his merciless driving. He passed the word to the king, who at once sent out a horseman to ascertain the reason for Jehu's approach. But the horseman was bidden turn in behind the company, and a second messenger understood only too well the meaning of this bold coming of his chief captain. Bidding his friend, the king of Judah, seek refuge in flight, he turned to escape the hands of the warrior. But Jehu cut him down with an arrow, and Ahaziah, wounded by some of Jehu's followers, fled to Megiddo where he died. Thus, in one day, the kings of Israel and Judah perished.

The body of the king was cast into the field of Naboth, and the queen-mother Jezebel, royal and fearless to the end, was thrown from a window of the palace by the chamberlains at the command of Jehu, and perished under the feet of his horses. In this summary seizure of the power, the prophets saw the fulfillment of their highest hopes. They were not sensitive to the atrocities committed by the usurper so long as the long nightmare of the worship of the Baals could be brought to a close.

* * *

4. JEHU'S BLOODY REIGN. (2 Kings 9:14-36.)

Few events in the history of Israel seem more ferocious than the measures undertaken by Jehu to carry out the will of his friends the prophets. Not content with the death of the two kings and the queen-mother, he sent word to the officials of the capital Samaria either to send him the heads of all the family of Ahab to the number of seventy, or to defend their city and fight. They accepted the easier conditions and delivered to him the bloody trophies of the slaughter, which were piled in two heaps at the gates of Jezreel.

He then took his journey to Samaria to establish his kings ship there in the capital. On the way he fell in with a company of royal guests from the court at Jerusalem, coming to visit their relatives, King Ahaziah. These he took and put to death, to the number of forty-two. Was he planning to seize the throne of Judah as well as that of Israel, and to reign as David and Solomon had reigned over a united nation? If such was his thought, it came to nothing, for events in Judah took a very different course.

As he neared the city of Samaria, he was met by Jehonadab, the son of Rechab, the head of that company of desert dwellers and Mazirites that has usually passed under the name of the Rechabites. They were the representatives of the fierce and conservative element in Israel, and rejoiced at the drastic measures Jehu was adopting in behalf of the Jehovah worship.

Jehu now undertook the wholesale extermination of the adherents of the Baal worship. He summoned them under the guise of friendliness to a great festival in honor of their religion. The temple of Baal was completely filled. Then taking pains to assure himself that no worshiper of Jehovah was within the structure, Jehu turned loose upon them the soldiery and slaughtered them to the last one. The symbols of the heathen worship were completely demolished, and the place was turned into a dumping ground for years.

Perhaps the strangest part of this narnative is the prophetic commendation pronounced upon Jehu for this savage reformation, into which he had thrown with himself and such zeal. The prophets undoubtedly believed that the new king was pleasing God, for they pronounced upon him blessings which include the secure rule of his house for at least four generations. It is interesting to compare these extravagant encomiums (2 Kings 10:30), with the condemnation afterward voiced against Jehu and his bloody doings by a prophet who was worthy to stand on a much higher plane than Elisha (Hosea 1:4). But Elisha and the prophets of his day spoke the message of God as they understood it. The growth of insight and the lifting of prophetic levels from generation to generation through the history of the Old Testament is the convincing proof of the divine factor in the work of these devoted men.

* * *

5. LAST DAYS OF ELISHA. (2 Kings 13:14-21.)

The house of Jehu declined rapidly after these first days of furious reform. Already in Jehu's time the Syrians began to ravage the frontier again and to limit Israel's territory. We are informed by the Assyrian monuments that Jehu paid tribute to Shalmanezer II. in 842 B. C., and that this tribute consisted of gold, silver and other things of value. No doubt it was the purpose of Jehu to secure the friendship of the great Assyrian in his contest with Hazael of Damascus, but the tribute seems to have done him little good. He and his son, Jehoahaz (814-797), and his grandson, Joash, (797-781 B. C.), were unable to protect their kingdom, and fell gradually to great extremities of trouble until it seemed that Israel was about to perish at the hands of this strong neighbor.

When Joash came to visit Elisha upon his death-bed, he realized the value of the prophet's work to the state, and cried out, "My father, my father, the chariots of Israel and the horsemen thereof." In this exclamation he voiced the feeling in Israel that Elisha was worth more to the state than armies of soldiers. Even in death the prophet's fierce hatred of Syria manifested itself in his command to the king to shoot with his arrows eastward through the open window, thus symbolizing the undying hatred of the nation for its great antagonist. And when Joash took a bundle of arrows and struck three times upon the earth to please the dying man, Elisha fiercely reproved him that he had struck but three times, intimating that he should have kept on smiting until Syria had been completely destroyed.

A curious legend survives regarding the body of the dead prophet. A skirmish between Moabites and Hebrews took place in the vicinity of Elisha's grave. In burying one of the victims the soldiers hastily threw the body into the sepulchre of the prophet, and instantly as it touched the bones of Elisha the man revived and stood upon his feet.

Thus lived and died the last of the older school of prophet heroes of Israel. Elisha differed from Elijah in living closer to the people, but he shared much of the fierce zeal of his master. And his reforms, though thoroughgoing, brought Israel to a physical weakness that came near the border of destruction. But he prepared the way for a better order of things. The open worship of the Baals was henceforth impossible in Israel. And the memory of the life and services of this remarkable man, weighted as they were with fierceness of temper, and obscured by tradition and legend, remains one of the valuable records of moral leadership in ancient Israel.

* * *

FOLLOWING STUDIES.

Section III will deal with "The Judean School of Prophets;" section XIV will have the title, "Prophets of Northern Israel." Then will come two studies in the life and work of Amos and two on the ministry of Hosea.

* * *

TOPICS FOR SPECIAL STUDY, REPORTS AND PAPERS.

1. The relations of Israel, Syria and Assyria in this period.
2. The Assyrian record of Jehu's payment of tribute. The purpose and the results of this tribute.
3. The historicity of the narratives respecting Elisha.
4. The responsibility of the prophets for the rise of Jehu to power, and for his methods of dealing with the Baal worship.
5. The character of Jehu as captain and king.
6. The permanent values of Elisha's character and service for Israel.

* * *

LITERATURE.

Wade: "Old Testament History." Kent: "History of the Hebrew People," vol. II. H. P. Smith: "Old Testament History." Ottley: "Short History of the Hebrews." Articles in the encyclopedias and Bible dictionaries on "Elisha," "Jehu," "Baal."

Christian Endeavor

By W. D. Endres.

TOPIC FOR MARCH 19.

The Dangers and Uses of Money. Prov. 14: 24; I Tim. 6:17-19.

Money, like all other things, if properly used, is a good thing. One of the chief dangers besetting those who have money is they mistake its value. They have often tried to make it a substitute for intelligence, for moral character, and for spiritual worth. With it, they have tried to buy seats of influence and power in politics and society. Men oftentimes foolishly depend upon their wealth as a guarantee to social prestige or to continued power in politics, etc. Then again they have concluded that their wealth has relieved them of all obligation to service in both public and private ways. So widespread has this notion become among the wealthy people that we have a class of people in the world who may very properly be called the "idle rich."

We need to remember that money does not make the man. That in the long run money does not have intrinsic value; that is is a convenience which may be used for the promotion of worthy ends; that in the end high ideals and serious attempts to realize them are alone worth while. He who would avoid the dangers of money must look first to his ideals and where he is sure that they are right, use his money as a means to realize them. Instead, therefore, of the possession of money relieving us of responsibility it adds to it.

Of course the ideals of the Christian Endeavor lie within the broad field of Christian service. It remains for him to discover in his own particular case the best ways and means possible for putting plans into operation which will realize his aims—a task worthy of any man who has the patience and consecration to work at it.

There are innumerable opportunities at our hands. First of all there are our own immediate spiritual needs. The quiet hour, times and opportunities for reading and study, to keep alive and clear our ideals and to keep our resolutions strong and determined. Then the problem of evangelization—winning others to this same great cause, both at home and abroad offers endless opportunities to any power or ability. And in the third place there are days of practical Christianity. What are the community needs? And most of all what are we doing to supply them? The poor, the sick, the helpless, the neglected, the unruly, all are charges upon us and we dare not overlook them. Need we remind ourselves that here are fields to be worked and that he who has money, other things being equal, is best prepared to do it? Money may be in a bane or a blessing according as we use or misuse it.

A Significant Beginning

The Woman's National Foreign Missionary Jubilee rallies have thrilled great church centers from the Pacific to the Atlantic Coast. The story, in keeping with the spirit of today, is a rapidly passing panorama. In addition to mind and heart power, the utility of many world-forces have made possible speedy, definite, and history-making results. Greatness is born of many preceding births. Fifty years ago specific, organized work for foreign missions was begun by the women of the United States. Forty years later, in "The Upper Room," a place of prayer, at the Ecumenical Missionary Conference in New York City, was launched the United Mission Study Course. Over one-half million books have been sold. This year's book, Western Women in Eastern Lands, emphasizes the half century period. The chairman of the Central Committee, Mrs. Henry W. Peabody, conceived the Jubilee idea. The women of many churches soon caught the vision of possibility. The purpose is three-fold: increased interest in mission study, larger missionary offerings, and the enlistment of new members. A "company of women" have published the Word to great hosts. That our entire brotherhood may share with us the joy and profit of this story, is the mission of this message.

MRS. M. E. HARLAN.

ALREADY HAD HER SHARE.

Still another religious child story deals with diminutive Helen, who at the close of an exceptionally naughty day was told that at this rate she never would be allowed to enter the heavenly regions.

"Well," was the small philosopher's defiant answer, "I can't expect to go everywhere. I've been to 'Uncle Tom's Cabin' and the circus twice, and I s'pise," voicing the family judgment in regard to the coveted and not too numerous "treats" justly divided between herself and her four brothers, "that's about all that's my share for some time."

Illinois Department

State Office, 24 Illinois National Bank Bldg., Springfield

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY is a national religious paper published by the Disciples of Christ in the interests of Christian unity and the Kingdom of God. While its circulation is nation-wide and impartially distributed among all the states, it recognizes a special obligation to the State of Illinois in which it is published. It desires particularly to serve the cause of Christ in Illinois by publishing its significant church news, by interpreting its religious life and by promoting the ideals of the Disciples within its borders. To this end the publishers of THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY maintain a state office at Springfield, the capital and central city. It is the purpose of the state editor to study the whole field of Illinois, visiting all the churches, reporting his observations and pointing the churches to ever higher ideals. Pastors and church workers are requested to co-operate by regularly sending items of news, clippings from local papers, parish papers, weekly leaflets, occasional paragraphs of sermons and any other information that will give to the state editor all the data for reporting and interpreting the progress of Christian work in the state. All communications to the editor may be addressed, 24 Illinois National Bank Building, Springfield. All business communications should be addressed to the Chicago office.

The Milford church has located as its pastor, H. R. Lookabill.

The Copeland and Lake Fork churches will be ministered to by M. M. Hughes, who has been pastor of the Eminence Church.

Augusta church begins a revival meeting Harch 5th with Evangelist Sword. The pastor, Edwin F. Cornelius, and congregation, are expecting large results.

H. H. Williams, the pastor at McLeansboro, has had nine additions to the church at regular services, since the beginning of the year.

DeForest Mullins is holding a meeting in his home church at Mechanicsburg. Notwithstanding almost impassable roads, the congregations are averaging well.

H. D. Williams and the congregation at Oakwood, of which he is pastor, observed Decision Day, February 19th, resulting in 7 confessions, all from the Sunday-school.

D. W. Conner of Irving, is holding a meeting at Palestine. At last reports there were 15 additions, with a considerable interest, especially among the railroad men.

The local G. A. R. Post, attended the Lincoln Birthday celebration at Newman, where Cortland H. Livingstone, the pastor, delivered a special address.

H. H. Jenner of Stuart Street church, Springfield, addressed the Local Union of Young People's Societies of the various churches of the city, February 20th.

Fulton county churches are making an effort to become a Living Link in Foreign Missionary societies. The county seat is Lewistown where B. H. Cleaver is the minister.

J. E. Story began a meeting at Cowden, February 27th. Several weeks before, he had been in a meeting at Mulberry Grove, with twelve additions the first week, but sickness in the community required the meeting to be discontinued.

Allison church, where J. E. Moyer preaches, is in a revival meeting with B. F. Cato, pastor of Lawrenceville church preaching. Notwithstanding very unfavorable weather, the meeting is drawing large numbers of people and there have been several additions.

J. E. Pritchett, assisted by Charles E. McVay, closed a meeting at Herrin where W. S. Gamboe is minister. There were, during the meeting, seventeen additions. This church is now raising a building fund and is expecting to commence active building operations at the opening of spring.

Guy Sarvis, who together with his wife goes to China this year as missionaries from the Hyde Park Church, Chicago, gave a lecture on "Through the Heart of Africa" at West Pullman recently. Mr. Sarvis receives the highest praise for this lecture wherever it is delivered.

The W. E. Harlow revival at Peoria lasting for six weeks, closed at Central church with 22 additions and a debt of $1,200 liquidated. At West Bluff there were six additions and at Howett Street 17, making 45 additions in all, besides a very material strengthening of the churches.

Watseka church enjoyed a concert given by the Eureka Glee Club. The program and college spirit manifested by the boys won friends for the college. This church, with its pastor, Ellmore Sinclair, is making preparations for a revival. Cottage prayer meetings are being held in various parts of the city.

Before beginning his labor with the church at Litchfield, Charles W. Ross held a meeting at Chapin which resulted in 37 additions, of which number 31 were baptisms. He had the assistance of J. W. Seniff of Pittsfield. Mr. Ross began his pastorate at Litchfield, February 19th and was greeted with large congregations and an attendance at the Sunday-school of 400.

The meeting at Fowler, which district Evangelist J. D. Williams is conducting, has resulted in 12 conversions all of whom are adults. This church is pastorless and this together with the overchurched condition of the town, and an exceptional amount of infidelity, make the obstacles extra powerful, but there are hopeful anticipations of further results.

Clinton meeting, with Evangelist H. M. Barnett, is reaching results. There have been 17 additions and an interest which is promising for many more. This church enjoyed a missionary rally under the auspices of the Foreign Society, with A. McLean and Dr. Shelton and C. S. Weaver as speakers at the evening dinner hour. A banquet was served for men.

The Sunday-school at Carbondale on a recent Sunday had less than 200 in attendance with an offering of more than $68. The pastor's class of men, taught by A. K. Adcock, had an attendance of 30 and this class alone made an offering of $25. Other schools with about the same attendance on that day, had large offerings as follows: Canton, $30. and Havana, $17.25.

Long Point Church, where Rochester Irwin is minister, raised more than $4,000 for local expenses last year and gave the largest missionary offering in the history of the church. The membership was increased 25 per cent, the average Sunday-school attendance was larger than in previous years and the church has made itself a strong factor in dealing with the social and political questions of the community.

The meeting at Cameron, conducted by the pastor assisted by Miss Lizzie C. Goodlander, is succeeding beyond all expectations. So far, 16 have been added, 13 of these were by confession. This meeting is declared to be the best of the four which have been held by the pastor at this place. Miss Goodlander can be addressed at Drakeville, Iowa, for further engagements as singing evangelist.

Virden church paid all of its expenses for last year and had money in the treasury at the beginning of 1911. During the year about $2,500 was raised for all purposes. Of this amount, the Ladies' Aid Society raised more than $750. During the six years of H. J. Hostetler's ministry here, more than $10,000 was expended. Plans are now on foot for a splendid new church building, which will be erected this year. Mr. Hostetler, as announced last week, will sever his connection with the pastorate the first of April.

G. W. Zink engaged in a debate on the question of Woman's Suffrage, before the Woman's Club at Pleasant Plains. The question, "Resolved, that women should have the right of suffrage," was debated by two women on the affirmative and two gentlemen on the negative side. It is understood that the debate was decided for the affirmative. It is also understood that the negative debaters were inclined to aoccept the decision with more favor than if their own side had been awarded the decision.

A valuable piece of work is being done by D. H. Shanklin of Normal and one that will be appreciated by the Disciples of Illinois. For about two years he has been gathering and compiling data relative to the Disciple churches of the state. This matter, including a brief history of all the churches, will be put into directory form and will also include a short biography of all the preachers in Illinois. This is a service which will prove of great value, and which undoubtedly will be accepted by the Brotherhood with appreciation.

The Christian Endeavor Society at Saybrook observed Endeavor Day profitably. This organization supports a boy in school at the Damoh orphanage in India and finds much interest attached to this piece of Christian service. The Sunday-school here has received its front rank certificate and lacks only two points of being in the front rank. These points will soon be eliminated. The funeral of Lela Fay Hougham was conducted from the Saybrook church, February 18th, by J. M. Francis assisted by the pastor, C. C. Wisher. Miss Hougham was a daughter of C. D. Hougham, a former pastor of this church. Illinois Disciples and the Christian Century join in extending sympathy to the bereaved family.

Jacksonville Church, of Which R. F. Thrapp is pastor, made an offering to Eureka College last month, of $102. Last year, this church gave to Foreign Missions nearly $850. Of this amount $600 supported their living link missionary, Herbert P. Shaw in Shanghai, and the balance was used for the purpose of Mr. Shaw's office equipment. The church expects to duplicate this offering next month. There has been received a Chinese wall banner from Mr. Shaw, which will be displayed on the walls of one of the rooms of the building. The Foreign Missionary rally held in this church during February, was said by Mr. McLean, to be the largest of his tour, up to that point. Every year these rallies are increasing in interest and attendance at Jacksonville. The church has had no revival meeting of its own for five years, but there are additions constantly. Mr. Thrapp is a busy pastor. Evidence of this is in the fact that he was called upon to officiate at eight funerals during one week recently.

The weekly bulletin of Jacksonville church, contained in a recent issue, a unique prescription for Sunday morning tired feeling, as follows: "Mix with 30 or 40 minutes immediately preceding the one when you usually arise, a little ambition, (some hustle, will double the value of the minutes), then mix in your mind a small fraction of your need of instruction, all of your ability to help, and stir continually with a feeling of your responsibility. Put all together and take in one dose every Sunday morning." The author of this has the diagnostic ability of a scientist and his therapeutics will be unquestioned by the advanced schools of medicine. The only question which arises is as to whether the prescription is palatable, and mild enough to induce its usage by the patient. Likely nothing short of such heroic measures will be of advantage. However, when the discoverer of the remedy has had enough test cases to announce favorable results, we shall be glad to give publicity to the facts for pastors of churches where this congregational disease is prevalent.

The Woman's Missionary Society at Evanston is planning to raise its money this year by contribution rather than by teas and sociables. They are expecting a larger offering than in previous years and we predict that there will be more satisfaction over a contribution made in this way, than a larger one made by methods which require absolutely no missionary interest. Regardless of the amount of money raised and regardless of the immediate satisfaction, it can easily be predicted that the society, in days to come, wlil be a more efficient organization, from adopting means for accomplishing purposes, which are appropriate to the purpose itself. It is true that churches and societies make their own methods, but some day we will come to understand that churches and societies are also made what they are by the methods which they adopt. It is not enough that we have a good purpose in view. Unless we have a method equally as good, we will never arrive at the result desired. Many a church needs a quickening of conscience on the means employed for accomplishing things which of themselves are of unquestionable value.

A country life conference was held at Bloomington. It included delegates from all organizations promoting the welfare of rural communities. J. W. Street, pastor of Mackinaw Church, represented the Disciple brotherhood. Such a movement as this has in it possibilities for working out reforms and elevation of the general life of the small town and country. We have been preparing our ministers for the city and have been allowing those who could not secure city pulpits, because of the excessive number of candidates, to gravitate to the smaller towns and churches. It has been mistakenly assumed, that because certain preachers were not invited to the city pastorate, they were therefore equipped for the smaller field. Such is not the case in very many instances. A special type of minister is just as essential in the small town and country as in the city, and, unless that special type is discovered in the minister, he will fail as much as he would, if selected for the city pulpit. What we need, is men who have been trained so that they know the life of people with whom they are to labor, and whose knowledge of this life is as scientific and thorough as is the city minister's acquaintance with urban affairs. The country minister has problems to confront, which are quite as testing as those met in the city. Furthermore, these problems are to be solved by the minister alone in very many instances, while the city pastor has a group of men about him, with intelligence and skill to cope with the situation, even in the absence of pastoral efficiency. The dignity of the minister wno deals with the smaller town problems, is not a whit less than that of the minister in the large community. We need conferences for the ministers of village churches, and those conferences should be directed by the most intelligent and broad-visioned men securable, for such assemblies.

Chicago

By Vaughan Dabney.

Dr. Willett of Memorial Church is preaching a short series of evening sermons on "Modern Religious Problems." Among the themes now being considered are the following: "What is God Like?" "Is Jesus Only a Man?" "What Authority has the Bible?" and "Is the Church Making Good?"

The official Board of the Irving Park church, on the evening of Feb. 28, tendered a banquet to the members and friends of the church, to celebrate the completion of the new gymnasium. About 200 were present. Austin Hunter delivered the address of the evening. Others speeches were made by Messrs Bushnell, Rioch, McPherson, and C. C. Buckner, pastor. As an evidence of the appreciation of their interest and ability, the church presented electroliers to Mr. Lippincott and Mr. Ailsworth, who superintended the construction.

The sixty-seventh quarterly convention of the Chicago Union C. W. B. M., was held Thursday March 2, at the Memorial Church of Christ. The session was an all day one; luncheon was served at the church. Over 200 were in attendance and nearly every city auxiliary was represented. At the business session, it was announced that the money pledged by the union to purchase a stereopticon for Mrs. Maria R. Ford, in Argentina, had been raised. The stereopticon, a gift of the Chicago C. M. B. M. union, will be supplied to Mrs. Ford in the near future. The address of the day was delivered by Mrs. M. E. Harlan, corresponding secretary of the National Organization. Mrs. Harlan brought encouraging reports of the work in other localities, especially emphasizing the results accruing from the Woman's Jubilee Campaign.

The Douglas Park Church held their last services in their old building Sunday, March 5. The property has been sold to the school board, and will be used to erect a new school building. Special musical program, remarks from old members, and the closing song of "Blest be the Tie that Binds," were features of the service. Until their new building is erected, the congregation will have temporary quarters in a store room on Ogden avenue. The old building was erected in 1901 under the direction of Claire L. Waite. It was built at the cost of sacrifice on the part of the members. Douglas Park is optimistic about the future. Recently a great fellowship meeting was held at which time it was announced that the old debt, of $1,600 of some ten years standing, had been wiped out. Consequently, entering into a building campaign, free from debt with money in bank, should prove encouraging to any church. Plans are being made to secure available and choice real estate and to erect a neat workshop inside of six months. Pledges for the building amounting to nearly $1,000, payable in six months, were taken at a recent service.

O. F. Jordan and the Evanston church are getting the utmost possible good out of the current prayer-meeting topics dealing with the contributions of the great evangelical bodies to our common faith. Representative pastors of the various denominations have consented to lead the meetings on the evenings when their respective denominations are considered. For example: On March 8, the topic was, "Our Debt to Lutheranism," and Rev. T. B. Hersch conducted the meeting and interpreted his people. On March 15, when the debt to Presbyterianism is considered, Rev. A. S. C. Clark, a Presbyterian pastor, will be present. Thus the plan moves for the whole course of six evenings in study and appreciation of these historic religious movements. Mr. Jordan himself is announced to lead the last one of the series on April 12, the theme, "Christian Unity a Power. Mr. Jordan recently invited Rev. B. Fay Mills into his pulpit for an evening address and on the following Sunday night with Mr. Mills' consent spoke on his own view of Jesus which he characterized as a liberal orthodox view in contrast with Mr. Mills' view which seemed extremely destructive.

The representatives from the Disciples of the Federal Council of the churches of Chicago are Dr. H. L. Willett, O. F. Jordan, Austin Hunter, chosen from the ministers. The laymen chosen are Mr. Bushnell of Irving Park, Mr. Curtis of Austin, and Mr. Faddis of Hyde Park. The council, the only representative and authoritative body at work in the city, is to serve as a clearing-house for all the churches.

To the Preachers of Illinois

It has been decided to hold a short session of our Northern Illinois Christian Ministerial Institute at the same time as our Congress at Springfield April 18-20. A program has been outlined for the afternoon of Tuesday, April 18, and will be published in our papers ere long.

This is a great opportunity for our ministers of Illinois. There will no doubt be a record atendance. S. H. ZENDT, Secretary.

The Sower

A sower went forth to sow,
His eyes were dark with woe;
He crushed the flowers beneath his feet,
Nor smelt the perfume, warm and sweet,
That prayed for pity everywhere.
He came to a field that was harried
By iron, and to heaven laid bare;
He shook the seed that he carried
O'er that brown and bladeless place.
He shook it, as God shakes hail
Over a doomed land,
When lightnings interlace
The sky and the earth, and his wand
Of love is a thunder flail.
Thus did that sower sow;
His seed was human blood,
And tears of women and men.
And I, who near him stood,
Said: "When the crop comes, then
There will be sobbing and sighing,
Weeping and wailing and crying,
Flame, and ashes, and woe."

It was an autumn day
When next I went that way.
And what, think you, did I see?
What was it that I heard?
The song of a sweet voiced bird?
Nay—but the songs of many,
Thrilled through with praise and prayer.
Of all these voices not any
Were sad of memory;
And a sea of sunlight flowed,
And a golden harvest glowed!
On my face I fell down there;
And I said: "Thou only art wise—
God of the earth and skies!
And I thank Thee, again and again,
For the Sower whose name is Pain."
—Richard Watson Gilder, the Sower.

Wrote Elizabeth, the poet-queen of Roumania: "Do not be proud of having borne your misfortune. Could you have done otherwise?" A very pertinent question. Inasmuch as we can in no way evade our misfortunes, there is no cause for pride in meeting them. But the spirit in which we meet them is in our own control. In that there may be cause for pride or for shame. —Great Thoughts.

The Christian Century

Published Weekly by

The New Christian Century Co

700-714 East Fortieth St., Chicago, Ill.
United Religious Press Building.
Phone Douglas 3113.

Entered as Second-Class Matter Feb. 28, 1902, at the Post Office at Chicago, Illinois, Under Act of March 3, 1879.

EDITORS
CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON.
HERBERT L. WILLETT.

CONTRIBUTING EDITOR
SILAS JONES.

SUBSCRIPTIONS.
Subscription price $2.00. If paid strictly in advance $1.50 will be accepted. To ministers if paid strictly in advance, $1.00 per year. Single copy 5 cents.

EXPIRATIONS.
The label on the paper shows the month to which subscription is paid. List is revised monthly. Change of date on label is a receipt for remittance on subscription account.

DISCONTINUANCES.
Special Notice—In order that subscribers may not be annoyed by failure to receive the paper, it is not discontinued at expiration of time paid in advance (unless so ordered), but is continued pending instruction from the subscriber. If discontinuance is desired, prompt notice should be sent and all arrearages paid.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.
In ordering change of address give the old as well as the new. If the paper does not reach you regularly, notify us at once.

REMITTANCES
Should be sent by draft or money order payable to The New Christian Century Company. IF LOCAL CHECK IS SENT ADD TEN CENTS FOR EXCHANGE.

ADVERTISING.
Nothing but clean business and reliable firms advertised. Rates given on application.

Church Life

F. P. Arthur is in a meeting at St. Louis, Mich.

W. H. Boles is in a meeting with Central Church, Joplin, Mo.

W. J. Lhamon began a meeting at Bedford, Ohio, March 5.

L. H. Otto, former pastor at Princeton, Mo., has accepted the pastorate at Plattsburg, Mo.

E. E. Violett is in a meeting at First Church, Portsmouth, Ohio. He is assisted in the singing by Homer Sala.

Urichsville Sunday-school had an attendance of 447 on a recent Sunday. This is nearly twice their enrollment a year ago.

A successful evangelistic meeting has been concluded at Olive Chapel, New Carlisle, Ind. Fourteen members were added to the church.

M. E. Chatley, formerly of Bowling Green, Ohio, who has accepted the pastorate at Centerville, Ia., began his work there Feb. 19.

A movement is on foot to unite the congregations of First and Central churches, Marion, Ohio. A series of revival services are now in progress at First Church.

J. M. Lowe is working at Conway, Ia., under the auspices of the county association to establish work in the neglected field there. The outlook is encouraging.

F. H. Groom, pastor of Central Church, Tacoma, Wash., preached a sermon recently on "Best Methods of Helping the Poor," which was published in full in the daily press of Tacoma.

Frank Brown of Coshocton, Ohio, has accepted a call to Second Church, Warren, Ohio, succeeding C. A. Reynard, who goes to Toronto, Ontario, April 1. Mr. Brown was a former pastor at Chagrin Falls, Ohio.

W. A. Guy, for several years pastor at Eaton, Ohio, has resigned his charge there on account of impaired health. He will remove to Carnahan, Ohio, and preach for the church there for the present.

The congregation of Wabash Avenue Church, Kansas City, Mo., dedicated their partly completed building on Feb. 26. Addresses were given by J. H. Mohorter, D. Y. Donaldson and Burris A. Jenkins. The cost of the finished structure will be $100,000.

Ben N. Mitchell, who has recently accepted the pastorate at Compton Heights Church, St. Louis, Mo., delivered an addresss on Feb. 26, on "The Religions of India." Mr. Mitchelll was a missionary to this country and made a close study of its customs and religions.

W. W. Burks, of Nevada, Mo., has concluded his meeting with S. G. Fisher at Trenton, Mo. During the services, seventy-seven were added to the church through the consecrated work of both evangelist and pastor, and the workers in the congregation. Arthur Haley directed the music.

February 19 was a great day at Second Church, Warren, Ohio. The Sunday-school had an attendance of 357 and an offering of $19.25, which was given to the cause of home missions. Both church services were well attended, and ten united with the church.

The union meeting of our churches at Topeka, Kan., held by Charles Reign Scoville, is resulting in many accessions. During the first fifteen days there were 464 accessions, 154 being added on Sunday, Feb. 26. These meetings are being held in the large auditorium, which has been filled to its capacity by the large audiences.

At last the announcement has come of the death of F. M. Green, who has been gradually weakening in health for many months. He was buried Feb. 20. George Darsie preached the sermon at the funeral service held in Akron, O. Disciples everywhere will regard tenderly and gratefully this widely known and fruitful minister.

C. A. Freer, pastor at Millersburg, Ohio, will preach a series of Sunday evening sermons during the month of March on Christian Union. The first three sermons will treat the subject from the standpoint of superficial thinking on this question, the great loss by division, and the teaching of the Bible concerning it. The last theme will be "Signs of the Coming of Christian Union."

Geo. L. Snively and O. J. Marks are in a good meeting at Marion, Ind. Despite the fact that Marion has been in the midst of a political campaign, they have had splendid audiences. On Sunday, Feb. 26, twenty-four were added, fourteen being heads of families. Mr. Snively addressed an audience of 2,500 at the Coliseum on Feb. 27, and raised $500 for the temperance campaign.

The three weeks' meeting held by G. J. Chapman with his congregation at First Church, Joplin, Mo., closed on Feb. 26, with good results. The meeting was primarily for the rallying of the membership, but there were also a number of additions. One of the happy features of the last week was a reunion of the old-time members. A number from out of the city were present and letters from former pastors were read. J. Z. Burr, whose pastorate began in 1874, was present and gave an address to the congregation at one of the meetings.

Rededicatory services were held at First Church, St. Louis, Mo., Feb. 26. Many changes and improvements have been made which greatly add to the beauty of the building and to the convenience of the services. This congregation was organized in 1837, the present building being erected in 1888. I. N. McCash of Cincinnati, Ohio, delivered the dedicatory address, and B A. Abbott, L. W. McCleary and J. H. Garrison also assisted in the services.

The following report from Charles Darsie tells of the prosperous growth of his church: Today began my seventh year as minister of the Uhrichsville church. During the past six years 555 have been added to our membership, making the present total 836. The Sunday-school has increased from an average attendance of 235 in 1904 to 409 in 1910. In addition, we have added a large Home Department and a Cradle Roll, making our present enrollment considerably over one thousand. The mortgage debt of $5,500 has been paid. The total financial receipts of the church in the six years amount to $28,000, of which more than $4,000 was for missions and benevolences. My seventh year here began very pleasantly with two added at the evening service.

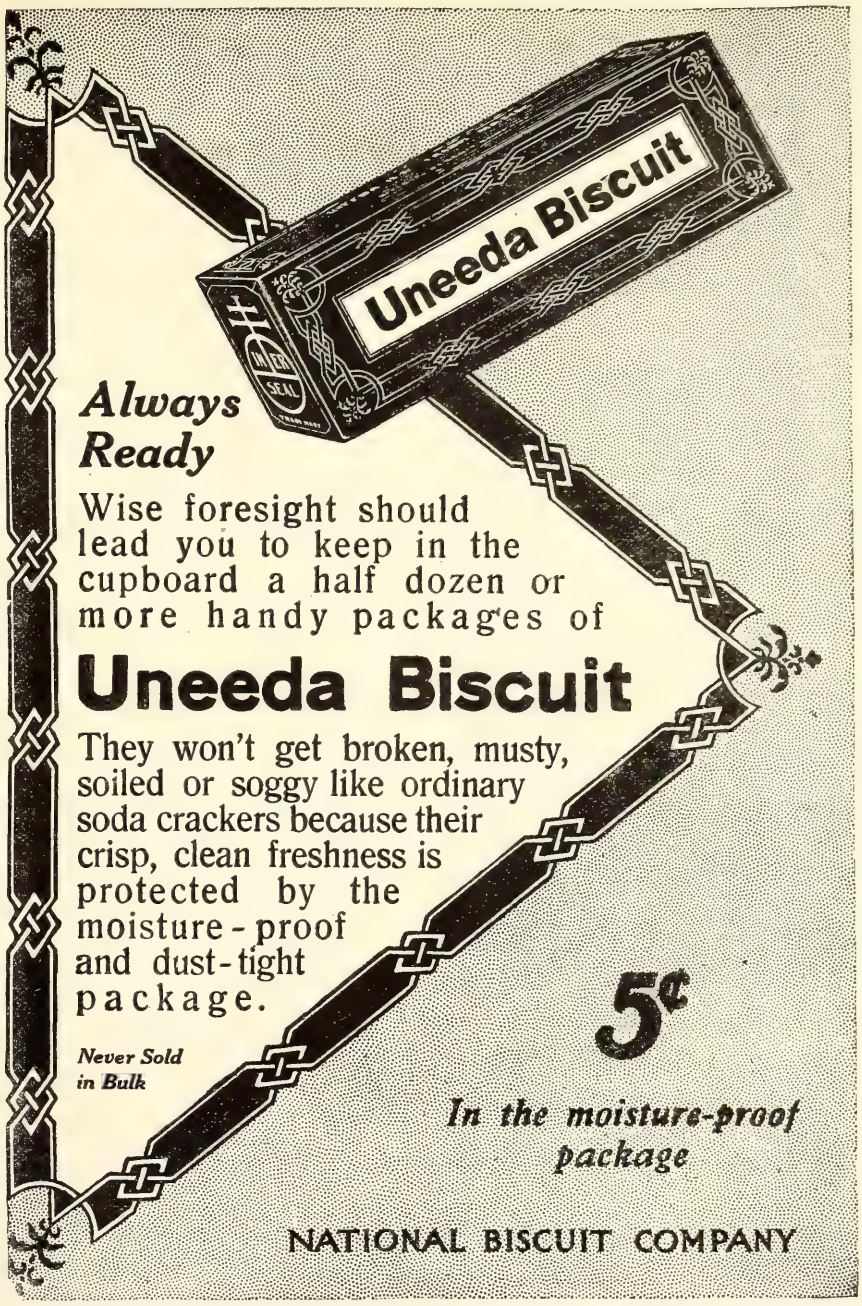
W. J. Lhamon has closed four weeks of service with Harry G. Hill at Third Church, Indianapolis, Ind. The first week was given over to an "Indoor Chautauqua," at which Mr. Lhamon gave a course of lectures on "Comparative Religion." This was followed by a meeting held mainly for educational and inspirational purposes, although fourteen were added to the membership. During this meeting, Mr. Lhamon gave a series of expository sermons and afternoon lectures emphasizing the person and teachings of Jesus. This congregation is now in its new building, which when completed will be one of the most commodious churches in the brotherhood, and under the leadership of Mr. Hill, expects to accomplish great things. With heavy financial demands, the church is now a living link, supporting Elsie Gordon in India. Their Sunday-school is a growing one, and is nearing the 500 mark.

New Field Secretary for the Bible College of Missouri

The position of field secretary for the Bible College of Missouri, formerly held by Professor G. D. Edwards, has been filled by the election of Mr. Richard W. Gentry. There is peculiar propriety in calling Mr. Gentry to this important work. He is a Missourian and a Disciple by heredity, education and personal consent. He was born in Columbia, while his father, Richard Gentry, Sr., was pastor of the church there. He graduated from the University of Missouri in 1905, having attended the Bible College and having begun to preach before his graduation. In 1905-6, he was a fellow in Union Theological Seminary, New York, and assistant to Dr. C. H. Parkhurst. In 1907-8, he acted as supply instructor in Old Testament in the Bible College of Missouri. During 1908-11, he has been pursuing theological studies in the University of Chicago, where he took his B. D. in 1909. He is now a candidate for Ph. D., and is writing his thesis upon "The Growth of the Disciples' Movement in Missouri."

Nothing could be more congenial in view of his attachment to the couse of the Disciples, and in view of his interest in Missouri, than this work which will take him into the fields concerning which he is gathering historical information. He accepts the position as a form of the Christian ministry enabling him to labor for an institution in whose worth and future greatness he believes, while at the same time making a contribution to the literature of the Disciples.

CHARLES M. SHARPE.



Uneeda Biscuit
Always Ready
Wise foresight should lead you to keep in the cupboard a half dozen or more handy packages of
Uneeda Biscuit
They won't get broken, musty, soiled or soggy like ordinary soda crackers because their crisp, clean freshness is protected by the moisture-proof and dust-tight package.
Never Sold in Bulk
5¢
In the moisture-proof package
NATIONAL BISCUIT COMPANY

SEND for EASTER SUPPLIES

The new Easter Cantata entitled

"THE EASTER HEART"

was written by

MRS. JESSIE BROWN POUNDS

and is in some respects the best concert exercise that she has ever prepared. It is designed for use by the young people of the Churches of Christ in behalf of Orphanage work in Mission fields.

We have some very attractive helps to aid the young people in raising their Easter offering. These are an "Easter Egg Envelope," and an "Easter Heart;" the latter is a little blood-red heart containing 100 golden stars, and is to be worn as a badge of service by a boy or girl while raising an Easter offering.

Order as many of all these supplies as you will need. They will be sent, prepaid, free of charge. Address,

CHRISTIAN WOMAN'S BOARD OF MISSIONS
(YOUNG PEOPLE'S DEPARTMENT)
Missionary Training School Indianapolis, Ind.

Books

WHEN YOU WANT BOOKS
Send your order to us. We handle the books of all publishers, at the lowest prices. Your order will be promptly attended to.
THE NEW CHRISTIAN CENTURY COMPANY
700 East Fortieth Street - - - - Chicago, Ill.

Some one sends us an envelope full of programs and clippings and card announcements intended, evidently, to show the multifarious activities of the Christian Church at Hopkinsville, Ky., where Harry D. Smith, president of the American society this year, is pastor. Among them is an invitation to hear I. N. McCash, "one of the ablest, most eloquent and most beloved of the living preachers" of the Disciples. Another is a card announcing an annual Roll Call of the congregation on Sunday, Feb. 26, in the afternoon. "No offering, no pledge, no announcement of Roll Call by mail,"—these promises and warnings would seem to insure a good attendance. Yet another is a letter addressed to all the members of the Presbyterian and Christian churches inviting them to a union meeting of the two congregations to be addressed by a well-known speaker who attended the Edinburgh Conference. The letter is signed by Mr. Smith and the Presbyterian pastor. One more is a menu card prepared for a banquet given the Hon. W. J. Bryan, at which Mr. Smith gave a toast of welcome to the Democratic statesman-preacher. These and other pieces of literature in the envelope indicate the wide variety of activities and interests of the earnest and cultivated ministry of the pastor who will preside at the Portland convention in July. Those churches afforded an opportunity to hear him in the parliaments now being held may be congratulated.

Rev. Harry D. Smith.

Front Rank States

We are glad to report thirty states in the Front Rank campaign with 666 schools. Clarence L. DePew, State Bible School Superintendent of Illinois says, "Please send me 600 of the Front Rank Form No. 6. Am going after our Illinois schools on a new line and would like to have these at once." Myron C. Settle, State Bible School Superintendent of Kansas writes: "Enclosed find certificates. This makes ninety in Kansas. We are progressing slowly, but watch the Sunflower State when it comes to getting "stickers." It is one thing to get a certificate and another thing to get the gold seal." All our state men are up and doing things in this campaign and we trust the schools will respond promptly. Send in your application at once, either to your State Bible School Superintendent or the National office. We are ready to issue your certificate. Put your school in the "Front Rank."

ROBT. M. HOPKINS,
American Bible School Superintendent.

Urichsville, Ohio

It is my pleasure to assist Charles Darsie and the church at Urichsville, Ohio, in a series of meetings closing Feb. 16. I had been with them four years before for a similar service and it was a pleasure to note the manifest growth in every particular.

Under the leadership of Mr. Darsie the Sunday-school has been thoroughly organized and graded; as a result real Bible teaching is accomplished, the school and church have had a steady and healthy growth, and the pastor has a large place in the affections of the church and in the life of the community.

The meetings were characterized by large audiences; the sincere good will and close fellowship of all the churches and pastors. Sixty-two were added to the church rolls. Twelve were men, fourteen were boys; half were adults. I. J. CAHILL.

Eureka College Letter

The people of Eureka have recently had a great up-lift in a wonderful missionary rally. A McLean, president of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society, was with us and at his best. He had with him Dr. A. L. Shelton, who has spent years in Thibet. Dr. Shelton's message was one of great inspiration. Rev. C. F. Weaver, of Latham, Ill., who spent seven years in Japan, was present and made an inspiring address. Several ministers from other places were in attendance. In the evening eighty men sat down at a banquet in the parlors of the Christian Church. Mr. McLean is very popular in Eureka, and his missionaries rallies are looked forward to with great joy.

Eureka is booked for a great time this week under the leadership of R. P. Shepherd, of St. Louis. Mr. Shepherd will deliver four addresses on Sunday-school work as follows:

1. The Basis of Pedagogical Psychology.
2. The Rise of Religious Pedagogy.
3. Practical Philosophy of Religious Education.
4. The use of the Bible in Religous Education.

He will deliver two popular lectures while in Eureka on "The Progress of Paganism," and "The New Service." Everybody is looking forward with great pleasure to Mr. Shepherd's visit. These are live themes and our people are interested in them.

I am frank to say that the Endowment Campaign is moving too slow to suit me. As we near the end of the campaign, many of our prospects vanish as the mists. We need at least $22,000 in pledges between this and Commencement to put us in the clear. It is possible that our people will let us fail with the campaign so nearly completed? We cannot think that they will. But it remains to be seen as to what the attitude shall be. We are doing everything within our power to secure the pledges, but the deciding vote is always with the people who have the money. We shall continue to believe that the people will do right. H. H. PETERS.

Bethany College Prosperous

The plans and specifications for the Oglebay Hall of Agriculture and Science have been completed and contractors are now preparing their bids for the construction of the same. This new building will stand at the northeast end of the main college building, and will be 126 feet by 60 feet. It will be of fireproof construction, and of Gothic architecture, in keeping with the main college building. It will contain four laboratories, six class rooms, and offices for the president and secretary. The building will cost $35,000 to $40,000.

The Percy B. Cochran Hall, which is to be a high grade dormitory for young men, is now two stories high, and will be pushed as rapidly as possible to completion, as soon as the weather opens up. This building will have 85 rooms, including ten bath rooms. It is also of fireproof construction, and will make one of the handsomest dormitories for young men to be found anywhere.

The Waddington Lectures on agriculture endowed by Mr. Earl W. Oglebay, and which are being delivered in the college every two weeks, are attracting attention, and are given enthusiastic hearing by students, faculty, and farmers of the surrounding community. Arrangements have been made to establish a Chair of Agriculture with the opening of next session in September.

The college has just come into possession of the property in Bethany and near Bethany formerly owned by Mr. C. B. Scott. This property includes the residence now occupied by Mr. Scott, two town lots, and twenty acres of orchard and coal land immediately adjoining the college campus. Mr. Scott and family will soon remove to Cleveland, Ohio. The acquisition of this property at a cost of $7,000 gives to the college almost three hundred acres of valuable farming and coal land. It is proposed to use the Alexander Campbell farm as a demonstrating farm, not an experimental station. By this is meant that some of the best methods in agriculture and horticulture will be used in the plan of conducting a model farm. Beginning with the summer months, the college will be able to offer to a large number of young men opportunities to earn a good portion of their expenses while in college.

Competent engineers are at work preparing plans for a central heating plant, which will supply heat to all of the college buildings, and which will be large enough to meet the requirements of additional buildings as they may be constructed from time to time.

The splendid work done by Mr. Oglebay on the college grounds and the streets leading to the college will be continued during the coming summer. Mr. Oglebay, who is now in the South continues to manifest his great interest in the college, and has already forwarded a substantial check to be used in further beautifying the campus. In addition to this, he is growing in his greenhouses at Waddington some four thousand shrubs and plants, which are to be placed on the campus during the coming summer.

Hon. M. M. Cochran, of Uniontown, Pa., who has made such liberal gifts to the college, has recently purchased another house and lot contiguous to the college campus, and has donated same to the college.

George W. Muckley, of church extension fame, favored us with a visit this week, and delivered, to the faculty and students, one of his stirring church extension addresses. E. P. Wise, pastor at East Liverpool, Ohio, is beginning a meeting in the old Bethany Church, which promises well. George T. Smith, of Roan, Indiana, has been called to the pastorate of the Bethany Church, and will assume his duties March 1. Prof. T. B. Taylor has been delivering, for the past two months, once each week, a course of lectures on Old Testament history.

HIRAM COLLEGE. Send for Illustrated Bulletin, Souvenir Mailing Card and Complete Catalog to PRES. MINER LEE BATES, HIRAM, O.

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS. UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY. Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O. (Please mention this paper.)

BELLS. Steel Alloy Church and School Bells. Send for Catalogue. The C. S. BELL CO., Hillsboro, O

in Wheeling, W. Va. These lectures are given under the auspices of the Ministerial Union of Wheeling, and the State Sunday-school Association, and are very largely attended by ministers and church workers generally. President Cramblet is busy, as usual, with plans for the college, and is going among the people in a manner which brings results. At the present time he is assisting a short meeting at Follansbee, W. Va.

The friends of Bethany have never been so enthusiastic as at the present time. The present college year, viewed from every standpoint, is the most satisfactory the college has known. Old Bethany, after many years of struggle, is coming into her own.

GEO. C. NEIL, Sec'y.

Set the American Society Free!

Everybody will regard the action taken by the board of the American Christian Missionary Society against the intrusion into their national conventions of matters extraneous to the work of American missions as manifestly fair and just. The time must come when the hundred and one interests of vital importance to our brotherhood's welfare are considered by a body which is properly constituted with power to execute the will of the brotherhood. The American society is not such a body. No present existing society is competent for such business. To burden any such society with these affairs only diverts attention from the definite task that society is organized to work out. The resolutions as found by the board have been sent us by secretary I. N. McCash and read as follows:

Whereas, much of the time allotted to the American Christian Missionary Society in the meetings of the National Convention is taken up in the presentation and discussion of matters foreign to the aims and objects of this society, and

Whereas, many of the matters so presented and discussed, have been the cause of more or less unfavorable criticism and unjust antipathy to the society and its officers, therefore be it

Resolved, that we urge our President to permit nothing to be presented for consideration on the day assigned the American Christian Missionary Society except such matters as relate specifically and individually to the objects and aims of this society.

Resolved, that it is the judgment of the Board of Trustees that all "joint committees," such as the Committee on Unification, should report, not in the sessions of the American Christian Missionary Society, but to a joint meeting of all the societies represented on the committee.

Series of Parliaments on American Missions

That parliamentary plan used with such good results by the American Missionary Society secretaries last year is being adopted again this year. The president of the society, Harry D. Smith, of Hopkinsville, Ky., will accompany Mr. McCash for a part of the way, being relieved by Vice-President A. W. Kokendoffer, of Missouri, later on, and finally Carey E. Morgan, of Paris, Ky., taking his turn for the finish of the campaign. The following itinerary has been sent us by Secretary McCash:

Itinerary of President Harry D. Smith and Secretary I. N. McCash.

Nashville, Tenn., Monday, March 6; Memphis, Tenn., Tuesday, March 7; Birmingham, Ala., Wednesday, March 8; Atlanta, Ga., Thursday, March 9; Chattanooga, Tenn., Friday, March 10; Knoxville, Tenn., Saturday, March 11; Winchester, Ky., Monday, March 13 (morning and afternoon), Frankfort, Ky., Monday, March 13 (night); Louisville, Ky., Tuesday, March 14; Evansville, Ind., Wednesday, March 15; Madisonville, Ky., Thursday, March 16; Paducah, Ky., Friday, March 17.

Itinerary of Vice-President A. W. Kokendoffer and Secretary I. N. McCash.

Poplar Bluffs, Mo., Monday, March 20; West Plains, Mo., Tuesday, March 21; Springfield, Mo., Wednesday, March 22; Pittsburg, Kans., Thursday, March 23; Nevada, Mo., Friday, March 24; Independence, Mo., Monday, March 2; Higginsville, Mo., Tuesday, March 28; Marshall, Mo., Wednesday, March 29; Carrollton, Mo., Thursday, March 30; Moberly, Mo., Friday, March 31.

Itinerary of Secretary I. N. McCash and Carey E. Morgan.

Columbus, Ohio, Monday, April 3; Bellaire, Ohio, Tuesday, April 4; Washington, D. C., Wednesday, April 5; Richmond, Va., Thursday, April 6; Baltimore, Md., Friday, April 7; New York, N. Y., Saturday and Sunday, April 8 and 9; Scranton, Pa., Monday, April 10; Philadelphia, Pa., Tuesday, April 11; Johnstown, Pa., Wednesday, April 12; Pittsburgh, Pa., Thursday, April 13; Washington, Pa., Friday, April 14.

The pastors acting as hosts will make constant announcement in the city where the parliaments are held, inviting all the church and friends to attend. Preachers and churches within 100 miles should be urged to attend. These parliaments are small national conventions. No live, wide-awake pastor or leader in church work can afford to miss them.

Foreign Missionary Notes

We trust the churches will send in their offerings at the earliest possible moment. The society has been obliged to borrow heavily at the banks, pending the March offering. The missionaries had to be paid. Be prompt and help us save interest.

The Seventh Christian Church, of Indianapolis, Ind., Clay Trusty pastor, becomes a Living-Link and supports Mrs. Paul Wakefield, in China.

Dr. C. C. Drummond, of Harda, India, writes that the plague has broken out and about half of the people have left the city. Our missionaries are staying at their posts, teaching and healing the people.

Highland, Kansas, enters the Living-Link class. Hugh Lomax is the pastor. The church does not have a large membership and this is a great advance step.

Fifteen were baptized in and near Manila, Philippine Islands, in December.

"The Social Significance of the Teachings of Jesus," by Prof. Jenks of Cornell University, is being eagerly read by Japanese students. It is estimated that almost 150,000 have read it.

Mr. C. S. Cooper states in The Century that 225 representative Chinese college men have joined Bible classes in Shanghai. Think what this means!

It is difficult to supply the demand for Bibles in Korea at twenty-two cents per copy. Thousands are learning to read solely by the use of the Bible.

We have some members of the Christian Church at Benguet, among a tribe known as Igorrotes in the northern part of the Island of Luzon, Philippine Islands. They are a non-Christian tribe. They are peaceable and industrious. We ought to send a missionary to them. They are calling for one. These people live in compact, well-built villages. They have fine herds of cattle. They raise rice, cotton, tobacco, etc. Here is found the most developed and most nearly scientific agriculture in the Philippine Islands. A great work could be done here if we could send a preacher of the gospel.

Dr. A. L. Shelton, of Batang, Tibet, who is home on furlough, writes us as follows:

"Brother Ogden's work is the best work I saw in coming entirely across China, but he needs a chapel so badly and a small school building. Miss Dilts, of Kentucky, has generously given the money for Dr. Hardy's hospital. He also needs beds and fixtures for it. Could you see how he has to care for his patients, they would be provided tomorrow. We need two more families so very badly. They beg us to come to other places, but we are too few. Can you help these people to get a knowledge of Christ, which they never can get without your help?"

Church Extension Notes

The Monthly Board Meeting.

The regular monthly meeting of the Board of Church Extension was held on February 7. At that time 47 applications were before the Board. Some of the churches that had been requesting loans since last July received answers at this meeting. Many of these loans were granted out of our Annuity Fund, at 6 per cent. Thanks to several who have sent annuities recently. The following were promised aid: Bennett, Neb., $1,250, 6 per cent; Chester, W. Va., $400, 6 per cent; Martinsville, Va., Fayette St. Church (colored) $1,000; Lone Oak, Texas, $1,250, 6 per cent; Del Rio, Texas, 1st Church, $1,250; Nampa, Ida., $2,500, 6 per cent; Pampa, Texas, $500; Basin, Wyo., $700; Fullerton, Ky., $250; Palisade, Colo., $500; Cumby, Texas, $500; Monett, Ark., 1st Church, $1,250; Williamson, W. Va., $3,000; Murfreesboro, Tenn., $4,000, 6 per cent; Jackson, Miss., 3rd Church, colored, $400; Edgemont, S. D., $600; Winona,

DOCTOR MAULSBY'S GIFT TO DRAKE UNIVERSITY AND MISSIONS.

The training of missionaries for foreign lands was greatly stimulated when Doctor Macy Barnard Maulsby and wife bequeathed to Drake University $33,000 for that express purpose. The income on this fund will assist 33 students annually.

Doctor Maulsby was brought up a Quaker and became a Disciple late in life. He was a direct descendant of two famous ancestors who came to America in the early days that they might have religious liberty. His paternal great-great-grandfather was none other than "John Maulsby," who came over with "William Penn." His maternal great-great-grandfather was the noted Baptist, "Thomas Macy," the first white man to settle on old Nantucket Island. While the doctor could boast of his ancestors he was too modest to mention them; and we only learned of this relationship long after his death.

Doctor Maulsby was, however, proud of being a child of the King, and wished to devote all his resources to pushing forward the King's Business. He proved a worthy descendant of those who prized real liberty His devoted wife, Mary Harriet Maulsby, heartily shared this purpose with him. What better choice could have been made? Who can estimate the final results of the gift of this worthy family on the world's history?

Drake University deserves our most earnests support. Already she enrolls 1,800 students, 200 of whom are in the Bible College. The school is surrounded by some of our strongest churches led by such preachers as C. S. Medbury, Finis Odleman, H. E. Van Horn and others, a most inviting place for training missionaries and preachers.

To maintain this great school costs over $500 per day. To meet these growing demands the University must have $500,000 additional Endowment Funds; $100,000 of this has been pledged on condition that the balance be raised soon. If you can help or will assist others to give, please write at once for instruction. Address,

Drake University, Des Moines, Ia.
J. H. Stockman, Comptroller.

Minn., $1,250; Truscott, Texas, $200; Paducah, Texas, 1st Church, $1,000; Fort Worth, Texas, 1st Church, Riverside, $500; Wewoka, Okla., $800; East Columbus, Ind., $500; Breckenridge, Texas, 1st Church, $1,250; and Duluth, Minn., $100,000.

The only large loan granted was $10,000 to Duluth, Minn., for the purpose of helping them to secure a $30,000 church property. It will be remembered that this application for $10,000 was enthusiastically endorsed by the Topeka Convention, because we have never had anything in Duluth except a little frame building so inconveniently located that no one would go there. By the help of the corresponding secretary last June, a section of the city was selected in which to build a new church. The brethren have already secured the lot at a cost of $5,000 and will erect a $25,000 building. It is recognized by all our work in the city that no impression can be made upon Duluth, except by a creditable building. Our board is sure that the brethren universally will endorse their action in helping Duluth with this loan. In Duluth and Superior, which are the cities at the western end of Lake Superior, there are 125,000 people or more.

During January loans were closed to Hopkins, Mo., $1,500; Haggerman, N. M., $375; Erskine, Alberta, Canada, $600.

Since our last report annuities of $1,000 from a friend in Illinois, $5,000 from a friend in Kansas, $2,000 from a sister in Texas, and $150 from Ohio, were received. It should be remembered that annuity money goes at once to building churches and that the churches are glad to get it when they cannot get 4 per cent money.

In all this church extension work it should be remembered that the extension fund is loaned only to such churches as cannot borrow elsewhere, except at exorbitant rates of interest or on short time. We have found in our experience that when churches borrow at exorbitant rates on short time, it means to invite disaster.

G. W. MUCKLEY, Cor. Sec.

National Benevolent Association

The Association has prepared a very attractive cantata for the use of the Bible Schools at Easter. It is full of soulful music adapted to children and young people. It will be sent free to all who will agree to use it in the interest of the widow and the orphan. Orders are coming in rapidly. Better send your order in at once.

The Association has received a number of good annuities. An Ohio sister has given $750; a good Indiana sister has given $125; a good Iowa brother has given $500; and now comes a Kansan with a gift of $10,000. The Lord's children are just learning how to share with their Father in acknowledgment of His goodness.

The canvass for funds for the great national hospital to be established in Kansas City is progressing nicely. We need about $10,000 more. Kansas City people have given $340,000 for this purpose. Every member of the church ought to have fellowship in this most important enterprise. Send your subscription in at once.

A word from Dallas, Texas, informs us that the new building is about ready for occupancy. This will be good news to a number of old people who have patiently waited for the completion of this home.

We wish to remind every Bible School in the Brotherhood that a contribution for benevolences is one of the requisites to a front rank place. An Easter contribution from every Bible School is one of the requisites to the efficient support of the large number of children and aged brethren committed to the church's care. JAMES H. MOHORTER.

Bethany Graded Sunday School Lessons

International Course

Charles Clayton Morrison, Editor

The Bethany series is now developed to the point where it supplies the entire school—children, young people and adults. The publishers ask all Sunday-school workers carefully to consider the following outline of Bethany publications:

Beginners

Lessons prepared by FRANCES W. DANIELSON.

First Year—Teachers' Text Book—Part I, II, III, IV. Large Pictures (9x12 inches).
Beginners' Stories—(Illustrated folder for Pupils)—Part I, II, III, IV.
Second Year—Teachers' Text Book—Part I, II, III, IV. Large Pictures (9x12 inches)
Beginners' Stories—(Illustrated folder for Pupils)—Part I, II, III, IV.

Primary

Lessons prepared by MARION THOMAS

First Year—Teachers' Text Book, Part I, II, III, IV. (With picture supplement).
Primary Stories—(Illustrated folder for pupils)—Part I, II, III, IV.
Second Year—Teachers' Text Book—Part I, II, III, IV. Large Pictures—(6x8 inches).
Primary Stories—(Illustrated folder for pupils)—Part I, II, III, IV.

Junior

Lessons prepared by JOSEPHINE L. BALDWIN

First Year—Teachers' Text Book—Part I, II, III.
Pupils' Book for Work and Study—Part I, II, III. (With picture supplement).
Second Year—Teachers' Text Book—Part I, II, III, IV.
Pupils' Book for Work and Study—Part I, II, III, IV. (With picture supplement).

Intermediate

Lessons for first year prepared by MILTON S. LITTLEFIELD

Teachers' Text Book—Part I, II, III, IV.
Pupils' Text Book—Part I, II, III, IV. (With maps).

Young People's and Adult Bible Classes

Dr. Loa E. Scott's LIFE OF JESUS, in Fifty-two Lessons. Adapted to young people and adults. An easy, but thorough text.

Professor H. L. Willett's serial treatment of THE LEADERS OF ISRAEL, in The Christian Century. The Publishers will make special arrangements to furnish The Christian Century to classes desiring to use Dr. Willett's course.

The curriculum outlined above furnishes a comprehensive course of religious instruction. It comprises not only the biographies, history, literature, and teachings of the Bible, but also lessons on the history and heroes of the Christian Church, of missionary enterprises, philanthropic movements, and moral reforms.

These lessons afford a signal opportunity for the Sunday-schools of the Disciples to promote Christian union. Sixteen denominations have laid aside sectarianism to prepare the Bethany Graded Lessons for their schools.

THE GRADED LESSONS MAY BE BEGUN AT ANY TIME

Send Today for Order Blanks and Prospectus.

THE NEW CHRISTIAN CENTURY COMPANY
700 East Fortieth Street, Chicago, Ill.

The CHRISTIAN CENTURY

Bible College Library
Mar 12

Volume XXVIII. March 23, 1911 Number 12

New Light on the Life of Thomas Campbell

By Dr. Errett Gates

The Woman's Jubilee

Story of Trans-continental Triumph

The River of God

Editorial

CHICAGO

The Christian World

A Department of Interdenominational Acquaintance.

Baptist

The Baptists in the United States, according to the figures of Dr. H. K. Carroll of the Methodist Missionary Society, now number 5,454,873. This does not include the Free Baptists, of whom there are 90,000.

The Southern Baptists have fixed their aim on one million dollars for home and foreign missions.

The Baptist Standard (Dallas), is more than willing to let the Congregationalists have Dr. Aked. It says of him: "Since Dr. Aked became pastor of the Fifth Avenue Baptist Church in New York, he has seemed to feel it was a part of his mission to Americans to break down the hedges and turn all the world into a Baptist church, baptized or not baptized. His 'broad-mindedness' will find its appropriate fitting in a place where people do not have to believe anything in particular."

Dr. E. E. Folk, editor of the Baptist and Reflector of Nashville, has resigned his position at the head of the Anti-Saloon League of Tennessee. During his period of service with the League, the phohibitory law was passed by the legislature. He is a brother of ex-Governor Folk of Missouri.

Dr. Russell H. Conwell, pastor of Grace Temple, Philadelphia, is sixty-eight years old. His birthday was observed by a party of friends to the number of 430, who showed their appreciation by words and by gifts.

Primitive Church Not Yet Restored.

The man who can demonstrate, to his own satisfaction, that the church to which he belongs conforms to the New Testament model in belief and practice can be found in almost any denomination and in any community. He is so much in evidence that we are surprised when some one stands forth to deny that the church of the New Testament sort is now in existence. Prof. Henry C. Vedder is ready to deny and he does it in these words:

There is not a Christian church in existence, anywhere in the world, of any denomination whatsoever, that conforms to the New Testament model. Not one. Certainly not any Baptist church. Is there a Baptist church of Chicago? No, but a very different thing; a score of Baptist churches. And where in the New Testament do you find the model for the Baptist or Congregational church of today, with its single pastor and board of deacons? Where the ruling elders and the presbytery of Presbyterianism? Where the diocesan bishop of the Episcopal church? Every one of them claims to be following the New Testament model and criticises the others for departing from it; and the claim of every one is discredited by the unanimous consensus of the highest scholarship.

For President World Baptist Alliance.

A writer in The Watchman advocates the election of Dr. Robert Stuart MacArthur to the presidency of the World Baptist Alliance. Dr. MacArthur has visited all the principal European countries and has studied missions at first-hand in Japan, China and India. The fitness of the man for the honor is thus set forth:

And does not his unusual record call for unusual recognition? For forty years the pastor of one church in America's metropolis, he has wrought heroically and triumphantly. Never once during this long period has the breath of suspicion fallen upon him, nor ever once has he been disloyal to our denominational fundamentals. He has been unshakenly true to all the highest and noblest ideals of Christian manhood. Into the membership of Calvary Church he has had the privilege of welcoming 5,000 persons; and during his notable pastorate, this church has contributed for missions,—City, Home and Foreign—more than $2,000,000. Of this amount only about $300,000 was expended in New York and vicinity. The magnificent balance, under his direction, was used to send the King's evangel to the very ends of the earth. Nor has his ministry been confined to ordinary church limits. Our educational interests have felt his impress. By voice and pen and example he has been untiring in his efforts to better political and social conditions. He has brought himself into contact with humanity at the point of need, and everywhere has touched men's lives to finer issues. Serving by the world's roadside these four decades, he has been "a friend to man."

Congregational

Dr. Gladden's Golden Anniversary.

At the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the ordination of Dr. Washington Gladden at Columbus, Ohio, the mayor of the city said, "I regard him as Columbus' first citizen." The president of the Chamber of Commerce gave it as his opinion that Dr. Gladden was "one of the greatest constructive forces the city ever had." "The city's worthiest citizen," was the pronouncement of Governor Harmon. Dr. Graham Taylor, from whose article in The Survey these quotations are taken, adds:

Not any the less, but all the more, for all that, Washington Gladden is justly regarded by those who know him best and have worked with him most as the highest type of the ministry in his day and generation, as tested by the spiritual results of his pulpit and pastoral work to be seen in the characters of his people and the influence of his church; by the way in which his interpretations of life and religion to each other stand the test of time; by the strength and beauty of his devout life and spirit as they are reflected in the simple yet profound hymn of his own soul, in which he gathers to himself in praying:

O Master, let me walk with thee,
In lowly paths of service free,
In hope that sends a shining ray
Far down the future's broadening way.

Dr. Gladden's Message.

Dr. Gladden has not shunned to declare the whole counsel of God concerning man's duty to man. He has believed and taught that Christianity is a religion for the whole of life, that if we cannot Christianize business and industrial life the message of the church is of no particular value. He has this to say of the teacher of religion:

The plea of the religious teachers that they are incompetent to deal with social questions is a fearful self-accusation. They have no right to be incompetent. If there are any subjects on which they are bound to have clear ideas and sound convictions, they are these subjects, which concern the relations of men in industrial society. Shall the teacher of religion confess that in the arena where character is mainly won or lost, where the life of the church is at stake, where the destiny of the nation is trembling in the balance, he is unfit for any efficient service? It is as if a physician should declare that he would only prescribe for nettle rash and chickenpox and like disorders, but that he declined to deal with typhoid, or diphtheria, or tuberculosis, or any of the deadly diseases. The services of such a physician would not be in great demand.

Presbyterian

Critic Accepts Chance to Practice.

Dr. William J. Dawson has accepted the pastorate of the Old First Presbyterian Church, Newark, for a year and will soon begin his duties in Newark. The usual pastoral duties will be performed by an assistant pastor and by deaconesses. The Congregationalist and Christian World comments thus on the event and the man:

Here we have another instance quickly following that of Dr. Jowett of the willingness of English Congregational ministers to put on Presbyterian harness, though in Dr. Dawson's case the position is accepted only for one year. In the six years since he has been in America he has given himself to lecturing and authorship, though he has also participated in evangelistic campaigns both in connection with Dr. Chapman and other evangelists, as well as independently. For one reason and another not all the sanguine anticipations cherished six years ago concerning his work as an evangelist have been fully realized. On the other hand, some of his "missions" have yielded considerable fruit. One of the most noteworthy converts in meetings conducted by Dr. Dawson was Professor Hale of Schenectady, the son of Edward Everett Hale. Having now had six years respite from pastoral duties and having in the meantime written two pungent novels setting forth the opportunities before the churches for social service, along with rather caustic comment on their apathy and selfishness, Dr. Dawson now has a chance to put this ancient and wealthy Newark church in line with the demands of the times. Not every evangelist or author or theological professor or editor who from the seclusion of his roving pulpit or study or sanctum, makes the church the object of playful wit or biting sarcasm, is eager to get into the traces of the regular pastorate once more. We trust that Dr. Dawson's courage and hopefulness will outlast this experimental year, and that at its close both he and the Old First in Newark will want to go on together for a long period of time.

Miscellaneous

The Church and the Mails.

Protestants as well as Catholics need to be reminded now and then of the fact that in the United States, church and state are separate. The church that makes the strongest appeal to the mind of the average American citizen asks no favors. The action of the American Federation of Catholic Societies at New Orleans with reference to censorship of the mails brings out this protest from The Public:

If consummated, their proposal would bring all religious discussion under the ban of any postmaster general angling for the "religious vote." What this federation is reported by the dispatches to have proposed is the exclusion from the mails of "literature that defames God or Christ." The implication, of course, is that only ribald denunciation shall be excluded. Even so, the Postmaster General's function would be carried far beyond the suppression of ribaldry. It would get to meddling with serious discussions of religious subjects.

The religionists that cannot hope to hold their own in the hearts of the people without any further service from the postmaster general than he renders to all faiths and to none, are not warranted in calling on that functionary for special help. Ribald assaults upon theistical names hurt no one but their authors; serious discussion of theistical claims can hurt nothing but falsehood. The man who asks the state to protect his religious beliefs, beyond securing him equal freedom with all other believers, however different including those who believe in unbelief, thereby confesses his own lack of faith; and that is what the Catholic Federationists have done for themselves.

The Christian Century
CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON AND HERBERT L. WILLETT, ... EDITORS

The River of God

"There is a River the streams whereof make glad the city of God."

Most of the cities of importance in oriental nations have been built beside rivers. Babylon was situated on the Euphrates, which carried its wealth to the Persian Gulf. Ninevah lay along the shore of the Tigris, and even crossed to the opposite bank. Thebes and Memphis were both the children of the Nile, and owed to its muddy current their commerce and life. Even Damascus, afar in the desert, was watered by the beautiful stream, the Abana, that came down from the snows of Lebanon.

But Jerusalem was not so. It was upon the heights, in a rough country, with a bleak outlook, and the desert not far away. The tumbled mountains about it looked like the fragments of a broken world. There are no streams to water it. There are only wadies, down which the sudden passion of storm wastes itself, or the heavy winter rains find a passage to lower levels. The city is dependent upon its pools, in which it stores up water for its needs. Water has always been rare and precious at Jerusalem.

In fact there are no rivers that have significance in all Palestine. The Jordan is a crooked, tumultuous, muddy, rushing stream that dashes downward from the Sea of Galilee and pours its waters into a suicidal grave at the Dead Sea. The Arnon and the Jabbock lie afar from the centers of Palestine's life, and the Kishon is scarcely more than a brook, that rises at times to a torrent when the floods break upon the great plain.

But there were times when the distress of Jerusalem was even deeper than its thirst for water. One of these moments was chronicled by the author of the forty-sixth psalm. At that time the city was in distress. Sennacherib, the Assyrian, had come with his besieging hosts. The foe was at the gates. Threats and suffering were the order of the time. The nations had arisen against Jerusalem in anger. Their engines of war were mounted for the attack. Their weapons gleamed in the sun, and their horses and chariots brought terror to the hearts of her defenders.

It seemed as if the earth were in ruins; the pillars of the earth were shaken. The mountains were overturned in vast confusion. The sea of trouble foamed in turmoil. All was chaos.

But the poet was undisturbed. Jerusalem might be environed with armies. Her people might look out upon a desolate and stricken world. Her enemies might rage, and nature might be tossed in confusion, but within the hearts of some, at least, there was peace. For amid all the desolation and anguish there flowed the deep untroubled current of the River of God.

There were invisible forces marshalled for the defense of the city. Her moral history, her past achievements, the presence of the temple of God with its undisturbed ministries of piety, the national ideals which had been the outgrowth of centuries of prophetic teaching, the homes in which there dwelt the serenity of domestic piety and love, and the splendid possession of the records of heroes and martyrs, patriots and saints, the self-devoted men and women who made up the glorious story of Israel's life—all this was in itself a deep and refreshing stream in which the thirsty and afflicted soul could find coolness and refreshment.

"There is a River the streams whereof make glad the city of God."

The landscape of modern life reveals much that is unlovely, sordid, hard, barren and selfish. It would be easy for a pessimist to enumerate sufficient causes for depression to cast a gloom over the most cheerful and enthusiastic spirit. And indeed those of us who are least likely to be accused of pessimism come upon signs of ruin and tokens of evil so alarming that the promise of the modern world seems little worth.

And yet the River of God is here. It is unseen, but none the less present. Life-giving and ever-deepening, it goes on its beneficent way.

Ezekiel saw in his vision the stream that issued from under the threshold of the House of God, and as it flowed eastward, it deepened and widened until it poured its fresh and sparkling waters into the deep trench of the Arabah, sweetening even the salt wastes of the Barren Sea.

So the River of God flows through our world of care, sorrow, and discouragement, and its course may be traced by the refreshment it brings to the careworn and the troubled of the age. Those who sit by its moving current are heartened by the consciousness that God is working out the purposes of his gracious will even in spite of the wrath and ruin of human life. Nature is gradually subdued and made the servant of man. Her fields are explored, penetrated, mastered, and subjected to the service of mankind. Humanity becomes yearly more sensitive to its rights and duties. Manhood becomes a nobler thing, gradually disengaging itself from its brute inheritance of fear, pain and ignorance.

The mastery of self goes onward to richer completion. Appetites, passions, habits, weaknesses and sins are put under foot. Cruelty vanishes as the river goes onward to the sea. Animal life shares in the new reign of good-will. Womanhood is emancipated from the degradation and slavery of former ages. The child is no longer mistreated and neglected, but is made the object of domestic concern and of public attention.

The prisoner in the constraints of confinement and the criminal pursuing his unsocial career are less regarded as the enemies than the wards and patients of the social order. The sick and the insane receive a new consideration. And the old barbarities practiced against them are pushed back into the darkness.

The higher moralities of life are coming to their own. The world is more sensitive to evil than ever before. The horror and barbarism of war becomes evident to the least thoughtful. The strifes between classes in modern industry are increasingly irrational and inexcusable.

Religion, too, shares the freshening influences of the River of God. It is more ethical and satisfying. It appeals to the mind and the heart of man as never in the past. The reality of God, the meaning of the work of Christ, the actual experience of salvation, the practice of personal piety, the cultivation of happiness in friendship with God and those like-minded with Him, the certainty of life's permanence, and the marvelous outreach of the world with which we have to do, are all results of this freshening onward flow of the River of God.

Eden had its river at the dawn of history. So will the greater Eden have in the time to come. There the river of water of life flows continually, and that river proceeds out from the throne. On the banks of that river is the City of God, and there is the Tree of Life, whose roots take hold upon the foundation of the world and whose leaves are for the healing of the nations.

"There is a River the streams whereof make glad the City of God."

Social Survey

BY ALVA W. TAYLOR

The Tragedy of the Born Blind

There are 80,000 blind adults in the United States. How many poor babes, born blind, never reach a maturity with all their faculties, let alone with average use of those senses left them! Here is where the poverty of the poor devours the innocents. Multitudes of the poor of the cities have no accredited physician at the trying hour of birth. Medical prophylactics saves many from blindness. The most ordinary physician knows how to wash the eyes of an infant so as to secure against possible blindness. Born blind or early becoming blind, the little unfortunate must struggle against the untoward circumstance of an ignorant and overworked mother who neither knows how to train ear and hand to take the place of the eye nor has the time to save her little one from dirt and from picking at the closed organs. Through both these means disease and idiocy come in. The untutored mind fails to develop and with no development atrophies. The poor little victim of a pauper home or of orphaned fate is sent to the common home for dependent and defective children and receives nothing but the necessary care of body, in the company of those who are born or made imbecile and weak-minded. One little girl was rescued at the age of five, apparently a near imbecile; today at ten she is a bright school girl and as full of promise as any child of ten years. The blind child needs expert training. The story of Helen Keller is a challenge to all who love their kind and who pity the unfortunate to provide for "these little ones." They must be saved from the tragedy of a nature that is pitiless. When her laws are not used for good she uses them for ill. To direct touch and sound is to adjust the faculties to their limited means of sense and provide against the mental loss that the lost sense must otherwise bring. It is pitiful to see the awkwardness of the blind, even the uncouthness, when it could all be prevented by proper care and training. The Dyker Heights Home of New York has failed to awaken the apparently lost sensibilities of but one out of eighty-two cases where they received them while the brain was yet plastic. It takes months often, but what a world they give these little souls! Here is a task that challenges benevolence more than state, for it must be done in compassion.

The Crowning of a Booze Maker

Adolphus Busch and wife recently celebrated their golden wedding anniversary in their palace at Pasadena. This master genius of brewers seated himself and wife upon a throne and the aged maker of booze placed upon the head of his wife a diadem that cost him $200,000. About them were strewn $50,000 worth of flowers and on display were $300,000 more in presents from friends and politicians far and near. President Taft sent a present and his congratulations. Ex-President Roosevelt sent a beautiful golden loving cup. Were they the gifts of friendship or for the sake of political welfare? The head managers sent gifts worth $20,000. Altogether it was a Roman holiday with the Caesar of brewerydom as the conquering hero. Such profligate waste of money upon the ego of an old man is part and parcel of his trade. It has trickled into his coffers from the homes of working people who drank his beer, nickels taken out of the mouths of children and off the backs of women. Mr. Busch's brewery employs 5,000 people. They work solely for the wages they get. They work for a cause that adds nothing to human wealth or welfare and if they were employed in making the shoes and bread that beer money might buy they would earn as much for themselves and contribute several times as much to the channels of trade, to say nothing of the saving of human woe. These employees celebrated in St. Louis while their hoary old lord was feasting in Pasadena. They met in a great hall and had such a time as booze makers would be expected to have. Libations of the amber fluid flowed to the god of their Bacchus inspired trade and in their simple hearts they lauded the great booze maker as their benefactor. King Alcohol was lauded and enthroned, and under brilliant lights those who profit by the business recked not of the scenes in alleys, slums, pauper asylums and prisons. Mr. Busch protests that by making beer he is the true friend of temperance. He also protests that by making beer he employs thousands and is thus also the true friend of the poor. He doth protest too much.

In at the Little End—Out at the Big

The New Jersey Bureau of Labor and Industries reports, as a result of investigations, that the cost of food stuffs has risen 40.96 per cent in the past twelve years and that the average of wages has gone up but 22.2 per cent. These investigations but confirm the disclosures of many others made in recent years. There is difference of detail but none of fact, and the detailed figures do not vary more than must be expected. That housing, clothing and other necessities of life have fully kept pace with increase in food none will deny. Thus the man who works by the day or week has had the little end of the horn of plenty enlarged but has seen large rents made in the broad, big end. His surplus is less than a decade ago. The poverty line is nearer. It matters not what one receives; it matters solely how much he can buy and save. Eighty-five years ago Princeton college dormitory consulted gravely over the matter of raising board from 85 cents to $1.00 per week, and concluded that the rise in cost of living demanded it. Today students pay not less than from three to five times as much and are no better nourished. Elderly men tell us of their getting their start on 50 cents per day. But with that half-dollar they could take home more meat and flour than the modern working man can with his day's wage of three times as much. Wheat was grown on $10 land then while it is now grown on $100 land. Secretary Wilson says there is great waste in the middleman system. A farmer put a note in a barrel of apples sent to the Chicago market. It said, "I got $1.87 for this barrel of apples, what did you pay?" The man who found the note had paid full twice the $1.87. It is not the individual middleman who is to blame. It is involved in the system. The system must be somehow simplified and made more direct and responsive to the laws of economy. The Interstate Commerce Commission denied the petition of the railroads to make higher freight rates by demanding that management be made more scientific and economical. Astounding waste will be revealed in the wholesale management of vast corporations. Under the rule of "as much as the traffic will bear system," great properties were capitalized up to their earning power instead of being run for the benefit of the public and on dividends that were adequate to their cost. The consumer is paying the bill and the working man is the one who feels the pinch.

Vetoing the Lords

The Veto Bill has passed the second reading in the British House of Commons. That means that it comes now to the fighting stage. The ministry received the full voting strength of the Liberal coalition. The Lords are to propose a counter measure, reforming themselves. It is like our cry that the tariff be reformed by its friends, well instanced in the Payne-Aldrich bill, reformed, that is, in the interest of its friends and beneficiaries. One of the alluring proposals they make is that of a Referendum instead of a reform. The word Referendum is an alluring word when a great Democratic movement is on. But one needs to know how far it applies and under what terms before he gives it endorsement. In this country there is a tendency for the foes of democracy to father referendum measures and to strike the principle a death blow, if possible, by so burdening it with unworkable provisions and giving it so limited an operation that it will produce nothing good. They then hope to kill the principle. So our most gracious Lords propose a Referendum whenever it suits their obstinacy. They do not propose that the people shall have power to initiate measures, nor that the Commons shall be empowered to appeal to the people at any time. What they propose is that when they do not approve a measure favored by the Commons, instead of allowing the Commons to prevail and make it a law, they shall have one more chance by appealing to the electorate. Perchance they might win. At any rate they save themselves intact. It means, of course, that the people would not vote on Tory measures for the Lords is always Tory and so will agree to the bills of a Tory Parliament. It does mean that a Liberal Parliament would have to run the gauntlet of a popular election over every contested issue that a Tory House of Lords might wish to raise. The Veto Bill provides for a five year Parliament; for the right to make financial bills effective at the end of any session whether approved by the Lords or not; for the right of the Commons to make any bill a law after the Lords have rejected it in three successive sessions. In other words the power of veto becomes the sole right of the Commons instead of the Lords.

"One means very effectual for the preservation of health is a quiet and cheerful mind, not afflicted with violent passions or distracted with immoderate cares."

Temperance Notes

Gov. Osborn, of Michigan, is proving one of the new progressive Governors. He advocates County Option.

Eighteen state capitals are now dry.

Germans drank three gallons per capita less beer last year than ten years ago. The decrease last year was one and one quarter gallons.

The Supreme Court of Ohio has upheld the law that penalizes the solicitation of orders for bottled booze in dry counties. It costs $400 to write one letter asking for a dry territory order and twice that much for the second.

The Commercial Travelers of Indiana resented the claim that their crowd demanded booze in the hotels for "comfort and convenience" by passing a resolution in their last convention declaring they did not make any such demand and preferred, as a rule, the dry hotels.

Great Britain reports the smallest trade in Scotch whiskey last year that the trade ever realized, a decrease of no less than 2,000,000 gallons.

West Virginia will vote on state-wide prohibition next year. If it wins it will be a dry state after July 1st, 1914.

Uncle Sam issues more than 3,000 internal revenue receipts to men in New Jersey who have no local or state license. That means 3,000 blind tigers in a "regulated" state.

Ohio defeated the attempt to repeal her County Option law. Indiana repealed hers, notwithstanding the fact that the state was more than three-fourths dry. It doubtless means the overwhelming defeat of the party that did it, when the next election comes.

Iowa has a Business Men's Temperance Association. It means business. Time was when business men thought no saloons meant less business. They now know that money spent in saloons cannot be used for legitimate business.

The Crown Prince of Sweden recently opened a national convention for prohibition.

Governor Vesey, of South Dakota, is out and out for state prohibition. He asks the legislature to act for the people by acting against the saloon.

Now comes Italy with a proposal to restrict drinking. A national inquiry has begun under direction of the Minister of the Interior in order to ascertain facts upon which to base legislation.

The Japanese have a National Temperance Society. A branch has been formed at Darien, in Manchuria.

First Aid in Peace as Well as in War

The American Red Cross has put on the road a special Pullman car contrived as a hospital-on-wheels for use at disasters and as a moving lecture room on first aid work. Besides cooking, eating and sleeping quarters for the staff it has a room twenty-six feet long which can be used as either emergency hospital or lecture hall.

For use at the secenes of accidents the car has an equipment of scientific apparatus, such as the Draeger helmet which is put over the head of a man entering a mine filled with poisonous gases and smoke, and the pulmotor for restoring respiration to asphyxiated persons.

The chief purpose of the car, however, is educational—to teach the essential principles and methods of first aid work to workmen in dangerous trades. Here it can be made the means of saving many lives. The Red Cross points out that in certain industries deaths from disease are insignificant in comparison with deaths from accident. In the registration area (comprising 55 per cent of the country's population) accidents in 1909 caused over 67 per cent of all deaths among steam railway employes between the ages of 25 and 34; over 61 per cent among miners and quarrymen and over 28 per cent among iron and steel workers. The accident death rate for the workers in all mechanical and manufacturing pursuits is 21.9 per cent.

These are the people the Red Cross is trying to reach with its first aid car.

Dr. M. W. Glasgow is in charge. Dr. M. J. Shields, another Red Cross first aid surgeon, has been detailed to the seven rescue cars of the United States Bureau of Mines. The first aid departments is under the direction of Dr. M. J. Shields, of the army medical service. —The Survey.

Cautiously avoid talking of the domestic affairs either of yourselves or of other people. Yours are nothing to them but tedious gossip; theirs are nothing to you.—Selected.

Editorial Table Talk

Not Much Difference After All

That our denominational peculiarities are fading out in these latter days was pointedly illustrated by an amusing but instructive experience in Iowa the other day. A Presbyterian church with a vacant pulpit sent a committee to Woodbine to hear the Presbyterian pastor there with a view to calling him. The committee was much impressed by the man and his sermon and departed for home quietly and without asking an introduction. Upon their enthusiastic report the congregation voted to extend the call. Greatly to the consternation of the committee, when the preacher arrived he was not the man they had heard at all. They had gone to the wrong church and heard a sermon by Rev. B. F. Hall, the Disciples' pastor in Woodbine. Which goes to show that there isn't much difference between Presbyterians and Disciples when you find us off guard.

A Confusing Distinction About to Vanish

Some signs that the arbitrary and cumbersome distinction between state missions and American missions is finally to be done away are evident. Many state secretaries are favorable to a closer relation, if not a unification, of the state organizations with the national organization. What report the unification committee which met last week in Cincinnati will make has not yet been announced. Meanwhile, the memorandum of an agreement between the American society and the Missouri State Society is before us. This memorandum sets forth that the two societies agree to "a joint partnership in campaigning the churches of Missouri for home missions, each to share equally in the expenses and returns, all church offerings to be forwarded to the treasury of American society, settlements to be made the first of each month for twelve months beginning March 1, 1911." This is a good way to begin. It is a tentative, experimental arrangement. Missouri is a well-chosen state in which to "try out" the plan. Disciples are a long time perfecting their organization but every year seems to add some little bit to what they have already attained, and that little bit nearly always helps.

Mr. Bryan on the Fact of Christ

Fully two Orchestra Hall's full of people were turned away in a recent Sunday night when twenty-five hundred persons were admitted to hear William Jennings Bryan speak on "The Fact of Christ." It was the regular meeting of the Sunday Evening Club which holds a Christian service in this great hall every Sunday evening from October to June. Mr. Bryan was introduced as the first noted speaker from afar who had given his address to the club without money and without price. He preached a masterful sermon. It was an exposition of Rev. Carnegie Simpson's book, bearing the same title as the address. Mr. Bryan said that if he did no more than to whet the interest of his hearers to such an edge as that they would buy and read that book he would be more than repaid. Christ is the inescapable fact of the modern world, he declared. The social order must reckon with him; politics, industry and education must reckon with him; and the individual soul cannot face a moral issue without facing Christ. The fact of Christ does not depend upon any special metaphysics or science or history. He is self-attesting. Mr. Bryan's enthusiasm for Mr. Simpson's book has called renewed attention to a volume which contains a really great message to our times. The book appeared about a decade ago. Its author argues that Christ is not a dead fact, stranded on the shores of history, but a living fact of present experience. Yet he does not surrender the historic Christ, but contends that the fact is a dual fact to be approached on its historical side with a mental candor, a mind open to historical facts, and a will honest with moral issues. Mr. Simpson thus explains his position:

> From the very nature of the case, from the dual character of the fact to be examined, you must, if you would really and thoroughly study Christianity, study it, with a critical intelligence indeed, for Jesus is a fact of history, but also with more than a critical intelligence—with a conscience and will that are open to moral impression and direction, for he is also a fact of inward moral experience. If you would know what Christianity is you must be open and honest in both directions. If your investigation of the fact of Christ discloses some historical point, you must have a candid mind for that. So much every one will admit. But if your investigation brings you face to face as it will do, for this is a fact of conscience as well as of history—with some moral choice and moral call, then, not less, you must have a candid will to receive that. This is apparent from the very nature of the subject that is investigated, from its dual nature as alike outward and inward.

Just What is the Reason for Methodism?

The Epworth Herald keeps right on defending the separation of the Methodist young people from the inter-denominational Christian Endeavor movement. Recently an editorial appeared on the need of "denominational back-bone."

There is a reason for the existence of Methodism. We were born to proclaim a great spiritual truth, and there is as much need of it in the world today as ever there was. To the honor of our church be it said that this is one of the reasons why we insist upon having an Epworth League, a separate young people's society that has persistently refused to be absorbed into any young people's society of an undenominational character. We are Methodists, and we mean to train generations of young Methodists.

It would be interesting to the rest of the religious world if the Herald would name the "great spiritual truth" which Methodism proclaims and which is not proclaimed, with equal power, by Presbyterian, Baptist, Congregationalist and other churches. It would be likewise instructive to have it explained why a "great spiritual truth" demands that the possessors of it should separate themselves into a sect in order to proclaim it effectively. In making its reply the Herald should be careful to avoid the historical fallacy into which the defenders of denominationalism so easily fall—whether they be Baptists, Congregationalists, Presbyterians or Methodists—the fallacy of reading into present conditions the problems and issues of a century or two ago. Whatever was true of the past, it is a fact that there is not today a single "great spiritual truth" possessed by one denomination which is not shared equally by all the other evangelical denominations. And just as surely as the good editor of the Epworth Herald undertakes to state the distinctive spiritual truth of Methodism he will perceive the ungracious affront to his Christian brethren which his sectarian discrimination involves.

Can the Conspiracy of Silence be Broken?

Signs of a new day in the treatment of the question of social purity are apparent. One of these is the place made in the program of the American Institute of Social Service for a month's study of the subject by its five hundred classes scattered through the United States and Canada. The March issue of "The Gospel of the Kingdom," the text used by these classes, is devoted to this subject. It contains a strong, brave treatment of the problem in its various aspects—personal purity, the white slave traffic, the double standard of chastity and Christian teaching, methods in the social system, the social evil and the church. A plain spoken article by ex-President Eliot of Harvard is the leading feature of the magazine. He declares that the conspiracy of silence and privacy with respect to the diseases induced and spread by the social evil is criminal. He says:

Through such a policy and such dumb endurance no widespread evil in human society ever has been, or ever can be, cured. The prophets had to "cry aloud" before human sacrifices were done away with in the religious rites of Israel. The evils of human slavery had to be publicly discussed for generations before that great wrong could be righted. In like manner, public discussion, plain-spoken but delicate and reserved, must precede the adoption of any effective measures to eradicate the "social evil" with all its hideous consequences. One of the elements in this discussion must be the correction of the common religious dogma that man is "altogether born in sin," with all the myths and speculations on which it has been based.

Dr. Eliot affirms that children should be taught more frankly the facts concerning transmission of life. If this can be done in the home, that is the ideal place for it. But many parents are incompetent to give this instruction to their children. They are too ignorant themselves; or they cannot properly express their best feelings on the subject. Hence, he says, the schools must take up the function of teaching children what the natural processes of reproducing life are in plants and animals, and finally, in man. These lessons should begin with young children, and be carried on by the teaching of natural history and of hygiene throughout the elementary schools into the secondary schools; and before the close of the secondary school course instruction should be given concerning the diseases which accompany licentiousness. It is not only knowledge on these subjects which the children need and the schools should provide. The teaching of good manners in schools would contribute to the limitation of the evils under consideration. Good manners often promote and protect virtue. Thus, in the social relations between boys and girls, good manners will prevent the rough familiarity which may lead unrefined boys and girls on to actual vice. Gentle manners in women and in men toward women are a real safeguard against sexual wrong-doing.

The magazine is rendering an invaluable service to the cause of social purity and righteousness through leading its classes of laymen and women in the study of present practical problems of applied Christianity.

Our Debt to Congregationalism

Congregationalists have an honorable place in the history of Christianity for what they have done to make the Reformation in English-speaking countries religious rather than political. The English sovereigns of the early days of the Reformation were not conspicuous for their religious zeal. They were jealous of their own authority and they were naturally led into opposition to the claims of the papacy, which sought to interfere with the national authority. They dealt with the religious situation as their own advantage seemed to dictate. There soon appeared Englishmen who demanded that religious interests be considered apart from the necessities of state and that preachers carry forward the work of reform without waiting for the command of magistrates. The writings of Robert Browne, who advocated the freedom of the church, were described in a proclamation issued in the name of Queen Elizabeth as "sundry seditions, scismaticall, and erroneous printed Bookes and libelles, tending to the depraving of the ecclesiastical government established within this Realme," which meant that Browne believed in religious freedom.

Those Englishmen who held that a true church is a company of "faithful and holie people," having as its officers, pastors, teachers, elders, deacons, and widows, who obtain their office "by the holy and free election of the Lordes holie and free people," were treated as enemies of state, many of them were shut up in prison, and some were executed. On March 23, 1593, John Greenwood and Henry Barrowe were tried on the charge of attacking the authority of the queen. Their offense was that they dared to speak and write their religious convictions without consulting the government of her Majesty. They were convicted, and on April 6, 1593, they were hanged. The bishops warmly approved the execution of these men. They sought from Parliament action strengthening the courts in dealing with critics of the Establishment. The Commons did not like the plan of executing heretics, so the law passed made the penalty for denial of the queen's supremacy, or attending illegal meetings, forfeiture of goods and banishment.

In his "History of Congregationalists in America," Doctor Dunning gives a list of thirty-nine colleges which have originated with Congregationalists and in which they are now especially interested. Among these are Yale, Dartmouth, Williams, Oberlin, Beloit, Colorado, Whitman, Wellesley, and Smith. A good part of the history of education in this country relates to Congregational activity in establishing and maintaining colleges. The aim in establishing the first colleges in America was that the churches might have educated ministers. That aim has never been forgotten. With it there has been joined the aim to fill the churches with educated members and to give to the state intelligent and upright citizens. The schools systems of the Western states owe much of their efficiency to the Congregationalists who have served the interests of education as state superintendents of public instruction, as teachers in the schools of the state, and as members of legislative bodies.

With leadership in education goes leadership in thought. The Congregational churches have been progressive. They have appropriated to the uses of religion the fruits of scholarship and scientific investigation. The farewell words of John Robinson have been cherished. As reported by one who was present, he charged his brethren "to follow him no farther than he followed Christ; and, if God should reveal anything to us by any other instrument of his, to be as ready to receive it as ever we were to receive any truth by his ministry." No system of doctrine can therefore be accepted as final and complete. A typical Congregationalist was Horace Bushnell, who "was not a framer of a theological system, but he was a wonderful inspirer of religious thought and experience. His sympathies embraced with enthusiasm every department of life." It is the Bushnell type of theologian that is becoming dominant in America. The American people delight in men who are interested in every department of experience, who can state truth with vigor and freshness, but who do not presume to fix the limits of thought for all time. It is not that men are becoming indifferent to truth that they rebel against dogmatism, it is because they are better equipped to search for truth that they refuse to stay within the bounds set by the fathers. They accept as religious leaders men who stimulate thought and quicken the conscience. For this attitude of present day men a good deal of the credit is due to Congregational ministers and teachers. [Midweek Service, March 29. Luke 13:18-30.]

S. J.

New Light on Thomas Campbell's Life

Valuable Additions to an Obscure Biography

BY ERRETT GATES.

I am now ready to report my findings concerning the early student life and ministry of Thomas Campbell in Scotland and Ireland. Complete obscurity has thus far covered the dates in his early life. When he entered the University of Glasgow, and when he completed his work, if at all; when he began and when he finished his work in the Anti-Burgher Divinity Hall; when he was licensed to preach and when ordained, are questions that find no answer in Richardson's account of him.

I have just finished the reading of the original manuscript minutes of the Anti-Burgher General Associate Synod, covering the period from 1786 to 1809. They are preserved in the fire-proof vaults of the North of Scotland Bank here in Edinburgh, where they were taken in 1900, at the time of the union of the United Presbyterian and the Free Churches. They were at first adjudged the property of the "Wee Frees," but were later remanded to the custody of the United Free Church council.

Privilege of Reading Records.

Through the courtesy of Mr. R. R. Simpson, deputy clerk and custodian of records of the United Free Church Assembly, and Mr. J. Milne Henderson, president of the North of Scotland Bank, I have had the privilege of working through from 500 to 1,000 folio pages of these records and taking extracts. They are the sources from which all the historians of the Secession Church have drawn their original materials, from Dr. J. McKerrow to Dr. Robert Small. An exhaustive and critical history of the church has not yet been written. McKerrow is out of date, but indispensable at present, while Doctor Small is little more than an annalist. The printing of these precious manuscript minutes would be the first step toward a worthy history of the Session.

My desire in going to these manuscripts was to get back to original sources for any part taken by Thomas Campbell in the larger life of his church. I wanted to see how he looked and acted among his cotemporary Seceder brethren, I have copied all references to him in these minutes, and shall reproduce them in this letter as they throw light upon some interesting questions, one of which is, "When did he begin to preach?"

First Reference to Thomas Campbell.

I have read through these manuscript minutes from 1786 to 1797 before I came upon the name of Thomas Campbell. Here is what appeared on page 113, under date of a meeting of the Synod, September 6, 1797. in the report of the committee on supply of ministers for vacant churches: Recommended, "that Mr. Clark receive his appointments from the Synod of Ireland and that Mr. Harper be in the Presbytery of Market Hill, but be exchanged with other Presbyteries if needful; and that Mr. Campbell be entered on trials by said Presbytery, after attending the Divinity Hall the ensuing session and joining in the bond."

This reference does not give the Christian name of Campbell, but there can be no doubt that it was Thomas, for there was no other Campbell in the ministry of the Seceder Church at this time. To "be entered on trials" meant to be examined by the presbytery with reference to his attainments and fitness for the ministry and be given preaching appointments with a view to licensing him. The usual expression in the records is: "be put on trials for license." But before being given preaching appointments, he was obliged to attend the ensuing session of the Divinity Hall, which was then about to begin. These sessions usually began the first of September and lasted eight weeks, five of which the students was required to attend. This was his fifth and last session.

Date When Ministry Began.

It is practically certain, therefore, that Thomas Campbell did not begin to preach until the autumn of 1797, when he was in the thirty-fourth year of his age. He was living at that time, so far as we can ascertain, in the vicinity of Newry. If he spent the five annual sessions at the Divinity Hall, as was required of students for the ministry in the Seceder Church, that would place his entrance into the Hall in 1792. We have corroborative testimony that this was so from McKelvie's "Annals and Statistics of the United Presbyterian Church," page 659, in a list of the students of the Divinity Hall at Whitburn, under Prof. Bruce, in 1792. In this list of eight students appears the following entry: "Campbell, Thomas. Ordained at Ahorey, Ireland, proceeded to America in 1806(?)."

Thomas Campbell, the Original Inspirer of the Disciples Movement for Christian Unity.

Where McKelvie got this list of students for 1792 I have not yet discovered. The majority of his lists could be obtained from the minutes of the General Associate Synod, for each class was formally accepted by the Synod and their names given. This was not true in 1792. We have now determined to a certainity the peroid of his Divinity Hall study, 1792—1797. The question now is, when did he enter the University of Glasgow and how long did he remain a student there? We have only conjectures for this.

Name not on Registry.

I have been unable under the most careful search, to find his name on the registry of the University. His name does not appear in any list of students or graduates, or in any publication. We can, therefore, only infer from the probabilities of the case, that he entered the University in 1788 or 9, and remained there until 1792, a period of three years. This is what Richardson says: "His father having finally acquiesced in his purpose, he soon afterwards proceeded to Glasgow, where he became a student in the University. Hence, with that exact punctuality and strict attention to method which characterized him through life, he devoted himself to the prescribed studies, which, for students of divinity, then occupied three years." This is only a conjecture that he spent three years in Glasgow, and not a definite assertion.

Another question that concern us is as to the date of his ordination. It seems to be accepted as certain that he went as pastor to Ahorey in 1798; and McKelvie says in the foregoing quotation from his book that he was ordained in Ahorey, which could not have been before 1798.

The Second Reference to Thomas Campbell.

The Second reference to Mr. Campbell in the Ms. minutes of the Synod throws some light upon the question of his ordination. It reads as follows: Recommended, "that Messrs. Clark, Campbell and Harper receive appointments from the Synod of Ireland." This appears under date of May 2, 1798. Richardson has no more definite statement than that, "About the year 1798 he accepted a call from a church recently established at Ahorey, four miles (it is actually ten miles) from Armagh." How recently establtablished he does not say, but the minutes of the Synod which met April 27, 1790, record: "The Presbytery of Market Hill ordained Mr. John McDonald at Ahorey, on the 9th of July," the previous year. Ahorey must have been in existence in 1789, but it was not in existence at the time of the execution of the Synod of Ireland, May 2, 1788. The church was thus founded sometime between the ordination of its first pastor July 9, 1789, and May 2, 1788, or about ten years before Thomas Campbell became its minister.

We should be freed from all uncertainty concerning the date of his going to Ahorey if we could only turn to the early records of the Ahorey Church. The present minister, Rev. R. Bailie, wrote me a few days ago as follows: "We have no records of the congregation further back than about 1840."

Third and Fourth Reference to Campbell.

There is no reference to Thomas Campbell in the Synod from 1798 to 1806. At the meeting of 1805 the following resolution was passed: "The Synod appointed their clerk to write to the clerk of the Synod of Ireland, that they are to hold their next meeting at

Glasgow, chiefly for the conveniency of their brethren in Ireland: and that they desire as many of them as have it in their power to attend in order to have a friendly conversation with them on the state of matters in Ireland.

The fact is that the Irish brethren were getting away from the higher court which always held its sessions in Edinburgh. The Irish Anti-Burghers had already begun negotiations with the Irish Burghers, independent of the superior court, looking to a union; and the General Synod felt it expedient to take notice of the informal reports of the negotiations. There is something almost amusing in the diplomatic approach the General Synod made toward the wayward Irish Synod in appointing the next meeting as near to Ireland as possible, for the sake of a "friendly conversation." It was a very rare thing for any of the Irish presbyteries to be represented in the meeting of the General Synod. But at the meeting held at Glasgow in 1806, the roll-call recorded present, "of the Presbytery of Belfast, John Nicholson, Alexander Donan, ministers; Thomas W. Whinery, from Belfast, ruling elder; of the Presbytery of Market Hill, Mr. Thomas Campbell, minister: of the Presbytery of Timovady, Wm. Wilson, minister."

Sat in Synod as Regular Member.

This is the only Synod in which Thomas Campbell sat as a regular member. He might have been present at others in Edinburgh, but there is no record of his presence. He must often have been in the vicinity of Edinburgh at the time of the meeting, where he came during five successive years as a student to Whitburn, not more than twenty miles from Edinburgh. It was a very common thing for the students of the Divinity Hall to be present, while their only Professor, Doctor Bruce, was always present. Students often came to be examined during the sessions of the Synod.

During the session of 1806, Thomas Campbell must have occupied a conspicuous place. He was first of all made a member of the Committee of Funds and Foreign Missions: "Appointed Messrs. Puller, Robertson, Smith, Pringle, Hay, Ferrier, Nicholson and Campbell, ministers, with Messrs. Ellis Barclos and Hart, ruling elders, to meet as a committee of Funds and Foreign Mission at six o'clock this evening." Their report was very simple and brief, namely, that there was no money in the treasury to send any one on a foreign mission.

Occasion of His Prominence.

But the one thing that brought him into prominence was the delicate question he had been commissioned to present to the Synod. "The Synod now employed a considerable time extra-judicially in a friendly conversation with their brethren in Ireland, particularly on the question, 'Considering the situation of the Secession Church in Ireland, would it not be expedient that the Synod would allow the brethren in that Kingdom to transact their own business without being in immediate subordination to this court.'

"Proposed and signed by, Thomas Campbell, Alexander Donan, James Gardner, Ministers; Thomas Whinery, Ruling elder."

The result of the "friendly conversation" was what was to be expected, when the great majority present were from the Scottish presbyteries: "The members of Synod were generally of opinion that it would be inexpedient."

Thomas Campbell's name disappears at this point from the records of the Synod. Within eight months he had set sail from Ireland never to return. Within two years he was to be completely severed from the jurisdiction of this Synod, and every other ecclesiastical court, above the local congregation of Christian believers. No further reference is made to him.

This Synod of 1806 proved to be one of really dramatic importance, and Thomas Campbell was a participant in its occurrences. It marked a division in the ranks of the Anti-Burghers, and the organization of the "Constitutional Presbytery." Three or four of the leading men in the church were deposed and excommunicated by this Synod—Archibald Bruce, Thomas Campbell's professor of Divinity, Thomas McCrie and James Hoy. It would be interesting to know what part he had in these acts of ecclesiastical tyranny.

Thomas Campbell as Moderator of Synod.

An entirely new fact concerning Thomas Campbell came to light in my search through the pages of the Christian Magazine, a monthly paper published by the Anti-Burgher Seceders. An extract of a report of the Irish Synod's meeting was copied in this magazine from the Belfast Commercial Chronicle, of July 15, 1805, as follows:

"On Tuesday last the Antiburgher Associate Synod held their annual meeting in this town. The Synod was opened with an excellent sermon by Rev. Wm. Dickie of Carnone, Moderator, from Matt. 24: 14. The Synod being constituted by prayer, the Rev. Mr. Campbell, of Ahorey, was chosen moderator for the ensuing year."

The discovery of these facts in the early life of Mr. Campbell, fragmentary as they are, help, nevertheless, to fill out the features of a life too little known in its Old World environment. A really full account of his career as a minister in Ireland might be made out if we could recover the lost minutes of these Irish Synods and Presbyteries. How interesting it would be to find a sermon of his from this period, or one of his addresses on Christian union before the Irish Synod. I have hopes yet of uncovering something of this kind before I leave Scotland.

Edinburgh, Scotland.

An Economist's View of the Church

Professor Simon N. Patten is an economist who believes that economic theories are made for man and not man for economic theories. His latest book, "The Social Basis of Religion," deals with the relation of economic conditions to religious life. "The religion of service," he says, "could have no better exposition than in the teaching of Christ. What we need is not to formulate a clear statement of it, but to find conditions and institutions to make it effective." The church must have a social concept of religion if it is to impress the world with its message. The two paragraphs given below are quoted by The Survey from "The Social Basis of Religion."

If Christians, adhering to an unsocial concept of religion, fail to show that the redemption for the masses is attainable, they must not find fault if the ideal of an unsocial superman displaces that of service. The social plan of redemption will be tested in this century as the hope of personal salvation was tested by the facts and conditions of the first century. A new missionary movement is demanded by our age. To succeed, this must have the vigor and clearness of thought that Paul gave to the first extensions of Christ's influence. The impress of past centuries has put modern religion in as helpless a condition as the Jewish religion was in the first century. The work that Christ began could not be fully developed in the early centuries because of adverse economic conditions. It can, however, be successfully completed now because favorable environing conditions have replaced race antagonisms with a spirit of social co-operation. This has opened the road to social regeneration as contrasted with social elimination. To meet this new situation is the religious need of the day. Success or failure are the alternatives that will make Christianity dominant or will displace it as an encumbrance to progress.

Today, we have no fear of war, famine, disease, or failing resources. The advance in knowledge has guarded men against these evils; but it is none the less true that civilization must be extended to other regions and races, or it will go down as it did at Rome. Prosperity checks the birth rate and promotes race suicide to such a degree that if new races cannot be raised to take the places of those dying out, there will be a decline in civilization to the level existing before the rise of Christianity. All of the earlier missionary efforts will be in vain unless methods are devised to arouse new classes, new races, and nations with the same success with which our ancestors were awakened in earlier epochs by the prevailing forms of religious propagation. If laborers remain outside the church, if immigrants are not assimilated into our national life, or if we fail to do for Africa, India, and China what early Christian missions did for our German ancestors, a slow but sure death awaits the church, no matter what may be its success in other fields.

Dr. Edward C. Moore and the Disciples' Congress

A word from one of his pupils may not be amiss concerning Dr. Edward C. Moore of Harvard University, in view of his expected coming to the Congress of the Disciples at Springfield, Illinois, April 18-20. Dr. Moore is one of the leaders of the great Christian world-movements, such as the Religious Education Association, the Congregational American Board of Foreign Missions and the various inter-church missionary movements of recent years, notably the World Conferene on Foreign Missions held in Edinburgh last year. For twelve years Dr. Moore has been Parkman Professor of Theology in Harvard, coming to that position from the pastorate of the First Congregational Church of Providence, R. I. Last year he was elected by the department of Philosophy to a professorship in that division of the University,—becoming associated thereby with what is unquestionably the ablest group of philosophical teachers in any one school in the world.

For several years in addition to his regular duties Dr. Moore has served as chairman of the Board of University Preachers, which has for its duty the supervision of the religious activities of the entire university community. A man of the most reverent spirit, Dr. Moore unites in himself in rare degree the candor of the scientific student with the devotion of an ardent Christian man. I predict that his coming will bring to the younger men of our Congress, an inspiring revelation of culture, gracefulness, rhetorical finish and intellectual grasp, combined with the candor, courage, reverence, humility, and sincerity of a deeply reverent follower of Christ. Joined with the many other excellent provisions of the programme, I believe his presence will lift the coming assembly immeasureably above the sessions of previous years. I bespeak for it an unusually large attendance and a proportionately wider and more inspiring effect among our people at large.

WILLIS A. PARKER. Everett, Mass.

GOLD DUST.

The language of the face is not taught by the schools: it is intuitive, and to the observant is always legible.—Julia Ward Howe.

By all means begin your folio. Even if the doctor does not give you a year, even if he hesitates about a month, make one brave push and see what can be accomplished in a week.—Stevenson.

There is a personal nobleness and even sacredness in work. Were he ever so benighted, forgetful of his high calling, there is always hope in a man that actually and earnestly works.—Carlyle.

Why not rejoice more? Count up your golden mercies; count up your opportunities to do good; count up your "exceeding great and precious promises;" count up your joys of heirship to an incorruptible inheritance and march on the road heavenward, shouting.—Theodore L. Cuyler.

From Coast to Coast

Story of the Women's Cross-Continent Missionary Tour

The golden Jubilee Rallies began at the "Golden Gate," October 12, 1910, in Oakland, Cal. The missionary company included Mrs. Helen Barrett Montgomery, Dr. Mary Noble, Miss Florence Miller and Miss Ella D. McLaurin.

Though the people sought to be ready, all testify that not until they had felt the purpose of the Jubilee, as given by these speakers, did they understand the full significance of the enterprise.

A telegram from the National Convention of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions was received with great enthusiasm. It spoke both fact and prophecy as to the practical and sympathetic coöperation of this and other woman's missionary boards.

Portland, Tacoma and Seattle were the great Northwest Centers touched and thrilled by this marvelous missionary movement that had been gaining power in attendance and intensity of interest until in Seattle, there was a degree of success unexcelled at any other place.

Denver's Ample Preparation.

Denver had time for large preparation. As many as six hundred women were for weeks actively engaged in preliminary work. The appeal to the womanhood of America for the women of non-Christian lands yielded large results. The parlor meetings, the conferences, the mass assemblies, all marked Denver ready for a world vision, and definite united endeavor.

Omaha and Lincoln, two cities of the west central plains, were prominent in the line of the eastward course. In no place was the spirit of union stronger, or the pledges and aims more in keeping with the rising tide of Jubilee achievements—achievements which were three-fold—increased interest in mission study, larger financial missionary hopes and the enlisting of the entire womanhood of the church.

Kansas City in preparation had one committee meeting with five hundred present. The women of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions at their Federation meeting in June began thought for the Jubilee offering. All churches were equally alert to the call for service. A period of sentence speeches by the Student Volunteer Band of the Scarret Missionary Training School, was a most interesting feature. Gifts of gold speak enlargement; gifts of men and women proclaim victory. Money is power, but heart and soul are the supreme essentials. The following telegram from Miss Miller tells its own story. "Wonderful rally at Kansas City, largest crowds, most inspirational addresses, greatest results of all. Fully three thousand in auditorium last night, aisles packed, many turned away. One thousand young people marched down the aisles with flying banners. Our women enthusiastic. Accepted aim of thirty thousand dollars for Kansas City and adjacent Auxiliaries."

Large Individual Gift.

Chicago. The headquarters of a number of Woman's Missionary Boards, the location of the Western Extension Committee, and a host of competent leaders in world enterprises produced large readiness for the company of women who were publishing the word "Go, Go build into the world my life." From there two special messages came to the headquarters of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions. "Chicago Ill.—Rally at Chicago a great success. Our women enthusiastic and liberal with the help of some splendid men of the congregation. Four thousand dollars was pledged as Jubilee offering and two churches probably on Living Link plan. Details later. Florence Miller."

Another message announced an individual pledge of $1,000.

Milwaukee and Minneapolis both did nobly in their missionary offerings. The one auxiliary society of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions at the former city with only twenty members pledged to become a Life Line.

The Company Re-Christened.

Indianapolis. Some called the company of speakers the "Missionary Troupe." Let it so remain. It has its message and a tremendous lesson. No theatrical troupe ever entered the capital city of the Hoosier state, or any other, when there were so many waiting hearts, expectant an abounding with a welcome, impossible for those who speak from the stage. Every vital interest of the city had been touched in preparation. The response was wonderful. One day, including the parlor meetings, four parallel services were in session. Mrs. Montgomery's address on "What God hath Wrought" stirred the conviction that the entirety of world agencies are to be utilized to uplift the race. Perhaps the most impressive scene was the company of young women carrying the banner "A Woman's Work in God's Way—One Thousand Young Women in a Single Day." As the message was delivered that night we read in many faces "Here am I, send me—Here am I to help send others." Large aims and pledges were made at the denominational rallies. The Christian Woman's Board of Missions includes in its aim of $35,000 the adjacent auxiliaries represented at the rally held at the Central Christian Church.

THE CLIMAX OF THESE ENTHUSIASTIC MEETINGS OF CHRISTIAN WOMEN WILL BE HELD IN THE CITY OF NEW YORK, MARCH 27 TO 29. MEETINGS WILL BE HELD IN FIFTH AVENUE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH AND CARNEGIE HALL. IT IS EXPECTED THAT ANNOUNCEMENT WILL BE MADE OF THE SUCCESSFUL OUTCOME OF THE EFFORT TO RAISE ONE MILLION DOLLARS AS A JUBILEE OFFERING TO MISSIONS. DISCIPLES OF CHRIST WILL HAVE THEIR PART IN THIS FINAL CONFERENCE AS THEY HAVE HAD FROM THE START. MRS. W. BAYARD CRAIG IS IN CHARGE OF THE DISCIPLES CONFERENCE, WHICH IS TO BE HELD IN THE FIRST CHURCH OF DISCIPLES. MR. E. M. BOWMAN, OF CHICAGO, PROMINENT IN PLANNING, DOING, GIVING AND INSPIRING OTHERS TO DO AND GIVE FOR THIS MOVEMENT, WILL REPORT THE NEW YORK CLIMAX MEETINGS FOR THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY. MEANTIME LET NO CHURCH NEGLECT TO MAKE AN OFFERING EASTER SUNDAY FOR THE ORPHANAGE WORK CARRIED ON BY THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S DEPARTMENT OF THE CHRISTIAN WOMAN'S BOARD OF MISSIONS.

Interest in Mission Study.

Cincinnati like other cities had a host of expectant women. Our brethren, too, gave their presence at the mass meetings. The night Prof. Charles T. Paul spoke this was especially noticeable. Interest in mission study developed at once. Plans for a Missionary Social Union took form and have since grown to completion. One thousand five hundred and seventy-five women broke bread together at the lunch hour. The Christian Woman's Board of Missions set $15,000 for its aims for Cincinnati and the Auxiliaries of southern Ohio.

Detroit was the last in the first half of the series. There are world forces in this northern city. Under the Jubilee influence some of it yielded to service for those non-Christian cities, where beauty dwells not and power has become servile to sin.

Eastern Series Begins.

Cleveland, the first in the Eastern series. The half day prayer service, where the map of the world was a distinct paragraph in each year book, the parlor meetings in three of the magnificant drawing rooms of Cleveland, the conference on the "Supreme Need," the Young Women's Auxiliary, the luncheon where twenty-seven hundred women sat together, the wonderful addresses, the various denominational rallies, the large attendance of the women of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions at the Euclid Ave. Church for their rally, the work of the local committees, the interest so manifested in the story of Western Women in Eastern Lands together records marvelous success.

Mrs. Peabody Joins Company.

Louisville. Here Mrs. Peabody first joined the company. To look into the face of the woman in whose heart was born the Jubilee idea was good for all. The largest Interdenominational pledge was for the Christian Woman's Board of Missions and was paid forthwith. So great was the audience that one gentleman speaker said it seemed "The company of women are publishing the Tidings to a great host," would be a correct rendering.

Nashville had the influence of the Missionary Training School, the headquarters of the Women's Southern Methodist Board and other educational and missionary interests.

Aside from the addresses there were many interesting features like the following described by Miss Miller: "The Nashville meeting closed enthusiastically. An exquisite pageant was presented in which three hundred girls, dressed in black, marched beside three hundred girls clad in white, the latter handing their dark sisters the cross. It was one of the most beautiful spectacles I ever witnessed and made a deep impression on the audience."

Noted Persons Participate at the Capital.

Washington, D. C. The nation's capital, as usual, gave heed to the things that make for peace. The church, many noted individuals, statesmen, and women of prominence, and acknowledged leadership were foremost in all the work of preparation and response to the call of the jubilee. Here the largest individual gift was $10,000 for the Women's Board of the Methodist church.

Richmond. This noble southern city was stirred in every church circle. Mrs. Montgomery, Miss Miller, and Dr. Noble were the message bearers here. No words, the people say, can voice the appreciation of our southern constituency as they heard anew the missionary call to our Christian American womanhood.

Baltimore. As elsewhere, the story can be told only in the merest fragments. After meetings are being conducted to conserve the jubilee interest. A Living Link for the Christian Woman's Board of Missions was announced today as one of the direct results.

Philadelphia. Here the tide of interest rose high. The preparation was complete. The City of Brotherly Love poured out its gifts of heart and of gold.

Pittsburg. The reporters say the Jubilee was a "gigantic success." This in a city of wealth. One church placed $40,000 on the altar of missions.

Woman's Work of Fifty Years

Results on Mission Fields and Marvelous Development of Woman's Leadership

BY CHARLES T. PAUL.

The story of foreign missions conducted by and for women during the past fifty years is one of the most fascinating chapters in the history of Christian achievement. The jubilee of 1911 is justifiable because there is so much to celebrate. Three phases of what has been accomplished during the period under review may briefly be indicated.

The Rise of Woman's Missionary Societies.

Although, during the first half of the nineteenth century, sporadic groups of missionary women had come together chiefly in New England, it was not until 1861, in New York, under the presidency of Mrs. Doremus, that the first regular constituted woman's board was organized and incorporated. (It is significant that this pioneer society was interdenominational.) Now there are in the United States and Canada, forty-four woman's boards operating in many countries. Their auxiliary societies have a membership of 2,000,000, whose contribution to missions in 1909 was $4,000,000, providing for all the expense of home administration and the support of some 2,500 missionaries abroad.

Fought and Prayed Their Way.

The rise of the woman's boards is a triumph of vital and practical Christianity over traditional legalism and masculine dogmatism. Most of them, including our own Christian Woman's Board of Missions, had literally to fight and pray their way into existence against strong opposition in the good old orthodox days when the brethren quoted (and sometimes misquoted) Scripture to prove that "females" were debarred from all work of initiative and aggression in the evangelization of the world. If this prohibitive view had prevailed, the great "citadel of heathendom"—the women of the Orient—never could have been taken nor even rightfully approached. Millions of women behind the purdahs and zenanas of India, the harems and seraglios of Mohammedan lands, millions within the courtyards of China—absolutely inaccessible to the message of men missionaries—never could have heard the gospel. Previous to 1861 the men's boards had not grasped the necessity of sending out women workers to evangelize their heathen sisters. At that date one solitary woman from America, Miss Marston, was laboring in Burma. Now there are approximately 5,000 unmarried women missionaries at work in all the fields of the world. This is almost a third of the entire Protestant missionary body. If the large number of missionaries' wives be counted, who are doing efficient work supplementary to that of tneir husbands, it will be seen how great a share of the foreign propaganda is being carried on by the once deprecated "female ministry."

The Development of Gifted Leadership.

What richness of personality, what resourcefulness and genius, have been disclosed in the great women leaders of the last century! They have excelled as evangelists, teachers, industrial workers and physicians. They have an honorable place among the pioneers and founders, the heroes and martyrs, the prophets and reformers, the makers of new eras in social and national life. Dr. Clara Swain and Isabella Thoburn in India; Dr. Mary Fulton and Dr. Eleanor Chestnut in China; Mary Louise Whately and Madame Coillard in Africa—these and many others may be named in the list with Verbeck, Hannington, Mackenzie and Griffith John. Some of the most arduous missionary exploration has been done by women. Witness the great journeys of Isabella Bird Bishop through "unbeaten tracks in Japan" and the fastnesses of Central Asia, and the travels of Annie Taylor and Dr. Susie Rijnhart in Tibet. These and many others belong to the great honor-roll of those who "through faith subdued kingdoms, wrought righteousness, obtained promises, escaped the edge of the sword, out of weakness were made strong, waxed valiant in the fight, turned to flight the armies of the aliens."

The Results of Woman's Work.

It is beyond the power of statistics to tabulate them. After fifty years of labor, a new type of womanhood is emerging in both the Near and the Far East. That is perhaps the most significant thing amid all the reforms which throb and seethe in non-Christian lands today. Three million girls in the modernized schools of Japan; Chinese women editing a woman's journal in Peking and the anti-footbinding society officered by some of the most distinguished Christian ladies of "the middle kingdom;" harems broken up and veils stripped off in Constantinople, and the women of that city meeting monthly in a public assembly to discuss the new era that has dawned in Turkey; thousands of women young and mature, black, brown and yellow, with other thousands of their children in Christian schools, their hearts warming and whitening, their vision glowing and growing, their lives expanding and strengthening under the redeeming touch of the things of Christ.

Professor Charles T. Paul, Principal Missionary Training School, Indianapolis.

This means that the "citadel of heathendom" is yielding. That it will be taken within the next fifty years who can doubt? For among the Orientals themselves have arisen leaders in ability and consecration comparable with their Western sisters who came to them to point out the way. For the great victories which Christ is yet to achieve in the foreign fields we shall be looking more and more during the next fifty years to the great Oriental Christian leaders like Halideh Salih, Pundita Ramabai, Lilavati Singh, Mrs. Yajima, the Egyptian princess Aisha, Mrs. Akok, Dr. Hü King Eng, whose transformed lives and ardent spirits are summoning the vast sisterhoods of the lands of darkness, to take their places in the Kingdom of Heaven.

The Jubilee From a Missionary's Standpoint

Miss Mary Graybiel.

The fourfold aim of the Jubilee is thus stated: "A Revival of Interest, An Awakening of Interest, More Missionaries, A Million Dollars for Advance Work on Mission Fields." Reports from Rallies already held indicate how nearly that aim will have been reached when the campaign is ended.

Surely, interest has been revived in many hearts. Many new members have been added, proving awakening interest. More missionaries? Increased gifts have come to the work and will continue to come. More missionaries? Yes, let us still hope so though the reports have less to say on that point than we could wish. Why is it so hard to devote a child to the service of God in the best of all good causes? Why are so few young people seeking places of widest influence, and a life of service that is full of richest compensations? This Jubilee is bringing into our very midst the women and children, especially, of non-Christian lands, and laying upon our hearts and consciences their needs, and our ability and responsibility to meet those needs.

The story of the past fifty years is a rehearsal of how our gracious God has accepted and used the offerings of time, and labor, and money, and life which have been laid upon His altar. Shall we catch the vision of the larger things He is waiting to do when our united Christian womanhood shall bring the whole tithe into the store-house, and prove Him. The achievements of the past fifty years along the line of woman's special work have been glorious, but in their larger, truer, significance they are only a promise of greater things to come. The knowledge of the glory of the Lord is yet to cover the whole earth. All nations are to bow before Him.

Facts About the Christian Woman's Board of Missions

By Mrs. Effie L. Cunningham.

The beginning of this agency for righteousness was in 1874. Seventy-five women were present for the organization and there are now seventy-five thousand members of Auxiliary Societies. The membership aim for this year is twenty-five thousand new members. This will make one hundred thousand Christian women and girls giving thought and money and prayer through the Christian Woman's Board of Missions. One of the best by-products is realized through this phase of its ministry, for wherever there is an Auxiliary Society there is a quickening of the spiritual life and activity of the entire church. Thirty-five thousand boys and girls are also receiving missionary training. Thus help is given to the making of a missionary conscience in the church of tomorrow and a sweet and beautiful service is enlisted for today.

The Christian Woman's Board of Missions could claim its right place in the church for the service it renders the church, the Christian woman, the young woman, the boy, the girl; but its ministry is broader than the local church and this personal helpfulness to the Christian worker. Its field is the world. Its problems are world problems. Its hopes are for the world conquest by the Christ. Jamaica, India, Mexico, Porto Rico, Africa, South America, New Zealand and Canada have been entered for Christian work. A large work is being conducted in the United States. There are two hundred and forty-six missionaries and helpers in the fields outside the homeland. These serve in evangelistic, educational, medical, orphanage, industrial, zanana, leper and Woman's Home work. The toil, the tears, the joys, the offerings of money and life, the prayers that have gone into the work, make possible the wonderful opportunities for present advancement. In the United States there is work for the Originals on the Pacific Coast, for the Mexican on the Southern border, for the foreigner as he enters our Eastern gateway, for the multitudes of black people, for the University student, for the mountain youth, and for all the men and women, the boys and girls who are reached through the evangelism of the Christian Womans Board of Missions, an evangelism that has entered almost every state and territory of our country.

Since the beginning $3,160,323.50 has come into the Lord's treasury through this association. The receipts for the four years ending with September 1910 were $1,213,757.91. The value of property is estimated to be $600,000. The financial aim for this year is $400,000. As a help in the development of the worker and the work two monthly periodicals, the Missionary Tidings and the King's Builders, also a large amount of literature and supplies are published by the association.

Perhaps the most far-reaching gift of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions to the church is the Missionary Training School at Indianapolis, Indiana, a school for the advanced instruction and special preparation of Christian workers for all lands. The headquarters of the General Board is in this building.

The Follow-Up Campaign

Mrs. J. E. McDaniel.

The power, and enthusiasm, and vision, given through the Jubilee Rallies of this unique and epoch-marking year, will be lost if not adequately followed up. There should be the largest giving and pledging on the part of those in attendance at the rallies, after which they should return to communicate the impulse to all the sisters in all our churches. There should follow an "every member canvass" in all our churches for members and for offerings. The Jubilee offering pledge cards should be used in the "every member canvass."

The Christian Woman's Board of Missions is today a mighty army. From loving hearts everywhere ascends the prayer, "Here am I, Lord, send me." "Send me to that disinterested sister to bring home to her heart the appeal of the work, or by sheer force of personal friendship win her for service. Send me to tell of the great needs and opportunities, and to win gifts for the work."

Western Women in Eastern Lands

Mrs. Jeanette H. Wells.

When the Master of work and rewards completes the annals of the Jubilee movement, a high place will be given to Mrs. Montgomery's study book for the Jubilee year, "Western Woman in Eastern Lands." Many things will have conduced to the success and deep meaning of the whole but nothing shall have been a more potent factor than this real heart message to the women of all missionary societies; this strong appeal for a quickening concern for human welfare and a better first-hand knowledge of the work of the world and the vital relation every woman holds to it. All too briefly, it sets forth only a meager outline of the achievements of the past and the actual work being done by the various boards, but in its spirit and content there is a stimulation to desire for real knowledge and understanding of the needs of the world. It affords a sense of real companionship for present day women with the women and movements which fifty years ago wrought for the ampler life for women; it has given hundreds of women better desires and a knowledge of how they might find a place in the great plan of our Lord, for the use of every gift intrusted to them for life; it has laid low denominational lines and accentuated the greatness of a common task for God. As we have walked through its pages with brave Mrs. Doremus, Dr. Clara Swain, Dr. Eleanor Chestnut, Isabella Thoburn, Charlotte Tucker and a noble company of women who lived really for Christ, unworthy thoughts and indifference in us have given way to higher resolutions and new affections for great missionary service. As women we gladly acknowledge the debt we owe this factor in our Jubilee year and accepted it as from God, an instrument to help us to better, truer things in His work.

DISCIPLE WOMEN AND THE JUBILEE

BY ALLAN B. PHILPUTT.

The Christian women have done a great thing this year in stimulating increased interest in foreign missions among women. Forty Boards with 57,433 Foreign Missionary Societies and Auxiliaries in the United States and Canada, which have been carrying on an extensive educational campaign for some years by means of text books and study classes, united to make the year 1911 memorable as their Jubilee year. It was fifty years ago that they began to do missionary work in foreign lands. The plan of celebration was to have great assemblies in thirty of the leading cities of the country from Oakland, California, to Boston and New York. These meetings were stirred with addresses upon the present missionary opportunity. Mrs. Henry W. Peabody of Boston was made chairman and Mrs. Helen Barrett Montgomery was secured as the leading speaker. Other speakers were added, among them Miss Florence Miller of Lexington, Kentucky, representing the Christian Woman's Board of Missions, whose addresses thrilled and delighted great audiences in many cities.

Rev. Allan B. Philputt, Pastor Central Church, Indianapolis.

The thing that interests many of us next, of course, to the general success of the campaign which is the main thing, is the part our own Christian Woman's Board of Missions had in it.

In each city the Christian Woman's Board of Missions was a factor in the support of the Jubilee enterprise, furnishing not only large numbers for the gatherings but helping in the local management, and in some of them bearing the chief burden. Our women set high standards of effort in raising money. Kansas City and adjacent auxiliaries will try to raise $30,000; the women of Indianapolis and adjacent auxiliaries $35,000; Cincinnati and auxiliaries in Southern Ohio $15,000; Cleveland and the auxiliaries of Northern Ohio $25,000. The Christian Woman's Board of Missions in Chicago made a large pledge, one woman giving one thousand dollars. This was also true of Louisville, one thousand dollars in cash being given there by one individual. All the other cities made large pledges and announced definite aims for the Jubilee offering to be made by the Christian Woman's Board of Missions.

When the "Western Extension" Committee was organized with headquarters at Chicago, Mrs. Frank Wells was appointed by the Christian Woman's Board of Missions to serve on this committee. Mrs. Harlan, corresponding secretary of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions, kept in close touch by correspondence with the leaders of the movement and was most helpful in working out the plans. Mrs. Atwater, president of our Woman's Board, gave wise counsel. She appeared also to great advantage upon the platform at the rallies, as did Mrs. Harlan, Mrs. Wells and others.

Among the speakers on the general platform has been Miss Florence Miller. Admirably and commandingly has she borne her part and it is safe to say that whenever the churches of the country wish to bring together a half dozen of the greatest speakers among missionary women upon one platform the list will include Miss Miller.

But the thing in which we all take pleasure is that our Christian Woman's Board of Missions, by reason of the honorable part it bore in the Jubilee campaign, has become known from the Atlantic to the Pacific and will always be recqoned with as a national Missionary organization of great efficiency.

The Daisy.

A certain prince went out into his vineyard to examine it, and he came to the peach tree and said:

"What are you doing for me?"

And the tree said: "In the spring I give my blossoms and fill the air with frgrance, and on my boughs hangs the fruit which presently men will gather and carry into the palace for you."

"Well done, good and faithful servant," said the prince.

And he went down into the meadow and said to the waving grass: "What are you doing?"

"We are giving our lives for others—for your sheep and cattle, that they may be nourished," said the grass.

And the prince said: "Well done, good and faithful servants, that give up your lives for others."

And then he came to a little daisy that was growing in the hedgerow, and said: "What are you doing?"

And the daisy said: "Nothing! Nothing! I cannot make a nesting place for the birds, and I cannot give shelter to the cattle, and I cannot send fruit into the palace, and I cannot even furnish foor for the sheep and cows; they do not want me in the meadow. All I can do is to be the little daisy I can be."

And the prince bent down and kissed the daisy and said: "There is none better than thou."—Lyman Abbott.

Patti and Lincoln

How the Great Singer Found the Heart of the President

Madame Adelina Patti was in Washington in 1853, on her first tour of America. Lincoln, not known to fame then, happened to be in the city and heard her. Not long since the great singer told a fellow artist the story of this visit to the capital and of her experience at the White House nine years later. As given in the Boston Herald, the story is as follows:

"I was a young girl, a very young girl, when Mr. Lincoln saw me for the first time. It was in 1853 and I was just 10 years of age. You see, I don't fight shy of dates any more. We gave a concert in Washington, and it so happened that Mr. Lincoln was in the city on professional business. He wanted to hear the great Norwegian violinist, Ole Bull, who was one of the company, and that is how he happened to hear me sing.

"I don't remember what it was, but it was probably something very coloratura that Ettore Barili had taught me—something to show off an infant prodigy, you know. When he returned to his home at Springfield he had not forgotten me. Even the memory of Ole Bull's wonderful playing hadn't effaced poor little me entirely, and if you had ever heard that wizard of the violin you would appreciate what a compliment it was to be remembered after such an artist had done his very best. Yes, Mr. Lincoln remembered me when he got home and spoke of me to his wife and predicted that I was going to have a career. So, you see, my queer little vocal pyrotechnics must have impressed him.

Met Him When President.

"How do I know all this? Mr. Lincoln told me, but not at that time. I didn't meet him then, and didn't know for some time afterward that such a person existed. It was not until he had been in the White House more than a year that I found out he had heard me sing nine years before that time. Contrary to the predictions of some of the noted musical experts of the day, my voice had not said good-by to me, but had developed into something really worth while.

"In May, 1861, I made my London debut as Amina in 'La Sonnambula,' a role that leaves no doubt concerning one's vocal ability, you know. Well, I won out, as the sporting folks say, and the following year I came back to America and sang in several large cities. It was in the fall of that year, 1862, that I met Mr. Lincoln and his wife and was received by them at the White House.

At The White House.

"We were giving three performances at the capital. It was the first night of our engagement and I was singing Amina. Some time during the progress of the opera some one remarked that President Lincoln was in the house, but I was so absorbed in my own affairs and in those of the doleful heroine that I paid little attention to anything else, and when Maurice Strakosch came and asked me if I would like to meet the President I had forgotten all about his presence in the theatre.

"'Oh, I don't know,' I answered rather indifferently—I was very young, you know, and considerably spoiled by my good fortune. 'Is it absolutely necessary?'

"'It would be something unheard of to decline—especially since he has expressed a willingness to meet you,' my impresario returned seriously.

"'Very well, then,' I said, seeing there was no help for it and believing that my manager regarded the matter from a purely business viewpoint. 'Come on,' I added quickly, 'Let's have it over as soon as possible.'

"I was dressed for the sleep-walking scene—not a costume, you will admit, in which to meet strangers—and I picked up the first thing at hand—it happened to be a big broadcloth cloak, the property of Mr. Strakosch—and wrapped myself in it. Thus accoutred, we made our way to the back of the President's box.

Her Surprise.

"Judge of my surprise when a tall, dark man standing alone in the shadow at the rear of the box stepped forward and held out his hand, saying as he did so: 'You have changed a great deal since I saw you last. I don't believe I should have recognized you.'

"Of course I could only stare and wonder, but he went right on and told me all about seeing me with Ole Bull in 1853. The entire length of that first meeting couldn't have exceeded five or six minutes, but the President was so perfectly charming that it seemed as if I had known him always, and when I left him I had received an invitation to call next day at the White House to meet Mrs. Lincoln. I noticed as I went on again that the President was not in his box. Later on Mr. Strakosch told me that he had been seen very seldom at places of amusement since the death of his little boy Willie, which had occurred the previous winter, and that Mrs. Lincoln had not yet reappeared in public.

Mrs. Lincoln.

"The following afternoon my manager took me up to the White House and we were received by Mrs. Lincoln in one of the big parlors. The President's wife was a handsome woman, almost regal in her deep black and expensive crinoline, only an outline of white at her throat and wrists. Her manner, too, was most gracious, without a particle of reserve or stiffness.

"'My dear, it is very kind of you to come to see us,' she said, taking both my hands in hers and smiling in my face. 'I have wanted to see you—to see the young girl who has done so much, who has set the whole world talking about her wonderful singing.'

Then the President entered the room. He greeted us cordially and again made mention of the great change in me since the Ole Bull concert. 'I shall always regret, Mary, that you were not with me at that time,' he said turning to his wife.

"'I, too, have regretted it,' she said.

"'Such a self-possessed little woman and with such a voice,' he went on.

She Was Blushing.

"By this time I was actually blushing—I was still very young, you know—and so, without waiting to be asked, I volunteered to sing for Mrs. Lincoln.

"'Thank you so much, my dear,' she said. 'I have been wondering how I could manage it without seeming presumptuous.'

"I drew off my gloves and went to the piano. First Mr. Strakosch accompanied me in a couple of rather florid things we both knew, and then I sang, to my own accompaniment, 'The Last Rose of Summer, which I should have to repeat a few hours later, the opera for that evening being 'Martha.' When I had finished the last long-drawn-out note of the song, I turned to have a look at my audience. Mrs. Lincoln had risen from her seat and was standing at a window in the back part of the room, with her back toward me.

They Were in Tears.

"Of course, I couldn't see her face, but I knew she was weeping—the melancholy strains of the ballad had recalled the sense of deprivation and set her heart aching with renewed bitterness. I reproached myself that I had made such an awkward choice and was about to attempt to remedy my mistake by ending the performance with a rollicking bolero when Mr. Lincoln, who had been sitting motionless on a sofa nearby, his eyes shaded by his left hand, asked without removing his fingers from his face:

"'Will you please sing "Home, Sweet Home?"'

"Strakosch gave me to understand in an undertone that he was unfamiliar with the air, but, fortunately for me, I knew it well enough, although I had never sung it. I didn't know the words, though, and while I was wondering how I should manage it, the president rose from his seat, went quickly to a small stand at the foot of the piano, took from it a small music book with a vivid green cover, and placed it on the piano rack, opened to the music of 'Home, Sweet Home.' Then he returned to his seat without a word and resumed his former posture.

The Song Which She Has Sung Ever Since.

"Well, I sang the song the very best I could do it, and when Mr. Lincoln thanked me his voice was husky and his eyes were full of tears. By that time I was so wrought up over the situation myself that I actually blubbered when we were taking leave of the recently bereaved parents.

"As we were being driven back to our hotel, Strakosch congratulated me on the success of my first visit to the White House.

"'I won't look at it in that way!' I declared indignantly. 'There are other things in life besides business.'

"'I quite agree with you,' he admitted, soberly. 'I give you my word of honor that I had some difficulty in subduing my emotion while you were doing that folk song. The way I succeeded was by picturing to myself the hit you might make with it as a positively final encore.'

"I gave him an indignant look, but I saw he was perfectly serious. I repudiated his suggestion mentally, but I sang the homely old song that very night at the opera, and I have been singing it ever since. How many times, I wonder?"

His Postscript

It was only Saturday, yet he was arrayed in his Sunday best, for his mother was going to take him to the photographer.

"Now, Henry," she said, "I'm going to get ready myself, and, mind you, don't get into mischief meanwhile. Sit down and write mother a little note in pencil."

Like a dutiful son, Henry sat him down, looked out of the window across the street for inspiration, and found it.

"Dere mother," he wrote, "the bois across the strete in the Lothrop's front gardin are playing a new game. I should like to see it. May I go? Your affeeshonate son.

"Henry."

"That's very short," said his mother, who was not quite ready when he showed her the epistle. "Go back to your room and write mother a little postscript."

Joyously, Henry departed; but when his mother, drawing on her gloves, hurried to his room, it was quite empty. And on Henry's table lay the letter, with the desired addition:

'P. S. I have went. "Henry."

Rainier of the Last Frontier

BY

JOHN MARVIN DEAN

AUTHOR OF

"THE PROMOTION, ETC."

Copyright 1910, By John Marvin Dean

CHAPTER XVIII.—Continued.

"Chaplain, listen! You know that my surrender means a halter of hemp for my neck—a nice, sweet, public hanging such as Montor del Moro got from General Hughes at the plaza in Jaro. You know this as well as I do. Now here is my ultimatum. That's a Latin word, Chaplain, and it doubtless sounds strange to you from a nigger. But you, a white man, know just what it means. Now this is my ultimatum—I will surrender my prisoners unharmed to Colonel Montgomery on condition that he open his lines to the north and let me go a day's journey into the mountains without pursuit. If he refuses I will fight it out to the last. It will be necessary to retain Miss Royce in the zone of fire. Your gatlings and howitzers will murder her and you will rescue her dead body only. In case you decide to accept my terms I must ask that a suitable guarantee be granted me that you will not violate your own terms. A brilliant idea has come to me as I began this parley with you, sir. I will be compelled to ask the favor of your company with me into the mountains as an assurance that we will not be fired upon as we go through your lines or be followed within the prescribed full day."

"Now then, Chaplain, I trust that it is clear to you. I will only surrender my prisoners on condition that I be allowed to pass with my command into the mountains with no pursuit for twenty-four hours, and the pleasure of your company to guarantee that immunity. But honestly, sir, I would rather fight it out here and now. He who thinks that Fagan is afraid of his enemies, is making a fatal mistake. Get back into your lines and attempt no compromise of these conditions."

Back to Colonel Montgomery's bivouac went Rainier, heavy of heart. He had hoped that he might catch a reassuring glimpse of Benicia but the gloomy figure on the barricade was his only reward for the risk he had run in bringing in Montgomery's message.

Within a half hour Fagan's ultimatum was being discussed with loud curses by the entire cordon of troops.

Around the commanding Colonel were grouped a half dozen captains and lieutenants in special council of war, Rainier in the midst of them.

For a full hour the situation was canvassed, each round of opinion ending in choking anger. To rush the town meant undoubted death to Miss Royce. To let Fagan escape to the hills was almost equally unthinkable. Yet gradually the latter alternative was settled upon.

"Better that a hundred Fagans be raiding us from the hills than to have that little woman in that camp another hour," cried Mallory. "What she must have suffered!"

"Yes, let Fagan's outfit through, Colonel. We'll follow him to the top of Canlaon if necessary."

So spake Gordon of the Gordon Scouts, a man of his word.

"Well, it's hard medicine, gentlemen, but we will take it for Miss Royce's sake," said the white-haired Colonel. "If Mr. Rainier is willing to meet his share of this the rest of us ought to be willing to deny ourselves a little fighting. Pass the word along the line, Adjutant, and send in Lieutenant Lately with the flag of truce to Fagan this time. Our unofficial chaplain here will want to prepare himself for his trip."

The Colonel arose as a sign for the dismissal of the council.

The Adjutant disappeared in obedience to orders. A flag went in to Fagan with the news. Ten minutes later Rainier shook himself free of several clinging officers who were nigh to showing unmanly tears in their parting with the Army Secretary, crossed the fields in the bright light of the morning, and passed into Fagan's barricade. As he did so his heart was fluttering with emotion far removed from conscious heroism.

As he topped the barricade with a dozen rifles covering him, Miss Benicia stood below him amid a group of insurgents. The face which she turned toward him had none of the old look of contempt and abhorrence with which she had once looked him over in the streets of Iloilo. That face was a revelation of joy and tenderest gratitude.

As he stepped down to her she cried:

"Oh, I knew you would come and get me!"

He took her hands in his, and looked into her eyes.

"You are uninjured by all this experience?" he asked, solemnly, tenderly.

Suddenly she found herself unable to speak. But she nodded her head reassuringly and felt the tears swimming in her eyes.

"God is good," said Rainier, releasing her hands. And the tones in his voice were the tones of a profoundly moved man. For an instant he stood in silence and then as he bowed and turned to Fagan he felt the hot tears flowing down his face.

Presently he said,

"If you are ready, General Fagan, I will escort her to the end of the street, and then return to you. Gordon's scouts are just opposite this barricade and Colonel Montgomery awaits Miss Royce."

Fagan had stood, sullenly silent a few paces from Miss Royce. He nodded in acquiescence, signalled to a group of insurgents farther up the street and stalked away to a neighboring house. In another moment Benicia and Rainier were walking down the main street of Passi together toward the muzzles of Gordon's howitzers.

There was a slight angle in the street midway between the lines. Once beyond the angle the girl would be in view of the troops to the north of the town. Rainier halted just at the turn. His hand had found hers and he crushed it with utterly unconscious cruelty.

"Beyond the turn you will be received by the troops with a royal welcome, Miss Royce. I will ask you to proceed alone."

"But you? Are you not in danger between these lines?"

She had looked up at him with a face that showed a fear across its new-born radiance.

"It is too great an honor to share your welcome back to your soldiers. You've no idea how they idolize you. They want to see you coming toward them all alone—a symbolical scene to them, it will be. It will spoil it all to inject me into it. Do not fear, Miss Royce. It is not a hundred yards to our guns."

"Oh, I'm not at all afraid," she cried, as he released her hand. "But I'd love to have you share it with me—the happiest moment of my life!"

"I will follow you—later," he said with a brave gesture of command.

An intuition made her look him full in the face.

"Oh, you're a man—a noble man!" she cried.

And then, with tell-tale color rising as a flood in her cheeks, she turned away and passed the angle in the road.

It was the signal for a roar of loving welcome that swept along the investing line clear around the town, a veritable storm of cheers. With the ugly rows of bamboo houses shutting him out entirely from the scene Rainier yet knew the precise moment when the rescued nurse passed into the shelter of her flag, for that last step to safety was marked by a crescendo of cheering.

"She is safe at last!" cried Rainier, aloud, as he stalked back toward the insurgent flag, flapping on the barricade up the street. "Thank God, she is safe at last."

As he reached the barricade, instead of mounting it at once he fell, oblivious of curious insurgent eyes, upon his knees, and though he uttered no audible prayer he was as much in communion with his Savior as any man may be.

It was as his face was bowed in that thanksgiving and as the distant cheers still rippled around the town, that Doctor Curt Sevier slipped over the barricade unhindered, and walked with fearful face out toward the men of his own uniform.

Rainier did not see him.

"Safe at last! Safe at last!" He was letting the phrase form itself into an endless chain of praise and prayer.

"Safe at last! Safe at last!"

CHAPTER XVIII.

"A Long Day With Fagan."

"Boast not thyself of tomorrow for thou knowest not what a day may bring forth."

Thus speaks the holy volume of God. And thus echoes the answering experience of men.

Six years have passed away since that bright Visayan morning, when Clarke Rainier saw Benicia Royce turn the angle of a street in Passi, while he himself turned back to spend a day with Fagan as a hostage.

Six whole years, gracious reader. And yet the events of that far-away morning come back with startling vividness to the tattered man in the crater of Calabang.

He remembers so well (and so often!) how Fagan and Fagan's men clustered around him and marched north out of Passi. He can recall with ease the last glimpses he caught that day of the uniformed soldiers of his country. Montgomery had drawn back his lines a quarter mile from the north road leading out of the town, but a group of infantrymen on a distant ridge, showing clearly against the sky, waved him a frantic and adoring farewell. He did not respond my gesture for he was walled in by crowding Visayans and Fagan himself was arm-in-arm with him. But his heart had quickened with a glow of warm appreciation and he had stepped on toward the mountains, with a light and fearless tread. It was a small thing to spend a day or two with Fagan, when the queen of his life was free.

(To be continued.)

Hate-to-Hurry and Put-It-Off

By Nancy Byrd Turner.

Hate-to-Hurry and Put-It-Off,
They had to go a mile.
"I'll rest," said one, "now I've begun."
Said one, "I'll wait a while."

Resting and waiting, they planned their trip,
And lo! at set of sun,
They rubbed their eyes in great surprise,
For neither mile was done.

And I heard the old clock on the shelf
Set up a sorry chime;
The wee hand told the seconds,
And the long hand told the minutes,
And the short hand told the hours,
And they all told Father Time.

Hate-To-Hurry and Put-It-Off,
You didn't mean to shirk.
You just went slow where you had to go,
You just delayed your work.

But he who rests by the busy road,
And he who hates to start—
They take poor place in any race,
And play a sorry part.

So next time let the old clock tick
A merry, cherry rime:
When the wee hand tells the seconds,
And the long hand tells the minutes,
And the short hand tells the hours,
And they all tell Father Time!

—Youth's Companion.

His Air-ship

By Edith Perry Bodwell.

Johnny was taken to see the air-ships fly because his Uncle Billy said that when a little fellow tried to make all sorts of toys out of nothing he was sure to be a great wonder-worker by and by, and he wanted Johnny to see what the grown-up wonder-workers were doing.

Little John had never seen so many people all at once before, and they were all looking at the biggest sort of a kite with wheels beneath, wings like frail boxes, a loud-buzzing motor whirring where the man sat, who waved his cap when the great crowd cheered. Then the air-ship began to rise from the ground and fly straight out over the sea. Then it came back again out of the mists, and floated down before the people like a piece of paper when it falls from off the table.

By and by several of the air-ships raced to see which could go the farthest straight up into the air. They circled round and round as the birds do,—up, up, up,—till they were mere specks in the pink sky of the sunset.

But Johnny and the people were not the only ones who were watching the sky, for the little birds, and those that had been the biggest birds before the air-ships came, snuggled into their nests and hid in fear. Even the meadow-larks—those joyous things—were silent, and none of the birds dared sing while those great soaring things which man had made were floating about. For they thought they must be either hawks or eagles.

When Johnny came home he was so excited, and he went right to work, for he felt that he must have an aeroplane, too. He did not know whether it would be a monoplane, with one pair of wings, a biplane, with two, or a triplane, with three, but he did know where he could get the wheels and the motor. He had been sorry when his cart had broken, but he was glad of the wheels now. He fastened a big new windmill Uncle Billy had bought for him at the aviation meet into his father's fishing pole. It was a good deal of work for a little boy to do, but he fastened the wheels beneath and the pole above the seat of the swing, and was soon flying through the air. His cries of delight brought everybody running from the house, and Uncle Billy said it was grand, and that he would help him make a biplane after breakfast.

It was he who put a box-cover at the end of the fish-pole to steer by, and tied on whole sheets of cardboard for the upper planes, a long board for the lower, and a good broom and rake for the supports at the side. And the man and the boy were just as happy as they could be.

Johnny was singing and swinging there all alone when little "Tenny Tackle"—that was his little brother's name for himself—woke from his nap. And he was the most surprised little child! Of course he wanted to be the first passenger taken up, and the two little aviators had the loveliest time—quite as lovely as ever the birds or the bird-men could have. And this continued until the garden just had to be raked, and the house just had to be wept, and the making over of the air-ship without these supports took all the little mechanician's time.—Youth's Companion.

A Mother's Prayer

BY REGINALD C. BAKER.

"Baby mine, in comfort sleeping;
Angels hover o'er thee now!
Guardian spirits ever keeping
Silent watch above thy brow.

"As a ship upon the water
Rides above the ocean's strife;
So may you, my baby daughter,
Rise above the cares of Life!

"Be thou gentle with thy neighbor.
Keep thy conscience bright and clear;
Help the feeble with thy labor,
Rule by kindness, not through fear.

The Junior Pulpit

BY "MARK WAYNE."

A SHEET OF PAPER.

Here is your life—a sheet of paper. What shall I do with it? "Tear it up" you say, and I tear it into many pieces just as a boy the other day tore his soul in pieces. He got angry and stamped and tore and yelled and swore until I thought he'd gone mad. He was tearing his life into pieces. Crumple it and throw it into the waste-paper basket. That is what a man did whom I saw lounging near a public house, out of work, out of ambition, out of everything worth while. He looked crumpled—he was about ready for the waste-paper basket.

Write on the sheet of paper? Yes, I could do that—fill it with words or figures—language, geography, spelling, arithmetic, algebra, grammar and history and I don't know what so that this piece of paper would know as much as the brightest boy or girl here. But it isn't everything to know something, but to do something. Now I fold down each of the four sides—so, and then squeeze together the corners—so, and now I have what looks very much like a plate, a collection plate.

Lots of boys and girls make their lives just like that—a collection plate, always receiving and never giving.

Or we roll the paper up in a nice even roll—this way, and we put the roll up to our eyes and behold, we have a telescope.

Some folks turn their lives into telescopes, and peep and pry into mysterious and wonderful things; stars and comets and nebulæ, but they don't see much of the earth. Let's turn our life—I mean our paper—into something better than that.

I roll the paper corner-wise, and now what shall I call it? It looks like a trumpet if anything. "Blow, bugle, blow, set the wild echoes flying." That is the way some people live. They want everybody to know them; they want their names in "Who's Who"—they brag and parade and work for fame and publicity.

So once again we will fold our paper, this way, and that way, again and again, and hold fast one end of the folded paper, and open out the other end—well, don't you know a fan when you see it? Some little girls like fans very much, because they are so fancy and flimsy and stylish. But I do hope you are not going to fold your life up into a fan, just to be in high society, and to wear fine clothes, and to be very gay and frivolous and empty-headed. Fans and ribbons and gewgaws are not near so pretty as your own sweet faces and childlike hearts.

And at last we twist our paper in an extraordinary fashion, here and there and everywhere. You will practice hours at home to get this well. Turn it up and then down, and then over and then crosswise, and then—everybody must know it as a boat. Yes, a paper boat—so that if you make your life like this it will be of course a life-boat. That is the most difficult, but that is the grandest thing you can make, I think. Remember that a life-boat goes into swirling waters, into black storms, to where poor wrecked men are floundering in the sea, picks them up and brings them safe to shore.

Boys and girls, make your life a life-boat—go out through all the raging waters in this world, find poor drowning men and women, take them aboard, bring them to shore, rescue the perishing, and you will have made the very best possible out of life.

The Daily Altar

An Aid to Private Devotion and Family Worship

SUNDAY, MARCH 26.

Theme for the Day—The Coming of the Lord.

Scripture—For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven, with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God. 1 Thess. 4:16.

He which testifieth these things saith, Yea: I come quickly. Amen: come, Lord Jesus. Rev. 22:20.

So even I, and with a pang more thrilling,
So even I, and with a hope more sweet,
Yearn for the sign, O Christ! of thy fulfilling.
Faint for the flaming of thine advent feet.

Oh what a hope! and when afar it glistens
Stops the heart beating and the lips are dumb;
Inly my spirit to his silence listens
Faints till she find him, quivers till he come.
—F. W. H. Myers ("Saint Paul").

Prayer—Our Father, we rejoice in the assurance that Jesus did not leave his people comfortless, but promised them that he would return. Help us, we beseech Thee, O God, to understand that this coming is no mere physical and visible advent at the end of the ages, but a spiritual and constant arrival, in the lives of his people and in the institutions and ideals of the world. Save us from the mistake of missing his true coming day by day as we give him place and room. And may we open our eyes to discern his real presence. We ask in his name. Amen.

MONDAY, MARCH 27.

Theme for the Day—Songs of the Soul.

Scripture—And he hath put a new song in my mouth, even praise unto our God Psalm 40:3.

Yet the Lord will command his loving-kindness in the day-time, and in the night his song shall be with me. Psalm 42:8.

And they sing the song of Moses the servant of God, and the song of the Lamb. Rev. 15:3.

If I might follow far and far away
Unto the country where these songs abide,
I think my soul would wake and find it day,
Would tell me who I am and why I stray,—
Would tell me who I was before I died.
—Josephine Preston Peabody ("After Music").

Prayer—Thou art our hope and comfort, O Lord. Thou hast raised us up when we were fallen and filled our mouth with singing. We join in the worship of the ages, and voice the joy of our hearts in music that the saints of other years have loved. And may all these experiences open to us the mystery of those eternal songs which only the ear of the child of God can hear. We would learn the deeper secrets of life from Thee. And we ask in Jesus' name. Amen.

TUESDAY, MARCH 28.

Theme for the Day—The Inspiration of Love.

Scripture—Yea, he loveth the peoples; all his saints are in thy hand. Deut. 33:3.

And my tongue shall talk of thy righteousness, and of thy praise all the day long. Psalm 35:28.

Stretch out thy holy hands; help me to thee!
O let my faltering tongue find power
So that a spark of all thy glory trail
Resplendent through all centuries to come,
Lit by the love that moves the sun and stars,
That gives me God.
—Heloise Durant Rose ("Dante").

Prayer—We give Thee thanks, gracious Lord, for the blessing of this day. Every morning brings us fresh proofs of Thy good will, and every evening falls like a benediction upon us. In the strength which the contemplation of Thy love brings to us, we can do all things. When Thou dost stretch out Thy hands to us, we are made glad, and our song rises from grateful souls. Keep us in the circle of Thy friendship, O Father and may each new day be radiant with Thy presence. Amen.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 29.

Theme for the Day—The World-wide Empire.

Scripture—He shall have dominion also from sea to sea, and from the River unto the ends of the earth. Psalm 72:8.

He shall not fail nor be discouraged, till he have set judgment in the earth; and the isles shall wait for his law. Isa. 42:4.

Perhaps the mother, dreaming o'er her baby,
Felt dimly in her heart the centuries' fate;
How slowly would the East land turn and listen,
How long before the South would know Him great,
How sternly would the North hold to His letter—
And long forget its gentle spirit—knew
How word would cross the misty inland ocean,
Where in long curves the wild sea-eagles flew.
—Faith C. Marchael ("The Wondrous Future").

Prayer—O God, we adore Thee for the completeness of that purpose which Thou hast revealed to us in Christ. As far as the wide lands extend, as far as the oceans stretch, Thou dost mark the spreading circles of his influence and power. And may we who watch the advancing glory of his kingdom find our own lives widened, and our faith increased as we hail the signs of his coming to all the lands beneath the sky. We pray in his name. Amen.

THURSDAY, MARCH 30.

Theme for the Day—The Comfort of a Great Friendship.

Scripture—Return unto thy rest, O my soul; for the Lord hath dealt bountifully with thee. For thou hast delivered my soul from death, mine eyes from tears, and my feet from falling. Psalm 116:7, 8.

A light that gleams across the wave
Of darkness, down the rolling years,
Piercing the heavy mist of tears,—
A rainbow shining o'er the grave.
—Henry van Dyke ("Tennyson's In Memoriam").

Prayer—Our divine Father, we would learn the secret of that deep and abiding friendship which mocks at death and shines triumphant through the grave. Leave us not to the solitude of grief when death intrudes into the house of life. We stay our souls upon Thee, and know that underneath us are the everlasting arms. May we be sure, as well, that those who have been one with Thee in life and service are not lost to us or to love. In the Master's name we ask. Amen.

FRIDAY, MARCH 31.

Theme for the Day—The Greater Future.

Scripture—Beloved, now are we children of God, and it is not yet made manifest what we shall be. We know that, if he shall be manifested, we shall be like him, for we shall see him even as he is. 1 John 3:2.

Through love, through hope, and faith's transcendent dower,
We feel that we are greater than we know.
—William Wordsworth ("After-Thought").

Prayer—O Thou eternal God, we put our trust in Thee. We have worshiped Thee as the God of comfort and of truth. We would also adore Thee as the Guardian of the future, who knowest all the way we take. Give us courage for this day's work in the thought of our divine inheritance, and may the value of our earthly friendships and achievements find measurement in their relation to the life which is beyond. We ask in our Redeemer's name. Amen.

SATURDAY, APRIL 1.

Theme for the Day—The Wholeness of the Soul.

Scripture—Ye heard how I said unto you, I go away, and I come unto you. If ye loved me, ye would have rejoiced, because I go unto the Father, for the Father is greater than I. John 14:28.

But we,
Who, seeing the sunset-colored waters roll,
Yet know the sun subdued not of the sea,
Nor weep nor doubt that still the spirit is whole,
And life and death but shadows of the soul.
—Algernon Swinburne ("On the Death of Robert Browning").

Prayer—Heavenly Father, we are the tenants of a world in which change is constant. All things pass and take new forms, and life and death are ever busy at their tasks. But we put our trust in Thee, and know that what is ours we cannot miss. So each day becomes a new chapter in the divine drama of our lives. We look beyond the shadows to the substance, beyond the darkness to the light, beyond the dwellings of the flesh to the House not made with hands. Amen.

"And now that it is all over," said an old, wearied, and dying statesman, after a day of sad farewells, "it is not so bad, after all." The terror, the disquietude, is not in the thing suffered, but in our own faithless hearts. But if we look back at the past and see how portion after portion has become dear and beautiful, can we not look forward with a more steadfast tranquility and believe that the love and beauty are all there waiting for us, though the old light seems to have been withdrawn?—Great Thoughts.

Sleepless Father, who dost watch
Round my couch in slumber,
When beneath my humble thatch,
Where are cares that cumber,
Eyes are ope'd to see the light,
Be thou first to greet their sight,
That I may be led aright
Through the day until the night,
When we cease to number.
—Alexander H. Fraser.

The Moral Leaders of Israel

BY PROFESSOR HERBERT L. WILLETT

Section XIV. The Prophets of Northern Israel.

April 2. Text for Special Study, Genesis 50:15-26.

QUESTIONS.

1. What was the origin of the prophetic schools in Israel?
2. In which of the two kingdoms had prophecy been most prominent up to this time?
4. From how many sources are the narratives of the earlier portion of the Old Testament drawn?
5. Which of these sources is the subject of the present study?
6. What two characteristics give to the present narrative the name of the E document?
7. How is the northern character of the work made evident?
8. Are these records of the Ephraimite document usually distinct, or are they mingled with those of the Southern group?
9. How do the two sources differ in their ethical and religious ideas?
10. With what features are the Ephraimite writers more concerned?
11. What are some of the illustrations of a higher ethical ideal in these writings?
12. What was the probable date of the Ephraimite source?
13. Why is the story of Joseph's last days significant?
14. Why were the brothers of Joseph anxious, after his forgiveness of them?
15. What request did they send to Joseph?
16. How did their words affect him?
17. What generous view did he take of their evil conduct in the past?
18. To what age did Joseph live?
19. What earnest request did he make of his people at his death?

* * *

1. THE NORTHERN PROPHETIC SCHOOLS.

The general statement regarding the rise of the schools of the prophets in ancient Israel will be found in the previous study (Section XIII). The pupil should review that statement carefully, as it presents the general considerations relating to the growth of narratives of the past, and the particular features of those which arose in the southern Judean school. It will be remembered, however, that the prophets who have been most conspicuous up to this time really belong to the Northern Kingdom, whose capital was at Samaria. To be sure, Samuel lived before the division of the kingdom, and so may be thought of as belonging to North and South alike. One of the places most conspicuously connected with his activity was Mizpah, just north of Jerusalem.

But Ahijah, the leader of the prophets at the close of Solomon's reign, lived in Shiloh, the town in which Samuel spent his youth; and Elijah and Elisha were both active in a ministry which was almost entirely confined to the kingdom of Israel. The places which they visited in the rounds of their prophetic work were such towns as Gilgal, Bethel, Carmel and Jericho. In these places the schools of the prophets were located, such as are referred to in connection with the lives of these prophets. (For the references, see section 1 of the last lesson.)

In these places the groups of prophets resided and carried on their work. They probably lived in small communities, and perhaps resembled somewhat the monks of the Middle Ages in their manual labors and their preaching. From these centers they went forth to instruct the people in the more remote sections of the country, and thus kept alive the religious spirit in communities which the greater prophets could not reach.

* * *

2. THE EPHRAIMITE NARRATIVE.

In our last study it was pointed out that the narratives regarding Israel's early career are preserved for us in a series of four documents or records, which are woven together in the fairly continuous record of the early portion of the Old Testament, from Genesis to Kings. Our study of last week was concerned with the earliest of these, the Judean or Southern prophetic document, usually known as J, because it generally employs the divine name Jehovah or Jahveh, and also because it is Judean in its character. The present study relates to the second of these sources. This one is not so frequently quoted in the Old Testament, probably for the reason that the Judean narrative was fuller and more satisfactory. Yet it is not difficult to trace the northern narrative, as it appears here and there in the records of Israel's life. Its characteristics are marked with a degree of clearness which leaves little doubt in the mind of the careful student.

In the earlier portion of the narrative preceding Exodus 3 this record employs consistently the word "Elohim," (translated "God") as its name for deity. After the record of the divine revelation to Moses in Exodus 3, however, it employs also the other name Jehovah or Jahveh, so that the title of deity is no longer a discriminating mark. But among those indications of its individuality which are most convincing is its definite attitude of interest in the affairs of Northern Israel, whose representative tribe, Ephraim, gave its name to the entire kingdom of the North. It is therefore appropriate to speak of it as the Ephraimite document, and this, in addition to the use of Elohim for God, has led to the general employment of the letter E as descriptive of this series of narratives.

The northern character of this document is shown in a number of ways. The places which are particularly important are those of Israel rather than Judah. Southern Israel is ignored, but such places as Bethel, Shechem and Samaria are especially prominent. In the narratives of personal exploits the men of the North are far more prominent than those of the South. Among the sons of Jacob, Reuben and not Judah is the leader. Joshua, a member of the tribe of Ephraim, is represented as the successor of Moses and the leader of all the tribes in the conquest of Canaan. The story of Joseph, the ancestor of Ephraim and Manasseh, is presented at length in this source.

* * *

3. THE CHARACTER OF THE RECORD.

The first appearance of the Ephraimite prophetic narrative is in the story of the divine covenant and promise (in fragments found in Gen. 15.) From that time forward the narrative appears occasionally, in such chapters as 21, 25, 27, 28, etc., through the books of Genesis, Exodus, Numbers, Deuteronomy, Joshua, Judges, and even in the records of later times. (For details of the analysis see the literature at the end of this study.) There are only a few cases in which the Ephraimite document stands as the only source of information. Such examples are the sacrifice of Isaac (Gen. 22:1-19), Joseph's fame as an interpreter of dreams (Gen. 40: 1-23), the later days of Joseph (Gen. 50:15-26), Israel's conflict with the Amalekites (Ex. 17:8-16), etc.

In other instances, however, in which it is quoted along with the Judean source, it presents features peculiar to itself, such as the makng of the golden calf at Sinai (Exodus 32), the appointment of the seventy elders (Num. 11:16, 17, 25-30), etc. It has a series of words and expressions which are peculiar to itself, not being found in the other sources. For example, it uses Horeb, where the J document reads Sinai. It uses Amorites for the inhabitants of Canaan, where the southern narrative used Canaanites, and it employes the name of Jacob instead of Israel.

* * *

4. PURPOSES OF THE WRITERS.

In the Ephraimite prophetic narratives the didactic and religious motives are more prominent than in the earlier source. The rule of God in the nation is of more significance than the history of the nation itself. The writers are greatly concerned with the leaders of Israel, who are the divinely chosen instruments for the accomplishment of the will of God. The achievements of the people are secured not so much by human effort and natural means as by divine interposition. The chief purpose of the Ephraimite writers seems to have been to show that by submission to God's rule and the counsels of his representatives, the prophets, Israel in former days had enjoyed prosperity and the assurance of the favor of God, but that whenever the people rebelled, disaster fell upon them.

The Moral Leaders of Israel is a Sunday School course for Young People's and Adult Bible Classes. It will continue throughout the year 1911. The publishers of THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY will supply classes of six or more with weekly copies of the paper containing these lessons, at $1 per year for each copy, or 30 cents per quarter. The class members will receive in addition to their Sunday-school lesson all the rich things provided every week in THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY. The papers distributed to the class on Sunday will contain the lesson for the following Sunday. Orders should be sent through the regular Sunday-school Treasurer if you wish to pay quarterly; or you may deal directly with the Publishers, enclosing remittance at the rate of $1.00 per year for each copy ordered. Be sure and give name of teacher or class member to whom papers shall be sent for distribution.

In this narrative the anthropomorphic or human pictures of God are rarely met. He does not appear in human form, but reveals himself in dreams and through his angel. Moses alone is represented as speaking to him face to face.

This source presents a somewhat purer and higher view of deity than the Judean. Those things which reflected unfavorably upon the character of the heroes of Israel's life are eliminated. In this record Abraham does not drive Hagar from his home until he learns that it is the divine will. In the story of his deception regarding his wife, it is explained that he did not really tell a falsehood. It is the divine intervention rather than Jacob's shrewdness which brings his success in his dealings with Laban. It would seem that the writers were somewhat more sensitive to ethical motives than those of the Judean source.

It was understood by these writers that the high places, and the symbols of divine worship which were erected at such spots, were legitimate. But they were already hostile to the employment of images in worship as is shown by the narrative regarding the golden calf in Exodus 32.

The date of this document was probably from 50 to 100 years later than that of the Judean source. Perhaps the middle of the eighth century (750 B. C.), would be an approximately correct date for these narratives. It is not improbable that later additions were made to the original narratives by other prophetic writers before they were combined in a common document including the Judean and Ephraimite sources.

* * *

5. THE LAST DAYS OF JOSEPH.

The narrative selected for special study in connection with this lesson is full of interest as presented in vivid form the story of Joseph's old age and death. It is not selected because of its pertinence to the line of history which has formed the background of our studies of prophecy thus far, but because it deals in a concise manner with a situation of great interest to the Old Testament student.

In spite of Joseph's generous treatment of his brothers who had wronged him in early life, they were suspicious that after the restraints of his father's preesnce were removed, they might suffer from his wrath. They sought the first opportunity, accordingly, of presenting to him their submission and request for full forgiveness. This petition they couched in terms of a command or an entreaty of Jacob himself, uttered befor his death, that Joseph would forgive the transgression of his brothers. And to this word they added their own earnest entreaty.

Joseph, who had already done so much for his brothers that they should have known fully the depths of his affection for them, wept when he received the message. It revealed the limited understanding of his nature on the part of his brothers. Moreover it recalled unhappy days.

When, therefore, the brothers appeared before him to press their request for full forgiveness, Joseph disclosed to them the full-hearted and generous love which he had cherished for them all through the years of their lurking fear. He even went so far as to insist that their evil deeds had been turned into good by the providence of God. And that actually they were the cause of saving multitudes of Egypt's people in the days of the famine. This over-generous view quieted the fears of the Hebrew brothers, and they went away comforted in spirit.

Years passed on, and Joseph lived in Egypt, still among his people. His children multiplied about him. Ephraim and Manasseh, his two sons, became the heads of numerous clans. Something of the interest of the writer in Ephraim, the leading tribe of Northern Israel, is apparent in this story.

When the end came Joseph begged his brethren not to leave his body in the foreign land whither they had come by migration, but to take his bones with them back to the place which had been promised to Abraham, their ancestor. Comforted by the assurance which rested upon the oath of his people, Jacob died, and his body was embalmed after the custom of his adopted people.

Thus is brought to a close a series of narratives concerning Joseph that must have proved among the most useful of prophetic vehicles for the inculcation of the great lessons of fidelity, chastity and generous goodwill in obedience to God. Such lessons were the keynote of prophetic instruction, and such lessons the writers of the Judean and Ephraimite documents alike were concerned to enforce.

FOLLOWING STUDIES.

The next section will deal with "Amos of Tekoa." The one following with "The Moral Program of Amos." These will be followed by two studies in the life and work of Hosea.

* * *

TOPICS FOR SPECIAL STUDY, REPORTS AND PAPERS.

1. Prophetic centers in the Northern Kingdom.
2. The literary feature of the Ephraimite narrative.
3. The ethical and religious features of the Ephraimite source.
4. Some significant narratives preserved in the E document.
5. The relation of the Genesis story of Joseph to the Egyptian story of "The two brothers."
6. The value of the Joseph narratives as material for religious instruction.

* * *

LITERATURE.

Kent, "Beginnings of Hebrew History," pp. 37-41. Driver, "Genesis," pp. i-xvi. Skinner, "Genesis," pp. xlvii-vvi. Sanders and Fowler, "Outlines of Biblical History and Literature," pp. 30-100. Discussion of the literature in such histories as Wade, H. P. Smith, etc. Articles in Encyclopedias and Bible dictionaries on Hexeteuch, Genesis, etc.

Christian Endeavor Lesson

BY W. D. ENDRES

Topic for April 2: Lessons from Great Lives: IV. Joshua.—Josh. 1:1-11. (Consecration Meeting.)

The steadfastness of Joshua is a splendid example and inspiration to all young people who are making serious efforts to live the Christian life. The achievement and growth of Christian character is so slow and imperceptible that we are in constant danger of growing weary and fainting by the way. When Joshua became the Commander-in-Chief of the armies of Israel conditions were by no means inviting. Moses, the first and only great leader they had ever had was dead. They had never known another. Under his leadership they had attempted to enter the land of Canaan from the south, but failed. They could not dwell in the wilderness. And before them lay a swollen stream beyond which the coveted land with its walled cities and big men waited to dispute with the Hebrew the right to possession.

Rev. W. D. Endres, Successful Pastor at Harvey, Ill., Whose Resignation Opens the Way for Strong Church to Call Him.

What will the new chief do in the situation? Those who knew him could not doubt. Through all the long years of Moses' leadership he had been obedient to him and to God, whether fighting with Amalek, or making a minority report in the face of an overwhelming majority. He was true to his fixed purpose no matter what the danger and criticism to which he was subjected. It is what we might expect, then, that he command the people to "prepare your victuals; for within three days ye shall pass over this Jordan." This was the first order in that long effort which met with varied success, but finally triumphed, to subdue the land west of the Jordan for the Israelites. He thought this was the promised land for Israel and he was determined to possess it. This involved not only the qualities of a warrior who must be both fearless and resourceful, but a statesman who could so distribute the land so as to maintain the tribal spirit and at the same time deepen the national spirit. This involved the enactment of righteous laws. Thus he was warrior, statesman, and moralist for the people whom he led.

The secret of his success lay in two directions. He followed the same general policies as his illustrious leader, Moses. In this he showed true wisdom. Not always is it best for men to follow their own wisdom for the sake of being original. Moses had been successful and success was most likely to continue if the same general lines were followed.

But most of all he carried all his problems to Jehovah in prayer. This was true when he was commissioned, and when he was defeated at Ai, and in every crisis of his life. In all his activities he moved with the consciousness of Jehovah in his life and for his glory. Oh, that every Endeavorer might enter upon his own life work with the same fixed and abiding purpose, conscious of his vital relation to his Heavenly Father and determined only to shed glory upon His holy name.

Illinois Department

State Office, 24 Illinois National Bank Bldg., Springfield

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY is a national religious paper published by the Disciples of Christ in the interests of Christian unity and the Kingdom of God. While its circulation is nation-wide and impartially distributed among all the states, it recognizes a special obligation to the State of Illinois in which it is published. It desires particularly to serve the cause of Christ in Illinois by publishing its significant church news, by interpreting its religious life and by promoting the ideals of the Disciples within its borders. To this end the publishers of THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY maintain a state office at Springfield, the capital and central city. It is the purpose of the state editor to study the whole field of Illinois, visiting all the churches, reporting his observations and pointing the churches to ever higher ideals. Pastors and church workers are requested to co-operate by regularly sending items of news, clippings from local papers, parish papers, weekly leaflets, occasional paragraphs of sermons and any other information that will give to the state editor all the data for reporting and interpreting the progress of Christian work in the state. All communications to the editor may be addressed, 24 Illinois National Bank Building, Springfield. All business communications should be addressed to the Chicago office.

—With the merging of the Central Illinois Ministerial Institute into the Disciples' Congress this year there should be a large attendance of pastors and thoughtful laymen of this state at the Congress in Springfield, April 18-20.

—The three days' fellowship will be delightful.

* * *

F. A. Sword is in a meeting at Augusta.

Orrin Dilley of Springfield, conducted his pastorate at Auburn recently.

J. H. G. Brinkerhoff of Salem, began a meeting at Frederick, March 19th.

B. W. Tate's meeting with the home congregation at Pontiac resulted in ten additions.

John R. Golden of West Side Church, Springfield, is assisting W. H. Cannon in a meeting at Pittsfield, begun March 12th.

J. M. Francis, who has for several years been pastor of Athens Church, has resigned and will terminate his pastorate at that place in a few months.

Evangelist Lawrence Wright, assisted by R. H. Crittenden, is holding a revival meeting at Winchester. The meeting was begun last week.

G. W. Thomas will leave the pastorate at Edinburg the first of April and will become pastor of the East Broadway Church, Sedalia, Missouri.

Shelbyville church is in a revival meeting, with Pastor R. H. Robertson doing the preaching. He is being assisted by Mr. F. J. Held of Washington, as singer.

A fine interest is developing in the meeting at Sheldon, in which the pastor J. A. Jackson is preaching. During the first week there were five additions.

A new edifice is under construction at Kilbourne. The foundation is completed and the superstructure will be started with the opening of spring.

Hoopeston church, is having a continuous revival. On two successive Sundays, there were fourteen additions. Many of them being by confession. The minister is Henry F. Keltch.

Concord church is erecting a new building which is nearly ready for dedication. During building activities, the congregation is holding union services with the Methodist church.

J. E. Story of Smithsboro, is holding a meeting for F. M. Stambaugh at Cowden. During the first four days, there were 19 additions and large numbers of people were interested in the meeting.

George H. Brown's church at Charleston, made an offering large enough to continue the support of a missionary at Bolenge, Africa. The offering day was stormy, but the necessary increase will be secured.

Niantic Church, where Robert E. Henry is pastor, made an offering of more than $75 which is in excess of the apportionment. Mr. Henry will continue this pastorate during a second year.

Illinois has seven hundred and twenty-two adult Sunday-school classes that are organized and which hold certificates of organization from the International committee. These classes enroll more than 19,000 members.

East Side Church, Decatur, where O. R. Wright is pastor, was dedicated March 19th. The structure cost $12,000 and $6,000 was required to be raised on dedication day, to pay all of the indebtedness.

The Foreign Missionary offering at Mt. Sterling was $73.50. The pastor A. L. Cole is soliciting responses from many other members of the congregation not represented in the offering. Expectations are had for a considerable increase in this amount.

T. J. Clark of Albion church, closed a two weeks' meeting for his home congregation, in which there were 20 additions, 15 of them being by confession. A fine spirit pervaded the meeting and the house was filled at practically every service.

DeForrest Mullins, held a meeting for his home church, Mechanicsburg, which continued two and one half weeks and resulted in 5 additions, two of these being by baptism. The congregations were composed very largely of men.

A union evangelistic meeting is under way at Mt. Vernon. Seven churches are participating. The Evangelist is Dr. Henry Ostrum. The Disciples Church and its pastor, J. H. Stambaugh, are co-operating with the other congregations.

George M. Schroeder conducted a meeting with his home congregation at Bridgeport. The revival resulted in 17 additions, ten being by baptism. Mr. Schroeder has been with this church not quite twelve months and there have been about 75 additions.

Mattoon congregations are completely filling the church edifice and the work is prospering generally under the ministry of F. G. Thomas. The prayer-meeting is numbering about one hundred. The pastor is urging upon the congregation the necessity for a new building.

G. W. Wise who has been pastor of Du Quoin church for nearly four years, has resigned his pastorate and accepted the church at Deland. His resignation will become effective May 1. Mr. Wise has done a work of permanent value during his ministry at DuQuoin.

Evangelist, H. M. Barnett, closed a four weeks' meeting with Albert Schwartz at Clinton. The additions unmbered 42. The congregation and pastor speak in praise of the evangelist's sermons and Christian personality. Mr. Barnett may be addressed at Clinton and is available for a meeting during April.

J. Scott Hyde and Second Church, Danville, are being assisted in a revival meeting by Evangelist Charles H. Bloom. The meeting began March 5, and will continue for a period of four weeks. With a re-arrangement of the auditorium a larger seating capacity has been created and a more convenient and artistic effect has been produced.

The first sermon preached by R. S. Campbell at his new pastorate at Girard was a missionary sermon and practically every person in the congregation made a pledge for this work. This is a splendid way for a minister to emphasize the seriousness and Christ-like character of the work, which he proposes to undertake in a new community.

At Beardstown, where Secretary J. Fred Jones is soon to hold a meeting for pastor G. W. Morton, there are more than 50 persons in the adult Sunday-school classes, not members of the congregation. The pastor conducted an examination for the Teachers' Training Class, with 17 candidates for diplomas.

Although hindered by stormy weather, the congregation at Flanagan made a missionary offering of more than $54.00, which is not complete. The minister of this church, C. H. Hands, will be available for another pastorate, after May first. His equipment and consecration should induce his early call to a good Illinois church. We have recently examined manuscript of a sermon of his on Prayer which bespeaks a strong spiritual life in the preacher.

Dr. H. O. Breeden, assisted by the Lintt Brothers, assisted Eugene T. McFarland at Rock Island in a revival during January. There were 75 additions. Dr. Breeden was invited by the congregation to return for a similar meeting next Fall. This church has employed a young woman to act as pastor's assistant and financial secretary. One of the most encouraging features of the church is the Endeavor Society which enrolls 150 members, unquestionably one of the largest in the State.

W. B. Clemmer, pastor at Rock Island, has concluded one year's labor with that church. Under his ministry, there have been, during that time, 123 additions to the church, which includes the results of his meeting at Woodland Park, Colorado. Mr. Clemmer has only recently closed a meeting with home forces, assisted by J. P. Garmong, in which there were 45 additions. During the year the missionary offering amounted to $225. The church's financial system now includes numbered and dated envelopes. These are proving to be of considerable value. The pastor has been invited to teach a Union Teachers' Training Class in the Y. W. C. A. on Monday evenings, under the auspices of the City Sunday-school Association.

The union church at Cisna Park, of which W. H. Storm of Eureka is pastor, reports during last year fourteen additions, with a total offering for missions and benevolence of $86 and a contribution to the temperance work of $25. The Sunday-school attendance averaged eighty-one, with an average collection of $2.51. During the year, three adult classes were organized and a class of seven members in "training for service" was graduated. The Sunday-school is making this year an effort to attain front rank standard. This is the seventh year of the existence of this union church. Mr. Storm is nearing the completion of a three year pastorate and will continue for his fourth year. A more extended report of this church will appear in next week's issue.

News Editorials

A Worthier Goal for Giving.

Jacksonville church received an offering the first Sunday in March, exceeding that of any year in its history. It amounted to $900. The Sunday-school raised $520. of this amount. The money was given by about five hundred members. One Sunday-school class had an offering of $114.75, another $85.60. One class gave $3.40 per member. A little child, bringing her offering, told her teacher "that was all the money her mamma could give, and she prays that with God's blessing it will do lots of good." Apparently this church is having impressed upon it the spiritual significance of the offering taken on the first day of March. We note the motto which is held before them: "Every member a contributor." It will be agreed that this is a very much better motto than one with a specific sum of money set as the goal. It is refreshing to hear it. It denotes a worthier attitude toward the problem abroad, and the church at home.

Church Members Volunteer to be Christians.

A new movement among the young people of Third Church, Danville, where S. S. Jones is pastor, is effecting a deepened interest. On a recent Sunday morning, two young people volunteered to go where God wants them to go and to do what he wants them to do. The whole church is being quickened by this appeal. One of the volunteers has already begun work among the young people of the church who have grown careless and indifferent. One outside the church might wonder what such an appeal means. It might be questioned if our appeal being made to the unconverted is the appeal of Christ, when it has become necessary to raise this as a new appeal to those already supposedly Christians. We are not criticising the pastor, who is enforcing such a message in his people's hearts. We are only wondering how it occurs that the appeal seems new, and an addition to the vows already taken in becoming a disciple of Jesus. It is a credit to Mr. Jones that his own ministry is making this a vital issue. It must make his pastor's heart grieve that the disciples of Jesus hesitate for reflection on this which should be the appeal to the unconverted, and that the responses are not only tardy but also so few.

Disciples' Duty at State University.

At the State Convention last Fall, held in Springfield, it was decided to employ two student helpers in the University at Champaign. These helpers have been employed and are at work, but the funds of the State Board are not adequate for their support. The money is being raised by special offerings. The churches of the state are asked to make a contribution of $2 a week, in order that the $60 a month, from now until the close of school in June, shall be provided. This is one of the important works fostered by the State Society. There are more young people from Disciple homes in the University at Champaign than are attending Eureka College. The Disciple churches, therefore, are obligated to furnish proper safeguards and instructions for these young people of our own families, while attending school here. It is only the part of ordinary wisdom that we look after and conserve the Christlike character and faith of these young people. No one who has gone through college, will fail to appreciate what a struggle young men and women pass through, in becoming sophisticated by the study of sciences. Their mental life is completely revolutionized by the class room lecture and laboratory work of the college. We may not wish it so, but along with this transformation in the realms of science and philosophy, there must come a radical change in religious conceptions from those held up to arriving at the University. Religious conceptions must keep pace with the change in other realms. Youthful ideas will not be adequate now. If, while this radical transformation is being accomplished, there is not the feeding of the soul and the development of a mature and adequate set of religious views, there will be an entire slipping away from the church. The alternatives for young men and women being educated, are either mature religious conceptions in harmony with accepted scientific facts, or no religion at all. The reason that so many of our educated young people are lost to the church, is because, during the period of intellectual development, there has not been a successful effort to lead these young people into a mature and sane religious faith. The young man out of college will not be so likely to need extra safeguards and fostering care as the young man in college. The statement of faith made for himself in youth cannot be adequate and satisfying for the one whose whole intellectual life is being changed. If the churches of Illinois will prove themselves wise, there will be no meager returns to the call of the State Board for support of helpers in the University. If any complaint at all is to be made, it must be on account of the meager task set ourselves in view of great demands far in advance of any plans yet projected for work of this nature.

Chicago

By Vaughan Dabney.

Two baptisms lately at South Chicago, where E. J. Arnot ministers.

March 23 is the date set apart by the Hyde Park church for the farewell social in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Guy Sarvis. All Chicago people are invited to be present.

At Hammond, Ind., Cecil Sharpe, pastor of the church, is being assisted by Percy Kendall in a great meeting. So far, there have been 150 additions.

Meade E. Dutt, of West End Church, read an excellent paper at the last ministers' meeting on "Church Hymnody." Mr. Dutt appealed to the ministers to cultivate among their people a deeper interest in the best hymns.

The ministers' meeting held last Monday, was addressed by Guy W. Sarvis, who leaves Chicago soon, preparatory to sailing for China in July. Mr. Sarvis has made an intimate place in the hearts of Chicago pastors who will follow him to the mission field with constant interest and good will.

O. F. Jordan says that his prayer-meetings led by neighbor pastors are creating no little stir in his part of Evanston. The leader interprets his own denominational history and spirit and an open meeting follows in which each expresses his "debt" to the religious body under discussion. Mr. Jordan says he has a hard time to adjourn the meeting.

In a neat prospectus gotten out by the Trimbles, we are told that Gary, Indiana's last frontier, in ten years will have a population of 200,000; that the total Protestant investments would reach nearly $100,000; and that "by every logical right the Church of Christ ought to be the leading religious factor in Gary."

W. D. Endres has resigned at Harvey and will leave after Easter. He has been in that field nearly three years. During this period the membership has nearly doubled and $1,500 was paid on the heavy debt carried by the church. Mr. Endres is one of our best trained pastors in these parts. He is a man of strong social interests but thoroughly evangelical in his spirit and convictions. The Sunday-school in Harvey is one of the best organized, educationally, in the Chicago group. Mr. Endres has not yet accepted a new charge. The church that secures him will have a true leader.

At Gary, the "city of manifest destiny," Nelson Trimble and wife, Martha Stout Trimble, are doing great things. In June, 1910, the A. C. M. S. placed these two workers in Gary, starting with nothing. They now have three churches organized, with Sunday-schools of 173 total enrollment. These churches are located in Central Gary, Tolleston, a residence district in Gary, three miles west of the city hall, and Glen Park, four miles south of central Gary. The Tolleston church, with Martha Stout Trimble, as minister, was built by voluntary labor in five hours last October. The Glen Park church dedicated a small edifice on Saturday, March 18. The Central Church, where Nelson Trimble ministers, is to be dedicated in sixty days. A lot valued at $2,300 has been secured and a loan of $4,000 has been promised by Church Extension. The church choir of sixty voices of Central Church, Gary, is to give an Easter Cantata.

At present there is unusual activity among our churches in the vicinity of Chicago. At Chicago Heights on April 2, Geo. L. Snively will dedicate a new $16,000 building. The structure has been erected on the rear of the lot, thus leaving ample space for a larger auditorium in the future. The seating capacity of the present assembly room, including the many class rooms, is 600. The basement is 40x50 with a 15 foot ceiling. Steel girders have been used instead of columns, thus rendering it an admirable gymnasium. In the basement are shower baths and kitchen. There will be three services on Sunday, Apr. 2. Many Chicago Disciples will attend the afternoon service at 3 o'clock. A special train over the Rock Island is being arranged for which will leave the La Salle Street station at 2 o'clock, arriving in time for the afternoon session. Those who desire to return to Chicago for services in the evening can make good connection late in the afternoon. The Englewood Church which is fostering this enterprise is planning to attend in a body and remain over for evening services. For those remaining, supper will be served in the church basement by the Aid Society. E. D. Salkeld is the efficient minister at Chicago Heights.

Laymen's Missionary Conferences.

The Laymen's Missionary Movement has arranged for four conferences, April 20 to 25. One of these conferences will be held at the North Shore Congregational Church, Sheridan Road and Wison Avenue, for the churches on the North Side, on Thursday and Friday, April 20 and 21. The conferences on both evenings will be opened with a supper at 6:30 o'clock, which is to be served by the ladies of the North Shore Congregational Church. The conference on the South Side will be held on the same evenings at the First Baptist Church of Englewood, 63rd Street and Stewart Avenue. The conference of the West Side will be held on Monday and Tuesday, April 24 and 25, at the Central Park Presbyterian Church, Warren Avenue and Sacramento Boulevard. The churches within a radius of three miles from the Loop and the churches in Hyde Park will meet at the Lincoln Inn, 157 LaSalle Street, on Monday and Tuesday evenings, April 24 and 25. The speakers to participate in these conferences are Mr. J. Campbell White of New York; Col. Elijah W. Halford of Washington, D. C.; Dr. W. T. Stackhouse of New York; Rev. John Douglas Adam, D. D., of East Orange, N. J.; Dr. W. L. Ferguson, Missionary from Madras, India; Mr. W. B. Millar of New York; Prof. George L. Robinson, Dr. J. Y. Aitchison and Dr. J. C. Floyd of Chicago. One evening of the missionary conferences will be devoted to the consideration of "Business Methods in Church and Benevolent Finance," and the other evening will be devoted to "The Program of Missionary Education in the Local Church." A large part of these conferences will be devoted to discussion, but a number of inspirational addresses have been arranged.

All pastors, church officers and members of missionary committees are especially urged to attend all sessions. However, the meetings are open to all men who desire to add to their own efficiency. The conferences will not be a series of popular programs, nor will they seek primarily to interest those men or churches who in the past have not been identified with the movement, but they will offer a constructive program for those who are responsible for the missionary life of the churches. They will give practical demonstration of how a Standard Missionary Church may be developed.

First Evening.

4:45 to 6:00, Meeting for Prayer.
Doors open, 4:30. Doors close, 5:00.
6:00 to 6:30, Social Half Hour.
6:30 to 7:15, Supper.

After Supper Program.

J. Campbell White, Presiding.
"The Call for an Immediate Advance."
"The Missionary Committee of a Local Church."
"Business Methods of Missionary Finance."
Questions and Answers.
"Important By-Products of the Present Missionary Awakening."

Second Evening.

Col. Elijah W. Halford, Presiding.
"The Relation of Missionary Education to a Solution of the Missionary Problem."
A Men's Mission Study Club in Session.
"A Program of Missionary Education in the Local Church."
Questions and Answers.
"Our Personal Relation to the Program of Christ."

The extensive National Missionary Campaign of 1909-1910 revealed the necessity for a more intensive campaign in 1910-1911. As a result of the recent campaign the men of the church have developed a large amount of potential enthusiasm and unapplied initiative. To give expression to this initiative and to provide for an intelligent and adequate undertaking of the missionary work of the church, a series of missionary conferences is being scheduled.

Eureka College

In our college letter of last week there is a mistake. I think we are responsible for it. The letter states that 75 per cent of the Alumni of Eureka College have contributed to the present endowment proposition. It should read 75 persons instead of per cent. The association has a membership of 450. Only one in six has responded thus far. I wish, for at least two reasons, the former statement were true.

First—If 75 per cent of our Alumni would help us out our troubles, so far as this campaign is concerned, would be over.

Second—I don't like to think of closing our campaign with so many of the children on the outside. H. H. Peters.

Herbert Yeuell and Archy Bailey are in a meeting with Claris Yeuell at Paulding, Ohio. During the first ten days there were eighty accessions.

R. W. Abberly is holding a successful meeting at Lebanon, Kan. Sixty-four were added in thirteen days of invitation. Percy R. Atkins is pastor there.

The Christian Century

Published Weekly by
The New Christian Century Co
700-714 East Fortieth St., Chicago, Ill.
United Religious Press Building.
Phone Douglas 3113.

Entered as Second-Class Matter Feb. 28, 1902 at the Post Office at Chicago, Illinois, Under Act of March 3, 1879.

EDITORS
CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON.
HERBERT L. WILLETT.

CONTRIBUTING EDITOR
SILAS JONES.

SUBSCRIPTIONS.
Subscription price $2.00. If paid strictly in advance $1.50 will be accepted. To ministers if paid strictly in advance, $1.00 per year. Single copy 5 cents.

EXPIRATIONS.
The label on the paper shows the month to which subscription is paid. List is revised monthly. Change of date on label is a receipt for remittance on subscription account.

DISCONTINUANCES.
Special Notice—In order that subscribers may not be annoyed by failure to receive the paper, it is not discontinued at expiration of time paid in advance (unless so ordered), but is continued pending instruction from the subscriber. If discontinuance is desired, prompt notice should be sent and all arrearages paid.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.
In ordering change of address give the old as well as the new. If the paper does not reach you regularly, notify us at once.

REMITTANCES
Should be sent by draft or money order payable to The New Christian Century Company. IF LOCAL CHECK IS SENT ADD TEN CENTS FOR EXCHANGE.

ADVERTISING.
Nothing but clean business and reliable firms advertised. Rates given on application.

Church Life

—The Congress prospects are brighter than for many years.

—Many men from many parts are planning to be present.

—A program of the most vital character is preparing.

—The dates are April 18 to 20.

—Place—Springfield, Ill.

—West Side Church, John R. Golden, pastor.

—Multitudes of people go to Springfield just to see the Lincoln monument and mementos.

—A time will be arranged to take in these objects of historic interest without detracting from the program.

—Think of spending an entire afternoon session in an open parliament on the religious views of Professor William James, the most distinguished psychologist of modern times!

* * *

W. L. Harris is in a meeting at Knoxville, Ia.

W. E. Brandenburg has resigned his pastorate at York, Neb.

Robert O. Noah is assisting Edgar Price in a meeting at First Church, Keokuk, Ia.

John M. Grimes has resigned at Beloit, Kan., to continue his college work.

B. F. Shoemaker of Nevada, Ia., has accepted the pastorate at Twin Falls, Idaho.

R. E. Dunlap has been called to the pastorate of University Place Church, Seattle Wash.

Sixty Years the Standard
DR. PRICE'S CREAM BAKING POWDER
A Cream of Tartar Powder
Made from Grapes
NO ALUM

A men's brotherhood has been organized in the church at Aurora, Neb., with forty members.

W. J. Lockhart will assist J. W. Johnson in a meeting at the latter's church, Redfield, Iowa.

Frank H. Scattergood has resigned the pastorate at Stowe, Ohio, to accept a call to Wooster, O.

Z. T. Williams is holding a meeting with his church at Columbia, Ky. He is assisted by J. L. Brandt and H. E. Berg.

After a fruitful ministry of two years at Holton, Kan., C. W. Cooper has accepted a call to Bonner Springs.

The churches of the first district of Nebraska will meet at Tecumseh, Neb., during the [illegible] week of April.

Work is progressing rapidly on the new building being erected by the congregation of the First Church, Oklahoma City, Okla.

The third district of the Missouri Christian Missionary Society will meet in First Church, Joplin, Mo., May 1-3.

A new church has been completed at Belton, Texas. It was erected at a cost of $25,000 and has a seating capacity of 1,500.

After a fruitful ministry of five years, W. B. Wilson has resigned his pastorate at Delta, Ia., to take effect June 1.

W. S. Johnson, pastor of Central Church, Des Moines, Ia., has concluded the meeting held with his congregation. There were twenty-one accessions.

The pastorate at Santa Barbara, Calif., is now occupied by H. K. Pendleton, formerly of Atlanta, Ga. Mr. Pendleton began work there March 5.

G. W. Kitchen has concluded a meeting with J. A. Shaplaugh, at Forty-third Avenue Church, Denver, Colo. There were forty-one additions.

J. W. Hunley, of Neosho, assisted R. W. Blunt, pastor at Diamond, Mo., in a meeting recently. At the close of the third week there had been forty-six additions.

W. G. Eldred, pastor at Carlisle, Ky., with his congregation, is making great preparations for the meeting to be held by E. E. Violett and Homer E. Sala.

The congregation of Central Church, Portland, Ore., is looking forward to the completion of its new building. It is hoped that dedicatory services may be held the middle of May.

During the meeting held by J. V. Coombs at Winamac, Ind., forty-two members were added to the congregation and $3,500 subscribed toward a fund to erect a new building in the near future.

The congregation of Deland, Fla., is rejoicing over its Foreign Missionary offering of $57.05. This is a large increase over last year's amount. R. H. Lampkin is minister of this congregation.

O. E. Tomes of Kalamazoo, Mich., has just concluded a meeting with W. A. Tate at Boomingdale, Mich. There were thirty-three additions and the whole church has been stirred to a larger usefulness.

Although ten miles from a railroad, the church at Victor, Mo., maintains a Sunday-school with an average attendance of fifty. At a recent service $26 was given as a missionary offering.

The church at Muncie, Ind., will celebrate the forty-third anniversary of its organization on June 25. The pastor, W. H. Allen, desires to hear from all former pastors and members living elsewhere.

A missionary rally representing the women's societies of southwest Missouri was held on March 9, at First Church, Joplin, Mo. Addresses were given by Miss Virginia Hearne and Miss Bertha Moore.

S. S. Offutt held a meeting the first part of March at Zelma, Ind., with thirty-eight added. Much good work was done in the reorganization of the church board, Sunday-school and young people's work.

Allen Wilson held a great meeting at Harrisburg, Pa., recently. Seventy-six were added to the church, this being the largest number of accessions at any meeting ever held in this church.

J. W. Mitchell writes of the hard work and sacrifices of the men and women of the young congregation of Disciples at Tucson, Ariz., who are laboring to build a house of worship. The outlook is encouraging.

Central Church, Lexington, Ky., is a living on both the home and foreign field. Miss Lavinia Oldham is supported by them at Tokyo, Japan, and Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Haddock are their representatives in the home field.

Samuel W. Jackson is assisting E. R. Black in a meeting at Moscow, Idaho. At last reports forty-three had been added. This congregation expects to make extensive improvements on their building in the near future.

W. F. Shearer of Angola, Ind., held a successful meeting with J. A. Spencer, pastor at Bloomfield, Ind. In addition to the accessions, sixty-six in number, the church has been greatly strengthened throughout its entire membership.

A. F. Roadhouse has been compelled to resign his pastorate at Santa Ana, Calif., on account of ill health, much to the regret of his congregation. Paul E. Wright of New Bloomfield, Mo., has accepted a call to take up the work there and will begin April 1.

Arthur Long and O. C. Crow held a four weeks' meeting recently at Hamilton, Mo. with R. E. Purdy, the pastor there. Good preparations had been made for the meeting and as a result fifty were added to the membership.

L. C. Howe has tendered his resignation at New Castle, Ind., to take effect May 1.

Uneeda Biscuit
Always Ready
Wise foresight should lead you to keep in the cupboard a half dozen or more handy packages of
Uneeda Biscuit
They won't get broken, musty, soiled or soggy like ordinary soda crackers because their crisp, clean freshness is protected by the moisture-proof and dust-tight package.
Never Sold in Bulk
5¢
In the moisture-proof package
NATIONAL BISCUIT COMPANY

SEND for EASTER SUPPLIES

The new Easter Cantata entitled

"THE EASTER HEART"

was written by

MRS. JESSIE BROWN POUNDS

and is in some respects the best concert exercise that she has ever prepared. It is designed for use by the young people of the Churches of Christ in behalf of Orphanage work in Mission fields.

We have some very attractive helps to aid the young people in raising their Easter offering. These are an "Easter Egg Envelope," and an "Easter Heart;" the latter is a little blood-red heart containing 100 golden stars, and is to be worn as a badge of service by a boy or girl while raising an Easter offering.

Order as many of all these supplies as you will need. They will be sent, prepaid, free of charge. Address,

CHRISTIAN WOMAN'S BOARD OF MISSIONS
(YOUNG PEOPLE'S DEPARTMENT)
Missionary Training School Indianapolis, Ind.

Books

WHEN YOU WANT BOOKS
Send your order to us. We handle the books of all publishers, at the lowest prices. Your order will be promptly attended to.
THE NEW CHRISTIAN CENTURY COMPANY
700 East Fortieth Street - - - - Chicago, Ill.

This splendid field is now practically out of debt, and has a bright future before it. Mr. Howe has received a unanimous call to the church at Noblesville, Ind.

J. T. Adams held a successful meeting recently at Grand Rapids, Mich., with J. C. Meese, the pastor there The meeting was a successful one in every way, thirty-eight being added, and all the expenses being raised before the meeting closed.

Under the leadership of B. F. Hill, the work at Brookfield, Ia., is moving along encouragingly. There were ten accessions on a recent Sunday and the Sunday-school enrollment has had an increase of sixty-five since the beginning of the year.

W. H. Kindred and E. O. Cassity held a three weeks' meeting at Corpus Christi, Texas, which resulted in forty-two additions. E. O. Sharpe, who has charge of this mission field, is much encouraged at the incentive for work the cause has been given.

Charles M. Watson, who took up the pastorate at First Church, Norfolk, Va., the first of the year, is meeting with the hearty support of his congregation and the accomplishment of larger things in the life of the church is hoped for.

Good progress is being made in all the activities of the church at Hamilton, Ohio., where L. C. Brink ministers. The attendance both in the Sunday-school and church services has greatly increased during the past year. S. B. Brink is now assisting the pastor in a meeting there.

William Clark Hull, Pasadena, Calif., is preaching a series of sermons on "The Higher Life" on alternate Sunday evenings, beginning March 19. The subjects are: The Power of His Presence; The Power of a Great Purpose; The Power of the Resurrection; The Power of Faith; The Power of the Cross.

At the Lenox Avenue Church New York, Wm. Bayard Craig on March 12 spoke in the morning on the topic: "The Great Things in Our Religion." The evening sermon was "What Christ Has Done for Jew and Gentile in New York." This service was evangelistic and is the first in a series of five Lenten sermons culminating at Easter.

The annual dinner of the Disciples Missionary Union of New York City will be held on Tuesday evening, April 25, at the Hotel St. Denis. Addresses on the subject of Christian Unity will be made by Dr. William T. Manning, rector of Trinity Church, and by Peter Ainslie, of Baltimore, chairman of the unity commission of the Disciples.

The Brotherhood of First Church, Lincoln, Neb., entertained the boys of the Sunday-school recently, each of the fifty members present bringing a boy as his guest. All of the talks given were devoted to boys' interests, and a debate was held on the subject, "Resolved, that it is more necessary for the church to provide for its boys than its men."

The new church at Orange, Calif., was completed last month and dedicatory services held. F. M. Dowling delivered the dedicatory sermon and was assisted in the services by pastors of neighborhood churches, F. W. Emerson, secretary of the Southern California Missionary Society, C. C. Chapman, president of the society, Mrs. Princess C. Long was the soloist.

In the short space of three months a congregation of 115 persons has been organized at Claremont, S. D., with a temporary tabernacle, adequate for their present needs. J. M. Delezene has just been called to the pastorate at a salary of $1,200 per year. The interest manifested by the young people is particularly encouraging, six young men having arranged to take a preparatory work with Mr. Delezene, to be continued with a course at Cotner University.

J. McD. Horne and his Highland Park church, Des Moines, Ia., are observing the Lenten season with special services. The announcement of themes for the week before Easter is suggestive: "The Light of the World: the Presence of Jesus;" "Facing Calvary: the Courage of Jesus;" "A Sinner and His Saviour: the Mission of Jesus;" "Near the Cross: the Passion of Jesus;" "The Just for the Unjust: the Suffering of Jesus;" "The Resurrection: the Triumph of Jesus."

During the three years' pastorate of A. L. Chapman at Boise, Idaho, a steady, progressive work has been done, which has resulted in the planning of a new $40,000 church, which it is hoped will be completed next fall. Besides the current expenses of the church, $500 was raised for missions during 1910, and $10,000 was received on the building fund. As a result of the general quickening of interest, 120 were added to the membership, no meetings being held except by home forces.

Evangelists Snively and Marks closed their successful meeting with First Church, Marion, Ind., on March 8. During the fourteen days of the meeting there were 114 accessions, nearly two-thirds of this number being heads of families. With their handsome new building recently completed, and this material increase in the membership, the congregation of First Church have bright prospects ahead for progressive work. This has been the best meeting held in the history of the church.

We note that L. H. Stine and his church at Aberdeen, Miss., are following the plan of having neighbor pastors, representing the various denominations, take their respective turn in leading the current mid-week discussions of "Our Debt to the Denominations." In a note to the editors Mr. Stine says with a "nunc dimittis" satisfaction in his voice that he has been pleading for fifteen years for the recognition of "the immanence of God in Protestantism and the leadership of Christ over Protestant churches. I have been condemned for my heresy. But now in this year of grace 1911 my advocacy appears body, legs, boots and all in this prayer-meeting program! After a man has spoken he can afford to wait in hope."

"The People's Institute," the name given to the Christian institutional enterprise carried on by Missionary S. S. Inman at C. Porfirio Diaz, Mexico, dedicated its building Sunday, March 12, J. C. Mason, of Dallas, Texas, officiating. The exercises lasted over Monday and Tuesday. The program shows some very interesting features: a game of basket ball, coach excursion to Puento for American visitors, where church and school will serve "tomale merienda," a civic procession from the city hall to the People's Institute with teachers, representatives of mutual societies and others in line. His excellency, Jesus de Valle, Governor of Coshuila, presided at the dedication. Professor F. L. Jewett of the State University of Texas delivered an address.

During the two years' pastorate of Owen Livengood at Weatherford, Tex., the work has shown a sane, substantial growth, a larger per cent of the membership now being active in the work of the church. One good evidence of this is the treasurer's report for the past month showing a balance of more than fifty dollars in the treasury. Mr. Livengood is preparing a series of articles under the general title of "Our Varied Work," the purpose being to set forth the varied but definite lines of work every congregation should have constantly in mind. The articles will be under the following headings: Bible Study, The Social Side of Church Life, Public Service and Worship, Ministration, dealing with the local field, and one on "The Extended Field."

P. J. Rice writes that the meetings held by H. O. Breeden in the El Paso, Texas, church were every way satisfactory to the church and helpful to the cause. There were 77 additions. The state of war across the river in the city of Juarez diverted the popular mind from religious thinking. Dr.

RAISE FIVE HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLARS FOR DRAKE UNIVERSITY

Where else can Disciples invest money in the cause of Christian education with the certainty of larger returns for all time? Drake University has made good; she enrolls over 1,800 students annually, 300 of whom are from other States and foreign countries; 200 are in the Bible department.

The location of Drake University is strategic. The surrounding influences, climatic, hygienic, social, political, moral and religious are wholesome and inspiring. Her home city, Des Moines, with near 100,000 population, has a spirit to rule herself; and is already giving to other cities her Commission Form of City Government. Des Moines society is quite thoroughly American. This Midland is free from the negro problem of the south, exempt from the Asiatic encroachments so disturbing to the west coast, and away from the extremes of wealth and poverty and the inherent labor troubles of the east.

Drake University is at the center of the world's largest and most fertile farden spot; the very base of missionary supplies both of men and means if we but win them for Christ. These home-owned fields of this great Midland are occupied by a people possessing the highest average of intelligence. The greatest lecturers on the platform today are largely employed in this Midland region. On national questions the Midland people hold the balance of power. No borderland or sectional question can carry without first presenting its claims and securing the consent of this people. Practically all the leading lecture bureaus of this country are owned and managed by former Drake Students.

The influence of the Christian Church is a large factor for righteousness in this city. Some of our leading churches are located here. Such pastors as C. S. Medbury, Finis Idleman and H. E. Van Horn minister to them. Where would a student go for higher ideals in the art of clothing and feeding the race and learning the lessons of higher living? Surely this is the place for a great University. Help us to provide the necessary Endowment for great success. We are already offered $100.000.00 on condition that we raise $400.-000.00 additional soon. If you will help or assist others to give, kindly write us at once for instructions. Address.

Drake University, Des Moines, Ia.
J. H. Stockham, Comptroller.

HIRAM COLLEGE. Send for Illustrated Bulletin, Souvenir Mailing Card and Complete Catalog to PRES. MINER LEE BATES, HIRAM, O.

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS. UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY. Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O. (Please mention this paper.)

BELLS. Steel Alloy Church and School Bells. Send for Catalogue. The C. S. BELL CO., Hillsboro, O

Breeden is described by Mr. Rice as "a truly great preacher. His sermons were all scholarly in matter and dignified in presentation. He lifted the cause of Christianity to a higher plane in this city. Everybody who came under the influence of the meeting speaks of it in the highest terms of praise." The Sunday-school was nearly doubled in attendance during the meeting. The March offering for missions was $1,000, which will be raised to $1,200. Mr. Rice speaks in most hopeful terms of the future of the church there.

The congregation of the church at Savannah, Ga., J. A. Erwin, pastor, is planning to raise $25,000 to replace their building which was recently destroyed by fire.

A meeting is now in progress at New Carlisle, Ind., led by Glen Allen. W. W. King and W. F. Baker of Laporte, Ind., have also assisted in the services.

Milligan College Notes

The Milligan lecturer for last week was Peter Ainslie, pastor of the Christian Temple, Baltimore. Mr. Ainslie was with us the entire week, and gave in all, six addresses, the themes being as follows: "The Future of Our Plea;" "America For Christ;" "My Brother and I;" "Practical Problems of The Minister;" "The Imperialism of Christ;" and "Problems of City Evangelization." It would be difficult to state the value of these addresses, or to adequately express the appreciative interest which they aroused in our student body. Mr. Ainslie's inspirational power is the great secret of his success.

Perhaps the address which appealed most to our student body was his magnificent paper entitled, "My Brother and I," a companion volume, yet unpublished, to his book, "God and Me." "My Brother and I" interprets the great problem of human brotherhood in the same sympathetic and appealing manner which has made the earlier book so popular in England and America. The new book will be a gem, in every sense of the term, and will win its way to the hearts of thousands when it leaves the press.

Jas. T. McKissick, pastor of the Seventeenth Street Church, Nashville, is now at Milligan in our annual meeting. Mr. McKissick began preaching Monday night, and although the meeting has only been in progress three days, we have so far had fourteen confessions. Everything points to a great ingathering. Mr. McKissick is one of the best college evangelists in America. He is forceful, elequent and inspiring, and his wide sympathy with students enables him to come in direct touch with their lives. He is lecturing for us, as well as conducting services in the evening.

The Milligan enrolment is now 285, the largest in our history. F. H. K.

Benevolent Association Notes

A half dozen veterans of the cross who have been lingering for the last few years in our camps for the aged have been mustered out and have gone to their eternal home. Though feeble and anvious to depart to be with the Lord, it was sad to bid them farewell. It was a joy to serve them.

April 16th is Easter this year, and Easter spells bread and butter for the children and old people under the care of the association. Every other interest has its day or days. The only day consecrated to the widow and the orphan is Easter in the Bible-schools. These needy classes should have our undivided sympathy. Send to the National Benevolent Association, 2955 N. Euclid Ave., St. Louis, Mo., for free Easter supplies.

JAS. H. MOHORTER.

Church Extension Notes

At our Board meeting on March 8, the following churches were promised loans:

Munday, Texas, $500; Vera, Okla, $300; Wheatland, Okla., $500; Tishomingo, Okla., $800; Red Rock, Okla., $300; Stecker, Okla., $400, 6 per cent; Milford, Ill., $3,000, 6 per cent; Centralia, Wash., $3,500, 6 per cent; Coldwater, Kan., $800; Kalispell, Mont., $4,000, 6 per cent; Murfreesboro, Ark., $500, 6 per cent; Elm Creek, Neb., $1,200; Brownsville, Texas, $1,500; Raiford, Fla., $250; Clymer, Pa., $800, 6 per cent; Graford, Texas, $600; Huntingburg, Ind., $300; and Fairview, Mont., $200. The loan of $1,250 granted Winona, Minn., at our last meeting was increased to $1,500. There are still remaining a large number of worthy applications for help and requests for aid are coming daily. This is a wonderful church building period among the Disciples of Christ.

It should be noted that most of the above loans are small amounts. These were granted from our Name funds in which the Board had some small balances. It should be further noted that the larger amounts were granted out of our Annuity fund at 6 per cent.

During the month of February the following loans were paid:—Whiting, Ind., $1,300; Nashville, Okla., $1,000; Ft. Dodge, Iowa, $6,000; Orchard, Neb., $600 and Garfield, Wash., $1,500.

Most of the time of the corresponding secretary was spent in holding Church Extension Institutions at Hiram and Bethany Colleges and in a trip through the Snake River country of Southern Wyoming and Northwestern Colorado, and in visiting the churches in and around Denver.

G. W. MUCKLEY, Cor. Sec.

News Notes From Southern California

The work of Southern California moves on as usual. There seems to be a gradual forward movement along the line. No great or startling thing has been done during the past few months, but some excellent achievements which will tell for the future of our work.

Willis S. Meyers and D. O. Gates, our State Evangelists continue their campaign very successfully. They have just closed a

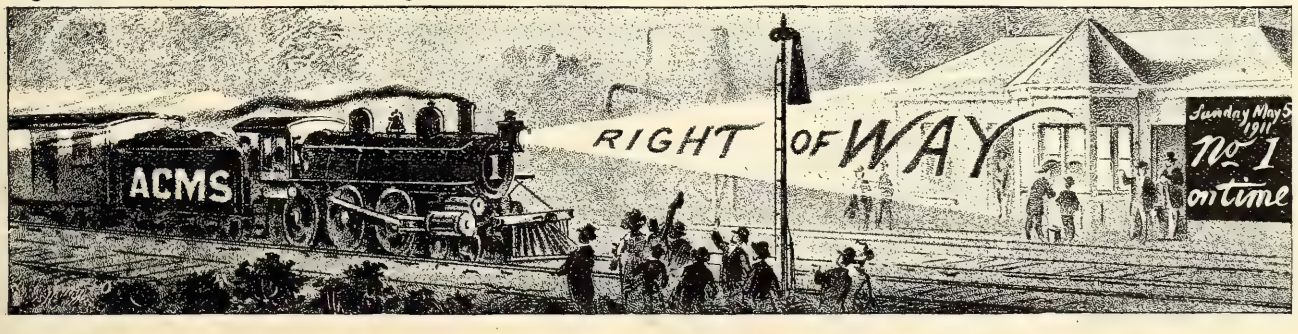
Subscribers Wants

Readers of the Christian Century find its columns valuable for advertising their wants or wares. The charge is one cent for each word, with a minimum of thirty cents for each insertion. Cash must accompany the order to save bookkeeping.

DO YOU NEED HYMN BOOKS for Church or Sunday-school? Write for prices, care of M, NEW CHRISTIAN CENTURY Co.

CHURCH CLERK: Do you need church letters? We furnish a well designed letter in blocks of fifty at 50 cents. Write us, care of X, NEW CHRISTIAN CENTURY Co.

WANTED.—Young man with technical experience in designing and mechanical drafting, graduate preferred, for position in drafting room. Good prospect of advancement. Must be member of Christian Church and an active church worker. Write stating age, experience and lowest salary acceptable. Splendid opportunity right party. None but those meaning business need apply. KERR TURBINE COMPANY, WELLSVILLE, N. Y.



MARCH and April are campaign months to prepare for the American Missionary offering, May 5th. The F. C. M. S. is now "out of the block" and the A. C. M. S. on the main track, with orders--"go ahead." Get your "grip" on this fact: America is the most strategic and important mission field on earth. Over 40,000,000 in our home land are churchless. The religious census of Colorado shows "133 places, ranging in population from 150 to 1,000 souls, without a Protestant church of any kind." That State does not differ from others in the West. Cities of the East, growing communities North and South call for help. One million immigrants come to America every year; they need the gospel. The Disciples of Christ with an increase, last year, of 89,759 members, led all other Protestant bodies. The American Christian Missionary Society gathered 15,741 of that number. Shall we not do better this year? PREPARE FOR MAY FIFTH!

The American Christian Missionary Society.

magnificent meeting with the little church at Needles. They began with eleven disciples. Thirty-eight were added to the congregation—twenty-six by baptism. This is real pioneer work. A. K. Wright is temporarily supplying the pulpit there. $1,084.20 was pledged for pastoral support, of which $755.20 came from the new members of the congregation. This splendid victory is the outgrowth of a struggle that has been waged through several months of time.

On January 29, we had the pleasure of officiating at the dedication of their splendid new church building. This little church seats about two hundred people; is built of cement blocks, and the property is worth nearly $4,000. The Church Extension Board granted a loan of $800, and the rest has been provided for on the field; $750 was the amount raised on Dedication Day, and it came easily.

The Methodist Church dismissed its services and attended in a body with its pastor. Liberal contributions were made by its members for the work.

The work of Mr. Meyers and Mr. Gates was very much appreciated, and the people speak in highest terms of their services. A permanent man is needed for this field, but he must be one worth while, and one who does not turn back at every difficulty.

The secretary, of Southern California, has just completed a Bible school tour with National Secretary Hopkins. Of the 75 schools in Southern California, all but about 16 were represented in the various parliaments held. Mr. Hopkins is certainly the right man in the place. He brings an enthusiasm into the work which is all his own. There is no froth or foam, but practical and earnest work in all his words. The parliaments had morning, afternoon and evening sessions. They were held in the First Church, Los Angeles, the Central Church, San Diego; the church at Redlands and at El Centro in the great Imperial Valley. We are sure that this is just the beginning, and a very successful one, for great victories in our Bible school interests in Southern California. The standards of our schools are rising and some 16 applications for Front Rank certificates have already been filed in the office.

New churches have been built in Southern California and dedicated since the first of the year at El Centro, Needles and Orange. Those in course of contruction and soon to be dedicated are Fullerton, Corona and Arlington. Better facilities for work are required in most of our fields. Many of our congregations have outgrown the plant in which they have been housed, and will soon have to plan for better structures.

The Christian Missionary Society of Southern California is engaged just now in a campaign to liquidate its indebtedness. We hope to be able to come up to the Long Beach Convention with no financial obligations from the past for a new Board and a new year's work to inherit. If we can do this, our work in Southern California can be put on splendid footing, and many new fields entered during the coming year.

Pastors, who have recently changed their station in life from one of single blessedness to matrimonial bliss, are, Frank M. Moore, of Redondo and Wm. Gilbert, of San Luis Obispo. Both bright and energetic pastors, and excellent young men—each doing a splendid work in the field in which he is located. Doubtless, from this time on, they will be able to do a much better work.

Southern California this year is supporting missionaries in 14 different fields; keeping a team of evangelists at work continually and helping through the state office a large number of churches in the straightening out of difficulties; the solving of financial problems and the planning of large things in the interest of the Kingdom.

Los Angeles. F. W. EMERSON, Secretary.

Bethany Graded Sunday School Lessons

International Course

Charles Clayton Morrison, Editor

The Bethany series is now developed to the point where it supplies the entire school—children, young people and adults. The publishers ask all Sunday-school workers carefully to consider the following outline of Bethany publications:

Beginners

Lessons prepared by FRANCES W. DANIELSON.

First Year—Teachers' Text Book—Part I, II, III, IV. Large Pictures (9x12 inches).
Beginners' Stories—(Illustrated folder for Pupils)—Part I, II, III, IV.
Second Year—Teachers' Text Book—Part I, II, III, IV. Large Pictures (9x12 inches)
Beginners' Stories—(Illustrated folder for Pupils)—Part I, II, III, IV.

Primary

Lessons prepared by MARION THOMAS

First Year—Teachers' Text Book, Part I, II, III, IV. (With picture supplement).
Primary Stories—(Illustrated folder for pupils)—Part I. II, III, IV.
Second Year—Teachers' Text Book—Part I, II, III, IV. Large Pictures—(6x8 inches).
Primary Stories—(Illustrated folder for pupils)—Part I, II, III, IV.

Junior

Lessons prepared by JOSEPHINE L. BALDWIN

First Year—Teachers' Text Book—Part I, II, III.
Pupils' Book for Work and Study—Part I, II, III. (With picture supplement).
Second Year—Teachers' Text Book—Part I, II, III, IV.
Pupils' Book for Work and Study—Part I, II, III, IV. (With picture supplement).

Intermediate

Lessons for first year prepared by MILTON S. LITTLEFIELD

Teachers' Text Book—Part I, II, III, IV.
Pupils' Text Book—Part I, II, III, IV. (With maps).

Young People's and Adult Bible Classes

Dr. Loa E. Scott's LIFE OF JESUS, in Fifty-two Lessons. Adapted to young people and adults. An easy, but thorough text.

Professor H. L. Willett's serial treatment of THE LEADERS OF ISRAEL, in The Christian Century. The Publishers will make special arrangements to furnish The Christian Century to classes desiring to use Dr. Willett's course.

The curriculum outlined above furnishes a comprehensive course of religious instruction. It comprises not only the biographies, history, literature, and teachings of the Bible, but also lessons on the history and heroes of the Christian Church, of missionary enterprises, philanthropic movements, and moral reforms.

These lessons afford a signal opportunity for the Sunday-schools of the Disciples to promote Christian union. Sixteen denominations have laid aside sectarianism to prepare the Bethany Graded Lessons for their schools.

THE GRADED LESSONS MAY BE BEGUN AT ANY TIME

Send Today for Order Blanks and Prospectus.

THE NEW CHRISTIAN CENTURY COMPANY
700 East Fortieth Street, Chicago, Ill.

The CHRISTIAN CENTURY

Bible College Library
Mar12'

Volume XXVIII. March 30, 1911 Number 13

Divisions Not All Evil

A Symposium

Men For Men

By P. C. Macfarlane

Ideal Farewell Sermon

By Dr. J. H. Jowett

Church Conservation

By O. W. Lawrence

THE PRESENT HALTING PLACE OF THE UNITY MOVEMENT.—Editorial.

CHICAGO

The Christian World

A Department of Interdenominational Acquaintance.

Methodist

When Charles J. Little died March 11, 1911, the church lost an inspiring teacher and a vigorous thinker. He was president of Garrett Biblical Institute and therefore wore the name of Methodist, but his ministry was to the church universal. He was a theologian who lived in the present, loving the Methodism of the past but aware of its present duty and ready to restate its theology in modern terms and to lay aside outworn conceptions.

* * *

Bishop Hartzell has been in Lisbon studying the religious aspect of the Portuguese revolution. He had interviews with President Braga and five of his ministers relative to the attitude to the Republic toward Christian work and as regards mission work under the Portuguese flag in Africa. The bishop was cordially received. He set forth the purposes of the Methodist Church in its mission field. Assurances were given to him that the government is not anti-religious, "but anti-jesuit and anti-reactionary."

"Liberty is to be granted to all creeds; churches can have their own schools; no religious instruction will be allowed in public schools."

The Deceitfulness of Sin.

The prophet Micah understood that a large part of his duty was to "declare unto Jacob his trangression, and to Israel his sin." All true teachers of religion have the unpleasant task of denouncing evil in the lives of their hearers. But the false prophets could denounce sin, too, and there are today seekers after popularity and notoriety who pose as incarnations of righteous wrath. They know the prejudice of the people and they fit their preaching to these prejudices. Jesus did not spend any of his time in preaching against the outcasts, for the outcasts knew they were sinners. The deceitfulness of sin had blinded the eyes of the Pharisee to his condition and it was therefore the sin of the Pharisee which Jesus exposed. On the difficulty of reaching the right man's conscience the Northwestern Christian Advocate says:

"Outbreaking sin has no friends, no apologists. None will be found to excuse the thief, the adulterer, the murderers. When men are openly selfish and cruel, when they lie, cheat, or steal, when they quarrel, fight, or hate, when they are drunken or lustful, when they backbite, blaspheme, or defame, it is easy enough to classify them and to deal with them. The church is not in any serious danger from unashamed publicans and harlots; nor are such under any illusions as to the future, tragic and pitiful, which awaits them. But there is a class of sinners for whom the church has equal responsibility, and to whom, because of their avowed sympathy with religion, the church has an additional obligation of helpfulness, frankness. God looks upon no more pathetic, no more terrible sight than that of the average congregation gathered for public worship. There the saint and the sinner, the good and the bad, the obedient and the disobedient, the willing and the wilful, the guileless and the guileful, the innocent and the guilty, sit together to outward appearances all very much alike. It is hard to believe that a man may be saying the Creed, or singing a hymn of praise, or listening to the message of God and all the time be plotting the ruin of a business rival, or nourishing impure thoughts, or planning criminal conduct, or comfortably insensible to any thought of God at all. What would a preacher's message be if he were only confronted with the spiritual tempers of his people as he is with their bodily presence! One may think too well of human nature to be very serviceable in making it what it ought to be. And a minister's first duty is to think, not better or worse, of his fellows, but truly; and, in the light of an honest, serious study of them, fit his message to their need.

Shockingly Neglected.

Church members and ministers are very human and they allow trifling matters to interfere with their duty. Instead of fixing attention upon the spiritual possibilities of the men and women in the church and outside of it, they put the stress upon the beauty of the church building, the eloquence of the preacher, or the social status of the church. They allow slight misunderstandings to remain as walls between them and those whom they ought to help. Absorption in personal aims causes them to neglect modest, quiet souls that need friendship and guidance. The Christian Advocate has an editorial entitled, "Shockingly Neglected," in which the selfishness and carelessness of the church is condemned. A part of the editorial follows:

In a body of Christian churches or in congregations, it often happens that one after another of a small family dies until but one remains. The survivor's loneliness is a feeling beyond description; but frequently such members of society are entirely neglected, and they can only repeat the refrain, "Those who honored and loved me are gone and I am left alone." The dependent aged feel this excruciatingly. Strangers, especially those who have encountered adversity, groan in the bitterness of their souls, "Of what use am I?" But more miserable than are they who by a single conspicuous act of vice have ostracized themselves and are shunned by all except those whom they themselves would gladly avoid. There seems in the world a strange inequality in the distribution of social odium as the result of alleged or real wickedness. Here is one who has been vicious all his life, taking little pains to conceal it. Yet he is popular and has many friends. Another is overtaken in a single act of sin, and all turn against him.

There are many in every community who, if they think about it, and doubtless they do, have no reason to believe that any one cares whether they are or wish to be, Christians.

The Overchurched Village.

The overchurched village is receiving its share of atention just now. It is a disgrace to Christianity. On the necessity of weeding out some of the organizations in such villages the Central Christian Advocate expresses itself in this fashion:

Where a village is burdened with more churches than are necessary, why do not the people in that village have common sense enough to get together, and weed out some of the unnecessary organizations, and work together in a kind of municipal Christ-like spirit? These villagers do not hate each other; they do business with each other; they believe that others than their own little coterie of members will get to heaven. Why not carry this good sense over into their ecclesiastical practices, and weed out those which are all right only they are so thick they prevent any and all from growing and flourishing and assuming a real leadership and proving a real blessing to the village in which these neighbors live together, ought to live together, and but for this do in something like concord?

We are told that the laymen are getting tired of this needless multiplication of churches in their village. Are they? Where? The trouble is they are not tired enough. When they do get the tired feeling in earnest, this foolish and empty over-churching of many of our villages will stop.

Tipping Off Evangelistic Futures.

The Central Advocate delivers a blow at pseudo-evangelism in these words:

A ticket advertising a revivalist and his campaign in a city not far away gave the number of conversions up to that minute and concluded by saying that 300 more conversions were expected during the ensuing week. No information is vouchsafed as to how the evangelist got his tip that 300 was the stunt for the ensuing week. In short it was bald presumption. Not long since the head of an educational institution made the business-like statment in chapel that all but a certain number had got converted in the special meetings, and inasmuch as the special meetings would continue only four days longer he desired those who had not yet got converted to do so immediately because he wished to report that the entire institution had got converted as it would help the standing of the school. Precisely so. Another evangelist who was just starting in business brought forward the argument that the congregation ought to get right up and come forward and get converted because he was new in the business and the congregation ought to encourage him. Again, precisely so.

Congregational

The Uses of Passion Week.

Dr. W. E. Barton, Oak Park, spoke on the "Use of Holy Week in Deepening the Spiritual Life of the Church," before the Chicago Congregational Ministers' meeting recently. He began the observance of Passion Week about sixteen years ago when he was pastor in Boston, and has continued it ever since with ever growing interest.

Dr. Barton's church always celebrates the Lord's Supper on Thursday evening of Passion Week with only the church members present, gathering them as closely about the table as possible. "With my church," said Dr. Barton, "the great problem is not outbreaking wickedness, but indifference to Christ." It is his testimony that though his church still observes the week of prayer, it is subject to the law of diminishing returns. He has annually a class of boys and girls in preparation for church membership at Easter. This class meets weekly throughout Lent and at present numbers 39.

Rev. B. F. Aldrich, Wellington Avenue Church, spoke on the "Use of Holy Week as an Evangelistic Opportunity." He began to observe Passion Week seventeen years ago at Pontiac, Michigan, overcoming the opposition of deacons who feared it might "land the church in the bosom of the Romish church."

Dr. Aldrich regards Passion Week as the Climax of the church activities of several months. He believes in constant personal evangelism. Two factors are not to be overlooked: (1.) The personal touch of a loving soul with a soul to be saved; (2.) Silent evangelism. He said, "I cannot pursue any kind of evangelism that violates the privacy of the soul." He divides the church year into three periods: (1.) September to Christmas. The reunion and rallying and organizing period, with Christmas as the climax. The main thought of this period is the giving of self. (2.) Week of prayer until Easter. Even if apparent returns are "diminishing," it is a good time with which to start the year of spiritual power. The main thought of this period should be "the new life in Christ," with Easter as the climax. (3.) After Easter is the "big job" of the year when parks are open, automobiles are out, picnics, etc., attract the people and church work must be "featured" in order to get the people out. Dr. Aldrich, also has a pastor's class which is a feature of his week.

S. J.

The Christian Century
CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON AND HERBERT L. WILLETT. . . . . EDITORS

Where Unity Progress Halts

It grows plainer with each fresh development toward unity that the two points at which the problem rubs are the ordinances and order of the church.

Reduced to specific items, it may be said that the two dogmas of immersion-baptism and the historic episcopate are the outstanding, if not the only remaining, obstacles in the way of union, where union is earnestly desired.

This is not to say that all now remaining to be done is to solve these two problems and we will have union. Far from it. What clogs the wheels of union primarily is not conscientious differences over doctrines and practices, but the sheer sodden inertia of denominationalism. Property is involved; personal leadership is involved; pride is involved; a clannish-tempered sectarian press is involved; ignorance, lack of vision and desire are involved. All these make the really fundamental problem of Christian unity.

But where the passion for unity has been born, where the vision has been vouchsafed, where the issues are not confused by property interests or personalities or a press whose very life depends upon the preservation of the clan spirit, there the problem revolves mainly about these two questions of status involved in immersion-baptism and episcopal ordination.

* * *

The question of creed is not any longer insurmountable. Baptists, Methodists, Congregationalists, Episcopalians, Disciples, are consciously tolerant of widely differing theological views. The refusal of the Presbyterian church to displace the Westminster Confession by a new up-to-date creed is now interpreted as a recognition by this great church of the fact that the day of creed-making is past. It is better to keep a creed long since passed into disuse, and incapable of being used, than to risk the grave problems involved in formulating and applying a new creed.

The great denominations are practically without human creeds.

The question of name is rapidly solving itself. The pride of name is relaxing. Federation has been rich with suggestion at this point. "The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America" is a title in which much of the pride of sectional names is being sunk.

The question of open or close communion has lost its sharpness in the last hundred years. It will be recalled that the offense of Thomas Campbell, a Seceder Presbyterian, one hundred years ago, lay in the fact that he invited all Christians of all sects to unite with his people at the Lord's table. Close communion, while not always formally established, was the common practice in all sects. Today it survives in the Baptist church only, and in that church only in the less progressive communities.

The question of ritual, it is now seen, presents no great difficulty. It is being frankly conceded by leaders of the Episcopal church, both Anglican and American, that the type of service in the united church may safely be left to each local congregation. If a congregation wishes to use the rich historic prayers and rubrics there is no reason why it should not belong to the same body as a congregation whose preference is for extemporaneous prayers and a less formal worship.

* * *

Thus the mists are clearing away. But as they lift, two institutions stand out in the pathway of unity, holding within themselves the actual consciences of their devotees. One of these, the historic episcopate, concerns itself with the status of the ministry. The other, immersion-baptism, concerns itself with the status of church membership.

The Baptist communion raises the question of membership status. The logic of Baptist procedure is as follows: Jesus Christ made baptism the door into the church. Immersion is essential to baptism. We cannot, therefore, recognize as members of the church those who have not been immersed. There are strong Baptist voices raised in our day, especially in England, against this logic and this practice, but it is this conception which historically underlies Baptist procedure.

The Episcopalian communion raises the question of ministerial status in its dogma of the episcopate. The logic of Episcopal procedure is as follows: Jesus Christ established a sacred order of ministers in his church. He conferred grace upon the twelve apostles by the laying on of hands. In the same manner the twelve conferred grace upon bishops in the early church, and they upon their successors, until the present time. This line has never been broken. No man may administer the sacraments of the church unless he be ordained in the line of this succession.

* * *

These two institutions, resting upon the basis of dogmas, are the rubbing places of all the plans for union that have been as yet devised.

There can be no union so long as one party to the union invalidates by its teaching and practice the status of the ministry of the other participants in the union.

Much less can a union be attained while one section of the church refuses to give full and complete recognition of the churchly status, as well as the Christian character, of the membership of other sections of the church.

Leaving the episcopate out of the reckoning at this time, it is important for Disciples of Christ to make clear to their own hearts just what their attitude and practice should be with respect to those Christians who have not been immersed. Shall Disciples, like Baptists, insist that such Christians must be re-initiated into the church as a condition of fellowship, or shall they welcome them as they are, acknowledging without reservation or condescension that they are already full members of the Church of Christ and as such have a right to the fullest fellowship we can give?

* * *

Earnest men and women in the length and breadth of the Disciples' brotherhood are today facing this question with troubled hearts.

The reason the problem disturbs Disciples more acutely than Baptists is that Baptists have never questioned their right to be a separate sect. They accept frankly the denominational order of the church. It has never occurred to them as a body that the denominational order is wrong, that it is wrong to be a denomination.

Therefore Baptists are not troubled with the sense of inconsistency in confining their fellowship to those only who were immersed at baptism.

But with Disciples there has been from the beginning a strong conscience on the question of the unity of God's people. Their passion for unity is the root out of which their movement has grown. They cannot admit their right to be a separate sect. They cannot acquiesce in the denominational order of the church. They cannot with an undisturbed conscience practice division.

Therefore Disciples are troubled with a sense not only of inconsistency, but of wrong-doing, when they perceive that the radius of the circle of their fellowship stops short of the full length of that of the Church of Christ.

* * *

In a recent issue of The Christian Century the embarrassment and opportunity faced by our missionaries in foreign lands was described in the words of missionaries themselves. At the Federation Conference of most of the Christian bodies of India, the action of Disciple representatives in accepting the principle of the validity of the membership and ministry of all participating bodies in the proposed federation, was set down as a signal step toward the practice of Christian union.

But the problem is hardly less poignantly felt by Disciples in our own land than by those on the foreign field. True it is not troubling the pastor or congregation the extent of whose vision is simply to build up a successful church of the Disciples' "faith and order." They have forgotten what manner of spirit they are of, and have adopted, consciously or unconsciously, the sectarian point of view.

But in those hearts where the plea for unity is taken seriously,—whether in village, county-seat or great city,—where the problem of unity is grappled with in dead earnest as a problem that cannot be solved by benevolent absorption and ought not be postponed to that far-off day when there will be no longer any baptism controversy—in such hearts it is becoming plain that the practice of Christian union demands the joyful reception into our fellowship of all whom Christ has received into his.

Social Survey

Postal Savings Bank Success

The United States postal savings banks proved to be even more successful in their second month of existence than in the first. Deposits during the second month were more than 23 per cent greater than in the first. Feb. 28 there were 3,664 accounts in the forty-eight banks, with a net aggregate deposit of $133,869. During the two months, 259 accounts were closed by withdrawal. The average deposit was $21.50. Globe, Ariz., headed the list with an average deposit of $70.63, and Clinton Forge, Va., had the lowest average, $9.06. The total population of all cities in which postal savings banks have been established is 370,000. Statistical experts figure that if all money-order postoffices were equipped with banks and were patronized in the same proportion, an aggregate of deposits of $200,000,000 would result. The last congress appropriated $500,000 for the extension of the service and Postmaster-General Hitchcock is preparing to establish savings departments in 250 more offices. These will be opened as rapidly as possible.

Famine and Plague in China

China is in a sad plight. Not only is she being harassed on her northwestern border by the threat of Russian invasion, but within she is struggling with a famine, and creeping down into the heart of the empire from the north is a terrible plague. Her plight is truly pitiable. For months her people have been slowly starving, and it will yet be three months before they can expect any relief from their own crops. Many hundred thousands of people are reduced to eating roots, sweet potato vines and turnip tops. Even this wretched food is hard to get and the people soon become anæmic and their faces take on that ghastly look of starvation. In this weakened condition, thousands are fleeing from the northern provinces, hoping to escape the ravages of the plague monster. A few succeed. Many carry the plague with them and spread it. The Chinese sleep three or four in a bed in small and poorly-ventilated rooms. Few things could spread the plague more rapidly than this. In many cities the people are dying by the hundreds every day, and since the ground is frozen, the bodies cannot be buried. Cremation has been resorted to in a few places, but usually the bodies are left lying exposed till burial is possible. Various devices have been resorted to in the effort to stamp the plague out, and China has called eminent physicians from the United States and from many of the principal countries of Europe to come and aid her. There seems to be several forms of the plague of which the greater number of cases are pneumonic and bubonic. Vaccination was introduced to some extent, and it will be given a thorough trial, but it is not thought to be as effective as smallpox vaccination. So far the most effective means discovered of stamping out the disease is by force of arms to totally cut off the infected district from all outside intercourse. The plague must be fought by the Chinese themselves, with what assistance a few foreigners (particularly missionaries) can give them. But the outside world must aid them in securing food to ward off the worst of the famine, or they will have starved by the millions before their crops ripen. Several large consignments of food have already been sent to their relief, but already much more is needed, and the sooner it is sent just so much more relief will it afford.

The Secretary of the Interior

Though much more slow of action in the United States than in most democratic governments, public opinion at last prevailed and Secretary of the Interior Ballinger has resigned. Thus the only solution of a bad situation was accomplished. From the first the selection of Mr. Ballinger was unfortunate and has been the source of much embarrassment to President Taft. We admire Mr. Ballinger for his refusal to resign while under fire, but his failure to inspire public confidence has greatly impaired his usefulness as secretary and has made his withdrawal necessary now. For him to have radically changed his attitude toward the Cunningham coal claims and several important policies would only have drawn upon him further severe criticism. The change in the cabinet will make possible this change of attitude with a minimum amount of friction. It is unfortunate that some of the president's correspondence was made public. In accepting the resignation, President Taft said: "I have had the fullest opportunity to know you. . . . To know your motives and to know the motives of those who assailed you. . . . I do not hesitate to say that you have been the object of one of the most unscrupulous conspiracies for the defamation of character that history can show. I have deemed it my duty, not only to the government, but to society in general, to fight this battle to the end, confident that in the end your fellow-citizens would see that their impressions of you as a man and as the administrator of a high public office were false and were the result of a malicious and unprincipled plan for the use of the press to misrepresent you and your actions, and to torture every circumstance, however free from detrimental circumstance, into proof of corrupt motive. . . . Every fiber of my nature rebels against such hypocrisy, and nerves me to fight such a combination and such methods to the bitter end, lest success in this instance may form a demoralizing precedent. . . . It has been made evident that I was and am the ultimate object of the attack; and to insist, against your will, on your remaining in office, with the propects of further efforts against you, is selfishly to impose on you more of a burden than I ought to impose." This violence of language is in striking contrast with his judicial temperament. By thus unreservedly endorsing Ballinger and his policy he has shackled the new secretary with difficulties not easily brushed aside. Walter L. Fisher, a Chicagoan, and a man who will restore confidence in the hearts of the people, is the successor. His previous participation in public affairs includes the satisfactory adjustment of a chaotic traction situation in Chicago, and the founding of the Municipal Voters' League; and he is now vice-president of the National Conservation Association. This is a guarantee that the difficult questions of the new office will be settled satisfactorily. Mr. Fisher is unquestionably a progressive, and it is not surprising that Mr. Pinchot and his friends regard his appointment as a vindication of all they contended for.

Anglo-American Peace Movement

President Taft's proposal in recent speeches, to negotiate treaties with foreign countries in furtherance of the world peace project, has been received with enthusiasm in England. That country would welcome overtures from us toward the negotiation of such a treaty, but feels that it cannot itself formally open the question, since the United States once rejected a treaty of substantially the same character, namely the Olney-Pauncefote negotiations. The Times (British) declares that Great Britain is as ready as it formerly was to accept an arbitration treaty and that if it can be shown that the American people want it, negotiations will not prove a failure. Before the house of commons Sir Edward Grey, referring to President Taft's arbitration speech, said in part: "Such a statement ought not to go without response. We should be delighted to have such a proposal made to us. We should feel that it was something so momentous and so far-reaching in its possible consequences that it would require not only the signature of both governments, but the deliberate and decided action of parliament. That, I believe, would be given." He emphasized the great financial drain of war and armament. "The great nations of the earth are in bondage—increasing bondage—to army and navy expenditures . . . and in some future years they will discover, as individuals have discovered, that law is a better remedy than force . . ." "If two of the greatest nations should thus make it clear that under no circumstances were they going to make war again, the effect of their example upon the world would have beneficent consequences. In entering an agreement of this kind there would be risks and you must be prepared for some sacrifice of national pride." Sir Edward also touched another vital side of the question when he said that nations entering into such an agreement might be exposed to attack by a third nation. "This would probably lead to their making another agreement to join one another in any case of quarrel with a third power, in which arbitration was refused." In conclusion the secretary said: "The general adoption of such a system might leave some armies and navies still in existence, but they would remain, not in rivalry, but as the world's police." All of Europe is aroused by the prospect of this treaty and are keenly watching for developments, for all realize that if any two powers are ready for such a treaty, England and the United States are those two.

Rev. A. C. Dixon, of the Moody Church, Chicago, has been called to the Metropolitan Tabernacle of London. Dr. Dixon went to Europe in December. His associates of the Moody Church expect him to return to Chicago about April 1. At the church it was said that no information regarding the call to Dr. Dixon or the likelihood of his accepting it was procurable there. Dr. Dixon is fifty-seven years old and held pastorates in Asheville, N. C., Baltimore, Brooklyn and Boston before coming to Chicago. He is a brother of Thomas Dixon, well known author.

Editorial Table Talk

Sacrificing the Best for the Good

In a vigorous paper on Evangelism, Rev. L. J. Marshall addressed Kansas City Disciple ministers recently. Mr. Marshall is pastor of Wabash Avenue Church. He declared that the popular methods of revivalism are cheapening and vulgarizing the church. "The advertising resorted to strikes me," he said, "as not the method of the lowly man of Galilee. It savors too much of the theatre and patent medicine." Mr. Marshall was not disposed to deny that good is done by modern evangelism, but he contended earnestly that these methods are cheating the churches out of much better results. The Christian Century agrees with this analysis. A time of reckoning will surely come to a congregation or a brotherhood whose processes of growth depend upon artificial stimulation instead of natural nourishment and exercise.

Supplying Both Pulpit and Pews

A church without a pastor suffers not only from a vacant pulpit, but from vacant pews as well. The problem of "supplying" the pulpit is not so difficult of solution. But the problem of "supplying" the pews is troublous. The Presbyterian church of Vincennes, Ind., hit upon a scheme that worked both problems at once. They invited the pastor of the Christian church, Rev. Edgar F. Daugherty, to fill the pulpit and bring his entire congregation with him to fill the pews. He accepted, and preached a sermon on "The Finest of the Fine Arts," which, when interpreted, was shown to be the art of living together. These Vincennes Presbyterians and Disciples seem to be cultivating this fine art, for they have been holding pretty intimate relations recently. For one thing, the Disciples' Brotherhood entertained the Presbyterian Brotherhood at a banquet recently with Rev. Dr. Charles Little, of Wabash, moderator of the General Assembly, as the guest of honor. "Behold, old things have passed away and all things are become new," is the quotation made by a local newspaper in commenting on these signs of a new and happy fraternity between the churches.

Who Can Forbid Those Whom God Accepts?

The Gospel Advocate (Nashville) quotes a part of The Christian Century's editorial concerning the reception of Congregationalists into fellowship without demanding their re-baptism, and says,

> The trouble with the editor is that he writes as though human beings could receive any one into the church of Christ. When men obey the gospel, God receives them. When the believer is baptized into Christ, God receives him into the church of which Christ is the head. "And the Lord added to them day by day those that were saved."

The Christian Century's "trouble" is quite the opposite of that stated by The Gospel Advocate. It is just because God has already received these Congregationalists into the church that no man or congregation of men have the right to keep them out or to demand that they be re-initiated into the church. The members of the Congregational church are just as truly Christians, just as truly members of the church of Christ, as are the members of the Disciples' church who presume to sit in judgment upon them.

It is a serious business, when one thinks of it, to stand at the door of the church and forbid any Christian the fullest fellowship therein.

If the church were a mere social or literary club, if it were a human institution, then we might set up our ideas of the terms of entrance there. We could make those terms whatever we might wish. But if the church is a divine institution and Christ is the head of it, He determines who shall have fellowship in it and he has received into His church these Congregationalists under discussion, and Methodists, and Presbyterians, as well as Baptists.

Who are we that we should stand in Christ's place and presume to lock and unlock the kingdom of God? What right have we to choose and select among the great company of God's people those with whom we will have fellowship, and reject others? "What God hath cleansed, that call not thou unclean!" Whom God hath added to the church, them treat not thou as outsiders!

The mischief-working conceit lying at the root of the whole sectarian order is the assumption that men may tamper with the divine church of God, narrowing and dividing it by imposing upon it their private understanding of the Scripture. The point made by our contemporary is vital. Human beings indeed cannot receive any one into the church of Christ. No more can they rightfully reject from the fellowship of the church those whom God has already received into it.

They who select from among Christ's people those whom they will fellowship, and reject others, are treating the church as a mere human, not a divine, institution. They are tampering with the divine order. Only those who strive to make their fellowship as wide as the Church of Christ are showing full respect for the divine will.

Certainly only such may be truly said to practice Christian union.

Hugh T. Morrison, Sr., whose forty-two years of labor as pastor and evangelist among the Disciples has brought enduring blessing to many churches in the United States and Canada, passed to his reward last Sunday morning, from the home of his son, Charles Clayton Morrison, in Chicago. He was 68 years old, and had been ill for a year. It is expected at this writing that A. McLean will conduct the funeral service at Springfield, Ill., on Wednesday.

Our Debt to the Baptist Brotherhood

The Baptists have emphasized the importance of individualism in religion. They have insisted that only those who made the choice for themselves be admitted to membership in the church. "A visible believer, or disciple of Christ Jesus," wrote John Clarke, "is the only person that is to be baptized, or dipped with that visible baptism, or dipping of Jesus Christ in water, and also that visible person that is to walk in that visible order of his house."

The entire separation of church and state has been taught from the beginning of Baptist history. Roger Williams wrote: "This tenet of the magistrates' keeping the church from apostatizing by practicing civil force upon the consciences of men, is so far from preserving religion pure that it is a mighty bulwark or barricade to keep out all true religion." Again, "If the elders and churches and ordinances of Christ have such need of the civil sword for their maintenance and protection (I mean in spiritual things), sure the Lord Jesus cannot be excused for not being careful either to express this great ordinance in his will and testament, or else to have furnished the civil state and officers thereof with ability and hearts for this their duty and employment, to which he hath called them."

The charter which John Clarke secured for Rhode Island and Providence Plantations in 1663 doubtless reflects the sentiments of this Baptist leader. It provides "that no person within the said colony, at any time hereafter, shall be anywise molested, punished, disquieted, or called in question for any differences in opinion in matters of religion which do not actually disturb the civil peace of our said colony; but that all and every person and persons may, from time to time, and at all times hereafter, freely and fully have and enjoy his and their own judgments and consciences in matters of religious discernments."

The principle of freedom appears in the charter of Brown University. "Into this liberal and catholic institution shall never be admitted any religious tests. But, on the contrary, all the members thereof shall forever enjoy full, free, absolute, and uninterrupted liberty of conscience; and that the places of professors, tutors, and all other officers, the president alone excepted, shall be free and open for all denominations of Protestants; and that youths of all religious denominations shall and may be admitted to the equal advantages, emoluments, and honors of the college or university; and that the public teaching shall, in general, respect the sciences; and that the sectarian differences shall not make any part of the public and classical instruction."

Baptists have been zealous in promoting the study of the Scriptures. No religious body has a right to claim a monopoly of zeal for searching the Scriptures, but Baptists have been in the front rank of those who have advocated religious instruction for all.

The confidence of Baptists in the judgment of the individual and their willingness to trust men with the Bible in their hands, has led them to oppose the tyranny of religious organizations. They can organize for work. They have their missionary, educational, and benevolent institutions which are supported by systematic efforts, but the man who presumes to think for his brethren or to give orders for their conduct quickly discovers that he is not the only Baptist that his opinions. [Midweek Service, April 5. 1 Cor. 12:12-27.]

S. J.

The Visitor

It is always a pleasure for a Disciple to find himself in Kansas City. In a certain sense it is the chief headquarters of the brotherhood. This does not mean that it has ever demanded particular official recognition, although, to be sure, the office of the Board of Church Extension is located there. But it has the distinction of being the one city in the country where the Disciples are in the lead in almost every activity. It gives a member of the Christian Church a fine feeling of being taken seriously when he looks around upon the business buildings that belong to Disciples, and knows that some of the strongest men in the city are his brethren in the church.

We recently lost a minister from our circle in Chicago who was lured away to one of the important cities of Missouri. When he was asked by the pastor of the Methodist Church nearest him why he was leaving, his response was that it had always been his hope that he might minister before his death to a church of the Disciples that outranked the Methodists in size and influence! Almost any of our Missouri churches might make this claim, and certainly in Kansas City the Disciples are rapidly coming to their own.

In addition to great churches admirably equipped and thronged with enthusiastic congregations, they are busy in many other activities which bear directly upon the progress of the kingdom in their city. The latest effort of this kind is in the interest of a hospital which will be really the first competent work of this character ever undertaken by the Disciples. The munificent offer of Mr. Long to coöperate to a most generous degree in the financing of this institution, and the hearty response that his offer has met on the part of the Disciples of Kansas City, insure an institution that will be in every way adequate to minister to the physical needs of that city as a contribution from the Christian Church. To be sure, there is no public institution that requires ampler resources or a broader foundation of professional skill than a hospital. But the men who have this plan in charge are a guarantee that the most approved equipment will be sought, and the most competent staff of physicians, surgeons, and nurses will be employed. Kansas City will thus lead in a movement which ought to spread throughout the country, and which will do as much to interpret the humanitarian and social interests of our people as anything they could undertake.

* * *

The churches of the Disciples in Kansas City are a joy and an inspiration to one who comes from almost any section of the country. The Linwood Boulevard Church, of which Burris A. Jenkins is pastor, is in possession of a beautiful and commodious house of worship located in one of the most important and rapidly growing parts of the residence district of the South Side, and equipped with a competence and taste that leave little to be desired. The auditorium is one of the most charming and satisfactory in the brotherhood. The congregations are very large, testing the edifice to its capacity.

The Men's Class, of which Dr. W. H. Schutt is the president, recently provided a series of biblical lectures which were attended by audiences that completely filled the auditorium. The class financed the enterprise without assistance, and brought the lectures to the attention of the entire city by an admirable scheme of publicity which included the use of posters, street car announcements and newspaper reports. A men's class like that is a strong right arm to any minister.

The Independence Boulevard Church has recently completed its auxiliary plant, with splendid facilities for Sunday-school and social work, including a complete gymnasium. This great church probably has a more elaborate equipment than any other in the brotherhood, and indeed few churches outside of the cathedral class, could boast of more in way of a plant. Dr. Combs, the pastor, is ably assisted by James Small in the capacity of church visitor and organizer. The executive staff of the church includes nearly a score of workers, all of whom are kept busy with the responsibilities of the great organization. A recent meeting by the Scoville company of evangelists added more than six hundred members to the roll. The influence of Mr. Long in the affairs of this church is profoundly felt by all of its members. He has been more than generous to its interests throughout his entire connection with the church.

It is impossible to speak in detail of the congregations that are advancing so rapidly to influence and success in this great city. The First Church, whose pastor, Dr. Richardson, has been so long and so ably in charge of its interests, faces, as all downtown churches face, the problem of future efficiency. It is splendidly located to do a great and effective work in the business section of the city. It ought to have a new plant and a competent endowment, and the Disciples of Kansas City, both of its own membership and of the city at large, should see that this equipment is provided. Out from its membership have gone some of the most valuable members in the other churches. And the mother church is now in need of a plant that shall enable it to minister to its downtown environment, and an endowment that shall support not only one but several ministers in the aggressive work which Dr. Richardson has illustrated throughout his relationship to that church.

* * *

As an example of the manner in which the Kansas City churches grow, the Wabash Avenue Church may be mentioned. Only a few months ago it called to its leadership L. J. Marshall, then of Independence. The church has just completed and dedicated the first or basement floor of its new building. This is a splendid plant already, and when the auditorium is constructed it will be a structure of noble proportions adequate to the work of this energetic congregation and pastor. It was a joy to see these people in their gatherings during a series of biblical studies which, in spite of the fact that regular admission was charged, were attended by audiences that filled the temporary auditorium. Mr. Marshall and his people will be heard from in every enterprise that promotes the common good in Kansas City. Already he is the prime mover in the securing of the hospital fund, and is recognized as a man of aggressiveness and courage.

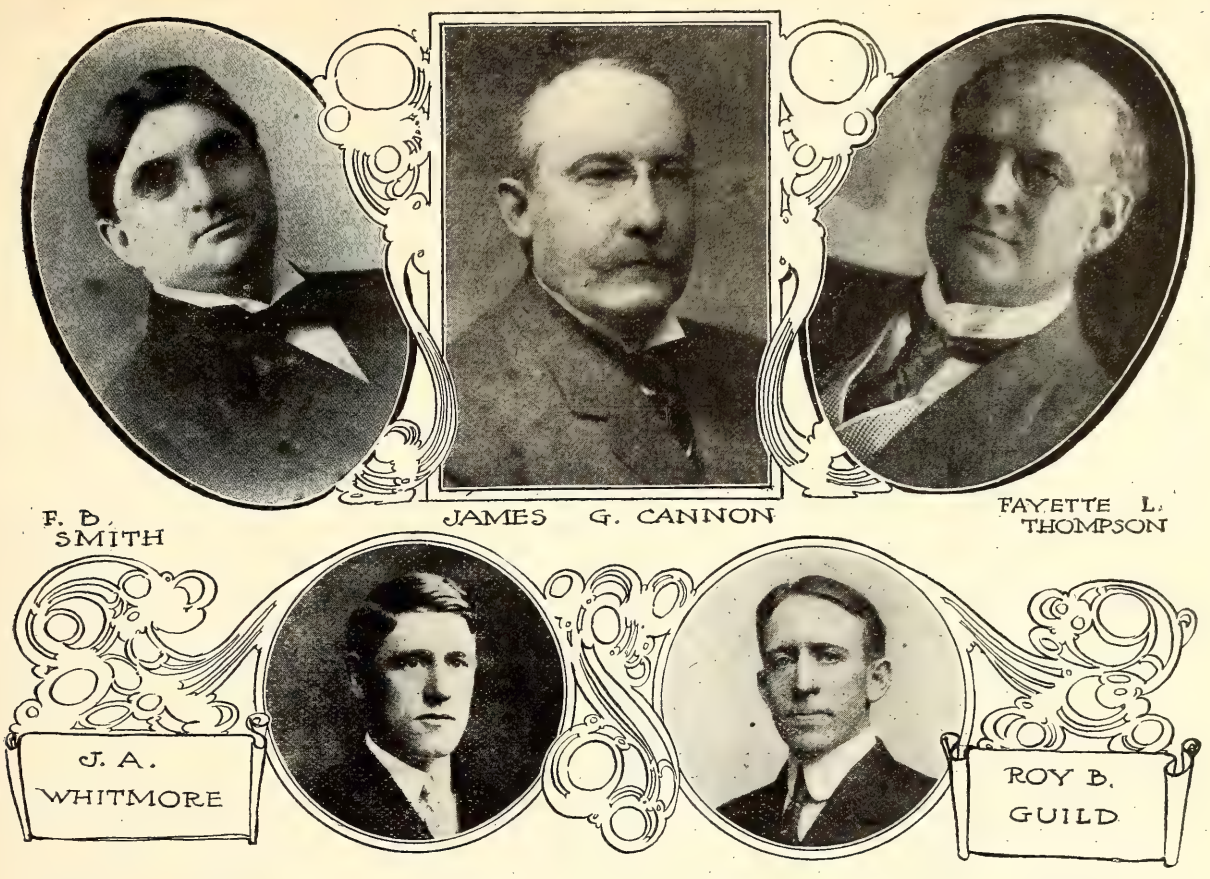
* * *

The ministers' meetings held by the Disciples in Kansas City are always full of interest. They are held in the First Church, and usually enjoy the presence and counsel of such a veteran as Dr. T. P. Haley, who is the venerable and beloved father of all our churches in Kansas City, and whose sweetness of spirit and wisdom in counsel are estimated at their full value by the group of younger ministers.

During the Visitor's stay in Kansas City one of the sectional conventions of the "Men and Religion" movement was held at the First Congregational Church. Delegates were present from all the neighboring states, including Texas and Oklahoma. R. A. Long was the president, and E. E. Elliott secretary. Some of the strong leaders of the movement, including Fred B. Smith of New York, were present to give counsel and direction to the gathering. The business session, the seasons of prayer, the hours devoted to addresses, and the social periods in which meals were served in the church, were delightful to all who had the privilege of participation. And most of all was there the satisfaction felt by the Disciples in the fact that they have adequate and representative voice in these interdenominational gatherings, where the principles of Christian unity and of world-wide evangelism are considered.

* * *

One of the pleasures which a stay in Kansas City affords is the opportunity of seeing in their own offices the men who are making history, locally and throughout the brotherhood. The Disciples are always sure of a welcome in the sumptuous offices of R. A. Long, where the president of the Long Lumber Company shows himself as much interested in the progress of the work elsewhere as in the immense business concerns with which he is identified, and the church interests for which he is so largely responsible. In the same building P. C. Macfarlane, the secretary of the Brotherhood of the Disciples and the editor of "Christian Men" has his offices, and is sure to have some interesting item of news in reference to the progress of the Brotherhood in the churches. G. W. Muckley, the veteran and successful secretary of the Board of Church Extension, has recently taken new offices in the New England Building, where the interests of houseless churches are considered monthly by a board including the best men in Kansas City. Mr. Muckley spends much of his time in visiting the churches, a work which ought soon to be committed to the hands of assistants, so that his own experience and administrative ability may be more wholly utilized in the work of the office. These are only a few of the many men whom it is worth while to meet when a Disciple is passing through Kansas City. And it is certain that still greater things than any yet attempted are to be undertaken in that metropolis of Missouri.



Men Assume Responsibility for Men

Story of the "Men and Religion Forward Movement" Idea

BY P. C. MACFARLANE
Secretary Brotherhood of Disciples of Christ.

During the Laymen's Missionary Convention in Chicago, in May, 1910, there was a meeting of the General Secretaries of the Brotherhoods of the nine or ten leading Protestant Communions of North America. In the course of consideration of the many problems common to Brotherhood workers in the various religious bodies, the question of evangelism of men and by men came up. At this juncture, Rev. Frank Dyer, General Secretary of the Congregational Brotherhood, arose and outlined tentatively a great campaign in behalf of men and boys, to be undertaken by the Brotherhoods jointly, during the year 1911.

The Urgency of the Work.

As Mr. Dyer proceeded, there grew upon his hearers a sense of the urgency and the possibility of such a campaign. It ought to be undertaken. Here in this joint session of Brotherhood secretaries, representing four million Christian men, was the point of contact which had not hitherto existed, and the very attainment of which multiplied the responsibility and freighted the opportunity with a sense of immediacy that was unescapable. Hardly had the idea been taken hold of in round table discussion when it developed that the International Sunday-School Association, through its General Secretary, Marion Lawrance, and the Superintendent of its Adult Department, W. C. Pearce, had for five years been contemplating just such an enterprise. When it was further learned that the Religious Work Department of the International Y. M. C. A. had been brooding similar plans for uncounted years, and was just now preparing to launch them, the feeling came to the conferees with redoubled force that the confluence of so many minds and the convergence of so many powerful organizations upon a certain line of activity at the same particular time, revealed the presence of the Spirit of God moving upon and moulding the thoughts and energies of his servants for some mighty manifestation of his power. Humbly, reverently, it was decided to abandon any thought of an independent campaign of the Brotherhoods alone, and adjournment was taken with the understanding that a joint meeting of the International Y. M. C. A., the International Sunday School Association and the Brotherhood Secretaries, should be held in New York at the Manhattan Hotel on May 18th, following.

At this meeting, James G. Cannon, president of the First National Bank of New York, presided, and at this meeting also Fred B. Smith was revealed to all of us as the genius best fitted to lead the campaign. There were fifty men present, many of whom were far called.

View-points Happily Harmonized.

It was immediately apparent that the three great organized forces would cast in their lot together, albeit the discussion which was inevitable revealed the fact that in the beginning each went in as an organization. There were discussions marked from the "Y. M. C. A." view point. There were "Sunday School" talks and "Brotherhood" opinions. Let me anticipate by saying that in six months this condition has disappeared. All are fused in one purpose; all are seeing from one point of view. The conferees in recent councils have not been Y. M. C. A. men, or Sunday-school men, or Brotherhood men, but Kingdom of God men. It is a beautiful demonstration looking toward Christian Union that the way to get together is to work together.

But there were discussions. A whole day in a conference at Niagara Falls, in September, was spent over the name, and it remained at the end what it had been called by chance in the beginning. Many confessed dissatisfaction with the cognomen, but no one could propose an improvement or modification half as acceptable to his brethren.

Scope and Plan.

The method came next up for discussion—an eight-day campaign in ninety leading cities of North America, during 1911-12, with the campaign city binding itself to repeat the process out of its own religious resources in from ten to thirty surrounding cities, each of these to repeat and re-repeat, in smaller civic groups, until the last hamlet and even the last farm house in the United States should have felt the impact. But strange to say, the method was little discussed. It was one of those strange things about the movement that seemed to burst upon us full-framed, out of the purpose of God.

The next question was the objective. This was concretely stated by Mr. Smith to be the conversion of the three million men and boys necessary to bring up the men to a numerical parity with women in the Protestant churches of America. Discussion took out the figures and tore down the limitations, and left us all beginning to say with one accord that it was a campaign to win men and boys to Jesus Christ in America, an employment of modern machinery of organization to meet modern conditions of social and industrial life, with the dependence not one whit upon the machinery but all upon the unchanging and yet ever living Gospel of Christ. Again and again it was said, "let us make little of the motive power of machinery and much of the motor activity of the gospel."

Defining Evangelism.

And then someone must needs define evangelism. It was stated to be an evangelistic movement, pure and simple. But what is the type of pure evangelism, and when have we seen an evangelism that was simple? Was this to be a mere sweat-hot, fervid cry for souls, after the fashion of so many evangelistic campaigns that come and have their day, that fret their brief hour upon the religious stage, full of sound and fury, but signifying nothing or little to organized, religious forces, beyond a temporary spurt? Was it to be such a campaign, organized on a nation-wide basis? Would it be a Gipsy Smith campaign, or a Scoville, or Moody campaign, with mixed audiences subtracted, with new masculine forces added and multiplied by a scheme of operations as wide as a continent? We all asked these questions and we all answered them with an affirmative qualified by a negative, "Yes, and No." And defining our answer we said, "This evangelism shall be fervent and emotional, but it shall also be ethical. It shall deal with the life over there, but it will also have a message for the life over here. It shall exalt Jesus Christ, it shall honor God, it shall move men. In other words, we plan for no sheafless harvest. We plan for an evangelism that will get results, that may be tested by the sole standard of efficiency with which this practical age measures all things. This preaching of the gospel must be atteneded by signs and wonders, else we will have none of it."

What Sort of Evangelists?

What sort of evangelists, then, will we have? Great pastors, great preachers, or great professional soul winners? This question is still up. Mr. Fred B. Smith and a committee have it now under consideration. This movement has already elicited the support and interest of many prominent churchmen who have either eschewed professional evangelists entirely, or from recent experiences are inclined to do so for the future. These men have said to Mr. Smith, "No; do not use professional evangelists. Give us rather great preachers of righteousness, men who can interpret Jesus Christ and his ethics anew to these new conditions that come to us. Let us invade the souls of our men with a new light; let us search their hearts with a new probe, let us whet their consciences with a two-edged sword that will divide joint and marrow of the complex ethical problems of our day."

While this subject is under discussion, I have presumed to say No. Preachers of righteousness, Yes; but professional evangelists, yes, also. We want to win souls. We wish to get results. By the number of men and boys won into churches and enlisted for Christian service, this movement will at the first and in the main be judged. Therefore, say I, the professional evangelist. But, let us strip his professionalism of its evils. Let us complement his exhortation with that preaching of righteousness spoken of above. The team work idea makes this possible.

Graham Taylor Leading on Social Side.

At the Buffalo conference of the Men and Religion Forward Movement, Graham Taylor, of Chicago, was charged with the duty of outlining what he regarded as the social emphasis in evangelism, and the manner in which it should be stressed, while to Dr. Fayette L. Thompson, General Secretary of the Methodist Brotherhood, was assigned the duty of defining the evangelism of the Men and Religion Forward Movement.

The scope and purpose of the work is still more clearly perceived by glancing at the make-up of the teams, for it must be comprehended that no one team could visit all the cities proposed in the time allowed. There are to be four of these teams, and they are to move in unison through territorial groups of cities, always close enough together that each may get the inspiration of the presence of the other in the same part of the country and that advantages may be taken of municipal rivalries, with a view to making the largest possible impress upon the surrounding country through the public press. There are other apparent advantages that need not be discussed.

The Composition of the Teams.

The composition of each team, as stated at present, and subject, of course, to some modification, is as follows:

(a) One able and acceptable man in evangelistic work for men.

(b) One outstanding leader in Bible study work.

(c) One exponent of organized religious work for boys.

(d) One well-known leader with the sanest message concerning Christian service.

(e) One expert in shop and factory work

(f) One director of music.

It is apparent to the most careless thinker that the plan of the Men and Religion Forward Movement involves immeasureable possibilities and devolves imponderable responsibilities. These latter impinge upon the broad shoulders of Fred B. Smith, the chosen leader of the campaign.

For twenty-three years Smith has been engaged in Y. M. C. A. work. For ten of them he has been in the employ of the International Committee. His voice has been heard in fourteen foreign countries. His oratory is unstudied, straightforward, simple, sincere, like himself. In one of his well-known Sunday afternoon meetings for men only, he will hold four thousand men spellbound, and in the solemn moment of invitation, hundreds of them will come to confess Jesus Christ. He is no ranter. His methods are quiet. In the supreme moment when souls are deciding, he waits upon God. He has a culture of the brain as well as of the heart.

Fred B. Smith Growing With the Idea.

If there is a grain of selfishness, or an undisciplined fibre, in the soul of this man, it has not cropped out, either at the council board or in the personal intercourse of a year, which is indeed short in which to learn a splendid man. It is already apparent that he has grown tremendously with the growth of the Men and Religion idea. I see every reason to believe that he as nearly equal as any man can be to his task. His associates have been chosen wisely. They are godly and consecrated men. They will give their lives as freely as he, and Smith has said a time or two that the doing of this thing would certainly claim at least one life. It may be his. Let us hope not.

Will Fred B. Smith be equal to the task imposed upon him? I do not know. I hope so. I pray so. Let us pray together for him, and for those associated with him, and for those who everywhere speak in behalf of this Movement, that they may do their work as well as those seventy of that Men and Religion Forward Movement of long ago, who, coming back with tales of victory on their lips, saw their Saviour break into exclamations of rejoicing.

Kansas City.

Religious Papers in the Home

T. Chalmers Potter, D. D., in Zion's Herald.

A pastor has no aid, in these days of extended knowledge, the equal of a good family religious paper. It is the assistant pastor writ large. It preaches to a family every day, while he does it twice a week. His words, however well received on Sunday, leave an effect dependent on the good or ill use of memory. Like the elder son's relation to the household of the prodigal, the newspaper is ever with the family, and is referred to every day. Many church officers, sons of households where the weekly religious newspaper was an old and cherished feature, are providing nothing to take its place in their own families. Their children show the loss. Whether church members or not, they are often wofully ignorant of the Bible; scarcely knowing the distinctive objects of their own denomination as among others; know little of mission fields allotted in providence to their church, nor of the cries therefrom for help, which they can usually hear about alone through their religious newspaper; are unacquainted with what is transpiring in the religious as distinct from the secular world; are in ignorance of movements philanthropic, evangelistic or otherwise, that are profoundly stirring the hearts of zealous Christians today.

The array of facts, appeals and discussions that move others are lost for them, since they have no religious paper to lay these things fully before them every week. All that influence, worked so thoroughly into some lives, as yeast goes through every particle of a batch of dough, is missing in them. We cannot interest and lay hold of their sympathies in religious service as we can among those who have been familiar with the lights and shadows of religious activities from their youth. This information is not obtained from religious and devotional books. There is not the continuity of effect to them, that comes with the portable, convenient, informal, fresh and persistent weekly.

The President's Peace Proposal

The declaration of Sir Edward Grey, British Secretary of Foreign affairs, in favor of President Taft's arbitration proposition, has met with the hearty indorsement of public opinion in the United Kingdom. Even Balfour, the irreconcilable leader of the opposition, fell in with it. And the National Council of Free Churches promptly started a movement to array the churches on the side of the proposition. Circulars were sent to all pastors of churches suggesting that they preach on the subject. The leaders of the movement also are communicating with the churches in America with the view of arranging a peace day on which all Christian churches in America and Great Britain can indorse the peace proposals. In a speech before the International Arbitration League, Sir Edward explained that President Taft's proposal was only for an Anglo-American treaty providing for the settlement by arbitration of any question that might arise between the two governments. He said that the treaty was not to be a defensive alliance. "To introduce any such condition or stipulation," added the secretary, "into an arbitration treaty would impair the chances of it here or elsewhere. It might even lead other countries to suppose that the arbitration treaty between the two powers was directed against one or more of the other powers. That would completely spoil its possible effect in mitigating the general expenditure on armaments."

"The effect of an arbitration treaty, as proposed by President Taft," he continued, "on the world at large as an example would be bound to have beneficent consequences. To set a good example is to hope that others will follow it, and if others of the great powers did follow, there would, eventually, be something like a league of peace. These things must, however, make their way by their own weight. They cannot be forced. There must be a beginning before there can be any progress, and after a beginning the rate of further progress must depend on circumstances and upon that ebbing and flowing in men's feelings and ideas which escapes analysis and which makes possible at one time things that are not possible at another."

The movement seems to promise tangible results.

Divided Christendom Not Unmixed Evil

Lessons on Unity Learned Through Divisions

EDITORS' NOTE—At the recent conference between the Disciples' Commission of the Council on Christian Unity and representatives of the Episcopalian Christian Unity Foundation, held in New York City, a session was spent in discussing the question, "What lessons bearing on ultimate unity has the church learned in her long period of division?" This seemed a most suggestive and instructive inquiry. It quietly implied that ultimate union is an assured goal and that the period of division has not been an unmixed evil. In the belief that the discussion of this question would prove helpful, The Christian Century has requested a number of the leaders in our church life to present their views. The response has been so generous that a portion of the replies will have to be carried over to next week.

Fidelity to Truth Not Agreement in Opinion

1. She has learned how greatly her message to the world is discounted by these divisions. She is coming to the conclusion that her Lord knew the nature of man when He prayed for the oneness of His followers, "That the world may believe that Thou hast sent Me."

2. She has learned how meager is her own spiritual life, and how narrow the confines of her own fellowship, because of the sectarian divisions that have alienated brethren who believe in and love the same Lord. With the broadening life of the ongoing centuries, the church has felt within her the swelling tide of a richer and deeper affection between her members, such as will tolerate no longer the factious spirit of former times.

3. She has learned that fidelity to the truth does not require that all shall understand it alike, but rather that all shall seek it in like spirit, love it with like enthusiasm, and follow it with like loyalty; and that opinion is to be forever free.

4. She has learned that, great as is the faith of the gospel, noble as is the hope of the saints, greatest of all is the love that binds together the whole Body of Christ. And in the practice of this love she will find the surest and shortest path to the unity for which she is praying.

W. F. RICHARDSON.

First Church, Kansas City.

Divisions Have Biological Significance

Brierley remarks somewhere that sects are not chance affairs. They did not merely happen. They were as inevitable as Christianity itself. They are part of the biology of the human race. They had to be. They belong to the immaturity of Christianity, and are as normal as baby teeth and tadpoles' tails. They are with us today to remind us that the period of immaturity is not wholly passed. They are biological—not as mumps and measles and whooping-cough may be said to be biological, but as crying and self-assertion in babies are biological, and as play and fighting are biological with boys. They are not diseases but functional activities, having as their purpose the development of a catholic church and a catholic Christianity. Without the discipline and the enlargement that has come through these years of exclusiveness and conflict and controversy, the Christianity that is to be must have been greatly impoverished. And it is what is to be that God is always thinking about. Mr. Campbell is said to have regretted the separation of the Baptists and Disciples. I am inclined to think that, up to the present, at least, and perhaps for some time to come—for the Baptists do not seem open-minded on questions affecting inter-church fellowship—it has been better as it is. We will certainly make a much more significant contribution to the Christianity of the future than we would have done if our fathers had remained Baptists. And when one thinks of the wealth of truth and experiences that will be the heritage of the church of the future—a wealth that could never have been gathered except in a period of separation—one is tempted to say that here also it has been well.

I have used the past tense till now—sectism is useful no longer. Dr. Newton H. Marshall, in a notable sermon recently on the Holy Catholic Church, declared that the era of separation has served its purpose and reached its limits. Today God is calling the churches not to separation but to federation. Christianity is passing into the manhood stage, and must set itself to the great tasks of the kingdom. The forces that oppose us leave no option in this matter: it is either unite or perish. It is the call that came to the thirteen colonies at the close of the Revolutionary war. Be men, be no more children, is the exhortation that meets the present need.

EARLE MARION TODD.

Fort Wayne, Ind.

The Indestructibility of the Church

The close of the long, trying era of debate in Protestantism seems to be approaching rapidly. It has been an age of many abuses and heart burnings but we can now see that it has not been entirely bad. Without these debates religion could not have lived. Can religion live and be kept pure and useful today without debate? This is not saying that our present divisions should continue. They are against God, and the Christian conscience and the love of the church of God on earth have decreed that they must go. And we see them fading.,

We trust that we have learned many valuable lessons.

Is not one of them the indestructibility of the church of God in the world? It cannot be broken down by assault from without, it cannot be entirely wrecked by internal strife and it will always save itself somehow from the final calamities of faithless members and moribund mortality.

We have also got some prophetic glimpses of the era of unity upon which we seem to be entering. It will be a time of the utmost freedom of speech—the only limitations being common sense, honesty, knowledge and worth. A compact of silence cannot be made. No finger of priest, editor, hero or popular leader may smother the word on the lips of another.

On the other hand it must be seen that personal liberty is limited by the safety and peace of others, and every Christian will listen to the law of love to which hitherto we have too little harkened. This will make that type of individualism which is so unreasoning, so unspiritual, and so annoying, impossible.

The past also seems to teach that unity can neither be won nor kept by outward constraint—the authority of a great organization. Organization is a machine and the soul cannot be controlled mechanically. That is only saying that mere organization is too shallow for the power of unity. In any unity that may come the church idea must be less prominent than the idea of the kingdom.

The united church must be free from intellectual tyrannies. Not that we will ever become careless of beliefs or of the content of the faith. Such a state of things would be foolish and fatal. Religion agrees with science that nothing should be admitted as a fact without the most conclusive tests. Every new idea, phrase, doctrine, and thought will be welcomed but it will be challenged and made to establish its right to a place. The intellect of the united church will be the keenest Christendom has ever seen. We shall be allowed to debate. But we will not feel it a necessity that every question should be closed, and when there are differences we will not stigmatize each other, and we will school ourselves so well in the love of Christ that we shall know that love is better than knowledge, or hope or even faith.

Which, you see, is a way of saying that Protestantism has put too little stress on the heart life. The effectual power of unity is the heart. Hence the united church will make everything of Christ. It will have no creed but Christ, no book but the Bible, no aim but to serve. That is, these alone will have authority, though we will believe in all good men, create thousands of formative and inspiring books, and indulge ourselves in the ecstacy of life that only comes in its purest forms through the religion of Jesus.

To the united church also Christ's religion will be the final one. No other will be wanted, no other expected, and no other needed.

The expression of unity in this church—this glorious church of the future—will be in good works. It will scarcely be asked whether the church is historic but it will be demanded that it be vital. The united church will not give up the study of the metaphysics of theology nor the philosophy of doctrines but it will lay less stress upon these than upon applied Christianity.

B. A. ABBOTT.

Union Ave. Church, St. Louis, Mo.

Division Not Unmitigated

The question is a most hopeful sign of the times. It implies (1) that division has not been an unmitigated evil. The first necessity in getting together is to give appropriate honor to the past. The type of mind in the church through these four centuries of Protestantism could scarcely have come to its own without the rugged theologies which contended in church as their defenders were contending in state. The forensic spirit was measuring the walls of Mt. Zion. While one shouted the dimension of height another retorted by dimension of breadth. Both of these were jostled upon the wall by him who had findings on the dimension of length. And with the dawn of a kindlier day in state and religion we discover our need of all the findings. The long bitter contention has corrected most of the errors and we have the largest residuum of truth. Our peculiar task is to relate these aspects of truth in their original beauty.

(2) The lessons that have been learned "bearing on ultimate unity" are both negative and positive. We have learned many lessons in sorrow. We have learned that a divided church cannot save the world. We are ashamed of the slow conquest of twenty centuries. We have seen the sad waste of disunion. It has been financial folly. There is the waste of overlapping and duplication. But saddest of all is the waste of faith occasioned by our disagreements.

It is a pleasure to recount the lessons we have learned that we may bring into a united church. We have learned to respect Christian experience. We are compelled to admit that we have been surprised to find a contrary theology yielding the peaceable fruits of righteousness to our religious neighbors. One religious communion is humbled to discover another people doctrinally false but passionately true to missions. We have learned to respect Christian character. We have looked in upon our religious friends and have found something essential to our richest life. We shall never be satisfied without it. We cannot turn back. It would be death to do so. The spirit of Christ that dwells in us all leaps to greet our Christian friends as "deep calleth unto deep."

FINIS IDLEMAN.

Central Church, Des Moines.

Intellectual Agreement Impossible

At least one great fact should, at last, be perfectly apparent, viz: that intellectual agreement is impossible. We shall never come together by accepting the same creed, but we will be able to see the need of the same deed. We will come together when we work together and not before. The physicians are split up into schools, but they work together in city sanitation. The attorneys are divided in opinions, but they work side by side for clean politics. The merchants have various theories of business but they combine to induce factories to locate in their community. College professors are notoriously different but they work together for the Carnegie Foundation. Preachers and theologians keep the church of God divided by their everlasting disputes. There will always be conservatives and radicals, narrow men and broad men, microscopic minds and telescopic minds, literalists and evaporatists. Some men will get no further than baptism, while others will thrill with world-evangelization.

Jonathan Brierley calls attention to the fact that the great ages of creedal formations have been the barren ages. The truly great ages have been those in which the church has engaged in some noble enterprise. The thing which gave value to the German Reformation was its ethical movement—the cleansing of the Augean stables.

The only possible justification of denominationalism in history will be that thus various needful doctrines were emphasized and kept before the world; but history will also denounce the bigotry, the intellectual conceit, the mental narrowness which maintained these sinful divisions. To a broad mind those divisions would be laughable were they not so serious in their effects. When will we learn toleration? When will we permit liberty of opinion among good men? When will we stop cramming our program down the neck of our unwilling neighbor?

Alas for the Hellenic influence which diverted Christianity from deeds to creeds! Thank God for this social age when the emphasis is again being put upon action and conduct! Thus is the church being saved. We do agree upon social righteousness. We do work together for missions. We do toil side by side for civic betterment. We are getting back to the Christ of the Gospels in loving service. This is the way out. This is the ultimate solution—not doctrinal uniformity but the fellowship of service. We are approaching that happy time when freedom of opinion will be allowed and welcomed among good men, and when noble men will no longer be burned for an idea, or damned into isolation because of an independent notion.

Dawson's dream will come true and we shall have, "The union of all who love in the service of all who suffer."

JOHN RAY EWERS.

East End Church, Pittsburg.

Deeper Mutual Respect, More Cordial Love

Out of the long period of division, the divided church is beginning to learn the common evils of a divided house and that division is an assault upon the spirit and genius of Christianity. While all communions have many among them who sincerely desire the union of believers, the bodies most sensitive to this appeal at this time are the Disciples of Christ, the Episcopalians, the Presbyterians and the Congregationalists.

The first two communions—although on some points the furthest apart of the four—have nevertheless been for a larger period as distinct communions more deeply interested in Christian Union than any others and are satisfied with nothing less than organic union. It may be charged that the policy of these two is to swallow up all others into themselves, but I do not believe that that is the dominating policy of either.

Each necessarily believes that it possesses so much truth and each is loyal to its own convictions, but each also believes that the union of believers is essential to the witnessing of Jesus to the whole world, and no individual nor communion can long hold to this conviction without working changes in personal attitude to others who are desirous of the same end.

The various communions are learning that others are being moved by the same conscientious convictions and are as sincere in their devotions as themselves and with that knowledge necessarily comes a deeper respect and a more cordial love without which there can be no permanent advance in anything with which Christ has to do.

The church is learning that comity is better than rivalry and that the pushing of Jesus Christ to the front is better than so much pushing of denominational tenets, of which the great lost world knows little and cares less. It is seeing that the union of believers against sin is wiser than one body fighting on its own plans without any knowledge of the other's program. The unwisdom of division is gradually becoming a painful realization to a great host of the divided church and not until the realization is painful enough to cause us to forget denominational pride and bigotry will the church be able to see only Jesus and the lost world. Then believers will not be ashamed to be brothers in fact.

PETER AINSLIE.

Christian Temple, Baltimore.

Uniformity No Part of Unity

In the long period of disunion the church has learned some very effective lessons bearing on ultimate unity. Among them are the following:

First, that uniformity will be no part of ultimate unity. The insistence upon uniformity in the past has been a fruitful source of division. Insistence on uniformity in thought or creedal statement or form of public worship or church polity has resulted in the formation of new sects which in turn have insisted upon conformity to their standards. The church now recognizes the failure of uniformity; every attempt to have it so has resulted in increasing the number of sects. Uniformity did not exist even in the New Testament church. We do not mean by this, that ultimate unity will be a "loose lavender liberalism" without any substantial basis. Bishop Anderson said a wise word when he said, "We do not desire a unity upon minimums but upon maximums." The experiences of the long period of division have rather taught us to place the high valuation upon the great essential elements of Christian life. While division has been accompanied by confusion, it has nevertheless, in the long run, helped to clear the atmosphere and enabled us to see the things that are really fundamental. Out of this history we can now see what things divide and what things unite the thought of Christian people. This is a lesson which perhaps could only be learned from experience.

Second, that ultimate unity must be for the sake of service. The apologist for denominationalism used to argue that it would best minister to service like the different parts of any army. Experience, however, has proved the contrary. Division has proved a serious handicap to effective Christian service. The need of more rapid and aggressive service has awakened us to the urgency of union. Especially is this true on the mission fields. Jesus prayed for union, not simply for the sake of union, but for the sake of the world's salvation. This great purpose to be accomplished will define for us the nature of ultimate unity, which must be practical rather than academic. It will grow out of love and common service. The church today realizes the bigness of its task more than ever before. A growing interest in the mighty work to be done and a diminishing interest in theological statements indicate the certainty of this unity. Loyalty to Christ and liberty in Him will be essential features. AUSTIN HUNTER.

Jackson Blvd. Church, Chicago.

Real Unity is Found in Practical Co-operation

1. It is becoming clear that union cannot be effected upon doctrine. It is rather the desire for closer fellowship, and greater efficiency on the part of the churches which has gradually modified doctrines. It is this desire, now rapidly developing, which is formulating plans and giving meaning to the idea of union. To those who urgently seek union, the New Testament clearly authorizes it.

2. The only real union among the Disciples of Christ is that which exists among those churches dominated by a great practical purpose such as that of missionary enterprise. Those churches in which missionary zeal is not strong enough to fuse them into association with others are often lacking in deep fellowship in their local congregations. It is useless to blind our eyes to our family scandal of the division of anti-missionary from missionary Disciples. The former have no vital, outreaching bonds of union.

3. The unifying tendencies of modern life emanate from the cities rather than from country and village communities. The denominations which are most successful in the great cities are, therefore, most likely to lead in the achievement of Christian union, when they once become possessed of the desire for it.

4. The great protestant denominations are identified with different types and classes of people more than is generally recognized. Denominations differ in ritualism, emotionalism, sacramentarianism, and intellectualism. Each attracts its own kind of people. Perhaps this will always be so. In that case, union will have to mean something else than oneness of polity, or liturgy, or creed. It will have to mean tolerance and specialization in these things together with an inclusive spirit of brotherliness and practical co-operation in great humanitarian causes.

Hyde Park, Chicago. E. S. AMES.

(Symposium to be continued next week.)

Parting With His People

An Ideal Farewell Sermon

BY J. H. JOWETT.

EDITORS' NOTE—A minister is tested by his farewell sermon more than by his "trial" sermon. If there is a degree of compulsion about his departure he is sorely tempted to "take a parting shot" at those who were unfavorable to his continuance. If his pastorate has been signally successful he is prompted to pass in review the achievements of the years, and the obtrusive Ego is kept back only by much grace. Dr. Jowett's church was filled two hours before time for service on the occasion of his farewell to Birmingham. We are indebted to the British Weekly for this report of his sermon. In his message that morning he hid himself, with unfeigned diffidence, behind his Lord. Every pastor will here find instruction in the fine Christian art of saying good-bye to his flock.

My Friends,—Today I close my ministry as pastor of this church. It is to me a very solemn and a very awe-inspiring day. When one comes to the end of a thing, the light of judgment becomes very vivid and very illuminating, and many hidden and forgotten things rise out of obscurity. In these latter days I have been moving through many regrets, and, I freely confess to you, through many fears. But in all the conflicting and perplexing moods of the last three months, and especially of the last three weeks, I have been trying to wear the garment of praise. Memory is very busy just now, and sometimes she lays very troublesome loads upon my mind. But she also brings treasures more precious than rubies, and memory is often accompanied by sunny hopes, bringing radiant visions and dreams. I look back today on purposes only very partially accomplished, and I look back upon endeavors that very early lost their power of wing.

A Littered Way.

The way is littered with failures, both in life and service, but here and there there are cheering achievements, bright with the grace of God. I came to Carr's Lane with very much fear and trembling, but I brought a gospel that I have proved. How vividly I remember the Sunday morning when my ministry began, and I came down to conduct the first service. Every nerve in my body was stretched and strained. My soul was the hunting-place of countless timidities and countless fears, but I had no doubt about my gospel. I had no doubt about the gospel I came to preach; and now the ministry thus begun is closing, and I am face to face with another great change and with the old trembling. I am timid enough about myself; I have no timidity about my gospel. I very humbly and I very gladly believe that with the passage of these sixteen years the gospel I preach has gained in height and depth and length and breadth, and that I have been privileged by the help of your fellowship, of your affection, of your constant forbearance and your many prayers, to enter more intimately into the love of God that passeth knowledge. That love lays hold upon me today with a stronger grip than ever, and with that gospel I finish my work at Carr's Lane, and with that same gospel I shall begin my work in New York. Now, that is all I want to say about myself. Happily, there will be another opportunity not appointed for the solemn exercises of praise and worship, when it will be fitting that I should speak to my own people a little more freely about the story of the last fifteen years, and the fellowship between the pastor and the people of this church. But, my brethren, I am not disposed to waste or even to misuse the present hour in comparative trivialities concerning my own work, whether it be its failures, its little achievements, or its continued purposes and desires.

The Only Worthy Way.

The only worthy way in which to use this service is so to conduct it that we shall see no man save Jesus, and that we shall renew our holy covenant as the blood-bought disciples of the Lord. I think I must have read the New Testament through in trying to find the words that I thought would be most suitable for this service, and at length this laid hold of me, which I hope may lay hold of you: "I press on if so be that I may apprehend that for which I also was apprehended of Christ Jesus." "I press on," says Paul in the Epistle to the Philippians, "I press on if so be that I may apprehend that for which I also was apprehended of Christ Jesus."

The Supreme Glory of Life.

And what have we there for a service like this? Well, first of all, we have a statement, clear and vivid, of the supreme and distinctive glory of human life. And what is that supreme glory of human life? Here is the phrase in which the Apostle describes it. "I was apprehended of Christ Jesus." The Apostle Paul, your brother, my brother, our kinsman in the flesh, our companion in sin, in sorrow, and in common need, felt himself and knew himself to have been gripped by Jesus Christ his Lord. When I hear my great apostolic brother, the Apostle Paul, saying that he felt himself apprehended by Christ Jesus, and apprehended in that almost violent way, can I in any way become aware and intimate with the nature of the experience? What did he mean by it? What had laid hold of him? Has it laid hold of me? Has the same strange mystic hand come out of the Unseen and apprehended you? Or are we strangers to the Apostle, and cannot share his experience? What does he mean by the grip? And what was the hand by which he had been arrested?

Personally Concerned.

Well, I think, first of all, and I scarcely know how to put this first point, but, first of all, Paul knew himself to have been laid fast hold of in Christ's great redemptive purpose for the race. Listen to this: The Apostle Paul believed himself to have been personally concerned in the eternal councils that took place in the awful secrecies before the worlds were made. Do you gasp at that? Well, you know, I am coming to the conclusion that we are only touching the real marrow of things when we do gasp. The wonder of the appeal to me in my growing prime is overwhelming. Listen to it again. Paul pondered on the purposes that were brooding "before the worlds in order stood or earth received her frame," and he believed that he was in the grip of those purposes, that the hand out of the eternities reached forth and apprehended him. He believed, let me state it very quietly, he believed that the divine love-hands were moving towards him before yet he was born. And I can by will of mine, I can by bequests of mine, stretch out my hand and grip generations yet unborn. And the Apostle believed that the love-purpose of the eternal God in Christ stretched through the ages and laid its apprehending hands on every child of the race. Paul heard, and received, and believed that wonderful word of the Lord, "I have loved thee with an everlasting love." He believed that he was gripped in the love-purpose of God even before he was born. "I was apprehended of Christ Jesus."

Not a Chance Atom.

He never regarded himself as a chance atom, whirled about in a chance world, a mere grain among an infinitude of grains, blown hither and thither like desert dust. He believed himself at birth to have been gripped by the Eternal, and discriminated and ordained. What do you think about that? You may say what you please about that. You may stagger before it, but there is one thing you are bound to admit—that a conviction of that character is of vital and immeasurable import in a man's life.

It is what I venture to call the supreme and distinctive glory of human life, universally, for that has been my gospel here in Carrs Lane, as I call you to witness, from the first day until now; that I have dared to universalize, glorified in universalizing, everything that was experienced by the Apostle Paul; that nothing that was offered to him as the love-gift of the Eternal God is denied to me; that what he could claim as his inheritance, we can claim; that the love-grip he felt, we may feel; and I say that that conviction, that a man is apprehended by the Lord Jesus, is the supreme and distinctive glory of our souls. It is true of everybody here—I wish I knew how to say it so that you would feel it—it is true of everybody here; everybody here is included in the sacred love-purpose which breathed in the secret and eternal councils of the Lord. Everybody in this church has been loved with an everlasting love, and everybody here was marked at birth, marked out at birth, separated. Do you believe it? Are these words, or are they sublime realities of God's Word?

The Love-Hand.

You may have persisted in your determined ways, but the love-hand followed, and that is on you still, and it is on you today, and as I speak it grips you. "Saul, Saul why, why, why?" You heard it when you were twenty, when you were thirty, when you were forty, when you were fifty, and all this gospel of the apprehending love-grip is not only true of everybody here, but of everybody not here. It is equally true of those existing in weary, reeking kennels, and weary souls dwelling in stately castles confronting wide domains. It reaches you and everybody. I glory in the width of the gospel I preach. I shall glory in proclaiming it in New York, as I have gloried in proclaiming it here: that everybody is in the love-grip of the eternal God.

Nothing Greater to Say.

Could there be anything bigger than that to say to anybody? Does anybody know a bigger thing for me to say when I get across the waste of water? Can I go to anybody and tell them a bigger thing than that the Infinite God knows them, and that he loves them with an everlasting love? My brethren, our daily struggles are often hard and difficult, and the road is frequently flinty, and our feet are often broken and bleeding, but the years are going and they are going very fast for many of us, and they wear and tear us and "moth and rust doth corrupt, and thieves break through and steal," and when the leaves begin to fall, how then? What say you about this for a gospel in the day of decline? "Apprehended by Christ Jesus?"

(Continued on page 24.)

The Book World

Helpful Works on Music

PRACTICAL CHURCH MUSIC, by Edmund S. Lorenz. Nearly all writers who have discussed church music have done so from a historical, philosophical or artistic point of view. In his work, Prof. Lorenz treats the subject from the standpoint of a Christian worker seeking definite results in winning the lost and the spiritual edification of the saved. The final end of music in the church is not reached when it is used to connect portions of the service or to add to it beauty or dignity or even as a medium of the expression of prayer or praise. These might be called the valuable by-products but its ultimate purpose has been fulfilled only when it has prepared the listener for the emotion to be aroused by the service or address. He denies the right of the cultivated taste to exclusive consideration and deals with the subject in a "matter-of-fact, practical, concrete way, with the actual, immediate results among average people as the final criterion in every phase of the work." The aim of the writer is to suggest detailed and definite methods and specific plans that shall illustrate and illumine the general principles which lie at the base of successful church music. The minister is urged to study music that he may use more effectively this most powerful aid in his work and a fling is taken at the theological schools for ignoring so important a subject and not having in the curriculum a course on practical church music. The choir director, organist, and the choir in all its varied activities receive attention. Hymnology, music in revivals and Sunday-schools come in for due consideration and music as it is used in every department of church life is sought to be made more effective by a study of the work. Prof. Lorenz speaks with the authority of one who has spent thirty years in practically every relation to the music of the church service. (New York : Fleming H. Revell Company. Pp. 423. $1.50 net.)

THE PSYCHOLOGY OF SINGING. by David C. Taylor. According to Mr. Taylor, voice culture has not been reduced to an exact science and vocal teachers are not in possession of an infallible method of training voices. The reason for the failure to produce a satisfactory science of voice production is due to the exclusive attention which has been directed to a study of the mechanical features. Mr. Taylor believes that the anatomy and physiology of the vocal organs have been exhaustively studied and that so far as the muscular operations involved in tone-making are concerned, and the laws of acoustics bearing on the vocal action, no new discovery can be expected. The knowledge gained from these sources is important but not sufficient and only with the knowledge obtained by the observation of all the facts and phenomena derived from every possible source of information can a science be established upon which a rational method of training the voice may be planned. An insight into the operations of the voice may be obtained by attentive listening to voices and investigations along this line have been incomplete. Also, tone production is subject to the mental laws of control and guidance and psychology must contribute its share to the general fund of information. A consideration of the facts obtained from all these sources leads the author to the belief that on practical, as well as on scientific grounds, imitation is the only rational basis of a method of voice training and he attributes the wonderful results secured by the old Italian masters to this method of teaching. A reading of the book impresses one with the soundness of the writer's views and the vocal teacher whose attention has been devoted too exclusively to the "wind and muscle" idea of tone production will find many and strong reasons for directing his attention to other factors which cannot be ignored. (New York: The Macmillan Company. Pp. 373. $1.50 net.)

MY VOICE AND I, by Clara Kathleen Rogers. A new book by the author of "The Philosophy of Singing" published over a decade ago and which has been widely read. Clara Kathleen Rogers, the daughter of musical parents; pupil of well-known teachers; successful as a singer in opera and concert; for the past quarter of a century a vocal teacher, and a thinker, student and investigator of all that pertains to the vocal art, has added to the list of vocal literature a new book which will interest the thoughtful teacher and student of singing. As a result of her close study and experience, Mrs. Rogers reaches the conclusion that the training of voices today is usually pursued on wrong lines. The whole theory of voice training is misunderstood, she says, owing to the confusion of cause and effect. Artistic singing is not actually the result of training the vocal organs to perform correctly a certain set of motions; but it is mainly the result of the artistic feeling, intelligence and temperament—either innate or cultivated—of the singer. The author believes that the conventional method of directing the singer's attention so entirely to the mechanical and physiological side accounts for much of the vocal wreckage and the very small group of great artists which exist and that teaching along present day lines will produce but little above mediocrity. Not all will agree with all of the writer's views and conclusions, but coming from one so well qualified to throw light on the principles which underlie the true art of singing, they will command respect. The book is commended to every vocal student, artist and teacher. (Chicago: A. C. McClurg & Co. Pp. 265. $1.50 net.)

RESONANCE IN SINGING AND SPEAKING, by Thomas Fillebrown, M. D., D. M. D. For many years prior to his death, Dr. Fillebrown was a member of the faculty of Harvard Medical School and a good singer himself. He was led to a scientific investigation of the subject of resonance as a result of many operations for cleft palate and the need of practical training for those who had been unable to produce satisfactory speaking and singing tones and this book is the result of his research and experience. Dr. Fillebrown declares that resonance determines the quality and carrying power of every tone, and is therefore, the most important element in the study and training of the voice. However, all the vital points in vocal culture are noted and discussed in an able manner. A large part of the book is devoted to exercises for producing and developing the voice and plain, explicit directions given for their use. Singers, teachers and public speakers will find the work interesting and valuable. (Boston: Oliver Ditson Company. Pp. 93. $1.25.)

THE BASIS OF MUSICAL PLEASURE, by Albert Gehring. The author believes there is a single and supreme fountain of musical pleasure and his original intention was to elucidate its nature but the present state of knowledge makes its determination impossible. He enumerates and analyzes the more prominent factors which contribute to a solution of the problem and traces each to discover some common point of union; some source from which all spring and finds that all lead to the unknown, to the region which finite mind has been unable to penetrate. Until the mysteries of the region beyond the present limits of human understanding are revealed the formation of a complete theory of the subject is impossible. The book is the work of a scholar and psychological analyst, and is interesting not only to the thinking musician but to any person whose culture, thought and reading are not confined within narrow limitations. (New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons. Pp. 196. $1.50 net.)

PIANO TEACHING—ITS PRINCIPLES AND PROBLEMS, by Clarence G. Hamilton, Associate Professor of Music at Wellesley College. A little book which supplies a need and which every student who is starting out as a piano teacher will find a valuable part of his equipment. The many troublesome problems which face the inexperienced teacher, are considered and helpful advice given. Some of the topics discussed are "The Piano Teacher's Equipment," "The Business Side of Piano Teaching," "First Lessons with the New Pupil," and "Selections of Music and Books for Study." The author is a well-known and successful teacher and the book is the outcome of his long experience as a private as well as a college teacher. (Boston: Oliver Ditson Company. Pp. 171. $1.25.)

Other Books

THE SCIENCE OF LIVING, or The Art of Keeping Well, by Wm. S. Sadler, M. D. A goodly volume, written in plain and clear English, filled with sensible instruction regarding the care of the health. It decries fads but does not go to the equally ridiculous extreme of declaring there is never anything in an innovation. Dr. Sadler is well known through his very popular work on "Worry." He believes in giving nature a chance and tells us how easy it is to get perverted appetites and habits of hygenic conduct until the very things we need most we enjoy least, while the things we come to coddle ourselves into enjoying are detrimental. But neither is he a nature faddist. He thinks there is good in Fletcherism but not all good and never good when overdone or relied upon to the neglect of other equally beneficial usages. He warns against alchohol, narcotics and condiments in ways that carry conviction and advocates a rational use of water, both externally and internally, because the body is so largely composed of it, but not as a cure-all. The tables on combinations of food for diet are simple and good to be kept before the cook. A good, sensible book is this and it is good to have it at hand. (Chicago: A. C. McClurg & Co. 419 pages. $1.50 net.)

GOLDEN HOURS WITH THE SAINTS.—Two volumes in this series are given over to St. Francis of Assisi and Thomas a' Kempis. Short biographical sketches told in an intimate, personal fashion, and the choicest excerpts from their writings make these attractive gift books for the Lenten season. The paper, a heavy cream linen, forms an artistic background for the special pages of illuminated lettering, and the black letter of the text. (New York; Hodder and Stoughton.)

EASTER BOOKS.—Four exquisitely bound books have been issued from the press of Hodder and Stoughton for the Easter season. The titles are "Easter in the Heart," "Easter Bells," "Lent Lilies" and "Easter Joy." Each contains well-chosen selections from familiar and unfamiliar sources, appropriate for the Eastertide. In the latter two the ecclesiastical purple is carried out in both printing and illustrations. "Easter in The Heart" is especially a message of joy and consolation in its emphasis of faith and immortality.

Rainier of the Last Frontier

BY

JOHN MARVIN DEAN

AUTHOR OF

"THE PROMOTION, ETC."

Copyright 1910, By John Marvin Dean

(CHAPTER XVIII. Continued.)

So, with undaunted spirit, he had gone into the gloom and barrenness of the trackless mountains of Antigue. Not a rifle barked its hate of Fagan as the procession melted into the passes. Rainier had kept his word, Montgomery his. It now remained to see the ethics of Fagan.

The ethics of Fagan! What a contradiction of terms! The world knows now what only a few of the old army knew then, that Fagan is a name that never mixes with any virtue unless mere brute courage be counted as such.

One would have thought that ceaseless fighting of soldiers and constabulary would have made Fagan eager to rid himself of his captive. But the same spirit that makes a cat toy with a mouse, or a heartless school boy pick a living insect slowly to pieces, or puts a priest on an inquisition assignment by choice, or exhilarates a red Indian as he dances about a slow fire—that spirit burned as a constant element in the breast of the renegade, Fagan. For six years Fagan dodged about the fastnesses of Panay, of Negros, of Mindoro. He finally fashioned a permanent camp in the still smoking crater of Calabang.

And all this time of marching, camping, fighting, quarreling with rival insurgents leaders, starving, feasting, raiding and ravaging —all this time Rainier was the evidence, the triumphant evidence of his matchless cunning. Had not sixty thousand soldiers vowed from Aparri to Jolo that Rainier would be rescued within six months? It is true that now, after all this time, the garrisons believe for the most part that the brave young secretary is dead.

At first this conviction on the part of a growing number of the garrisons on Panay and Negros, had acted as an irritant on the nerves of Fagan. He had even raided Hinagaran and left a bombastic note in a cleft stick on its plaza, stating that Clarke Rainer was not dead, as lazy and defeated officers maintained, but was in good health in the camp of the illustrious General Fagan of the Republica Filipine.

But of late Fagan had acquiesced in the indifference of the troops. Eight years of fighting will satisfy almost any man. Fagan, devil-driven as he was, yet felt the advantage of the troops on the plains below, believing that their once popular secretary was buried on some unknown mountain trail. It was saving him many an alarm and skirmish. "Let the man be dead, if they will it so," he argued, in his cunning. "He still shall fulnish me a living monument of the fact that the nigger, Fagan, is the conqueror of an army corps."

And what of Rainier's relations with Fagan all these years? Well, there was the first shock at Fagan's perfidy and then a constantly growing horror in the breast of the captive as he studied his betrayer month after month. Rainier's growing religious faith happily banished all terror from his heart. He was not afraid of Fagan and the negro knew it and, strangely enough, liked it. They at times seemed friends and comrades. They played chess together, they argued political questions with careful avoidance of passion, they even pitted themselves against one another in rough camp games. But there were times when scenes of lust, of cruelty and of bloodshed, in connection with Fagan's frequent raids upon neutral native villages, roused Rainier to a reckless anger of denunciation. Such occasions were dangerous in the extreme to the captive. He ran heavy risks of torture and death. Fiendish assistants in the constantly changing ladrone band at times openly advised his death by torture.

But still he lived.

Three times he had almost eluded his guards. On one occasion he had mortally wounded an insurgent with his own dagger. But he was brought back in triumph after each attempt, amid the jeers of the band.

Aguinaldo was captured by Funston, civil government was set up throughout all the islands, American school teachers spread a net-work of learning over the land, one by one the fighting bands descended the hills and surrendered their arms to the sovereignity of the United States of America.

But Fagan, with a price on his head, joined forces with the notorious and elusive Papa Isio and lived on in never-dying hatred of the flag he had once served. With Isio never-ending resistance was the inevitable outcome of his fanatical new religion. With Fagan there were ever present the alternatives of fighting or hanging. He chose to fight.

And yet it was not all fighting. Sometimes there were solid months of lazying in the guarded fastnesses of the Negros volcanic range. These were times of greatest strain to the living plaything of Fagan. Better far the excitement of alarms and the hope of rescue than the interminable dreariness of waiting through the months in the crater of Calabang.

Six years is a long time.

* * *

The Reverend Charles Waxfield was facing five leveled rifles in the hands of ragged ladrones.

But he was too hot after his long climb up the flank of the volcano to be afraid.

"The war is over two years past, you ridiculous scarecrows," he muttered eyeing them with care. Then aloud, in Visayan, "Take me to your commander, General Fagan."

There was great expostulation, threatenings and gesticulation, from the ragged soldiery.

Waxfield kept on demanding to be brought into Fagan's presence.

At last with angry shrugs and sinister determinings, they marched him into the crater-camp of Calabang, knowing full well that no man might see that spot and live to reach the troops below at Bacolod, with the news. If this newly-arrived American missionary wished to die why hinder him?

Fagan's substantial bamboo hut was well in the center of the camp and not a hundred yards beyond rose an acrid haze from the ever uneasy depths of Calabang volcano. To the right of the commander's hut a somewhat similar one housed Rainier.

The hour was the siesta hour. The soldiers hesitated a moment at the door of Fagan's hut and then, after consultation, entered to arouse their general from his sleep. A single soldier remained without with Waxfield.

In a moment there was a startled chorus of cries inside the hut.

The entering squad had found a dead general.

The negro's body was sprawled out on the split-bamboo floor. A bottle with a skull-and-cross-bones label on it had rolled against the wall. Under the right hand was a piece of cheap Visayan stationery. It contained a few sentences in pencil.

As three of the squad dropped their Remingtons and raised the body of their self-slain leader to a bamboo couch, the fourth soldier read the penciled lines of Spanish:

"To Lieutenant Gonzales and All Who Follow Fagan: I direct you, as my last order, to escort the American, Rainier, to the plains below and there give him his liberty. I advise, but do not order, all soldiers of my command to surrender to the forces of the United States.

(Signed) Arthur Jefferson Fagan,
General of Brigade of the Filipine Republic.

It is useless to resist longer. Farewell!"

To Rainier, himself, went later a second sheet of the same cheap paper, found amongst Fagan's meager files. Its message, evidently written but a few hours before the lines in Spanish as above recorded, was in this case conveyed in English. It merely said, without signature:

"Rainier, you sometimes speak to me of religion. Be satisfied to know that death by my own hand alone prevents my surrender to your Christ. I have come to the place where the old memories of the flag are mingling with old memories of a woman's prayers. It is not safe to longer live."

CHAPTER XIX.

"He Will Come for This, Some Day."

There was a special pigeon-hole of mystery in the Iloilo postoffice. For five years and more, ever since a certain sad-eyed little nurse had left for "The States," there had rested in a musty corner a square envelope addressed to Mr. Clarke Rainier, of Iloilo.

A little note on the left-hand upper corner of it contained the magic that prevented its being sent to the Dead Letter Office:

"Mr. Rainier will surely call for this some day. Kindly keep it until he does."

Three successive postmasters had inherited that little missive and it is to the credit of each to say that they occasionally weighed the little missive in their palms with a true reverence in their hearts toward the simple faith of Benicia Royce.

Five years have passed since the regiments of the old brigade had sailed away with her in their midst and much has happened in the interval.

Rod Garrison has become a prosperous sugar-merchant of Iloilo. He announces through his friends that he will make his permanent home in the island. There is no truer man on Panay and the missionaries, who have come in to challenge the corruptions of Romanism with a purer religion, find him one of their stanchest friends. He sometimes scowls at the distant mountains and a shadow falls on his spirit as he remembers the mystery of his former friend.

Peace has marked Panay with prosperity. The insurrection is a thing of the past. Even the fanatic, Isio is now being hunted by Visayan native constabulary. The soldiers are now but few in number and have but little to do.

(To be continued.)

Antonio, the Little Sculptor

BY CAROLYN SHERWIN BAILEY.

Long ago, there lived in Italy a little boy named Antonio Canova. His home was with his grandfather, who was a stonecutter by trade, but very poor indeed.

Antonio was not a strong little boy. He couldn't romp, and jump, and run with the other boys in the village, but he loved to go with his grandfather to the stoneyard. While the old man was busy cutting and shaping the great blocks of stone, Antonio would play among the chips. Sometimes he would make a little statue of soft clay, sometimes he would take his grandfather's hammer and chisel and try to cut a statue from a piece of rock. Then when they went home in the evening his grandmother would say:

"What has our little Antonio been doing today?"

"He has been trying to make figures of stone. The boy will be a sculptor if he grows to manhood."

Now there lived in the same town as Antonio a very rich man, a count. He often gave grand dinners for his rich friends, and he would send for Antonio's grandfather to go up to the great house and help with the work in the kitchen, for Antonio's grandfather was a fine cook as well as a stonecutter.

One day it happened that Antonio went with his grandfather to the count's house. Antonio could not cook, of course.

Everything went well until it came time to set the table for dinner. There came, suddenly, a crash from the great banqueting hall, and a man rushed into the kitchen, very pale and trembling with fright, and holding some bits of broken marble in his hand. He had broken the wonderful marble statue which was to have stood in the center of the table.

"What shall we do?" cried all the servants.

Little Antonio left his pans and kettles, and went up to the frightened man.

"If you had another statue for the center of the table, would it be all right?" he asked.

"Surely," said the man, "if it were of the same height and length."

"Will you let me try to make one?" asked Antonio.

The man laughed.

"Stuff and nonsense!" he cried. "Who are you that can carve a statue at a moment's notice?"

"I am Antonio Canova," said the lad.

"The boy can but try," said the servants, who knew Antonio.

On the table in the kitchen was a huge lump of golden butter. It weighed over 200 pounds, and it had just come in, from the count's great dairy in the mountains. Antonio took one of the kitchen knives and began to carve and shape this butter. In a few moments he had finished his statue, and there, before the wondering eyes of the servants, crouched a wonderful lion—mane, great limbs, and head complete.

"How beautiful!" they cried. And the lion was carried in and put in the center of the banqueting table.

When the count and his friends came in, the first thing they saw was the great yellow lion.

"How remarkable!" they cried. "None but a great artist could carve such a figure. Bring him forth!"

"My friends," said the count, "this is a surprise to me as well as to you." Then he called the head servant and asked him the name of the unknown artist.

"It was a little boy in the kitchen," said the servant, "who carved the lion."

Then the count bade the servant bring in the little boy.

"My lad," he said, "you have done a piece of work of which the greatest artists would be proud. Who are you, and who has been your teacher?"

"I am Antonio Canova," said the boy, "and I have had no teacher save my grandfather, the stonecutter."

All the guests crowded around Antonio. They were, many of them, famous artists, and they knew the little lad for a genius. When they seated themselves at the table, they insisted that little Antonio have a seat with them, and the dinner was made a feast in his honor.

The next day the count sent for Antonio to come and live with him. The most noted artists in the country were sent for to teach the little lad; and, instead of carving butter, he cut and shaped marble, and became one of the greatest sculptors in the world.—What-to-Do.

Little Kitten That Tried to Be Good

BY Z. I. DAVIS.

Little kittens all look beautiful to their mother cat. It isn't likely that "Fluff", the maltese barn cat, knew that one of her five kittens was so homely neighbor children visited the hayloft on purpose to see it. She washed their five little faces and smoothed their five little coats, not knowing that four kittens were pretty and one was not.

It was Jimmy who named the homely kitten "Patches." He gave it this name because the little thing had a yellowish face, a black chin, a white cap, no two feet alike, a striped tail and a coat of maltese, black, yellow and white, badly mixed. This kitten could purr just as loud and chase her striped tail around and around every bit as fast as the four pretty kittens; but Jimmy was right when he said that it wouldn't be an easy matter to find a home for her.

At last four little girls who lived on farms near by, carried four little maltese kittens away, leaving Patches to live with her mother in the barn.

When a child came from town to visit the country school, whoever entertained the visitor was sure to take her to see Patches. Jimmy was soon known as the boy who owned the homeliest cat in the country.

Perhaps the mother cat began to wonder why the children never said "Pretty little kitty, nice little kitty," when they came to see Patches; perhaps she wondered and wondered why they always laughed when Jimmy took the kitten in his arms and lifted her paws one at a time or called attention to her funny ears. Anyway, the mother cat began giving Patches extra lessons in cat manners; taught her how to say "Mew" gently; how to purr in a musical fashion. She taught her little kitten how to be exquisitely clean; how to keep her coat soft and smooth, the little white spots white as snow.

At last there were too many kittens on the farm. The cat who lived in the corncrib and the house cat both had large families; so it was decided to give Patches to the miller in town. Patches had taken so many lessons in catching mice, Jimmy's father told the miller he was sure she would make a good mouser.

The boy had a little cousin in town, Carolyn Marie, who wanted one of the maltese kittens but forgot to say so until they had been given away. When she learned that Patches must go to live the rest of her life in a flour mill by the noisy river where no one would ever pet her or give her a basket by the kitchen fire, Carolyn Marie would share her home with this left-over kitten.

From the beginning, Patches was thankful for her home in town. She remembered all her mother's lessons and tried hard to be a good little kitten. Carolyn Marie soon loved her strange looking pet. Sometimes when she was tempted to be cross, a glance at that queer, good-natured kitten, purring away as if she were the handsomest cat in town, made the child laugh. After you have laughed it isn't easy to be cross.

Neither is it easy for a little kitten who tries to be good, to grow into a bad cat. When Patches was full grown, she was a good little cat just as she had been a good little kitten.

It happened one day that Mrs. John Morley gave Carolyn Marie six choice eggs and a speckled setting hen. The very next day after the six little chickens were hatched, that speckled hen died. It was extremely sad, especially as the orphans made a great fuss. Carolyn's mother put the little things in the basket that Patches slept in behind the stove, but even then she couldn't keep them warm and the poor babies cried and peeped most pitifully.

At last Patches being a good little cat, got in the basket and cuddled those little chickens until they were big enough to get along without being kept warm all day and all night. She had plenty of trouble with them too, because they didn't like to have their feathers washed cat fashion and they wouldn't ever taste of a mouse, much less learn to catch one.

When one of these little chickens became a big rooster and took a prize at a poultry show, Carolyn Marie told him she thought he was altogether too proud and forgetful of old friends.

"If it hadn't been for my beautiful cat," said she, "he wouldn't have lived to have crowed once. It is a lucky thing for him and for me that Patches didn't go to stay with the miller."

As for Patches, to this day she is a good little cat.

But pleasures are like poppies spread,
You seize the flow'r, its bloom is shed;
Or like the snowfall in the river,
A moment white—then melts forever.
—Burns.

The Daily Altar

An Aid to Private Devotion and Family Worship

SUNDAY, APRIL 2.

Theme for the Day.—The Coming of Light.

Scripture.—That ye may be strengthened with power through his Spirit in the inward man.—Eph. 3-16.

And we have the word of prophecy made more sure; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a lamp shining in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day-star arise in your hearts.—2 Peter 1:19.

Then with a ripple and a radiance thro' me
Rise and be manifest, O Morning Star!
Flow on my soul, thou Spirit, and renew me,
Fill with thyself, and let the rest be far.
F. W. H. Myers ("Saint Paul").

Prayer.—O Thou Father of our spirits, we adore Thee for the gifts of grace which enric hour lives. Thou hast caused the light to shine upon our way. and hast granted us such visions of Thy glory and our own possibilities that at times we are exalted in spirit to new attitudes of happiness and power. Make these good seasons more frequent and more abiding, we beseech Thee, and grant us in the worship and service of Thy house, and in the practice of the Presence of God, a new sense of the Spirit's comfort and guidance day by day.—Amen.

MONDAY, APRIL 3.

Theme for the Day.—The Creative Work of God.

Scripture.—The everlasting God, the Lord, the Creator of the ends of the earth, fainteth not, neither is weary; there is no searching of his understanding.—Isa. 40:28.

But Jesus answered them, My Father worketh even until now, and I work.—John 5:17.

My heart is awed within me when I think
Of the great miracle that still goes on,
In silence, round me—the perpetual work
Of thy creation, finished, yet renewed
Forever, written on thy works I read
The lesson of thy own eternity.
—William Cullen Bryant ("A Forest Hymn").

Prayer.—O God, in the contemplation of Thy hands we are amazed and humbled. Every day reveals some new feature of that creative activity which has been in process since the morning stars first sung together, and goes on evermore. Finish in us also Thy work. Create within us clean hearts, and renew right spirits within us. Cast us not away fom Thy presence, and take not Thy Holy Spirit from us. We ask in Jesus' name.—Amen.

TUESDAY, APRIL 4.

Theme for the Day.—Prisoners of Hope.

Scripture.—The Lord looseth the prisoners.—Psalm 146:7.

I have forth thy prisoners out of the pit wherein is no water. Turn ye to the strong hold, ye prisoners of hope.—Zech. 9:11-12.

High walls and huge the body may confine,
And iron gates obstruct the prisoner's gaze,
And massive bolts may baffle his design,
And vigilant keepers watch his devious ways;
Yet scorns the immortal mind this base control!
No chains can bind it and no cell enclose;
Swifter than light, it flies from pole to pole,
And, in a flash, from earth to heaven it goes.
—William Lloyd Garrison ("Freedom for the Mind").

Prayer.—O Lord, we find ourselves in the narrow place in which ignorance and sin have enclosed us. We would be free, but cannot break from our captivity. But by Thy mercy we find release from our prison house, and our hearts are made glad with the liberty of the children of God. Teach us to prize aright this blessing, and to stand fast in the liberty we have obtained. So shall all days be good, and we shall attain the goal of our hope. In Christ Jesus our Lord.—Amen.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 5.

Theme for the Day.—Led Onward.

Scripture.—I would not live alway.—Job 7:16.

The righteous, and the wise, and their works, are in the hand of God.—Eccl. 9:1.

So Nature deals with us, and takes away
Our playthings one by one, and by the hand
Leads us to rest so gently, that we go
Scarce knowing if we wish to go or stay,
Being too full of sleep to understand
How far the unknown transcends the what we know.
—Henry Wadsworth Longfellow ("Nature").

Prayer.—Our Father, we delight in the protection Thy love affords us. We have a feeling of comfort and calmness in the thought that whatever befalls us, Thou art not far away. Pervade our souls with the sense of peace, we beseech Thee, so that we may willingly give Thee our hands at evening time, and depart with joy to the rest that remains to the saints. In Jesus' name. —Amen.

THURSDAY, APRIL 6.

Theme for the Day.—The Voice of God in the Soul.

Scripture.—Hearing a voice, but beholding no man.—Acts 9:7.

As the voice of God Almighty speaking.—Ezek. 10:5.

Diligently hearken to the voice of the Lord thy God.—Ex. 15:26.

With that a still voice in my spirit that moved and that yearned
(There fell a great calm while it spoke),
I had heard it erewhile, but the noises of life are so loud,
That sometimes it dies in the cry of the street and the crowd.
O elder than reason, and stronger than will!
A voice when the dark world is still;
Whence cometh it? Father Immortal, Thou knowest! and we,—
We are sure of that witness, that sense which is sent us of Thee.
—Jean Ingelow ("The Middle Watch").

Prayer.—Father of mercies, we have heard Thy voice in the utterances of prophets and apostles, in the teaching of holy Scripture, in the whisperings of conscience, and most of all in the words of our Lord Jesus Christ. Give us a listening ear and an intelligent mind, that we fail not in the great adventure of learning Thy will and bringing it to pass. And may the voice of God be instruction, warning, comfort, and hope to our souls.—Amen.

FRIDAY, APRIL 7.

Theme for the Day.—The Steadiness of Hope.

Scripture.—I wait for Jehovah, my soul doth wait, and in his word do I hope.—Psalm 130:5.

As for me, I shall behold thy face in righteousness; and I shall be satisfied when I awake, with beholding thy form.—Psalm 17:15.

And fierce though the fiends may fight,
And long though the angels hide,
I know that truth and right
Have the universe on their side!
And that somewhere beyond the stars
Is a love that is better than fate;
When the night unlocks her bars,
I shall see Him,—and I will wait!
—Washington Gladden ("Ultima Veritas")

Prayer.—O Lord, we should be unquiet and distressed in mind did we not possess the assurances of Thy word that all is well. In the confidence which that word inspires we go on from day to day, expecting ever greater things to come in Thy providence. Nor is our confidence in vain. Life grows richer as we make larger room in it for Thee and Thy gracious purposes. Strengthen us, we beseech Thee, and make firmer our hope to the end. In Christ's name.—Amen.

SATURDAY, APRIL 8.

Theme for the Day.—The Glory of Zion.

Scripture.—How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings. . . . . That saith unto Zion, Thy God reigneth!—Isa. 52:7.

Let Israel rejoice in him that made him; let the children of Zion be joyful in their king.—Psalm 149:2.

Rise, crowned with light, imperial Salem, rise!
Exalt thy towering head, and lift thy eyes!
See heaven it's sparkling portals wide display
And break upon thee in a flood of day.
See, a long race thy spacious courts adorn;
See future sons and daughters, yet unborn,
In crowding ranks on every side arise,
Demanding life, impatient for the skies!
—Alexander Pope ("Messiah").

Prayer.—We rejoice, O Lord, in the promise of the coming of Thy kingdom in all the world. The ancient word of hope Thou wilt fulfill. Already we see the dawning of the day upon the darkness of the heathen night. May we count it our joy to labor upon the walls of the new Jerusalem, and thus help to complete the city of our God. And make us worthy to enter its gates with joy.—Amen.

Roman Methodists Protest

—The American Methodists in Rome held a meeting to protest against the action of Archbishop Farley of New York, in issuing a pastoral letter, denouncing the proposed celebration in Rome in commemoration of the 40th anniversary of the Pope's loss of the control of Rome. In this letter Archbishop Farley declared the celebration an insult to the Pontiff and to every member of the Catholic church and urged the clergy and faithful people to enter their protest against the "vile character of this celebration wherever and whenever an occasion offers." Bishop William Burt, Methodist Episcopal bishop of Europe; the Rev. D. Walling Clark, head of the Methodist organization in Italy, and the Rev. B. F. Tipple, pastor of the Methodist Church in Rome, all strongly criticise the pastoral letter. They stigmatize as unworthy Archbishop Farley's words and the attitude of the Vatican towards United Italy, and urge Americans to take part in the celebration.

W. H. Scott, formerly pastor at Marshalltown, Ia., is ill in St. Luke's hospital, Chicago. He is convalescent.

The Moral Leaders of Israel

BY PROFESSOR HERBERT L. WILLETT

Section XV. Amos of Tekoa.

April 9. Text for Special Study. Amos 1:1-2:16.

QUESTIONS.

1. In whose reign did the kingdom of Israel sink to its lowest point?
2. What were the qualities of Jeroboam II. as warrior and king?
3. What effect did the condition of Assyria have upon the fortunes of Israel?
4. What was the character of popular worship in Israel?
5. What was the feeling of the people regarding their nation and their religion in the times of Jeroboam II?
6. Describe what is known of the earlier life of Amos?
7. How was Amos prepared for his work as a prophet?
8. How did he secure occasion to preach?
9. Where was his message delivered?
10. How did the book of Amos come to be written?
11. What was Amos' first method of securing the attention of his audience?
12. What nations were condemned by him?
13. Why were these nations chosen as examples of judgment upon sin?
14. For what crimes were these peoples condemned?
15. Had Israel ever been guilty of these crimes?
16. What bearing did these predictions of God's judgment upon neighboring people have on the conception of the extent of God's authority?
17. How do Amos's rebukes of Judah and Israel differ from those directed against the neighboring nations?
18. How had Israel attempted to silence its religious teachers?
19. What did Amos predict as the result of Israel's evil course?

* * *

1. THE DAYS OF JEROBOAM II.

There were four kings of Israel who belonged to the dynasty of Jehu. Jehu himself, who had carried out such a merciless reformation, exterminating the worship of the Baals in the kingdom, was followed in 814 B. C. by his son, Jehoahaz. But the weakness of the kingdom, due to the losses of its best blood by war and massacre, were so serious that before the reign of Jehoahaz came to its close in 797 B. C., public affairs had reached almost their lowest ebb. The borders of the kingdom had shrunk, and the army was hardly more than a name.

Elisha was still living when Jehoash, the third king of the dynasty, ascended the throne in 797 B. C. In his days there was some revival of the fortunes of the nation. Jehoash was a warrior of ability, and recovered much of the territory which Syria had taken from his father. This was in accordance with the desire and promise of Elisha, whose interview with the king is related in II Kings 13:14-19.

The fourth king of this line was the most notable of all. Jeroboam II. began to reign in 781 B. C., and during his long rule of forty years, the kingdom regained almost all of the territories and prestige which it had lost under his predecessors (II. Kings 14:23-29). The prophetic writers give but little space to this remarkable man. Seven verses comprise all the biblical record of his reign. But we are fortunate in possessing the contemporary utterances of the prophet Amos, in whose sermons the character of the times is made evident. It was not to be expected that a man whose policy was so patterned after the broad ideals of Solomon and Ahab would meet the approval of the prophets in Israel. But they were compelled to record the fact that in spite of the evil which he did in following "the sins of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, who caused Israel to sin," he was yet so successful that he restored the frontiers of Israel to their full limits. His kingdom extended from Hamath, between the Lebanon ranges far to the north, to the Dead Sea. He is even credited with having taken Damascus, but there is no independent record of such an event, and Amos speaks of it as a foreign capital on which judgment was to fall for its sin.

It is not improbable that the decline and recovery of the fortunes of Israel was in part due to the condition of the Assyrian empire to the east. When Assyria was weak or quiet, Syria had an opportunity to continue its depredations against Israel. But when, as in the times of Jehoash, the successors of Shalmanezer II. began to disturb the peace of Syria, as happens in 803 B. C., when Damascus was besieged, the pressure of things compelled Syria to relax her hold upon her western borders toward Israel. Indeed, it is probable that Jehoash in his wars against Syria made his submission to the Assyrians, and together with the neighboring states of Phoenicia, Edom and Philistia, paid tribute to the power on the Tigris.

* * *

2. POPULAR RELIGION IN ISRAEL.

The influences of Elisha's life had not been forgotten when Amos appeared in Bethel about 760 B. C. There were many prophets at work, both publicly and privately. Only a short time before the groups of prophets in the kingdom of Israel had gathered their interpretation of the past into the Ephraimite record, of which we studied last week. The schools of the prophets were perhaps at their height of power. Yet they had never undertaken the task which was now becoming imperative.

The worship of the golden bulls set up by Jeroboam I. at Bethel and Dan went onward without awakening any resentment on the part of the religious teachers of the age. The worship was not intended to be idolatrous, for the images were understood to be representations of Jehovah and not of foreign gods. The Baal worship had been practically destroyed by the reformation of Jehu. National prosperity had given the people a sense of security and optimism which expressed itself in the religion as in all other public activities.

To the men of the times who had seen the drastic reforms of Jehu and the decline and subsequent rise of the political fortunes of the kingdom, it seemed a day of delightful prosperity and hopefulness. The prophets of the schools found nothing to condemn in the ordinary worship of the two great sanctuaries and the many other local high-places. Religion was never more sumptuous or regular in its ministries than then. Jehovah was worshiped and was apparently blessing his people with bountiful harvests and successful campaigns. Why should any one speak a word of reproach and warning at a time like this?

* * *

3. THE MISSION OF AMOS.

It was just at this time when all things seemed favorable that there arose a prophet in Bethel with a message so sinister and full of warning that it seriously disturbed the optimism of rulers, priests and prophets, and seemed entirely out of harmony with the light-hearted and self-indulgent spirit of the age.

In the town of Tekoa, a few miles southeast from Jerusalem, in the land of Judah, there lived a farmer and herdsman named Amos. The region in which he resided was not rich, and probably most of the people lived a rather pinched and meager life. The kingdom of Judah did not compare in extent and fertility with its northern neighbor. Its rough, rocky southern slopes were little conducive either to agriculture or the raising of fruit. Amos seems to have made a somewhat precarious living from the cultivation of an inferior variety of figs that never quite came to ripeness in the colder uplands of Judah. He also reared cattle for the market,

The Moral Leaders of Israel is a Sunday School course for Young People's and Adult Bible Classes. It will continue throughout the year 1911. The publishers of THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY will supply classes of six or more with weekly copies of the paper containing these lessons, at $1 per year for each copy, or 30 cents per quarter. The class members will receive in addition to their Sunday-school lesson all the rich things provided every week in THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY. The papers distributed to the class on Sunday will contain the lesson for the following Sunday. Orders should be sent through the regular Sunday-school Treasurer if you wish to pay quarterly; or you may deal directly with the Publishers, enclosing remittance at the rate of $1.00 per year for each copy ordered. Be sure and give name of teacher or class member to whom papers shall be sent for distribution.

and thus was accustomed to visit the cities within reach, for the purpose of disposing of his commodities.

The austerity of life in such conditions, with a certain sensitiveness to the will of God as revealed through the prophets of the past, had prepared this man Amos to estimate at their true value the superficial prosperities of northern Israel in his day. Probably he was accustomed to visit the various cities within journeying distance of his home. Hebron, Bethlehem and Jerusalem were not far away. Perhaps he would go as far as Gath, down on the Philistine plain. And the border line between Israel and Judah was so movable and indistinct that it was easy to cross the frontier into the region of such market cities as Bethel and Samaria.

What he saw in these latter cities aroused his anxiety and anger. To be sure he belonged to Judah. But in the ancient covenants of Israel the people was regarded as a unity. As he saw the growing wealth of these rich cities, the deepening chasm between the rich and the poor, the light and superficial way in which religion was regarded, the ineffectiveness of ritual to safeguard moral values, and the mercenary character of priests and prophets of the popular cult, his soul was stirred within him.

Whether he made a special journey from Tekoa to Bethel in order to preach his message of divine wrath and the necessity for repentance, or whether he used the opportunities offered by his market activities to gradually gain attention as a messenger of God, we cannot tell. But it is apparent that Amos' conception of the righteousness of Jehovah in contrast with what he saw about him of the flippant, unsocial and dishonest life the people were leading, roused him with the passion of utterance and furnished him with a message from God. This experience which opened his eyes to the real need of his time he regarded as his divine call to the prophetic office. And he insisted that one who came through such an experience could no more evade the task of preaching than one who heard the roar of a lion could remain unafraid (Amos 3:8).

So Amos began to preach on the streets of Bethel, and perhaps of Samaria as well. And in the book which bears his name we are the possessors of some of his messages. How long he stayed we do not know. Tradition pointed out his grave in Tekoa. Was the book the product of Amos' own hand, the effort to reach a wider audience with the truths he was attempting to preach; or was it the work of those in the close circle of his ministry, the disciples and helpers whom he gathered about him? We do not know. But in this book we have the first direct record of the preaching of any prophet in Israel. Reference is made in II. Kings 14:25 to a certain prophet Jonah, who was active in the reign of Jeroboam II., and may therefore have been a contemporary of Amos. But of his message we have no other account. The book of Amos is our first literary monument of the prophetic sort, and is therefore one of the earliest books of the Old Testament in the form in which the collection has come down to us.

* * *

4. THE SINS OF THE NATIONS.
(Amos 1:1; 2:3.)

In spite of the fragmentary records of Amos' activity we are fortunate in possessing in this book so clear a picture of the times and so competent a disclosure of his own prophetic method. In the first two chapters, which constitute our present study, the method of the prophet is made very clear. He first wins the attention of his audience by commenting on the sins and the approaching punishment of those neighboring nations, against which the animosity of Israelites was most likely to flame. Five of these neighboring peoples are passed in review, with vivid descriptions of the crimes for which they are to receive punishment. Such an arraignment could not fail to gain the closest attention of any company of Israelites. It was then comparatively easy for the prophet to pass over to Judah and Israel, his own people, and make clear the transgressions for which they too must suffer.

The first verse of the prophecy is a sort of editorial introduction. Its reference to the king of Judah before it mentions the reigning king of Israel would suggest that the book was prepared for its place in the prophetic collection by a southern or Judean editor.

After the manner of the Hebrew writers, who possessed no competent scheme of chronology, the date of the utterances is given as "two years before the earthquake." Of course nothing is known of that particular convulsion, unless it is to be identified with the one mentioned by Isaiah in 5:25. And in a land where there were so many earthquakes, the notation is ambiguous.

Then comes the central text of the prophecy. The second verse contains the burden of what Amos was always saying. His was a message of warning and of judgment. Jerusalem was the place where Amos felt that the worship was carried on with greater fidelity than elsewhere. Or it may be that this verse also was added by the Judean editor as the statement of the substance of what the prophet used to say?

Then there follows that wonderful description of the fate which is about to fall upon the five neighboring nations of Syria, Philistia, Phoenicia, Edom, Ammon and Moab. The form of these little oracles is constant and regular. After the manner of the wisdom writers, as seen in the book of Proverbs, there is that suggestive method of augmentation "for three transgressions . . . yea for four," by which the prophet insists that the sins of the people of these countries are many. But he has in mind one particular sin in each case, which is the ground of his condemnation.

Damascus is rebuked for its cruel treatment of the people of Gilead, when they were subjected to the horrible barbarities of war. The people of Gaza are rebuked for raiding a district and capturing its people to sell them to the Edomites, who were the slave-traders of the time. The Edomites are condemned for their unfraternal conduct toward Judah, their brother, against whom they were perpetually and fiercely at war. The Ammonites are rebuked for their cruel method of gaining new territory by the massacre of helpless clans. And the Moabites are denounced for the sacreligious crime of destroying the body of a royal enemy, the king of Edom, who was killed in battle.

In each one of these cases the punishment promised is to be thoroughgoing and disciplinary. The destruction of the capital or the leading city in each case is announced. The student could easily make a common form for these little oracles, leaving out the proper names and the particular items mentioned, and it would be discovered to be the same in all cases.

It will not fail to strike the reader that in each of the instances mentioned thus far the prophet is denouncing a foreign nation for a crime that may be called a crime against humanity. It requires no special revelation from God to make people aware of the sin of such atrocious and inhuman forms of conduct as those here mentioned. And yet Israel itself had practiced just such cruelties in earlier days without a thought of their horror. In fact David himself was as merciless in war as any of the tribes here condemned. This is another of the interesting instances of the gradual elevation of prophetic ideals through the centuries.

But a more important principle is observable. Israel for the most part still held the view that each of the nations possessed its own god. Beyond the territories of Canaan it was not usually supposed that Jehovah exerted any authority. In Amos we have the first definite statement of the world-wide rule of Jehovah, which carries with it the argument that the gods of the neighboring nations are only creatures of the imagination. The principle of monotheism, here so boldly advanced, required many centuries in Israel for its complete acceptance.

* * *

5. THE SINS OF ISRAEL.
(Amos 2:4-16.)

Turning from these neighboring peoples, the prophet comes home to his own nation with a momentum and rebuke the more convincing because of what has already been uttered. If God punishes foreign nations who have had no special knowledge of his will, how much more shall he require at the hands of his own people the expiation of sins against light!

It is to be noted that whereas in the former cases only a single representative error was denounced, in the cases of Judah and Israel a fuller statement is made, indicating that the prophet could well produce a catalogue of such popular transgressions. More than this, the sins which he charges against Judah and Israel are not those of the common and ordinary level, against the decencies of life; but are such as a people instructed in righteousness should have been incapable of exhibiting. Israel had therefore sinned against its divine opportunities. Receiving an education which no other people had possessed, it had forgotten the claims of God upon it and had deliberately gone wrong. Other nations had perished in their sins, but Israel might have been expected to give a fairer account of its life.

But in defiance of these very instructions it had attempted to silence its prophets, to debauch its men of holy life, and to deliver itself over to immorality and injustice. Only destruction could follow such a course. And thus the prophet brings to a close his first arraignment of the nation, with the promise of swift calamity in which neither military strength nor the courage of experience could avail.

* * *

FOLLOWING STUDIES.

The next section will deal with "The Social Program of Amos." The next two will deal with the tragic story of Hosea, and then will follow "Isaiah of Jerusalem."

* * *

TOPICS FOR SPECIAL STUDY, REPORTS, AND PAPERS.

1. The influence of Assyria upon the career of Israel.
2. The transition from agricultural to urban life in Israel, and its results.
3. A character sketch of the prophet Amos.
4. The literary character of the book of Amos.
5. The methods of the prophets in preaching, as illustrated in the book of Amos.
6. The relation of prophetic writings to those of the wisdom school as illustrated in Amos 1.

* * *

LITERATURE.

Addis, "Hebrew Religion;" Cornill, "The Prophets of Israel," pp. 37-46; Kirkpatrick, "The Doctrine of the Prophets," pp. 83-108; George Adam Smith, "Book of the Twelve Prophets," I. 61-196; Harper, "Amos and Hosea," (International Critical Commentary); Willett, "The Prophets of Israel," ch. 5; Articles on "Amos" in encyclopedias and Bible dictionaries.

Illinois Department

State Office, 24 Illinois National Bank Bldg., Springfield

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY is a national religious paper published by the Disciples of Christ in the interests of Christian unity and the Kingdom of God. While its circulation is nation-wide and impartially distributed among all the states, it recognizes a special obligation to the State of Illinois in which it is published. It desires particularly to serve the cause of Christ in Illinois by publishing its significant church news, by interpreting its religious life and by promoting the ideals of the Disciples within its borders. To this end the publishers of THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY maintain a state office at Springfield, the capital and central city. It is the purpose of the state editor to study the whole field of Illinois, visiting all the churches, reporting his observations and pointing the churches to ever higher ideals. Pastors and church workers are requested to co-operate by regularly sending items of news, clippings from local papers, parish papers, weekly leaflets, occasional paragraphs of sermons and any other information that will give to the state editor all the data for reporting and interpreting the progress of Christian work in the state. All communications to the editor may be addressed, 24 Illinois National Bank Building, Springfield. All business communications should be addressed to the Chicago office.

—The excellent article on the Union Church at Cissna Park promised last week for this issue has been crowded out. It will be just as vital and timely later as now.

—The way Illinois news is coming in to the Springfield office is a joy to the editors.

—Do we need to say anything this week to remind our readers of the Congress to be held at Springfield April 18-20?

• • •

The revival at Beardstown, with Secretary J. Fred Jones as evangelist, began March 19, with a favorable outlook.

E. M. Norton who resides at Danville, is now preaching for Mt. Olivet Church near Paxton, and Potomac, one-half time each.

W. H. Kern is now living at Cisne and dividing his time between the church at that place and at Jeffersonville.

Latest reports from Sword meeting at Augusta, indicate eleven confessions and a deepening interest in the entire community.

Frank Shane of Effingham, could be induced to accept a pastorate for one-half time if not too far removed from his home town.

Thomas E. Israel of Eureka will preach for the congregation at Pittwood. This church has been pastorless for about a year.

The church at East Durham, is being ministered to by Dr. H. B. Robison, Dean of the Bible College at Canton, Mo.

Bellmont church has secured W. R. Couch for one-half time ministry. The church at Maud is expecting Mr. Couch for the remaining part of his time.

Lewis Goos, who has accepted the church at Cornland for one-half time, can be secured by some other Central Illinois congregation for part time preaching.

D. W. Conner of Irving, who recently held a meeting at Palestine, has accepted a call to become pastor of this church and will remove there immediately.

Joel T. Davis, who preaches at St. Joseph, has undergone a very serious operation, but is convalescing in a satisfactory way. He has been bedridden for more than ten weeks.

A. O. Pasley of Sweetwater, has resigned his pastorate and will reside at London Mills, to preach for the church there and at Hermon.

W. H. Cannon of Pittsfield is supplying the pulpit of West Side Church, Springfield, during the time J. R. Golden's meeting is being held in Pittsfield.

The pastor's wife at Kankakee, Mrs. Cassie D. Livingstone, is also a minister and has become pastor of the Prairie Dell Church. She will minister to this congregation for one-half time.

Aurora church will have Evangelist Lew D. Hill for a meeting in June. Mr. Hill has but recently returned from an extended stay in the West and is available for engagements for evangelistic or Sunday preaching.

The revival at Harrisburg, conducted by pastor E. W. Akeman assisted by O. A. Bennett as musical director, has resulted in several additions with prospects for others at the close of the first week.

Lawrenceville church, where B. F. Cato is minister, had an offering large enough on Foreign Missionary Sunday, to continue the support of its Living Link Missionary. This is a strong church, with a pastor who has been very successful in two previous pastorates.

A union congregation known as Isabel Church, for a long time has had Presbyterian pastors, but is now enjoying the ministry of N. M. Beeman, a Disciple who resides at Lewistown. Mr. Beeman is succeeding in securing excellent results, even in the short time so far spent with the congregation.

Iroquois had a revival meeting in one day, recently. There were twenty-five additions at the two regular preaching services, twenty at the morning service and five at night. Fifteen were by confession. The pastor is Frank M. R. Thackaberry, who reports the entire community alive with evangelistic zeal.

The pastorate at Normal will be vacant after April 1, William G. McColley having presented his resignation to take effect at that time. Mr. McColley has been in this pastorate for four years and has done a work of real merit in the community. He has not yet determined upon his future location.

R. E. Hieronymus of Eureka, will appear on the program of the Township Sunday-school Association, to be held in Pekin, April 2nd. Mr. Hieronymus who was for a number of years, professor and president of Eureka College, is now in the employ of the state and is accomplishing a special educational work for the State University.

Watseka is having revival meetings, with Coombs, Halstead and McKinney as evangelists. There have been seventeen additions, and the community is being aroused to a great interest in the meeting. Great preparations were made for the meeting. Housetohouse visitation and a religious census of the city was conducted. Ellmore Sinclair is the pastor.

William E. Adams of Danville, addressed the Brotherhood of the Lincoln Methodist Church on the subject of the "New Birth," and himself and address were received with cordiality by the laymen as well as by the pastor. The churches must be coming very closely together, when a Disciple preacher can preach on this subject acceptably before a Methodist congregation.

The church at Saybrook, where C. C. Wisher is minister, exceeded its apportionment for Foreign Missions and secured an offering said to be the largest in years. Every class in the Sunday-school made a contribution. The congregation is considering the advisability of erecting a parsonage and the same will likely be started in a short time.

Denver church took the Foreign Missionary offering this year in a business like way. The membership was asked for a contribution, not only from the pulpit, but every individual in the church was asked by personal solicitation to make a contribution. As a result, the offering was $60.00, which exceeds the apportionment by 20 per cent.

Ira A. Engle, for three years pastor of Chandlerville church, has resigned his pastorate to accept a call to Carrollton. The latter call has been extended for a period of five years and is a result of the church hearing Mr. Engel preach a year ago. In his pastorate at Carrollton he has been progressive and has allied himself with the forces of the community, insisting on improvement in civic and political affairs.

W. M. Groves of Petersburg, formerly pastor of the church at that place for five years, and now serving his second term as representative in the Illinois Legislature, has accepted the pastorate of the church at Virginia. Mr. Groves is among the legislators who are insisting on reform measures in the present session of the legislature. He is reliably counted upon to stand for measures introduced in behalf of the people.

L. A. Chapman, pastor of Carmi church, is anticipating a tour to Palestine, Egypt and European countries next year. Mr. Chapman will travel independent of traveling bureaus and expects to make the trip within three months' time, for four hundred dollars from New York. He is desirous of having companions on the trip and will be pleased to hear from others who would like to make the journey in this way, whether they are preachers or not.

The churches at Charleston co-operated in union effort on behalf of boys in the city. A. W. Connor of Indiana was present to lead the movement. All expenses were met by the business men of the city. The campaign lasted for five days and George H. Brown, pastor of the Disciples' Church, is unstinted in his praise, both of Mr. Connor and the results accomplished from this union work. He advises all the Brotherhoods to make opportunities for Mr. Connor to conduct similar campaigns in other cities.

News Editorials

First Hand Acquaintance with China.

An enterprising Sunday-school class of young ladies in First Church, Springfield, is becoming interested in missions. A plan has been adopted which insures an increase in their interest and an intimate knowledge of the mission field. The class has about ten members. They wrote recently to one of the missionaries, asking for the names and addresses of an equal number of native young ladies attached to the mission in a Chinese city. On receiving the information, which was gladly rendered by the missionary, each one of the class was assigned one of these Chinese girls and wrote a special letter requesting a reply. The replies are now being received. They evince great joy in the Chinese girl's heart over the communication received, and the interest manifested in the welfare of her people. The replies are no less a source of pleasure. They are inspiring, and other replies are awaited with keenest anticipation. This is first hand missionary work. Quite as much as any money sent, this correspondence may be instrumental in accomplishing good results. It will bring about a vital acquaintance with China, that is likely to result in both money and life being consecrated to this great work. Apart from the final result, however, it may be utilized as an exercise of immediate value, and in a very legitimate way, to increase interest in Sunday-school classes and Christian Endeavor societies or other organizations.

Village and Country Church Conference.

At a meeting of the undersigned, ministers of the village and country churches in Bloomington, Ill., on March 16, after full discussion of the conditions it was decided to issue a call for a conference of village and country church workers of the Christian church. From everywhere we hear of the decadence of rural churches. The advance reports of the thirteenth census indicate that more people than ever live in rural districts. School census gives more children in rural school districts than ever. These need the contribution the church makes to character development. Then there is surely something wrong with the methods and workers in village and country churches. Many have opinions in regard to this and some have set themselves to work out a broader basis of church life in such communities. We need to meet in conference that those who have worked successfully at reëstablishing the church in the smaller communities may tell us how it was done that we may face the proper activities that must be taken up by church workers. These are the reasons for issuing this call. It is to be a conference of village and county workers of the Christian church and for them. No one realizes better than we the great need for city workers and the demand made upon the ministers in the metropolitan pulpit. But we are meeting this time to see our work and what we owe it. The date of the conference has been fixed on April 24th and 25th. The place has not been fully decided upon but W. D. Deweese, Bloomington; N. H. Robertson, Stanford, and J. P. Givens, Lexington, were appointed a committee on place and will report for next week's papers. The committee on program is J. W. Street, Mackinaw; R. B. Doan, Armington, and Myrtle B. Parke, Carlock. We desire this to be an invitation to every village and country church worker in the brotherhood to come and help and be helped. There will be some expense to advertising this meeting and we ask all ministers who will, to present the matter to your congregation at your earliest convenience and take an offering on Sunday night for this purpose. Send the offering to W. D. Deweese, Bloomington, saying the purpose for which you send it. Brethren, pray for his meeting and plan to come. Program given in full next week.

J. W. Street, Mackinaw, was made temporary chairman and any inquiries sent to him in regard to the conference will be gladly answered. Lodging will be furnished free but we decided that all meals should be paid for by those attending the conference.

The above statement and call is signed by the following: J. W. Street, Mackinaw; J. Fred Jones, Bloomington; W. D. Deweese, Bloomington; Rochester Irwin, Long Point; John P. Givens, Lexington; T. T. Holton, Bloomington; Myrtle B. Parke, Carlock; J. C. Reynolds, Arrowsmith; N. H. Robertson, Stanford; C. C. Wisher, Saybrook; R. B. Doan, Armington; L. Hadaway, Minier; Osceola McNemar, El Paso; C. R. Mitchell, Cooksville; W. Homer Storm, Cissna Park.

Eureka College

The Sins of an Optimist.

For three years I have been known as a "hopeless optimist." I have gone up and down the state shouting in the most optimistic manner, that we would win this endowment campaign for Eureka College. It was my sincere conviction that this was necessary to save the institution. Hope and optimism have carried us this far; but I have been convinced, by recent developments, that we have gone too far with our optimism. We have not only convinced the people that we would win; but we have convinced them so enthusiastically that they are actually refusing to do what many of them have definitely promised to do.

Many people in Illinois seem to think that we have the balance of our money buried somewhere; and that on the evening of the last day, we will simply dig it up and announce to the world that we have our campaign completed. To all such, permit me to say, this is not true. The truth is, we need $23,000 to finish our proposition. The time is rapidly passing, and unless matters change very radically, we will come to the end of our campaign without the money pledged.

There is no need for this. We have plenty of money in this state, and apparently have plenty of friends; but each man is waiting for the other fellow to give the money. It is easier to shout than it is to pay. Then we have another thing that annoys us somewhat. You will hear many people talk about that impersonal thing called the "brotherhood." Men will say "Why doesn't the brotherhood give this money?" They forget that they are but a part of this brotherhood; and that they have not done their duty by the college.

It is very apparent to the casual observer that the Disciples are face to face with a crisis in educational matters. There is not a school among us that has its financial affairs in the condition they would like. The next few years will tell the story for or against us. We have tried heroically, in Illinois, to do our part in the settlement of this problem; and while we are not discouraged, we are disappointed. There has not been a month for the past year, that I have not visited enough men, who, by every rule of expectancy, should have contributed the balance of the fund we are trying to raise. This campaign may fail. We may come up to the end of the time without the pledges. But it will be without my consent and over the most earnest protest that I can make. I shall be greatly pleased to hear from any one, who has anything to suggest, concerning the work we are trying to do. And I hereby promise that I will not sin again during this campaign on the side of optimism.

H. H. Peters.

Chicago

By Vaughan Dabney.

E. M. Bowman, Austin Hunter and Meade E. Dutt, represent the Disciples on the general committee of arrangements for this celebration.

The Sunday-schools of Jackson Boulevard and Englewood are in a contest. Thus far the former is leading, having on a recent Sunday 600 in attendance.

The work of Basil Keussef, our missionary to the Russians and Bulgarians, is full of promise. At a recent meeting for Bible study, Mr. Keussef preached to 40 men. The meeting lasted two hours.

The special train for the afternoon service of the Chicago Heights dedicatory services of April 2 will leave La Salle street station at 12:50 Sunday, instead of 2:00 p. m. as previously announced, and will return to Chicago after evening service. However, those desiring to return to the city for evening worship can leave at 4:30 p. m. Geo. L. Snively will assist the pastor, E. D. Salkeld, on that day.

The Tercentenary Celebration of the translation of the English Bible will be observed in Chicago during the week beginning Sunday, April 30. The general committee of arrangements composed of representatives from the evangelical churches in Chicago and vicinity have suggested the following themes for study and discussion on April 30:

"The Story of the Growth of the English Bible, from the First Translation into English;" "The Influence of the English Bible on the English Language and Literature;" "The English Bible and the Life of the People: its Influence on customs, laws, government and social life;" "The Place of the English Bible in Missions;" and "The English Bible in the Spiritual Life of the English Speaking People."

"One of the most historic events in the life of the Chicago Disciples," said Dr. E. S. Ames, in acknowledging the Sarvis farewell social at Hyde Park Church on March 23. Representatives from most of the Chicago churches were present to participate in the choice fellowship and uplift the occasion afforded. Remarks by W. D. McClintock on behalf of the church and Dr. H. L. Willett, on behalf of the Chicago ministry, intensified the interest of Chicago Disciples in the commendable undertaking, so successfully carried out, and caused all to feel optimistic about the future work of these two such consecrated and well-equipped workers. Mr. and Mrs. Sarvis leave Chicago Tuesday, March 28. After touring the middle west for a few months they return to Chicago for a short stay. From here they go to Montreal and sail for Liverpool July 20th. Before reaching their destination they visit Italy, Germany, England, France, India, arriving in Shanghai Dec. 5th.

Conference in Suburban Churches.

On invitation of the Baptist, Congregational, Methodist and Presbyterian churches of Morgan Park, Ill., pastors and delegates from suburban churches around Chicago convened at Morgan Park, March 14, for a suburban church conference, which lasted the entire day.

"The Suburban Community" was defined by Rev. W. S. Abernethy, of Berwyn, after which Dr. W. E. Barton, Oak Park, told of the "Kind of Preaching Needed in the Suburb." He believes that the suburb is the last stand of the neighborhood. The suburb is more than the bedroom of the city. It still has the home. Sermons in the suburb must be intellectually strong and interesting. With the suburbanites theological discussion is a dead issue; the appeal must be to human life and to religious indifference.

"In Oak Park," said the speaker, "people do not hate God, but they are indifferent to Him."

The suburban preacher must grip the conscience of his hearer and cause him to realize the perils of the city.

"There is no shorter road to hell than through the suburb," said Dr. Barton, "for the man who desires to leave the city to escape moral and spiritual responsibility for its salvation, but who desires to save his own little, lazy soul. His automobile will become a whale's belly, if he becomes a Jonah."

Rev. Orvis F. Jordan, pastor of the Evanston Christian Church, presented the "Problem of the Evening Service" in a forceful manner. He said that we must take into account the social structure of the suburbs. In Evanston he has found all kinds of people from the resting saints to the restless sinners of the board of trade.

There are three ways of solving the suburban Sunday evening service problem.

First, eliminate the service entirely.

Second, solve it by perversion—that is, eliminate religion from the service. Let the preacher become an actor, but let him remember that he will always be a poor one. Vaudeville methods may attract the people for a time, but add no stability to the church.

Third, divest the pulpit of fads, follies, politics, and such things, and enlist the congregation in the service, having much lay preaching, and thus bring about a revival of constant evangelism. Make the evening service sanely evangelistic.

He said: "I doubt if the churches in Evanston have increased in membership very much during the last year. The First Congregational has grown some, but the high Episcopalian Church has made the greatest gain."

INTER-CHURCH CONSERVATION CONGRESS

Held in Decatur, March 20-21, a Most Interesting and Significant Gathering.

BY O. W. LAWRENCE.

The Inter-Church Conservation Congress was held primarily in the interest of the country church, but its scope was broad. It included all the interests of country life—the church, the school, the home and everything that has to do with the welfare of the family in the country.

The congress was inter-church in every respect, so far as its work was concerned, but it is one of many such congresses being held throughout the country by the Board of Home Missions of the Presbyterian church. The National Board of this great church has created several departments for work and research. This is its latest adventure—a department of church and country life. Dr. Warren H. Wilson is superintendent, and is doing for the country church what Mr. Stelzle in a like department is doing for the laboring man. The work however is being done in a manner quite in keeping with the Presbyterian church's spirit of unselfishness and helpfulness to all.

Many of the speakers came from distant states, among them Prof. H. W. Foglet, of Kirksville, Mo., normal school, an eminent authority on the country school; Dean J. H. Skinner of the Agricultural College of Purdue University, Indiana; Miss Martha Van Rensselaer, of Cornell University, Ithaca, N. Y., an eminent authority on domestic science. Besides these were men who have succeeded pre-eminently with country churches in various states.

Farmers and Preachers Present.

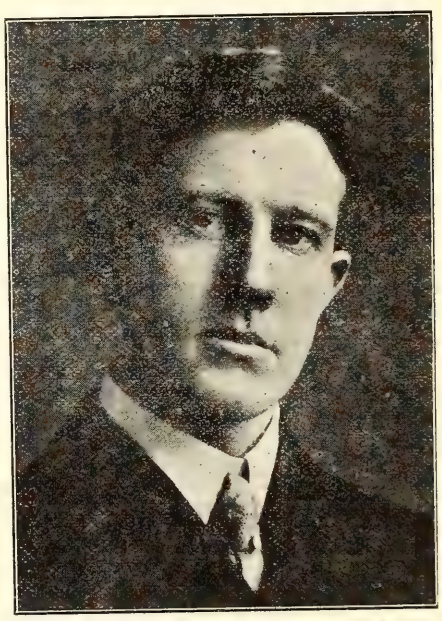
While not largely attended the congress was representative. It was a pleasure to see as many farmers as preachers in the meetings. The president of the "Farmer's Association" of central Illinois was on the program. The president of the largest Grange in this part of the country took part in the discussion. It gave the writer pleasure to see many of our own preachers in the meetings—more perhaps than of any other one church. We are awake to the great problem.

Much time was given to the discussion—and it was a free for all, give and take, in the most wholesome manner. Such subjects as "The Place of the Church in Rural Life," "The Social Value of the Church," "The Place of the Country School in the Community," and "Reasons Why Farmers Retire to the Towns," brought out lively discussions. The relation of the land owner to the tenant came in for its share of discussion also and created some lively tilts.

There were several charts and banners placed about the room where we met (The First Baptist Church). The large banner just behind the pulpit contained the following quotation from Prof. Chas. F. Curtis: "The American system of farm tenantry is the worst of which I have any knowledge in any country." This statement brought out objections from the land owners and defense from Dr. Wilson. Another significant chart showed that of Illinois farmers 47½ per cent owned their farms and 55½ per cent were tenants. Then followed the discussion of the relation of the land owner to the country church near his farm. It was generally agreed that just as he paid school tax to keep up the school, so he should also contribute to the rural church.

A Survey of Conditions.

Among the most interesting features of the program was the report of Rev. Clair S Adams on "Prevailing Rural Conditions." Mr. Adams had been sent by the department of the National Board to make a survey of the church and country in Central Illinois. He went into each community and gathered his statistics in person. He covered many subjects. I can give but one feature of his report which covered the country round about Danville, Bloomington, Decatur and Springfield. He made a careful survey of 225 churches, including country and small towns only. He reports out of that number 77 growing, 45 standing still (report includes past ten years), 56 dying and 47 dead. By dying he means gradually losing membership and by dead he means where services have been abandoned altogether.



Rev. O. W. Lawrence, Minister Central Church, Decatur.

This survey included all denominations. Of the churches surveyed, 27 were Christian churches. Of this number 13 were growing, 5 standing still, 4 were losing ground and 5 were dead. Our own country churches showed the best percentage of growth of any religious body surveyed, except the Presbyterian, and Mr. Adams explained that was not a fair test since he went only to places where there was a live Presbyterian church in order not to create any suspicion and be introduced by the local minister. Of those showing the greatest percentage of loss the Methodist had suffered most. Out of 55 Methodist churches surveyed 18 were dead, and only 12 were growing. The others were at a standstill or dying. The Baptist showed but 4 growing.

Failed to Serve Community.

Mr. Adams attributed the death of a church in almost every instance to the fact that it failed to serve the community. He gave some deplorable figures, too, on the support of the country preacher. He found one country church served by a bright, active, consecrated man who gave all his time to the church for a salary of $400 per year. The members of his congregation had purchased within the past year six automobiles, not one of which cost less than $2,000. The salary question caused a lively tilt between the farmers and the preachers. One farmer declared his preacher was well-paid—he could hire four men on the farm for the price given the preacher. Another farmer said the preacher did not earn what he did receive. For example, he had five men employed on his farm, and the preacher had never called on them or made their acquaintance. A woman then remarked the preacher always called when money was needed, but seldom otherwise.

Preachers On the Defensive.

You can imagine how such remarks as these would bring a company of preachers to their feet. The chairman had a hard time holding them down to one at a time. No man lost his head, however. One city preacher said he had been raised in the country and had since kept in close touch and that according to his observation the average farmer gave about one-fourth as much to the church according to his ability as the business man in town. Dean Skinner, of the Agriculture College of Purdue University, came to the preachers' defense by saying that when a young man graduated from the argicultural department of the university he never thought of accepting an agricultural position for less than one thousand or twelve hundred dollars. And why should the young man from the Bible college who had spent more time on his education do less? The whole discussion, however, resulted in the feeling that the preacher who served the community and made his church a real center of social and religious service would be paid sufficiently. A country pastor declared the farmer was not stingy, he only needed educating.

The whole trend of the Congress was to the effect that the country church ought to be a center for every activity of the country life—a place for social gatherings, for meetings of an educational nature, a place for culture and entertainment. It ought also to furnish a play-ground and supervise the play. The most significant in a long list of resolutions adopted call for the fulfilment of the following conditions:

Resolutions.

The effective generalship of the religious forces of the state under a state inter-denominational commission or federation of churches, and the consolidation of local church work under local church federations, and as rapidly as possible the organization of church activities on the basis of parishes regarded as geographic districts:

The activity of the church as the parish social center, the promoter of recreative, artistic, and intellectual activities of that half of life's activities in which people engage because of the uplift and satisfaction which they contain.

Together with the regular preaching, within the possible hearing of every citizen of the state, of those ideals of personal life and social service which are our heritage from Christ.

The efficiency of the rural schools and their adaptation to rural needs, ultimately to be affected in many instances only by the consolidation of numerous districts in the support of one central school, and the deliberative consolidation of the activities of the church, the school and the home.

On the whole the Congress was most enjoyable and wholesome. The daily papers gave large place to it reporting it on the front page with full headlines like a political convention. The fact that the country church is up for discussion is hopeful.

Central Church, Decatur.

The Christian Century

Published Weekly by

The New Christian Century Co

700-714 East Fortieth St., Chicago, Ill.
United Religious Press Building.
Phone Douglas 3113.

Entered as Second-Class Matter Feb. 28, 1902, at the Post Office at Chicago, Illinois, Under Act of March 3, 1879.

EDITORS
CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON.
HERBERT L. WILLETT.

CONTRIBUTING EDITOR
SILAS JONES.

SUBSCRIPTIONS.
Subscription price $2.00. If paid strictly in advance $1.50 will be accepted. To ministers if paid strictly in advance, $1.00 per year. Single copies 5 cents.

EXPIRATIONS.
The label on the paper shows the month to which subscription is paid. List is revised monthly. Change of date on label is a receipt for remittance on subscription account.

DISCONTINUANCES.
Special Notice—In order that subscribers may not be annoyed by failure to receive the paper, it is not discontinued at expiration of time paid in advance (unless so ordered), but is continued pending instruction from the subscriber. If discontinuance is desired, prompt notice should be sent and all arrearages paid.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.
In ordering change of address give the old as well as the new. If the paper does not reach you regularly, notify us at once.

REMITTANCES
Should be sent by draft or money order payable to The New Christian Century Company. IF LOCAL CHECK IS SENT ADD TEN CENTS FOR EXCHANGE.

ADVERTISING.
Nothing but clean business and reliable firms advertised. Rates given on application.

Church Life

—Negligence in proof-reading made us say last week that Mr. E. M. Bowman would report the great climax meeting of the Women's Jubilee in New York City next week. If we were compelled to put up with a mere man's report of this gathering we could find no layman better prepared by information and sympathy to do justice to the event than Mr. Bowman. But he will be the first to agree with us that Mrs. Bowman's name is a more promising announcement than his own would be. And the type should have said Mrs.

* * *

N. L. Collins of St. Augustine, Ill., has taken up the work at Walter, Okla.

W. J. Cocke of Lexington, Ky., has accepted the pastorate at Greensburg, Ind.

O. L. Cook, pastor at Hutchinson, Kan., assisted in the revival services held at Belmont, Kan.

A district convention will be held at First Church, Jeffersonville, Ky., on April 13 and 14.

R. W. Abberley of Cincinnati, Ohio, is in a short meeting at Lincoln, Neb., with H. O. Pritchard.

C. C. Maple, formerly of Ridgeville, Ohio, has accepted a call to the church at Buckley, Mich.

Charles E. McVay, song evangelist of Hardy, Neb., has some time open for summer meetings.

Frank Thompson, pastor at Bristol, Va., reports four additions on a recent Sunday, and 306 in the Sunday-school.

Robert Graham Frank, pastor at Liberty, Mo., assisted A. W. Luce in a meeting at Excelsior Springs recently.

The evangelistic services held at Topeka, Kan., by the five churches there under the leadership of Charles Reign Scoville closed on March 19.

The Iowa state convention will be held this year at Ottumwa, June 19-23. It is expected that a thousand representatives of the Indiana churches will be in attendance at the meeting held at Columbus, May 15-17.

E. J. Willis has resigned at Kirksville, Mo., to take up the work at Lancaster, Ohio. Mr. Willis is leaving the work in excellent condition at Kirksville, sixteen having been added at two services recently.

A mass prayer meeting was held at the church at Newcastle, Ind., recently, and was participated in by all the churches of the city. Its object was to launch a campaign to prevent the return of saloons in this territory.

The Brotherhood recently organized at First Church, Marion, Ind., held an open meeting on March 16, which was largely attended. Addresses were given by J. K. Shellenberger, Wooster, Ohio, and J. P. Myers, pastor of the church.

Book Award for Best News Item

In order to raise the quality of our news contributions and increase their quantity—The Christian Century proposes to give each week until further notice, a book worth from $1 to $2.50 for the best-told news paragraph sent in. The item must reach the office not later than Friday morning, and is to be furnished exclusively to The Christian Century. The points on which the award will be made are: (1) The importance of the subject matter (2) the interpretation of the subject matter and (3) the interesting style in which it is reported. The length of the article will not count. It may run from 100 to 600 words. The writer will take the editorial point of view unless his name is to appear as the author. The award will be announced in each issue of the paper for the preceding issue. The item will be designated and the name of the book announced but the name of the author will not be published. Illinois reporters will send their news to the Springfield office. All others should be sent to the main office.

The new church recently completed at Petaluma, Calif., was dedicated on March 12. L. O. Ferguson, the pastor, was assisted in the dedicatory services by A. C. Smither of Los Angeles, who gave the principal address, George Meeker, secretary of the state board, D. A. Russell, editor of the Pacific Christian and H. H. Guy of the Berkeley Bible Seminary.

A good letter from C. G. Brelos, of Galveston, Texas, describes the great wall of that city built as a protection against the waves of the sea and calls attention to the need of building a moral wall against vice and sin which rolls in upon the town. He reports the progress of his work as gratifying. The American society is fostering the struggling church there.

Central Church, Warren, Ohio, in raising a fund for some local work has asked each member to contribute the equivalent of one day's income. This is an excellent plan, being fair and equitable to all. It gives each one a chance to have a part in the work and at the same time does not ask anyone to do more than he is able to do.

Dr PRICE'S Cream Baking Powder

Pure, Wholesome, Reliable

Made from cream of tartar derived solely from grapes, the most delicious and healthful of all fruit acids.

Its use is a guarantee of perfect food and a protection against the ills that follow the use of alum, alum-phosphate and other low grade powders.

The mixtures called baking powders that sell for ten or twenty-five cents a pound, or a cent an ounce, are all alike, make from alum and costing less than three cents a pound.

The corner stone of the new church at Eugene, Ore., was laid on Sunday, March 12. J. S. McCallum, the pastor, A. F. Sanderson, acting president of the Eugene Bible University, and several local pastors of other churches participated in the service. This will be a handsome edifice of stone and brick and when completed will represent an expenditure of over $50,000.

The rally of the Disciples of New York City held in connection with the jubilee meeting of the Women's Missionary Movement was held on Thursday, March 30, in the First Church, 142 West 81st street. The following were speakers: Mrs. M. E. Harlan, corresponding secretary of C. W. B. M. of Indianapolis and Miss Florence Miller, jubilee representative of C. W. B. M., Louisville, Ky.

R. W. Abberly closed a meeting at Lebanon, Kan., March 19. In the four weeks, 151 were added to the church, half of this number being men and boys. Percy R. Atkins, during his ministry of fifteen months here has doubled the membership and led his congregation in a splendid building enterprise. The outlook is bright here for a great work.

Central Church, Wichita, Kan., Walter Scott Priest, minister, is making a splendid record in her missionary offerings this year. This congregation now supports three Living Links on the foreign field and one on the home field. That this is the outcome of real spiritual activity in the church is further shown by he fact that thirty-six members have been added recently at the regular services.

The evangelistic services held at Topeka, Kans., by the five churches there under the leadership of Charles Reign Scoville, closed on March 19, with all records broken. One thousand and seven were added in thirty-four days, seventy-five more than were added at Oklahoma City in the same length of time. An audience of five thousand filled the auditorium at the closing service, and many were turned away.

F. F. Walters, pastor at Independence, Mo., preached a sermon on missions to a large audience on March 19, preparatory to the budget offering, May 7. In the evening W. C. Pierce of Chicago, gave an address on Adult Bible Class Work to an audience of 1,200, which was helpful and inspiring. The Sunday-school enrollment on this day was 368, and an effort is being made to reach the 1,000 mark on May 14.

The new church at Shelbina, Mo., was formally dedicated on March 12, Geo. L. Snively of Lewiston, Ill., preaching the dedicatory sermon. Erected at a cost of less than $18,000 it is a beautiful example of modern ideas of church architecture. The building is complete in every detail, each department of church work being carefully considered in the plans.

R. L. Brown recently conducted a successful twelve days' meeting at Rochester, Ind., with the pastor, E. S. Farmer. There were fifty-one additions. A Brotherhood was organized with fifty-six charter members and $1,800 was subscribed to remodel the building. All the departments of the church are in splendid condition with the whole membership enlisted in the work. The Sunday-school is now one of the largest in the city.

Leslie Wolfe writes the following from Manila, P. I.: "Augustin Manikis, one of our brethren, who is a colporteur for the British Bible Society, recently baptized a man in the sea at Patungau, province of Cavite, where a new congregation has recently been organized. Jose R. Guitierra, an exhorter in the M. E. Church, was baptized by our evangelist, Juan Natividad at Baliwag, last month. Jose studied the Bible for himself and without any help from us came to the conclusion that he should be baptized. Then he sought out our evangelist. Jose is a young man yet, knows some English and gives promise of making a good preacher. D. C. McCallum and wife arrived in Manila from Australia, yesterday. He is to have charge of our college at Vigan. J. Stuart Mill is stopping with us a few days on his way from Australia to Kentucky."

There is a singular fragrance of spring and its spiritual counterpart, the awaking of new life, in the pre-Easter appeals of Dr. Wm. Bayard Craig, to his Lenox Avenue congregation in New York City. Dr. Craig believes the Lenten season may be used with great profit. "Every individual feels a physical renewing in the spring. Lent is a time of spiritual renewing for the Christian. These weeks of Lent preceding Easter commemorate the closing scenes in the life of our Lord, the weeks that were spent in the depths of the Shadow of the Cross, fighting our battles against sin and error and winning salvation for men. The Truth of God and all the throbbing life of Christendom are in the call to Christians to give the first place in thought and effort to Christ and the Church during these Lenten weeks." The observance of the Lenten time as an occasion for deepening the spiritual life and entering more fully into the power of our Lord, is an increasing custom in churches of the Disciples.

Turned Out to Die

To preach the Gospel for forty years for the poorer churches and then to be left homeless and penniless is a sad lot. This is the experience of S. S. Landrum. For forty years, and more, he preached, chiefly in the South. Now that he is old and frail, and no longer able to serve he is compelled to seek shelter in the Confederate Veterans' Home, at Austin, Texas. He said just before entering the home, "I gave but little of my life to Cæsar. I gave it all to Jesus. I would rather live on the crusts of my brethren than to enjoy the fat of the land provided by the state or the nation." Why should the faithful old soldier of the cross and the scores of others like him, be left to suffer for the lack of the ordinary comforts of life? If the government under which we live can afford to pay men who have spent their strength in its support, the Church of Christ cannot do less. The most ordinary demands of business and humanitarianism make it imperative that the church provide for her aged dependents. To fail to do is to sacrifice the world's respect.

Then to fail to provide for S. S. Landrum and others like him is to come short of the apostolic order. Paul said, "The Lord hath ordained that they that preach the gospel shall live of the gospel." And the same apostle urged the Corinthian Christians to a generous contribution for the poor saints, without reference as to whether they had served in the pulpit or pew, for there was no clergy class in apostolic times; they were all brethren. Shall we who stand for the apostolic order, so far fail of the apostolic spirits as to turn our aged fellow-servants of the Lord out to die? Surely not, for we plead for a full gospel. And through the National Benevolent Association we are exemplifying it. It is for the care of these fathers and mothers in Israel that the Easter offering is taken.

Institutional Work in Mexico

The People's Institute which was dedicated March 12, might be said to be an experiment. We are walking untrod paths, at least for Mexico. Our endeavor is by a public reading room, out-door gymnasium, game room, baths, night classes in English, book-keeping, Spanish literature, declamation, free medical clinic, socials, Bible classes and religious services, to lift the general community to higher ideals and lead individuals to Jesus Christ. So far we have announced our religious meetings as only one of the activities, and make it plain that no one is in any way obligated to attend these because of his enjoying other privileges of the Institute. Thus we are endeavoring to show by example as by precept the great error in the two extreme influences in Mexico today that are about to make of her a nation without a religion—fanatical Romanism on the one hand, and the rankest materialism on the other. Of course we are meeting with opposition from both of these sources, especially the former which is bringing to bear every possible pressure on the "faithful" to keep them from our influence. We have however, received the most marked encouragement from the government, having been granted concessions never before given to Protestant missions.

The future of The People's Institute is in the hands of Him who has so wonderfully led us in this work up to the present. Whether all our hopes for it will be fulfilled we do not know, but if we can only follow the indications of the all-wise Father, many friends have thought that it will mean an important step in advance for the evangelization of Latin America.

C. Porfirio Diaz, Coah., S. G. Inman.

La Junta, Colo.

We are in the midst of a revival conducted by Joseph F. Findley, pastor of Central Church, Pueblo. Mr. Findley, near the beginning of every service, uses the stereopticon and lectures on Palestine. He follows with an evangelistic sermon and, though he is quiet, simple and direct in his talks, he is sowing the seed of truth in many hearts. To date there have been nine additions and there is the best of prospects of many more. A goodly number are thinking honestly and seriously of surrendering themselves to Christ. Last night the church was packed and four made the good confession. The church itself is being quickened into new life and vigor and many of the members are doing personal work among their relatives, friends and neighbors. We believe God is blessing the meeting and that Mr. Findley is truly representing the Master among us. For this we are rejoicing.

Raymond C. Farmer.

Foreign Society Notes

The missionaries in Harda, India, have secured a piece of land adjoining the present hospital for the new building. The original

MODERN FOOD FOR UP-TO-DATE PEOPLE.

Modern progress is in no way more clearly demonstrated than in the betterment of foods.

For instance, when Graham flour was originated by Dr. Sylvester Graham nearly a century ago, although it then had many healthful properties, it was coarse and unpalatable in its crude state.

But modern science has so improved on the product of those early days that the Graham Crackers now baked by the National Biscuit Company are toothsome and appetizing, having a delicious nutlike flavor, and still retaining the utmost healthfulness—aiding and strengthening the digestion. These modern, wholesome dainties—Graham Crackers—are packed in moisture- and dust-proof packages, and can always be recognized by the well-known In-er-Seal Trade Mark.

HIRAM COLLEGE. Send for Illustrated Bulletin, Souvenir Mailing Card and Complete Catalog to PRES. MINER LEE BATES, HIRAM, O.

BOWLDEN BELLS FOR CHURCH AND SCHOOL Sweet Tone Far Sounding Durable Catalogue Free. AMERICAN BELL & FOUNDRY CO., NORTHVILLE, MICH.

BELLS. Steel Alloy Church and School Bells. Send for Catalogue. The C. S. BELL CO., Hillsboro, O

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS. UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY. Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O. (Please mention this paper.)

WE READ and clip for you daily everything printed in the current country and city press of America pertaining to the subject of particular interest to you.

NEWSPAPERS contain many items daily which would inform you exclusively of where you can secure new business, an order or a contract; where a new store has been started, a new firm incorporated or a contract is to be let. A daily press clipping service means more business

FOR YOU. Send Stamp for Booklet

THE CONSOLIDATED PRESS CLIPPING CO.
1109 167 W. Washington St., Chicago, U. S. A.

Books

WHEN YOU WANT BOOKS
Send your order to us. We handle the books of all publishers, at the lowest prices. Your order will be promptly attended to.
THE NEW CHRISTIAN CENTURY COMPANY
700 East Fortieth Street - - - - Chicago, Ill.

as a token of appreciation of the good work done by the medical missionaries.

India and China are both afflicted with plague. Dr. Drummond writes that Harda is practically deserted, and on this account the annual convention will be held in Jubbulpore March 2-6.

The Women's College in Japan has this slogan for the year, "A larger enrollment and a music teacher." The question of a music teacher is a question of money. If the churches will contribute a half million dollars this year the music teacher needed and other teachers can be sent to the fields.

The Indian Christian Missionary Society has recently baptized its first convert. This station is at Kota. Dr. John Panna is the missionary. The Indian Christians raise the money and direct the work.

P. A. Sherman and his associates have been preaching and singing and selling literature among the pilgrims at Bandakpar. These pilgrims number not less than fifty thousand. "Among this crowd we all worked as best we could. In the morning we divided into groups and went around among the crowd preaching to little groups as they sat about the fire. In the afternoon we did bazar preaching with the whole force and in this way attracted large crowds. On Sunday we marched through the entire bazar singing "Victory to Christ." The ladies in the group sold about two hundred gospels. Dr. Fleming had her medicines along and healed the body while she told the story."

Dr. A. L. Shelton of Tibet has been speaking in the rallies and before the churches ever since his return. Dr. Shelton has had a great experience, and has a great message. His is heard always with profit and delight. Carey E. Morgan spoke of his message as "So simple, and beautiful and wonderful."

The outlook for the greatest offering in our history is bright. Never before have the churches made such serious preparation. Great numbers of the churches have backed up the offering with the every-member canvass. This takes more time and in some cases has delayed the offering, but it will largely increase the offerings.

We urge that the offerings be sent in at once. The society must put its notes at the banks which are now falling due. Send in what you have on hand and if there is more to be collected, make another remittance later.

A goodly number of new Living-links have been reported. Many others are still pressing on and will reach that goal on Children's Day.

The Foreign Society has just received a gift of $2,500 from a good woman in Illinois to be used in building Dr. Drummond of Harda, India, a new hospital. Another kind woman from Indiana has just given $1,000.

STEPHEN J. COREY, Secretary.

Christian Endeavor Lesson

BY W. D. ENDRES.

Topic for April 9: Painting the States White.—Ps. 14:1-7.

"Except your righteousness exceed the righteousness of the scribes and the Pharisees, ye shall in no wise enter the Kingdom of Heaven." This was a frank and fearless arraignment of the lifeless formality of the religious leaders in the days of our Lord, and a call from Jesus to his disciples to a vital religion. It is one of the regrets every Christian has, to see how largely the Phariseeism regnant at the opening of the Christian era, has been repeated in the church through the centuries of her history. We are forced to say that, but for glaring and frequent exceptions, the vital teachings of Jesus have failed of their legitimate fruits. Not that Jesus is at fault, but because men have been content with proper forms void of substance.

But if we are humiliated with our past we shoul look to the future with high expectations. These are days of practical religion. We are insistently demanding that men shall make their religion of vital and practical consequence. The classification of things sacred and secular no longer obtains, because all things are sacred which are right, whether it be the things which occupy our attention in the counting room on Monday or the things of our religious worship on Sunday. Men must be righteous every day. The Pharisee has lost caste within the ranks of this newer spirit of Christianity. It is making itself felt in the war of Christian men on graft. Alderman Merriam, one of the mayoralty candidates of Chicago, is an example. His platform is anti-graft. He is pleading for and promises simple honesty in the executive office of that great city. He is an active member of the Presbyterian church. The agitation against the immorality of high finance, the excessive hours of labor for both men and women, the employment of child labor, extortionate prices and low wages and poor conditions of work are practical results of our attempts to send Pharisceism to the scrapheap of religious experience.

It is in this catagory that the temperance movement must be placed. While from the point of view of economic advantage no valid argument can be made in the defense of alcoholism, Christians are saying that anything that is injurious to men and women must be thrown aside. The frightful results in poverty, disease and crime which can be traced to this vice are well known. Chiefly, therefore, through the agency of the Anti-Saloon League Christian men have set themselves the task of driving the traffic from the country. And in the doing of it they are but seeking to put the principle of righteousness into practice. Since Jesus came to give us life, and since intemperance is the enemy, the destroyer of life, both of which are self-evident, every Christian who would exceed the Scribes and the Pharisees in his righteousness, must be the sworn enemy of intemperance. This must be true first of his own personal life and, also of his attempts to drive the business from the land. This is one of the innumerable opportunities open to us all in our prayer for the coming of the kingdom.

Subscribers Wants

Readers of the Christian Century find its columns valuable for advertising their wants or wares. The charge is one cent for each word, with a minimum of thirty cents for each insertion. Cash must accompany the order to save bookkeeping.

DO YOU NEED HYMN BOOKS for Church or Sunday-school? Write for prices, care of M, NEW CHRISTIAN CENTURY CO.

CHURCH CLERK: Do you need church letters? We furnish a well designed letter in blocks of fifty at 50 cents. Write us, care of X, NEW CHRISTIAN CENTURY CO.

WANTED.—Young man with technical experience in designing and mechanical drafting, graduate preferred, for position in drafting room. Good prospect of advancement. Must be member of Christian Church and an active church worker. Write stating age, experience and lowest salary acceptable. Splendid opportunity right party. None but those meaning business need apply. KERR TURBINE COMPANY, WELLSVILLE, N. Y.

An Open Letter to the Churches of Christ in all the World

We must plant more churches in the younger states and growing cities of the Home Land. Last year in these new and difficult fields, north, east, south and west, the American Christian Missionary Society organized 135 churches and enlisted 741 members. It has 285 missions well on the way to self-support. This is not a tithe of what it has opportunity to do. Two-thirds of America's population is Christless, largely because it lacks a chance to be simply and only Christian. Its loyalty lingers for our liberality.

Our request is for you to order "without money and without price" supplies for the May offering, and that you use the same in an effort to secure an offering from every member of your Church. We entreat you to help us get the information to the people and to provide an opportunity for them to give as each "purposeth in his heart," not grudgingly but willingly, "for God loveth a cheerful giver." You will find "The Puzzled Ranchman," "Seeing American Missions," "The Empire of the Pacific Northwest" and "The Empire of the East" especially informing and inspirational.

We have profited greatly this year by suggestions from Disciples everywhere. This enterprise of American Missions is the business of the whole church and as servants we need the whole church's counsel. Write us.

THE AMERICAN CHRISTIAN MISSIONARY SOCIETY.
Carew Building, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Parting With His People

(Continued from page 11.)

And what say you of this in the days of your prime?" Apprehended by Christ Jesus." I proclaim it in my last sermon here as minister as the oldest and the newest and the best bit of news I know, and I proclaim it as the distinctive glory of the souls of men. We have been apprehended by Christ Jesus, and nobody is out of his grip.

Presses On.

And Paul does not play at the holy business. There is in the words, "I press on," the sleepless passion of the persecutor; there is in the word the hot-footed intensity of a hound that has got the scent. Do you lay your mind on that figure? Have you watched a hound that has just found the trail? Keep that in your mind and then hear the Apostle Paul, "I press on." Having found the scent, the trail, the track, "I press on if that I may apprehend that for which he apprehended me." And that was the supreme ambition that moved him. And mark you, if that be the ambition of the Christian life, the mind centers not upon a detached reward, but upon a vital character. We are not ambitious, if we are Christians, for something outside us, we are ambitious to realize something within us. We are never going to golden streets in heaven unless there are first of all golden streets in our souls. The golden streets of paradise are first of all to be found in the radiant highways of the spirit, and the pearly gates of paradise are first of all to be found in pure lustrous motives that open out into rooms and fields of unselfish service. No one is going to have anything worth calling a harp in glory who has not already harped music in his own soul. But these things are symbolisms not of a heaven outside, but of a heaven within. And the only crown I covet, and it is the only crown coveted by the Apostle Paul, is a crown of glory, which is a crown of life.

What Ambition Like This?

I want to ask you, my brothers, what ambition you would place alongside this? What is there to be named in comparison with it? I suppose that when we reach our fiftieth birthday, there are many things that once concerned us that begin to look very little. When we reach even the prime of our life, there are certain things that begin to drop as unworthy of a man's ambition and crown; and certainly in comparison with the ambitions of the Apostle Paul, every other kind of ambition seems exceedingly trifling. Everything else seems to pale with the swift transit of the years. Mere ease sours into disquietude. Money has fewer and fewer markets as we get older. You did not catch that, did you? Money has fewer and fewer markets as we grow old. Fame turns tawdry, like street decorations after the rain. In every other kind of ambition "the worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched." But the Apostolic ambition lives on, and endures, and is satisfying—the ambition which has partnership in the purposes of Christ, which has fellowship with the heart of Christ, which seeks to become clothed in the glory of Christ.

And now I come to my closing words, and I wish I knew how to speak them. I have prayed, if you will pardon that personal word, more perhaps than usual, that in the closing words of my ministry many a man and woman may find the epoch of their life.

And now my last word to you is this: God's holy love has hold of you just now. You all have been apprehended by Christ Jesus. Tell the good news to yourself. Tell the good news to others. Answer the love-grip. Kneel and obey.

"O Love that will not let me go,
I rest my weary soul on thee;
I give thee back the life I owe,
That in thine ocean depths its flow
May richer, fuller be."

Bethany Graded Sunday School Lessons

International Course

Charles Clayton Morrison, Editor

The Bethany series is now developed to the point where it supplies the entire school—children, young people and adults. The publishers ask all Sunday-school workers carefully to consider the following outline of Bethany publications:

Beginners

Lessons prepared by FRANCES W. DANIELSON.

First Year—Teachers' Text Book—Part I, II, III, IV. Large Pictures (9x12 inches).
Beginners' Stories—(Illustrated folder for Pupils)—Part I, II, III, IV.
Second Year—Teachers' Text Book—Part I, II, III, IV. Large Pictures (9x12 inches)
Beginners' Stories—(Illustrated folder for Pupils)—Part I, II, III, IV.

Primary

Lessons prepared by MARION THOMAS

First Year—Teachers' Text Book, Part I, II, III, IV. (With picture supplement).
Primary Stories—(Illustrated folder for pupils)—Part I, II, III, IV.
Second Year—Teachers' Text Book—Part I, II, III, IV. Large Pictures—(6x8 inches).
Primary Stories—(Illustrated folder for pupils)—Part I, II, III, IV.

Junior

Lessons prepared by JOSEPHINE L. BALDWIN

First Year—Teachers' Text Book—Part I, II, III.
Pupils' Book for Work and Study—Part I, II, III. (With picture supplement).
Second Year—Teachers' Text Book—Part I, II, III, IV.
Pupils' Book for Work and Study—Part I, II, III, IV. (With picture supplement).

Intermediate

Lessons for first year prepared by MILTON S. LITTLEFIELD

Teachers' Text Book—Part I, II, III, IV.
Pupils' Text Book—Part I, II, III, IV. (With maps).

Young People's and Adult Bible Classes

Dr. Loa E. Scott's LIFE OF JESUS, in Fifty-two Lessons. Adapted to young people and adults. An easy, but thorough text.

Professor H. L. Willett's serial treatment of THE LEADERS OF ISRAEL, in The Christian Century. The Publishers will make special arrangements to furnish The Christian Century to classes desiring to use Dr. Willett's course.

The curriculum outlined above furnishes a comprehensive course of religious instruction. It comprises not only the biographies, history, literature, and teachings of the Bible, but also lessons on the history and heroes of the Christian Church, of missionary enterprises, philanthropic movements, and moral reforms.

These lessons afford a signal opportunity for the Sunday-schools of the Disciples to promote Christian union. Sixteen denominations have laid aside sectarianism to prepare the Bethany Graded Lessons for their schools.

THE GRADED LESSONS MAY BE BEGUN AT ANY TIME

Send Today for Order Blanks and Prospectus.

THE NEW CHRISTIAN CENTURY COMPANY
700 East Fortieth Street, Chicago, Ill.

The CHRISTIAN CENTURY

Bible College Library
Jan12'

Volume XXVIII. April 6, 1911 Number 14

Woman's Jubilee Climax Meeting in New York

By Mrs. Marie V. Bowman

CHICAGO

The Christian World

A Department of Interdenominational Acquaintance.

Baptist

"Have We Too Many Church Members?"

It is our custom to go to the census reports for information relative to the strength of the church. The man who reasons accurately from the figures of the census must know a great deal that cannot be tabulated. Church membership may be and often is nothing more than formality. If a man does not become a disciple of Christ on joining the church, if he remains willingly ignorant of the duties and privileges of a disciple, is it not worse for him and for the church that he is called a Christian? The Standard invites the attention of Baptists to the question, "Have we too many church members?" Two paragraphs are given from its editorial:

One of the tragedies of Christianity is found in the failure of Christians to be Christian. This is not said because we fail to reach perfection; because, ever and again, we come upon those who have been "overtaken in a fault." That is not the serious symptom of our common Chrstian life. Rather it is the utter and profound indifference shown by so many who bear the name of Christ to everything that has to do with Christ's cause. They show no love for that which Christ loves. They cannot be induced to give or to labor for the advancement of the kingdom of God. Their attitude furnishes no evidence that they care a whit whether or not this world is made over after the thought of God. They are distinctly less generous, less thoughtful, less helpful than are many who make no profession of discipleship and who stand outside the church. Is the church stronger because they are in it?

We are not pleading for harsh treatment of the weak ones in our churches. Love and patience and effort will win them from the error of their ways. Much less do we seek to minimize the importance of effort to bring men to Christ. We should increase our effort to win our fellowmen to God instead of remitting effort. But we do affirm with all frankness that we overemphasize the importance of getting people into the church when compared with the stress laid upon the momentous task of securing Christian living on the part of those already within the church. We need to realize that the policy of laissez faire which we so generally follow in regard to those who are church members is radically wrong. We need to address ourselves to the great work of bringing the life of our church members up to a much higher level. We need to recognize clearly the fact that we do not so much need more members as we do better ones; that if the church is to have power over the world to win it for God, it must be through the high qualities of character exemplified rather than by mere show of numbers.

Are Preachers Properly Prepared?

What is preaching? Do the teachers in theological seminaries know what sort of preaching is demanded by this age? The Watchman has doubts as to the value of the training received by candidates for the ministry in the schools which are supposed to fit them for their work. It brings no railing accusation against theological professors and theological schools but it insists that something more should be done for the future preachers and that some things now done might, with profit, be left undone. Pulpit preaching by one man, to stated assemblies, was unknown in the early church and arose with the decadence of the churches and the concentration of power and leadership in the hands of a few.

No doubt preaching by one set apart for that purpose is a proper development of Christianity in the crowded conditions of modern life. But the idea that preaching the gospel must be left to one man in a church, while all the rest of the people are simply hearers, is the greatest source of weakness in the Christian churches today. The most rapid advance of Christianity was made the first three centuries, when every Christian was a preacher of the Gospel; and if that idea and practice could be restored to the Christian churches of today, the question of the evangelization of the world in this generation, and of the establishment of the Kingdom of God on earth would be settled.

Tainted Money Discussion Revived.

John D. Rockefeller has signified his willingness to contribute $200,000 toward the endowment of Baylor University, Waco, Texas. It seems that not all the Texas people are enthusiastically in favor of accepting gifts from this source. The managers of Baylor University are not among the objectors. They are ready to accept all the money Mr. Rockefeller may offer. Dr. J. B. Crandill writes in the Baptist Standard: "The truth about the matter is, that there is no such thing as "tainted" money. The further truth about the matter is, that Mr. Rockefeller, in all his gifts, has shown a nobility and unselfishness unparalleled in the history of the world."

Presbyterian

Caste or Democracy?

"Why, I can't afford it. Such things are not for me, anyhow; they are intended only for the fellows who have plenty of money and are used to swell hotels. Why, I wouldn't know what to do with myself at such a dinner even if it didn't cost anything, and I haven't any clothes to wear to such a place." These are the words of a workingman, an earnest Christian, an officer in the church, and one who is seeking to build up the kingdom of God. They were in response to an invitation to attend a men's banquet at a leading hotel and listen to speeches on the forward movement in religion. The Presbyterian Advocate quotes them as a warning to the leaders of the men's movement. It calls attention to the embarassment of the preacher whose small salary does not permit him to patronize dinners at $1.50 a plate, and adds:

We cannot obliterate social lines, even in our churches. Good Christians naturally group themselves into different social sets in accordance with their tastes and training and, far from the ideal though it may be, separate congregations of the same religious denomination in a given city are sometimes necessary principally because of social differences. But while these things are true, certainly it behooves us to cultivate democracy, not caste; therefore in all general movements, intended to enlist Christians of all classes, the most strenuous efforts should be made to spread abroad a spirit of democratic fellowship. We understand fully why special plans are made to reach special classes. As one expressed it, "Business and professional men are accustomed to get together at dinners to discuss matters of interest to them; we simply follow along lines that they are accustomed to." Quite true; but is not this a confession of a lack of democracy in the church? and is the course pursued likely to supply the lack? The subject deserves far more attention than has been given to it. There can be no true Christian brotherhood if there is a lack of democracy. Even a seeming lack of democracy hinders the promotion of Christian brotherhood.

The Preacher and His Audience.

How can better preaching be secured by the churches? Those who ask this question will do well to remember that it takes an audience as well as a preacher to make a sermon. It takes a great soul to hear a great sermon. The man in the pew has much experience that ought to be in possession of the man in the pulpit, but he should look well to his part of the service before he begins to tell the minister how to preach. Frivolous, faultfinding people never hear good sermons. They have not the character to appropriate the thought and passion of a real preacher. In an article in the Presbyterian Advance, W. S. Danley quotes the following from Frederick Lynch:

"Much of the effect oi public speaeking is in the sympathy of one man with another in the audience. When you find people nodding to each other, after you have said some earnest thing, you can depend that the speech is taking effect. But sympathy cannot leap these ten-foot spaces, so that it is almost impossible for a speaker of temperament to speak passionately in a sparsely filled room. On the other hand, before the crowd he speaks with fire and passion. And very small things will affect the good speaker. Some brother in the audience, not in the habit of prolonged thought, begins to turn the leaves of a hymn-book or read the programme or look vacantly about the room. I remember so well how, right in the midst of one of the greatest sermons Phillips Brooks ever preached, a flush of annoyance passed over his face as some shallow woman right before him began to turn the leaves of a hymnal over. There was a very decided break for a moment in the torrential flow of passion and eloquence. Every speaker suffers in this way, but, if the audience knew how much they were losing by it, they would eject any one who broke the spell. Then, too, audiences are greatly affected by the condition of the room in which they meet. If the room be overheated, poorly ventilated, stuffy, the people soon become drugged and the speaker has a double task. Fine speaking depends much upon response, and sleepy audiences respond poorly. Sextons and janitors have killed enough oratory in their time to have saved a nation."

Episcopal

Ministers Live Long and Die Young.

Those who wish to accomplish the feat of living long and dying young should become ministers. How ministers can attain to this distinction is explained by the Churchman:

Insurance statistics, says Dr. Denis Wortman, secretary for Ministerial Relief of the Reformed Church in America, show clergymen live longer than other men, but church statistics show that they die younger.

"They live longer and they die younger than any other class of men. The dead line of the lawyer or doctor is when his pulse actually ceases to beat; the dead line of the minister is when half a dozen men or women in the congregation get the fits and give them to their beloved pastor. At such a time he cries out, 'O that I had wings that I might fly away and be at rest.' His difficulty is not so much in flying as in finding a place to rest." That means inevitably that more than in other professions there will be superannuation. It is very well to ask the clergy to "go on in faith," but Dr. Wortman is quite right in saying that there should be at least an equal emphasis on the demand for faithfulness on the part of the churches, an honorable treatment, such honest and square support as an honorable clergyman deserves.

The Lords Prayer teaches us to pray, in the deepest sense of the word, for it shows us the true order and importance and proportion of the objects of prayer; and to live it out is to live in union with God.—J. B. Illingworth.

The Christian Century

CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON AND HERBERT L. WILLETT, ... EDITORS

The Outlook for Peace

The inquiry, most in harmony with the state of private and public sentiment, at the present moment, is not as to the desirability, but as to the prospects, of universal peace. At no stage in the history of human life has it seemed so desirable as now. The purpose of this article is not to argue that point but to indicate some signs of the near approach of that illustrious and inevitable day.

We really have to go back, in order to discover the causes that produce and the reasons that explain our present and prospective peace conditions. The prophets have seen it coming on for centuries. They have been the foretellers of future events because they have been the forthtellers of present needs and of the supply for those needs. They have been seers, looking right into the nature of the people of their times and seeing what is essential for people of all times, their native instincts and intellects reinforced by the Spirit of God, whose prevision means seeing in advance and whose provision means seeing in behalf of men, thus establishing what we call a providence over men. That instinct of the seer has as surely presaged the coming day as the instinct of the migratory bird has established the fact of his winter home in the South and led him to it.

* * *

Isaiah, the old prophet and poet and orator, dreamed of and declared a future time when men would learn war no more, and would transform their military instruments into agricultural implements. Tennyson caught the vision and saw the time when the war drums would throb no longer and the battle flags would be furled in the parliament of man, the federation of the world. Jesus, the inspirer of Isaiah and of Tennyson, Jesus the original seer, prophet, or forthteller, warned us of wars but he brought to us the forces that would produce ultimate and universal peace. He embodied those forces in himself, implanted them in receptive souls, made those souls distributing points for all the world, thus released them in the world, and correlated them with all the great world agencies that would receive and perpetuate them. He has ever since been directing human history from the vantage point of his present place of eminence and power at God's right hand, toward the golden age of righteousness and peace. He was the great idealist.

The idealist has been in the field ever since—religious sects, like the Quakers, whose members regarded both personal and national war as wrong and could not be made to fight; great individuals, here and there, who have denounced all war as wrong; the thousands who approve war only for defense—the defense of themselves, or of the oppressed, or of some deep, elemental principle, necessary not only to them but to those with whom they wage war. The presence of those people steadily increasing in numbers, and of those principles, growing in power and popularity, has been producing the peace prospects that we all are delighting in.

The "Prince of Peace" has been steadily carring out his program. It is a simple one in its outline. He brings men into peace with our Father and his Father, then with each other, then with what is right and good in humanity and the world, makes men feel that all the world and all people belong to their Father. The instincts and talents for war with each other he uses in war for each other and shifts the field of battle to the moral level. There will be war, but it will be altruistic and ethical, and the virtues, like courage, that have always seemed to require a military nurture, will grow greater in this warfare. Then, the first reason for thinking that peace is possible is that it is a dream of human nature, ennobled and enabled by divine nurture till the dream itself is becoming universal.

* * *

The second reason is that, in the world of relationships and realities, social, political and industrial, the peace idea is being actualized, taken out of the realm of dreams and put into deeds. The captains of achievement are captivated by the idea. It is gripping the heads of the thinkers and the hands of the doers as well as the hearts of the dreamers. Modern liberty, both civil and religious, comes from that peace ideal in the hearts of the few, as its germinal point, and is to grow into peace for all, as its terminal point. Liberty for oneself is never complete till it is secured for the one who would even deprive us of our liberty. That means peace.

So the publicist and the practicalist are committed to universal peace. Every industry is crying for it—coöperation, rather than conflict. When Sherman said, "War is hell," he expressed his appreciation of heaven. When Grant was asked to attend a military review in London, he replied, "I never want to look upon a regiment of soldiers again." In that he gave his estimate of peace. The department of state at Washington has long ago moved for universal peace, in the part it has taken in the "Peace Tribunal" at The Hague, and in helping to stop the war between Russia and Japan. When John Hay was saving China from dismemberment, and Elihu Root was drawing up twenty-four treaties of arbitration, our government, through the state department, was moving toward world peace.

* * *

The economists are coming out for peace. A man with pencil and paper in his hand and even a limited number of convolutions in his head can figure that the twenty billions spent for war, during the nineteenth century, have been an investment in death and disease and poverty and sin and anguish and hatred; that the fourteen billion war debt of the world, at the present time, is an unjust mortgage to put on the income of the future generations; and that our half billion annual expense for our naval and war departments—70 per cent of all our income through taxes—is an affront to the potent peace sentiments now taking possession of the world. The revolt against such inexcusable waste of wealth is becoming widespread and that is a token for good.

War is more and more distracting to the world's pursuit of its mission and destructive to all its cherished values. That is another hopeful sign. Deadly weapons make war dreadful. Perhaps the aëroplane will become another harbinger of peace.

Human development is growing more altruistic. The solidarity of the race is a felt fact. The cry from remote parts of the world is a cry from our brothers. Count Apponyi, the Hungarian nobleman who has just visited our country, appeals to our government to aid Europe in spreading peace. I know no man who is a more complete blend of the idealist and the practicalist than Mr. Andrew Carnegie, and he is one of the growing class of leaders in the war against war. The spirit of democracy was a wandering spirit till the day when Roger Williams gave it a permanent and ruling place in the constitution of a state.

There is an extraordinary interdependence among the nations, in recent years. Moral and material, physical and spiritual bonds have been discovered, unfelt before, and they bind the nations together with the ligaments of life. Advocates of peace are arising in unexpected places.

* * *

A third inquiry as to the definite agencies now at work toward that end may be brief. Besides the ministry of the gospel, we must note the organization of the Hague Tribunal for international arbitration and the fact that many disputes have been settled by it, any one of which might have led to war. We must take account of the American Peace Society, and its conferences each year at Lake Mohonk, under the direction of Albert G. Smiley, and its aggressive work, the whole year round. The most significant event that makes for peace is the gift of ten million dollars by Andrew Carnegie, to be used by directors for the promotion of peace. Those directors represent the highest human sentiments of America.

There is a special responsibility on America, for the nations of Europe must move together. They are packed in and no one is well fitted for leadership. Besides, we fully stand for the things that have made peace possible. Fortification of the Panama Canal is no more needed that it is for the Suez Canal and it would be an insult to the nations.

There is a responsibility on the great religious bodies whose teachings of the scriptures have nurtured peace sentiments—Presbyterian, Episcopalian, Baptist, Methodist, Disciple, Lutheran, Congregational and other bodies will be holding their annual meetings soon and it would be scarcely short of criminal if they should fail to give the movement a forward impulse by suitable action.

The laws of accumulation and acceleration are at work. The growth in the past fifty years has been immense. The next five years may bring a development which no one now can anticipate.

J. S. K.

Social Survey

Sunday Post-office Closing

Beginning with last Sunday, every post-office in the country will hereafter be closed all day Sunday. This applies to mail delivery. Regular Sunday box-collections will be made in cities, and in a few of the larger offices special delivery windows will not be closed. An order to this effect from Postmaster-General Hitchcock, is the result of a long and country-wide campaign to give postal carriers a day of rest. Many months ago, Dr. G. W. Grannis, of New York, president of the Lord's Day Alliance, began the struggle in behalf of the carriers. As in all great reform movements, Doctor Grannis found apathy of government employés one of the greatest obstacles to be overcome. How well he succeeded is well known. Carriers in cities throughout the country became enthused and presented petitions for Sunday closing to all their patrons. The result was astonishing. The matter had been taken up previously in the press, pulpit and platform, and the public was familiar with the movement. In many cities petitions received the name of every one approached, and in others the opposition was so small as to be practically nil. Many offices were closed individually several months ago, and notably among them the office at Detroit, Mich. Results there are so universally satisfactory that the department was justified in making the demanded general closing. April 2 should be a day of rejoicing. In this country of so many liberties we are prone to forget others who have not all the privileges we enjoy. In extending the day of rest to the letter carriers we have merely given them what most of us take for granted in our own lives—one day in the week in which to rest. The position of the carriers has been improved. Whatever betters their condition will improve the service they render, and the country is a direct gainer by the change.

Present Political Outlook

President Taft shouldered a big task when he undertook to get the Republican party to line up on certain matters of legislation in Congress, and having failed there, he has called a special session of the sixty-second congress, which will be dominated by Democrats, to reconsider two important measures. In one of these—reciprocity—he feels reasonably sure of success; in the other—the permanent tariff board measure—he is less certain. His troubles are yet far from ended. He desires that congress shall act upon these two measures as speedily as is expedient, and then adjourn until the regular session. He frankly admits the existing tariff law should be revised, and has characterized the woollen schedule as indefensible, but will urge congress not to act at this time because of the lack of accurate, expert information. The tariff board will be ready to report at the regular session, and congress will then be able to act intelligently upon the real merits of the case. The Democrats are inclined to ignore the president's wishes in this matter, and the ways and means committee is reported to be preparing to open up the tariff question. Just how this will be done the committee has not decided. Some Democratic representatives wish to tack schedule-revision riders on to the reciprocity bill and omnibus the whole through or put the senate and the president on record against the measure. This, some Democrats think, would make political capital for them. But that party is by no means united on this question. In some sections of the South a tariff sentiment has been growing upon the people. We find the Democratic party only less convulsed than the Republican. More recently there has appeared an inclination not to load the reciprocity measure with riders. The Democrats realize the upper house is still in the hands of the Republicans, and, with a Republican president, it will not be possible to pass too radical revision measures, even when using reciprocity as a lever to force them. The result is as predicted. A feeling of uneasy uncertainty pervades the country and is bound to affect business to some extent until the matter is settled. Canada is still holding off. There is no doubt but that the Canadian parliament will pass the measure, but it will not do so until the British parliament has released it from the obligations of the British preferential relations with several foreign countries. This release will undoubtedly be given, but will require the readjustment of foreign relations, and may lead to the extension of the reciprocity idea between the United States and a number of other countries.

The Corporation Tax

The United States Supreme Court has decided adversely to corporate interests in the case against the government in which the interests attempted to establish the unconstitutionality of a corporation tax. As a result, the government will not repay the $25,000,000 which the corporations paid in under protest last year. When President Taft recommended reduction in the tariff two years ago he found it necessary to replace, in some way, the loss in revenue involved in the reductions. The supreme court had already decided adversely upon personal tax. There was little likelihood of a change of attitude. So the corporation tax was brought forward and made a part of the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill. As soon as it was enforced, interests began the fight to have that section declared invalid. They attacked the law on the ground that it is an income or direct tax; that it unjustly discriminated between corporations and partnerships; that it interferes with state control by imposing a tax on state-given franchises; and that it made corporate affairs public and was therefore a dangerous inquisitorial law. On these and other grounds the supreme court was unanimous in upholding the government. The court regards the tax as an excise duty—an assessment upon the transaction of business. Regarded as a return for a privileged granted, the tax is held just. The tax is imposed only on corporations found to be "prosperous." One per cent of the entire net income of corporations over and above $5,000 is collected. In the aggregate this means a handsome sum to the government, but it cannot be regarded in the light of a burden on the classes which it affects. The greatest value of the law, however, is not found in the revenue which will be realized from it. Of much greater value is the power the government gains through it of supervising and accounting corporation affairs and regulating their business by law.

New York Factory Fire

Another fire catastrophe was added to the already heart-rending list of the past few months when a ten-story shirt-waist factory in New York City burned, snuffing out nearly 150 lives. The cause of the fire is unknown, but it broke out during work hours on Saturday, Mar. 25, and spread with lightning rapidity, cutting off the escape of those on the upper floors. From the eighth, ninth, and tenth floors it is said there was scarcely a person escaped. Is such a condition as this tenable in the United States? The tale of the ruins is truly heart-rending. Inadequately provided with fire-escapes, what were provided were absolutely useless. The doors and passages leading to them were locked or so blocked that escape was impossible. The charred remains of many victims were found where they perished, madly trying to open up these doors. Scores were trapped on the upper floors, and, finding escape impossible, they leaped from the windows to the pavement below rather than bear the agonies of the flames. But a few weeks ago an inspection was made of factory buildings in New York City and 3,500 were reported to be without adequate fire protection. This building was one of that number, but nothing had been done to remedy the evil. Fire Chief Croker himself is quoted as saying that had the warning sounded by the inspectors been heeded the catastrophe would have been avoided. Fire-proof! yes that building was fireproof, and it stood the fire well. But almost no provision was made for the escape of occupants. Pure carelessness, nay, criminal carelessness here resulted in the loss of at least 141 lives. This is not the only case of such gross neglect. There are thousands of buildings in just as dangerous condition as that occupied by the Triangle Shirtwaist Company. The people of New York are taking up a public subscription to aid the bereaved dependents of the victims, and their action is entirely worthy. But how much better it would be if the same spirit and earnestness could have been turned to the remedy of the evil instead of to the aid of those deprived of sustenance through it.

School Buildings as Social Centers

Not a little has been written on the desirability of utilizing the city public-school buildings after school hours. Millions of dollars are invested in them and they are well worth the outlay. They surely could be made a social center for the adults as well as for children. The fusing of the possibly discordant elements of the different peoples in this educational melting-pot is one of its valuable functions. If the mingling of the youth in the schools is helpful to dissipation of inherited foreign and native prejudice, why would not the mingling of neighbors in a school center be stimulative to community feeling and to love of law and order? Although the country schools are changing in character and, in some sections, notably changing in their area owing to the growth in the size of farms, nevertheless the public-school building still furnishes an available social center. In the revival of the country church the successful country pastor cannot overlook the possibilities provided in the better district school buildings. The National Municipal League recently appointed a committee on "school extension," and its report contained the following: "We have the public-school plants, but most of us no more appreciate what it means to have these possessions than the people in Europe before 1492 appreciated what it meant to have the earth. There was a whole hemisphere of incalculable wealth and opportunity about which they knew nothing. And in the public-school plant there is a whole hemisphere of value unrealized, undiscovered, by those who think of it simply as a building for the education of children with the additional use of an occasional evening school." The report defined a social center as "the public building or group of buildings and grounds which form the capital of the neighborhood, the focal point of its common educational, recreational, political and social life, the institution which is to the neighborhood or smaller division of a city as the civic center is to the city as a whole."

An Unpleasant Duty, but a Duty

The frightful revelations of the spread of venereal diseases in the United States are arousing people to the necessity for aggressive action of some sort looking to reformation. Physicians who are familiar with the conditions could horrify many people with statements of some of the facts in the case. Christian leaders and editors of religious papers have, possibly, been too hesitant in referring to the increase of this "black plague." The time has come, it seems to us, when any false modesty should be put aside and the whole situation looked at in a calm and dispassionate manner. When our children fall into the mud, we do not hesitate, unpleasant as the task may be, to cleanse them. When society is in danger of contagion from this moral and physical leprosy, ought we to be waiting to provide a cure, even if we run some risk ourselves by coming into contact with this moral filth? Two or three remedies can be applied: We can break our silence and speak of the dangers of immorality; we can urge the passage of laws compelling the registration of cases of infection, and we can begin to teach, in the public schools, the lessons of sex relationship and of social purity. President Eliot has recently declared that "the social evil and the diseases incident thereto ought to be publicly discussed; so that the feasible remedies may be decided upon and applied. I am entirely convinced that the policy of silence upon these subjects has failed disastrously." Mr. John D. Rockefeller, Jr., who, as the foreman of the grand jury of New York City, investigated the "White Slave" traffic in that city, recently wrote as follows to Mr. Arthur Burrage Farwell, of Chicago: "The suggestion that lessons upon the sex relations and purity be taught in the public-schools, is a very interesting one. Personally I feel very strongly that such instruction should be given in the public-schools and also in other schools and colleges. At the same time I recognize that it is a most difficult subject to present and that very few public-school teachers would be capable of presenting it in a wise and proper way. Until special courses had been prepared and teachers had generally become educated on the subject it would probably need to be presented by a few selected teachers who would make that their specialty. Many will argue that this is a very dangerous experiment—while granting the contention it is fair to raise the question as to whether to make the experiment is more dangerous than to leave children and young people in ignorance of this question or rather to get their knowledge of it from impure sources."

Present Need of Deep Religious Convictions

Under the stress of modern progress, there is constant danger, in our religious life, of drifting into unconcern and indifference regarding interests of the highest concern. Change of material conditions react upon our purposes and ideals. The temper of life which surrounds us modifies our views and estimates of moral standards and spiritual requisites. Laxity in religious duties is often but a change of viewpoint and for this reason all the more apt to prove injurious to strength of character. The modern Christian man needs a deeper conviction of truth and of the realities of life than did the Puritan, if he is to measure up at all to his virtues. The greatest competition a Christian man puts forth today should be found in the struggle for self-mastery and for obedience to the will of God.

Editorial Table Talk

Missionary Exposition and Pageant

It will be remembered that two years ago there was held in the city of London a Missionary Exposition called "The World in London," in connection with which there was a pageant called "Darkness and Dawn," setting forth in a series of dramatic representations a few significant scenes in the history of Christian Missions. The exposition itself was an effort to reproduce the exact conditions of some of the most important mission fields, in such a manner as to awaken interest on the part of that large company of people who are not so much opposed to missions as unaware and indifferent.

The plan of the exposition and pageant was so admirably conceived and so successfully carried out that after the conclusion of the London dates the same representation was given in a number of other English cities, and with the same successful results.

A plan so admirably adapted to accomplish educational purposes in mission work was not to be limited to Great Britain. The same exposition and pageant is to be opened in Boston about the middle of the present month, and to continue for some time. This will be only the first of a long series of American reproductions of the same great idea. The exposition and pageant are to be given in Chicago during the spring of 1913, as it takes more than a year to prepare the large number of people who have part in the representations.

Those who have had experience in the work insist that the most significant feature of the enterprise is the educational value of the representations to those who participate as helpers, or "stewards," as they are called. This number will reach 18,000 in Boston. And it is believed that not less than 20,000 will be enlisted in the Chicago representation. Strong emphasis is laid by the leaders upon the fact that the best results are the religious inspirations received by the workers and the visitors. In every case the financial results have been amply satisfactory, but this is regarded as the least important of the features.

By-products of Every Member Canvass

One of the churches which followed the excellent suggestion of the Laymen's Missionary Movement and made an "every-member canvass," found that one of the by-products of its efforts was a renewed sense of fellowship among its members and a knowledge of the spiritual and social needs of its parish of which even the pastor had been previously in ignorance. Why would it not be worth while in the larger churches to organize such a system of thorough visitation? Under the direction of the pastor and deacons, or of a specially appointed committee, groups of members could call upon every family in the church. The faithful women of the churches, in some happy instances at least, are accustomed systematically to make visits upon the other women of the church greatly to the profit of the callers and the called upon. But we have in mind the summoning of the men to this duty—or to this pleasure and privilege—or at least the sending forth on this mission of sociability a man and his wife. If thoroughly organized and carefully continued and followed up, this plan could not but be helpful to church life and stimulating to church efficiency. These committees would be sure to get valuable information about the homes of the people. One Laymen's Movement committee, for instance, discovered a family which professed to be surprised that they were still members of the church upon whose membership roll their names were accurately printed. There are always, in every church, some members who are wont to declare that "no one ever calls on us except when the church wants money out of us." Such as these would receive a new impression. Every church, too, has its "submerged tenth" or more, those who, for one reason or other, cannot, or do not, attend the public services. What a blessing a cheery smile and hearty handgrasp might prove to them! The "shut-ins" would be delighted to meet their fellow-members. They are glad to see the pastor, but sometimes, no matter how untrue it may be, they think his calls are "professional." These are some of the advantages which might come to those who are "at home," but the benefits which would come to those who did the visiting would not be, by any manner of means, the least part of the good of an "every-member canvass" for the sake of the members rather than for the sake of the missionary societies. We believe the suggestion is worthy of consideration. Perhaps even the smaller churches in which the members are accustomed to say that "everybody knows everybody" might find that like most generalities this, too, is not altogether true. And, besides, the task might prove to be helpful to revision of the list of members, even more helpful than the compulsion of the budget.

Saving Blind Babies

"The baby in its first year works harder than at any other time in life, getting a grip on vital things," writes Mrs. Cynthia Westover Aden, president general of the International Sunshine Society, in The Survey. "Tennyson's lines emphasize this:

'But, as he grows, he gathers much,
And learns the use of I and me,
And finds I am not what I see
And other than the things I touch.'

"Now the blind baby has to come to this apprehension of the Ego by devious processes, through touch, hearing, and the sense of smell. The work is heavier. And help from the untrained parent is not to be expected, even where the parent is not compelled by the need of earning a livelihood to neglect the loved little boy or girl. With children who can see, the parent has the guide of personal memories running back almost to babyhood, and the guide of common and conventional treatment of babies. Both fail miserably when applied to the case of the blind baby.

"Until the recent establishment of homes for blind babies, such infants took their chances with special attendants always unscientific and often unsympathetic, if the parents were more than well-to-do people; or in middle-class homes, were fed and washed and pitied by affectionate mothers whose ideas of drawing out the mind were primitive and impossible; or in the wage-earning class they were left long hours each day, locked in rooms or even tied up, to guard against accident, while the mother earned aliving; or, if foundlings, they were picked up and classed as idiots, and made to become idiots by institutional surroundings."

Seems True and Harmless, but is Unchristian

The modern Christian temper makes a place for tolerance and comity. The things in which the churches agree are so many, and so manifestly more important than the points in which they differ, that federation for effecting common moral and social purposes is regarded by Christians everywhere as desirable and necessary.

When it comes to talking about anything beyond federation, however, about real union and the abandonment of the sectarian order, there is one surviving conception which is amiably allowed to persist and to stand in the way of the fuller unity for which Christ prayed. This is the conception that each denomination, ours at any rate, stands for some distinctive and all-important truth which would be lost were our denomination to surrender its separate existence.

The Christian Century commented recently on an ably conducted Methodist paper's justification for the maintenance of a separate denominational young people's society. The claim was set forth that Methodism stands for some distinctive spiritual truth which calls for the training of a generation of young Methodists.

We do not believe that this claim would be made by such a broad-minded Christian as we know the editor of the Epworth Herald to be if the invidious implications of the conception were brought fairly to his mind. Has not the time come when this specious claim of distinctive virtue should be squarely challenged and tested? As a general statement, it sounds not unreasonable, and the average person will let it pass for true, but it will not bear analysis.

No big-minded man, touched with the new spirit of fraternity and mutual appreciation that is now abroad in the church, will subscribe to the claim when it is translated from general into specific terms. The moment he undertakes to say just why one should be a Methodist rather than a Presbyterian he feels how untrue is the claim of distinctive excellence. The fact is that there are no reasons save purely adventitious ones, such as family history, convenience, personal acquaintance and so forth, for preferring one evangelical denomination rather than another.

A writer in the Central Baptist (St. Louis) takes the claim seriously for his own denomination and proceeds to state specifically its distinctive excellences. It is such a good illustration of the absurdity of the innocent looking generalization that we reproduce it here.

I reason in this fashion: If we have peculiar views that cause us to stand out distinct from other religious bodies, these views are either valuable or worthless, true or fake. If the latter, then we ought to discard them and cease to exist. If they are valuable, we stand for something worth standing for. If we stand for something valuable, then it is folly to keep silent that other people will imagine we are ashamed of what we believe. If we fear to proclaim our views, we lose our own self-respect. It is easy therefore to see how Baptists grow who are wisely aggressive in doctrine and who die when they are not.

Who teaches salvation by grace as the Baptists do? Who really and truly understands repentance, faith, regeneration, and sanctification but the Baptists? Who in fact wants to know what the Bible says about baptism and the Lord's Supper but the Baptists? Who stands for soul liberty and church liberty as the Baptists do? What people with any history worth speaking of have nothing in it to put them to shame except the Baptists? Who but the Baptists have proclaimed the Bible as the one standard of faith and practice and consistently lived up to this declaration? Who have suffered so much and so gloriously as the Baptists?

Such sentiments as these are not representative of the spirit of the great Baptist denomination at all. Not a single one of the points implied by the above interrogatories is true—not one. In not a single one of those particulars is the Baptist denomination superior to the Methodist denomination, or the Congregational, or the Presbyterian. The Christian Century believes it is important to admit this, and of vital and far-reaching importance to bravely accept the practical consequences of such admission.

The Greater Need

In a letter just received from a minister of ability, consecration and success, there occurs this line: "I doubt if I shall remain in this church much longer. They want a big business manager, and not a minister and preacher. The former is quite out of my line."

The situation described is altogether too frequent in our churches. Frequently the administrative work of the congregation is almost wholly left without attention by the men in the membership who are best able to make such work effective.

It is a pathetic situation when the officers of the church, elders and deacons, are either chosen from the least efficient and least successful men in the membership, or, if successful themselves, they are indifferent to the business and administrative welfare of the church, and put upon the preacher a burden too heavy to be borne.

It is frequently the case that men who are successful in business, proprietors of factories, heads of stores, banks, or other aggressive lines of business, are unwilling to devote to the business of the church time and efficiency that would solve with scarcely an effort on their part the perplexing problems of organization and finance with which so many churches struggle ineffectively.

Such men go on devoting themselves to their own business, while the work of the church in which they might be experts is left in the hands of men either without business experience or occupying small places as employes, merely because they are willing to accept the responsibilities which the others evade.

Meantime the finances of the church are in a tangle. The minister's salary is unpaid. Needed repairs are neglected. The missionary offerings represent only a fraction of the church's responsibility, and the minister is oppressed with a sense of futility which presently drives him elsewhere, in the hope that he may find a church where there will be a fair distribution of labor, and where the business experience of the successful men of the congregation can be coined into church efficiency.

We are not overlooking for a moment the fact that in some instances the so-called successful business men in the membership of the church are no credit to its moral standards. It is too frequently the case that a man who is known both as a leading merchant, manufacturer, banker or professional man, and as a member of the church has a reputation for indirection, hardness of spirit, unscrupulousness in conduct, and even moral delinquency which reflects unhappily upon all that the church holds sacred.

It is far better in such instances that the church should rely upon the business abilities of less successful but more conscientious and exemplary men. Nothing is to be gained by exploiting those of unsavory reputation as church officials.

But there are plenty of successful business men who are at the same time devoted Christians. These men owe it to the church to accept office and to work at the task. Not until the manhood of our churches is awakened to the sense of responsibility for the welfare of the local congregation can any department of Christian work be efficiently administered.

This is the first duty of the brotherhoods, men's leagues and other organizations of the manhood of the churches. And it is a program large enough to give ample activity to the men in most of our congregations.

Such a program of church efficiency would lead legitimately to coöperation with other such groups of men, in promoting the great forward movements of the brotherhood, and of the universal church for the realization of the kingdom of God.

Recent Excavations in Palestine

For many years biblical students have been looking to the Hill of Samaria with constant expectation of important finds whenever the excavator's spade should open up this wonderfully promising mound.

As is well known, Samaria was one of the most important localities through the long centuries of Hebrew civilization. The site was purchased by Omri, the father of Ahab, who removed thither the capital from the indefensible site of Shechem.

From that date onward till the destruction of Samaria in 772 B. C., the place was the center of political and social interest in the Northern Kingdom. After its destruction by Sargon the site remained desolate until rebuilt in the Herodian times, when it once more became a capital of importance, and was named Sebaste in honor of the emperor.

Herod the Great made it a beautiful city by his elaborate scheme of public buildings. And the remains of this period have been visible above ground in the form of rows of pillars and fragments of architectural material scattered over the place.

In 1908 Harvard University secured a firman from the Turkish government to conduct excavations on this site. During the past three years notable discoveries have rewarded the work of the excavators, although during the first year they were seriously handicapped by official opposition and bad weather conditions. The first important result was the disclosure of a great stairway, wide and impressive, with an altar at its foot, near which was a mutilated marble statue of great size. At the top of the stairway was a paved platform, and on the further side there were the massive walls of buildings.

It was believed that the statue represented Augustus, while the altar was probably constructed by the Herods, the stairway and platform belonging probably to later times. In 1909 there was excavated south of the platform a large structure which appears to be a temple erected by Herod in honor of Augustus. Underneath the floor level of this building were the remains of private houses of the Greek period, and still lower were found the massive walls of a large Hebrew structure, which, it is thought, was the palace of Omri and Ahab.

On the western side of the hill was found a Herodian gateway flanked by two great round towers. Near the village which now occupies a part of the hill was found an open paved space which was identified as the forum of Herod's city. Near it was a large building which was believed to be a basilica or church. There is no doubt that the finding of the Omri-Ahab palace is the most important discovery yet made in Palestine. The further investigation of this building occupied the explorers during 1910. Nearly one and a half acres have been exhumed, according to the report of Professor David G. Lyon, the director, who calls attention to the fine work of the masons as a sidelight on the attainments of Hebrew architects and builders in this early period.

Nearby, plentiful remains of pottery inscribed with Hebrew characters have been found, and it is believed that these come from the period of Ahab. The writing is similar to that of the "Moabite Stone" inscribed by King Mesha, a contemporary of Ahab. The names include many which have striking likeness to those found in the Old Testament.

The work at Samaria has been in charge of Professor George A. Reisner, who has brought to the enterprise the results of his long experience in similar work in Egypt. A correspondent informs us that reports and photographic illustrations will soon be ready for publication, according to advices from Professor Reisner. A recent article in the Harvard Review deals interestingly with this important find.

It is apparent that only a beginning has been made at this remarkable site. It is perhaps the best in all Palestine, because the remains of ancient life have suffered less from exposure and plundering than in other places where the soil has less depth, and where digging has been more or less constant, as at Jerusalem.

Missions are not an occasional duty, but the essential necessity of Christian life. It is not an exceptional enterprise to which man is occasionally summoned, it is the fundamental condition without which man cannot live. It is not like an army summoned once or twice a century to repulse a special foe, feeling itself unnatural, expecting from the moment of its enlistment the time when it shall lay down its arms and go back to the works of peace. It is like the daily activity of the city, taken up naturally every morning, constituting the normal expression of the city's life, never to cease while the city lives, the pulse which shows at any moment what degree of vitality the city has—such is the missionary spirit of the Christian Church.—Phillips Brooks.

The Longing for Christian Union—A Passion

"That the world may believe that thou didst send me." Unless the main purpose of the church is held steadily before us, there is danger that we shall mistake personal and sectarian ambitions for the longing after Christian union. The sin of sectarianism is that it hides the truth. Only those who put the emphasis upon service really desire Christian union. The Roman Catholic Church proclaims in season and out of season that it is willing and anxious to swallow up all the Protestant denominations. It concedes nothing. The Protestant Episcopal Church has equally benevolent designs. Other bodies of the Christians of like aims with the Catholics and Episcopalians can easily be found. It is doubtful whether discussion is doing as much for Christian union as some of us fondly believe. When union does come, it may then be seen that forces unobserved by zealous preachers of union have brought it about. Economic and political conditions are becoming unfavorable to sectarianism. The public schools, colleges, and universities are preparing the way for religious co-operation. With the increase of knowledge and of the spirit of service, men may become indifferent to distinctions which they now consider important.

If the churches are to be served in the ministry by the best type of manhood, denominational rivalry will have to cease. There is much serious work in this world for strong men. They are not attracted by the prospect of religious leadership in towns that have five or six or a dozen church organizations where one is sufficient for the needs of the people. A sensible young man may be excused for not believing the ministry offers the best opportunity for service, if all his knowledge of the ministry has been gained in an over-churched town.

Christian business men have reason to long for Christian union. They have to furnish the money for church buildings and for running expenses. They give for home missions. Why should not their money go into one building that is adequate for the uses of worship and instruction rather than into two or more inadequate buildings? Or why should a town have two good buildings when only one is needed? What is the sense in sending two or three missionaries into a new community when one can do the work?

Interest in education leads to interest in Christian union. By co-operation among the churches, colleges could be established and decently supported in all places where colleges are needed. In this way the opportunity to gain an education would be afforded to thousands of young people to whom it is now lacking. The appeal for funds would have much more force if colleges were located with reference to the needs of the people.

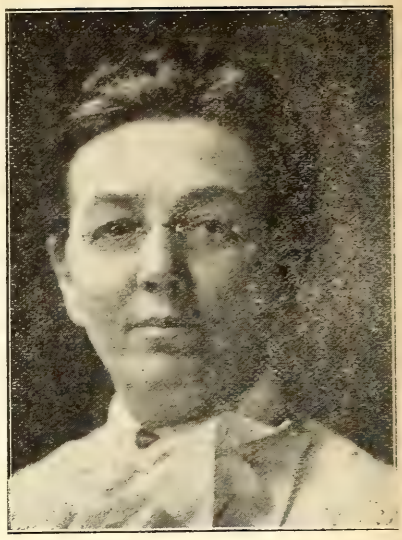
The supply of properly qualified Sunday-school teachers is limited. A good teacher should have the privilege of canvassing the community for pupils without the risk of arousing the wrath of superintendents and teachers of other schools. When one sees children in schools that have poor teachers and knows that good teachers might be had for them if unnecessary divisions among Christians did not exist, he is no lover of children if his longing for Christian union does not become a passion. The literature of the Sunday-school could be vastly improved if the same lesson helps and the same periodicals were used by a larger number.

Go to the juvenile court of Chicago. There you will see a Catholic priest whose business it is to look after delinquent and dependent children of Catholic parentage. He is prepared to take care of every child that has no relative or friend to look after it. Inquire for the representative of the Protestant churches. You will learn that Protestantism does not count for much at that particular place of need. United Protestantism would not neglect the children that are brought into court. The juvenile court preaches an eloquent sermon on Christian union.

Now may it not be possible that before we settle on the terms of Christian union, we ought to go to the courts where neglected children receive the attention of the state, to the communities where young people are growing up uninstructed, to the over-churched village, and to the crowded quarters of the city, and learn what sort of business the church of today has before it? Will not the essentials of our faith be more likely to appear if we emphasize the work the church has to do than if we debate the questions that disturbed the fathers? "The heart makes the theologian." The quality of the theology depends upon the interests of the heart. [Midweek service, April 12. John 17:15-23; 1 Cor. 1:10-15.] S. J.

Miss Mattie Pounds.

Mrs. Anna R. Atwater.



Mrs. J. M. Dungan.

Woman's Jubilee Reaches Climax

Missionary Enthusiasm Touches Highest Mark in New York City

BY MRS. MARIE V. BOWMAN.

The Woman's National Foreign Missionary Jubilee reached a climax in New York last week when about eight thousand women from all over the land foregathered and gave themselves heartily to a three-days' celebration of the first fifty years of woman's organized work for women and children in missions.

It was a great celebration—curiously great—in a historical sense, since it carried with it the most engrossingly interesting history of the century in regard to the development of women—not, strangely enough, of the women to whom missionaries have been sent, but of the women who sent the missionaries.

Woman's Changed Attitude.

From being uncertainly and feebly active in the great enterprise to which the women gave themselves one-half century since, they have found themselves in these closing days of the celebration of the history of the movement, in a wonderfully changed relation to the world.

They have found themselves a big part of that great moving force which is making the world's history, which is changing the place and power of womanhood in the world's work from the weakly subsidiary to the dependably forceful. And this has come through the divine leading in fifty years of service—not without heart-breaking failures, not without tears and night watches, for the vary souls of women were proving once more that the Lord gives for every service great measures of pity, love, and gifts of divine beauty in return.

Rich With Experiences.

The women who have been touring the United States, holding jubilees in each section of the country, all came into the New York Jubilee with fullness of heart experiences to report their work. To meet them came thousands of women from every part of the United States, among them some of the dear women who were in the movement from the first, and who, on Tuesday, came before a great audience in a "Pioneers meeting." One beautiful spirit who has found a whole life's joy in the work, spoke finely, in a good, clear voice of her experience, dating back to her departure for India in 1848, before a woman's missionary society was ever formed.

A delightful raconteur, she told of a four-and-one-half month's journey which had to precede the finding of a suitable place for work in India. Most charmingly she and four other ladies from seventy-eight to ninety-one years of age, related what the years had brough in changing cycles to them and how their eyes had seen the great work of missions come into its present wonderful development.

Denominations Left Behind.

It was significant that as these women and visiting missionaries from the field came before us with the story-telling of the half-century's history, denominations were left so far in the background they were not to be seen at all, and these women, whether Baptists, Methodists, Disciples or of whatever denominational shade, simply stood before the great audience as our women who had made history for us, just as Christians.

The first day of the jubilee had been given to the great missionary pageant which was most wonderfully shown in the Metropolitan Opera House and looked upon by four thousand people. The pageant was fittingly introduced by beautiful music given by the New York Musical Art Society, conducted by Dr. Frank Damrosch, and during the whole of the pageant a most reverent and quietly thoughtful feeling was maintained by the musical setting.

An Authors' Evening.

On Tuesday evening an "Authors' Evening" was given, introducing to an immense audience taxing the capacity of Carnegie Hall the authors of the books which have been given to the missionary societies of America by the wise planning of the United Mission Study Committee.

Miss Louise Manning Hodgkins sent a message. Mrs. Caroline Atwater Mason sent a long letter full of hope and encouragement, just as she was sailing to France to write her new volume of travel. Dr. Zwemer from far Arabia asked that Psalms 68-11 be read as his message.

The authors present who spoke to their long-time friends of the printed page now face to face were: Dr. and Mrs. Francis E. Clark, Mrs. Anna Brown Lindsay, Mrs. Helen Barrett Montgomery and the author of next year's text book on the comparison of Christian with non-Christian religions, Robert E. Speer.

Wednesday was given to a very interesting series of meetings intended to bring out the new features in mission—the modern organization methods necessary to the work as enlarged by the jubilee movement.

Conserving Jubilee Zeal.

It was decided to ask the Woman's Board to appoint members of a commission which shall have as its object the conservation of the immense energies developed by the jubilee.

It looked very much in these meetings as if we are on the verge of a complete federation of woman's missionary societies which will result in that large unity of forces which is one of the beneficent underlying aims of the Christian missionary enterprise. "That they all may be one" both across seas and here at home as well. It was felt that in more ways than one we were making history in this New York jubilee.

Hotel Men Surprised.

New York hotel men are about as worldly-wise a set of men as could easily be found, but even these blasé individuals have been the victims of a surprise this week when they were asked to furnish a really smart luncheon in four of the largest hostelries of the city in their most elegant banquet rooms to six thousand women!

Then when they found their corridors crowded with six thousand beautifully gowned, spring-hatted, smiling Christian women, we imagine they received a shock which it will take some gigantic affair to repeat.

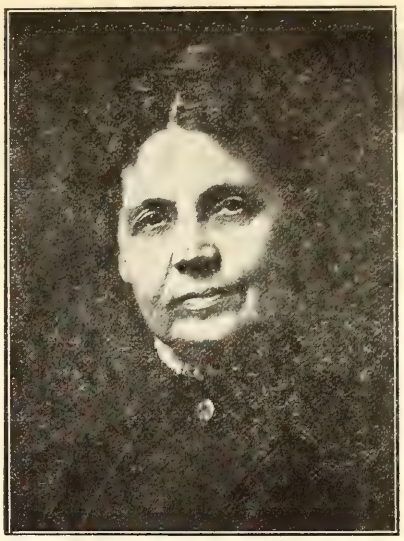
This is the largest woman's banquet of all history. The New York papers featured it with the heading, "Takes Three Hotels to Serve a Luncheon for 6 000 Women."

On Thursday, denominational rallies took up the morning hours and served to accentuate a fact which is being recognized, though tardily, by many bodies, namely, that interdenominational association makes denominational work stronger wherein it should be strengthened.

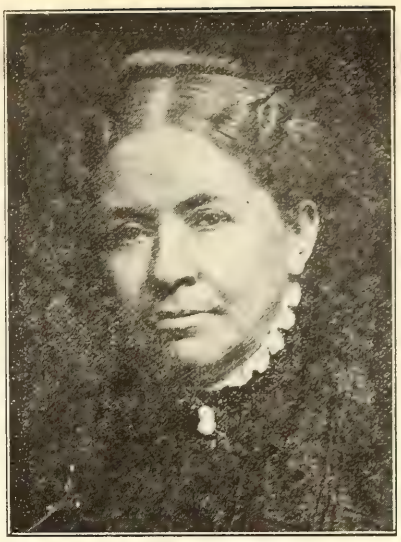
Christian Unity Note.

The note of Christian unity was struck strongly time and again. Our Miss Miller emphasized it often in her addresses, saying that it is impossible to carry denominationalism into foreign lands successfully, because they cannot comprehend it, nor see it as an essential part of Christianity. She and Mrs. Montgomery both said we would never have, in China for instance, Methodist Christians, nor Baptist Christians, nor, in fact, any kind of Christians but just Chinese Christians. Mrs. Montgomery said, "We don't go there to establish Churchianity, but Christianity." The flavor of the Edinburgh spirit filled this gathering—the great spirit of Christian unity.

Mrs. Mary C. Craig.



Mrs. M. E. Harlan.



Mary J. Judson.

Almost a Million Raised.

The last evening was given to a mass meeting in Carnegie Hall, which again was filled to overflowing, so that large meetings had to be held in nearby places. At this meeting the reports of gifts as far as received were announced. The amount not being complete, but aggregating in cash and pledges over and above the regular offerings of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Societies, $870,456.90. It is expected the Million-Dollar aim will be realized before the close of the year.

We were cheered by the result of the considerable efforts on the part of our women of our own church in New York district.

Out of $130,560.00 given by New York women, our own part of this offering was $6,550.60. Will you notice the proportion and then remember the struggle which our New York churches are undergoing—and help these people.

Disciple Women Active.

The ladies of our own churches led by Mrs. Wm. Bayard Craig, Chairman for the Disciples, and ably seconded by many fine women, made the stay of the Disciple members in New York most pleasant.

Receptions were held for the women of the Christian Women's Board of Missions which proved most delightful. Mrs. Harlan, Mrs. Cunningham and Mrs. Wells being present from the National Board.

The results of this series of Jubilee meetings cannot, of course, be told or even estimated. Like the Layman's Missionary, and the Students' Volunteer movements, it will be farther reaching than we can see with our limited vision, but sometimes a larger vision comes to us, and we pause on the mountain top to which we have been caught up, and contemplate in our dim and unrealizing way the march of the forces of God toward that divine completing of the task which has so long been the "unfinished task."

Shall we finish it under His guidance in this generation?

SKETCH OF MRS. HENRY W. PEABODY

BY MRS. HELEN BARRETT MONTGOMERY.

The victorious progress of the Jubilee has been made possible by the devoted enthusiasm and energy of many women; but it detracts not at all from the credit due the many to recognize that without the initiative, spiritual vision and persuasive eloquence of Mrs. Henry W. Peabody the Woman's Jubilee would have been impossible.

For ten years Mrs. Peabody has been a member of the central committee for the United Study of Missions and for nine years its chairman. This interdenominational committee was formed at the time of the New York Ecumenical Conference in 1900 under the chairmanship of Miss Abbie Childs for the purpose of uniting the women of all denominations in the more serious and comprehensive study of the mission fields of the world. Each year it has published a widely used text book covering some phase of mission study.

First Thought of Jubilee.

The topic selected for the present year's study was the story of the organized work of American women, done during the past fifty years, for the women of non-Christian lands. It was after this text book, Western Women in Eastern Lands, was already in press that it occurred to Mrs. Peabody that the fiftieth anniversary of the granting of the first charter to a Woman's Missionary Society by the state of New York ought to be fittingly celebrated. Calling her committee together she rapidly sketched her plan for a series of meetings in strategic centers from the Pacific to the Atlantic. The plan as she outlined it was virtually that which has since been carried out.

Difficulties in the Way.

The Central Committee took up the project with enthusiasm and authorized its chairman to enter into correspondence with the forty-four Woman's Missionary Boards that have been the outgrowth of fifty years of missionary activity in the various denominations.

Most people recognized the value and beauty of the idea; but many feared that the obstacles were too great to permit its successful realization. The shortness of the time, it was late in April and the meetings must begin early in the Fall; the difficulty of finding the proper leaders over such an extent of territory; the absence of any general organization; the lack of funds, all loomed large to many.

Here was where Mrs. Peabody's contagious faith and superb executive ability came into play. She encouraged the doubting, pointing to the fifty years of organized work that had given us trained bodies of women in every State, who only needed to be brought together for interdenominational activity. She got out tentative plans of organization and sent these broadcast. She began to correspond with prominent women in thirty cities. From the quiet home in Beverly a thousand currents of activity were started by an energy that never flagged under the burden of a correspondence that would soon have staggered a weaker woman. All through the Summer she explained the plan, encouraged and enlisted the rapidly increasing army of workers in many cities. The difficulties of getting a national movement under way in such short notice were really appalling, and would have daunted any leader without the audacity of faith which Mrs. Peabody possesses.

Difficulties Overcome.

Little by little the difficulties were surmounted as the splendidly equipped women were brought into the committee work of the various centers. Under their skillful hands the simple plan sketched by Mrs. Peabody was expanded and diversified into the strongly individualized Jubilee meetings that have gone on in triumph from city to city.

Yet, throughout the rapid course of the Jubilee as one who directs the swift course of a canoe on a sinuous river, Mrs. Peabody has been at the helm. Her patience, her tact, her tireless industry, her deep consecration have been indispensable factors in the success of the whole. A hundred times the movement would have been wrecked by its own weight and momentum had it not been for the quiet woman at the center telegraphing, telephoning, sending out letters and bulletins, untangling difficulties and making straight a highway.

Traditions of Study and Service.

A brief sketch of the remarkable woman who has been the inspiration of the Jubilee will be of interest to many. Lucy McGill came of a family that had inherited traditions of study and of service. Her girlhood was spent in Rochester, New York. Upon her marriage to Norman Waterbury she went to Madras, India, where she spent seven years of fruitful service. Her singularly winning presence and rare social charms gave her entrance to many homes difficult of access, and her broad sympathies and genuine democracy made her not less beloved by the poor outcast people.

Upon the death of Mr. Waterbury she returned to America, and shortly after was made Home Secretary of the Woman's Baptist Foreign Missionary Society. In this office for nineteen years she was the moving spirit of this great missionary organization. Her skill in editorial management was shown in Miss Florence Miller.

Mrs. Henry W. Peabody.

Mrs. Helen Barrett Montgomery.

her management of The Helping Hand, the organ of the society. Its freshness, interest, attractive print and illustration won an ever increasing list of subscribers. Under her management, too, the leaflets issued by the Board won a reputation even in other denominations for their good taste and a certain distinction in type, paper and illustration that made them look "interesting." Under her inspiring leadership the missionary work among young women and children received fresh impetus and expansion.

After nineteen years of service that had made her the most widely beloved woman in the Baptist Church, she laid down her official duties to become the wife of Henry W. Peabody, a man distinguished in many lines and one with her in devotion to wide interests of the Kingdom of Christ. Two years of ideally beautiful married life were given her, years crowned with the happiness of ministering together. Upon the death of Mr. Peabody, she took up her life with wonderful courage and unshaken faith. The biographical sketch of her husband which she wrote for private distribution is the story of a noble life nobly told.

In her beautiful home in Beverly, Mrs. Peabody gives her time, strength and money unstintedly to the service of the Master. No business man goes with greater regularity to his office than she to her desk each morning to dispose of the mass of correspondence that comes to her from all over the world.

MRS. HELEN BARRETT MONTGOMERY

BY MARY RIGGS NOBLE, M. D.

Two names are constantly associated in speaking of the Jubilee celebration, that of Mrs. Peabody, the general to plan the campaign, and that of Mrs. Montgomery, who not only aided in the planning but whose personality has been the one around whom the celebration in each city has centered. Mrs. Montgomery's unique preparation for doing just the work this Jubilee called for includes many various activities, and her acquaintance with conditions in many lands, gained by study and travel, her grasp of the unifying factors which make of this wide and various earth one unit, her sane and brilliant handling of the facts and arguments which bring, first, a hearing, and then, a conviction that she is right, on the part of those who listen to her, has won to the missionary cause, whose Jubilee is in progress, thousands of persons who needed to be persuaded, by a cool, calculating and intelligent handling of data, that the department of modern missions should have the co-operation of all Christian people.

Educated at Wellesley.

Mrs. Montgomery was born in Ohio; was educated in Wellesley College, where her record showed unusual mental acumen, and of that College she is now a Trustee. Her civic activity in her home city of Rochester, New York, especially in educational reforms, includes ten years of service on the Board of Education, together with constant and radical agitation in creating city ideals leading to practical and pronounced betterment of conditions for all classes. This brought her into prominence as a club woman and she was made President of the New York State Federation of Woman's Clubs.

after college gave her preparation for lecture work in the field of University extension. Her lectures on Florentine Life and Art revealed once more how many-sided was her mind. Of late years her close connection with the work among college women, in Mission Study Classes and Summer Conferences, has given perhaps as great an opportunity to judge of how broad was her vision, and how high her standard for world responsibility, as any work she has done.

Not long after finishing her college course she was married to Mr. William A. Montgomery of Rochester. Her ideally happy home-life, the oneness of herself and her husband, in their church and city and wider activities, are a beautiful commentary on the best American home life. To the friends who are privileged to know her at somewhat closer range, her delight in domesticities is beautiful to see. She loves the compounding of mint, anise and cummin as well as delving into the profounder matters of the law, holding a just balance in relative values. In their home in Rochester there live, with Mr. and Mrs. Montgomery, both his mother and hers. Their daughter is in Wellesley College.

Literary Activities.

As a writer of unusual force, Mrs. Montgomery was chosen to be the author of two of the United Mission Study Books. The one for this year, "Western Women in Eastern Lands," is one of Macmillan's six "best sellers." She is co-editor with Mrs. Peabody of "Everyland," a children's missionary magazine of such interest that it is said that grown-ups seize it when it comes into the home and the children have difficulty in claiming their right. Mrs. Montgomery is editor also of "Helping Hand," and an occasional contributor to current literary publications.

Her gracious and winsome manners and vivid personality are beloved characteristics of her rich nature, together with a rarely sweet spirit and abundant physical energy. Her consecration and sympathy leads her to do her particular share of the world's work supremely well. Exercised over all the great questions of the day, she delights in a "tabasco dash of argument." She is a sincere and aggressive believer in democracy and human brotherhood. She is self-poised and calm and possesses a soul fitted to behold visions. Withal, she is a profound optimist and a listener to "sky-born music."

Whose Child is Crying?

The cry of a child is heard. Every ear is alert, and every heart answers. Whose child is it? is the thought in every heart, even the words on every lip. The course of action is determined by the answer. If it is our child that weeps, we silence its sobs with the kindest words. If it is our child that is hurt we bind up the wounds with the tenderest touch and we kiss away the pain. If it is our child that is sick we patiently watch through the weary hours of the night, anticipating his every need. If it is our child that is lonely we fold him tenderly to our hearts until he is lonesome no more.

But suppose it is somebody else's child. Suppose he is an ill-kept, dirt-covered, neglected child of the street, then what is the answer to his cry? When he weeps he often receives blows. When he is hurt there is none to pet. When he is sick there is none to heal. When he is lonely nobody cares. If he is tired and fretful he has a filthy bed, for he is nobody's darling.

Yet these children that we call our children and nobody's children are God's children. Does he care about them? Does he love them? Would he have us treat nobody's children with the same tenderness and love that we treat our own? We are untrue to nature when we fail to love our own children. We are untrue to Christianity or Christ when we fail to love the orphan child. Jesus said, "As my father hath sent me, so send I you." He wants to bless the neglected lives of nobody's children, but he must do it through us. Shall we be true to him?

Your answer to the Easter call of the National Benevolent Association is your answer to the cry of God's children.

Divided Christendom Not Unmixed Evil

Lessons on Unity Learned Through Divisions

Further Contributions in Symposium Begun Last Week.

Christ's Ideal Not Ecclesiastical

The primary purpose of the church is to create character—to make men and women. From her long period of division she has been learning that the great denominations succeed about equally well in this accomplishment, and therefore that the denominational differences are not sufficiently vital, or of such a nature, as to incapacitate each denomination for performing in so far this heaven-appointed function. If the tree is to be known by its fruit, then we cannot identify the true church with any one denomination to the exclusion of the others. Again, the true church must be large enough to include all Christians, and therefore larger than any one denomination.

Another lesson we have been learning is that if the tree is known by its fruit it does not make so much difference who planted the tree, or what system of pruning was used etc. The one chief concern and satisfaction is the fruit yielded. And so the very fact that the various denominations produce the Christian character and life, indicates very clearly that the divisive things, the things which have produced, and today continue, these different bodies, such as dogmas, ordinances, and politics, are not the things that produce Christian character, or shape the Christian life, and should not therefore be allowed to stand in the way of Christian union.

While the church has been learning these lessons she has also been learning that the social ideal of Jesus was not ecclesiastical. That ideal was the Kingdom of God; that is, a social order in which, in all departments of life, God's will is done on earth as it is done in heaven. This kingdom is larger than any one denomination, and as the denominational leaders have seen this they have begun at once to subordinate the denomination to the Kingdom; and as the leaders in the different denominations have come to see this, they have been led irresistibly to see that the Kingdom is larger than all denominations combined and hence larger than the church universal. Through this conviction they have been led to see further, that after all not the church, but the Kingdom is the vitally important thing. And the church, so long self-centered, has at last come to see that it is but one of God's chosen means for the realization of the Kingdom in the world.

It is this social ideal that staggers the divided church; that is aiding her to realize that unity of faith already exists as well as unity in primary purpose, namely, the creation of Christian character, and the Christianization of the social forces of our day; and that the unity that still tarries in its coming is unity of action, unity in conquest, unity in the great task of social regeneration. This unity lingers along the path of progress because of an over-emphasis, an over-valuation, of the things that divide.

What bearing now do these lessons have on the problem of ultimate unity? They show us: (1) That union will never be realized by one denomination's absorbing the others. (2) That the union to be realized will not be on a basis of authoritative creedal statement, or agreement in the observance of the ordinances, or uniformity of polity. (3) That unity will be the product of a process of growth, not the creation of church councils by vote. (4) That the basis of ultimate unity will be just the basis of present unity, namely, personal loyalty to Jesus Christ and his social program, the realization of God's Kingdom on earth.

T. E. WINTER.

Fulton, Mo.

The Indispensable Grace of Tolerance

The recent conferences in New York in the interest of Christian Union, in which our own committee was prominent, opens a new chapter in the history of our Christian union efforts. The expression of ideas covered a wide range and were not limited to the lines of the question with which the conference started. It is a good idea to continue the conference in our own papers, it may deepen among us the desire for Christian Union and that after all must be the foundation of success.

We seem to have learned:

That a divided protestantism is too weak in spiritual power and resources to win the world. See New York City as an illustration.

That each denomination has developed some truth in its own history and experience that will enrich the future united church.

The importance of our own conscientious convictions to us teach us that we must respect the conscientious convictions of others.

That conclusions which now seem unalterable to some of us may be changed because a full and more thorough study may modify the basis on which our present conclusions rest.

That Christian union does not mean uniformity in ritual, in forms of worship, or in any of the matters that belong to the realm of congregational freedom.

That there is a distinction that must be recognized between the vital and the formal in the Christian religion. Jesus emphasized the vital things.

That, and this is the most important point, the great thing needed just now is a rise of the tide of brotherly love in the hearts of Christians. We need a real, sure enough love for the other fellow who has been trained in a different religious school, a patient, sympathetic readiness to hear his side of the question and a successful effort on our part to see the problem from his view point. The problem of a universal church broad enough to include all races and all temperaments, making room for the lessons learned in 1900 years of history and for an ever expanding future, is so large and so complicated that only the thoughtless or superficial can be dogmatic and cantankerous in discussing it.

The dominion of a divine love and a spirit of teachableness were so marked in the recent conferences; there was such unfailing courtesy and gentleness, along with a frank and virile recognition that conscientious convictions must be respected, that it seemed like the dawning of a new day of real Christian brotherhood.

Finally, we seem to have learned that until we can confer on the Christian union question either in public or in private, in the most courteous and considerate manner, we are not ready to confer at all. No possible mechanism or outward pressure will unite the people of God if the essential brotherly love be lacking. A marriage without love is not a blessing.

We are the only large religious body that originated as a Christian union movement. We would be recreant to our leaders and their ideals if we held aloof in the Christian union movements of today.

WM. BAYARD CRAIG.

Lenox Ave. Church, New York City.

To Distinguish Essentials and Non-essentials

The church has learned by her long period of division to distinguish between the essential and the non-essential in Christianity. In studying the causes of denominationalism we find that they are based almost completely upon the things that are in no sense essentially Christian. We have been forced to ask the question "What is Christianity?" and in answering it have discovered oft times, to our great surprise, that much that we considered Christianity has very little relation to it. Forms and church organization, denominational names, forms of public worship, creeds, theologies, many tests of fellowship, are now seen to be inheritances of the religious thinking of the past that has served its day and is hampering the larger life of the church in this age. We have also learned that modern denominationalism is fundamentally based on a false premise. That premise is that Christianity in its theology, liturgy, church polity, creedal statement, biblical interpretation, ordinances, forms, tests of fellowship, etc., has but one divinely authentic form. Each denomination claims for its particular expression of Christianity the honor of being that form, whereas, on the contrary, we are learning today that our denominationalism is built up on differing religious experience. We are seeking to find out the common element back of them all. We are finding that much of our modern religion, to use a phrase of Prof. James, is "second-handed" and very unreal. It seems to me, therefore, that we have learned by sad experience of sectarianism, the valuable truth that the Christian experience is not a thing one generation can formulate into articles and try to force every succeeding generation to subscribe to, but that the ultimate church must grant a place within its fold, not only for what we may call the varities of Christian experience, real, genuine and sincere, but also for the ever-changing and ever-enlarging experience of each new generation. In a word we have learned: First, the waste and wrong of the divided church. Second, the non-essential nature of much that causes division. Third, that Jesus spent his life battling against a crystallized institutionalism very much like the modern church. Fourth, that men in all honesty have Christian experience of widely differing forms, but essentially Christian. Fifth, that Christianity does, and must recast itself according to the needs and the larger vision of each new age.

Bloomington, Ind. JOSEPH C. TODD.

Impotence in Presence of Human Problem

The church is beginning to learn that in her divided condition she is unable to carry out the Lord's commission to evangelize the nations. The foreign missionaries have long felt that the divisions in the church are blocking the progress of the kingdom and they have been pleading for closer unity. They have felt that only a united church can hope to make progress against the combined forces of heathenism. The enormity of the task which the churches in the foreign fields have undertaken has made them forget their differences; it has made them deplore the divided condition of the church and long for closer unity.

The necessity of meeting the situation is forcing the churches in the foreign fields to

(Continued on page 14.)

Our Readers' Opinions

Distinction Which Does Not Distinguish

At this time when it is sought to make federation practical, when organic union is being urged in many quarters as the ultimate end of federation, when various denominational anniversaries are being celebrated, and when the whole church is being called upon to gird up its loins for a more vigorous prosecution of the work to which it is called, we naturally hear a good deal about "distinctive principles." Every few days some timid soul, fearful that in the general awakening the particular position of his church may be lost sight of, rises up to proclaim its "distinctive principles." And when so many distinctive principles are being promulgated, we have some very amusing illustrations that there are very many distinctive principles which fail to distinguish.

One of the most amusing illustrations of this which has come under observation is the case of a contributor to The Standard, a Baptist paper, being called to book by the editor of The Christian Century. Some of the distinctive principles claimed by this writer for the Baptists sound so much like the distinctive principles claimed by the Disciples, or Christian church, that the editor of The Christian Century "feels amply protected against the charge of sectarian animus in subjecting them to the criticism which they deserve." And what he has to say is a plenty to give all of us pause in our zeal for setting forth distinctive principles.

It would be very hard to show that the consciousness of any denomination is affected by "a new emphasis of missions," "a new appreciation of education," or "a new recognition of social service" in a way to distinguish it from all others. With our various missionary anniversaries, laymen's movements, jubilees, etc., the denominations have been fairly falling over one another in their efforts to proclaim their new zeal for missions. There is scarcely a denomination so poor as not to have a campaign of some kind or another for educational endowment or better educational methods. And as to social service, they are all waking up to a new recognition of it, whether they are fully conscious of it or not. Indeed, so general is this recognition that a recent speaker at a denominational anniversary, hot-foot after a distinctive principle and "jester bleeged" to have one, made bold to claim for his church the distinction of emphasizing the spiritual life as distinguished from the new idea of social service! No church thinks of neglecting the spiritual life for social service, but all are seeking the expression of it in social service.

When we come to consider fundamental distinctions between evangelical denominations we are harder pressed than ever to find any. All are agreed as to "the supremacy of Jesus," which is the main thing, and "the authority of the Scriptures." We may make our confession of these fundamentals with slightly varying emphasis, which means that as furnishing denominational distinctions they are degraded to mere shibboleths. These are the fundamentals of the Christian faith, and since all evangelical denominations maintain these, the search for fundamental distinctions must prove fruitless.

Why shall we not be frank, and admit that the things which are keeping us apart are things which might be surrendered without impairing the integrity of Christian truth? The distinction between denominations today must be sought in matters of forms and ordinances, genius and spirit, polity and policy. If we had less talk about our distinctive principles, which for the most part is distinctive nonsense, and more consideration of our substantial agreements, we should come much nearer to fulfilling the divine ideal in our work together for the advancement of the kingdom of our common Lord and Christ.

—The Presbyterian Advance.

The Work of the State Secretary

Editors The Christian Century: I read with interest the letter from Secretary L. E. Murray, of Indiana, in your issue of March 2. I feel that Mr. Murray has the right viewpoint in regard to the work of a state secretary. We have come into a time in the development of our religious life and church work when narrowness of vision is the greatest hindrance of all. The men, who have been missionary secretaries in the past, have been earnest and consecrated men. They have dealt with the problems of their day in a masterly manner; but, the problems of that day are not the problems of our day. Yes, the secretary should be a specialist, and should have a large grasp of the problem of gospel extension. He should be the right-hand man of the secretaries of our general societies, giving his efforts at the proper time toward the increase of interest in their peculiar lines of work. He should stand shoulder to shoulder with the pastor in the missionary education of the congregation.

The office of missionary secretary in a state today is pre-eminently an office of administration. His best work and most practical help cannot be in the direction of holding protracted meetings, or even individually establishing new churches. This work should be done, but he should operate through others, doing the administrative and executive part of the work only.

The educational viewpoint in all our church enterprises of today, is the only viewpoint. We have the people—they have the means and the ability, but it is necessary to stir them up through the demonstration of knowledge and the personal touch of enthusiasm, that the great work may be accomplished. I am of the opinion that the secretary should keep close touch with the churches in his district, not for the purpose merely of raising money for state missionary work, but for the purpose of arousing and stirring them to a larger vision of things. Too long have we followed the plan of agitating from the outside instead of putting into operation forces that would ferment from the inside. In other words, the outside worker has gone into the local congregation, and with a message for the moment, has aroused to a pitch of enthusiasm, those who could be thus reached, and large offerings have been gathered for special work under such a plan. Through the educational process, the local forces will be aroused, and while the man from the outside with the message is needed yet, his message should find its crystalization not so much in the immediate giving of larger sums, as in the arousement of conscience to organization, so that the work will continue regularly and not spasmodically. I believe that no more important work can be done by our state secretaries today, than to plan an educational campaign for the purpose of teaching all the churches and reviving them into larger life through local inspiration and organization. If this is done with emphasis upon the world-wide problem, there will be no question about this, or that, or the other interest receiving an undue emphasis or lacking proper recognition. I like the watchword presented by Mr. Murray—"Education, Unification and Enlargement." Our churches and pastors never will have a larger vision of things unless our state and national secretaries can have that vision themselves.

We need men perhaps, to specialize on state work, on city work, on home work, on foreign work, on church extension and benevolence, but we need men, who, while specialists in all these lines, will recognize that it is all one work: while there are times when larger emphasis should be laid upon the one thing, yet, upon the whole all alike occupy an important place in the economy of our church life. Larger men with larger vision and a realization of present day problems and needs will solve the difficulties of missionary enterprises. We are having an increasing number of such men come into this special line of work today, and I am sure that every secretary in our ranks will be glad to welcome Mr. Murray with his great vision and splendid grasp of the real situation, as indicated by his article in The Christian Century.

F. W. Emerson,
Los Angeles, Cal. Secretary.

New Testament Meaning of "Baptize"

In New Testament times the Jews did not generally speak Greek, but for brevity in the following it will be assumed that they did speak Greek.

In Luke 11:38 and Mark 7:3-5 the word in question denotes the washing of the body for the purpose of cleansing it. From the passage in Mark we learn that the word was used of the washing of various utensils, as well as of the body. These washings seem to have been done very frequently, indeed more frequently than any other act in a Jewish household. As the act was so frequently done the word expressing it must have been in almost constant use. The act and word were not of recent introduction. In the time of the Book of Judith, perhaps a century B. C. we find this same word designating the same act. Briefly we may say that the Jews always practiced washing of body and of utensils and always used baptizein to express the act. If this were a rare word used but few times and then in doubtful contexts, there might be some question about its meaning. But no word was used more frequently and no word is more definitely defined by context and history of the times. The word then means to wash, but some times it would be well to translate with to bathe, which does not change the meaning in the least. After singing "Wash me" and reading "Wash thine heart" so long one should not hesitate at "I indeed wash with water but he will wash with the Holy Spirit, but to many people it would sound better to say, I cleanse with water but he cleanses with the Holy Spirit.

The above needs no corroboration. It stands on the firm rock of historic interpretation. But the following confirmatory facts are nevertheless added. The fact that the multitudes went out so readily to John proves that his washing did not differ in form from the traditional Jewish washing. The only reasonable translation of Acts 22:16 is, Arise and bathe thyself, and of 9:18, He arose, bathed himself, took food, etc. In the Acts of Paul and Thecla, which was long considered part of the New Testament, Thekla designates the same act by louein and baptizein which act was by description self-washing. Justin said in about the year 160 that self-washing was the practice of the church. Rom. 6:4 and Col. 2:12 when properly rendered and explained confirm the statement that baptizein meant in New Testament times to wash.

H. C. Garvin.
Eldon, Mo.

Rainier of the Last Frontier

BY

JOHN MARVIN DEAN

AUTHOR OF

"THE PROMOTION, ETC."

Copyright 1910, By John Marvin Dean

CHAPTER XIX (Continued).

American girls are teaching Visayan schools from Iloilo to San Jose de Buena Vista. Railroads are being projected through the heart of the island. Erstwhile insurgent leaders are now rivaling one another in raising sugar or running for office under the civil administration.

Down out of the mountain of Negros and over the blue waters of the strait, comes Rainier into the changed streets of Iloilo. He, too, is changed. His frame is hardly more than clothed with a wasted and fever-worn body. His skin is blackened by the winds and sunlight of the mountain crests. His clothing is a miracle of patches. But his step, as he walks gravely at Waxfield's side, is steady, and his eyes burn with resolution. Those profound soul-processes in the depths of a man that only solitude and self-denial can invoke have intensified and sifted and refined the man until, in all his pathetic rags and with his long heart-hunger blazoned on his sunken face, he yet walks with the authority of a prince among men.

Chalmers, third custodian of the precious, frail message of five years ago, having had many debates with himself as to the likelihood of that envelope ever being touched by the hand of the man whose name was written so daintily, yet so firmly upon it, is lounging within his railing at the postoffice.

Only yesterday he had lifted the missive from its special pigeon hole, and felt his traitor heart grow tender in spite of his unbelieving mind.

"He's as dead as Socrates," he muttered with an impatient shake of the head. "But it's enough to pull him out of the dust to have that waiting for him." And now in a very prosaic way two men enter the office, and in a veritable daze he hears the introduction by Waxfield and hands over to the quiet man from the crater-camp, the letter with its yellowing of the years. He is enough of a man to motion Rainier into an inner office where he may read his message alone. For he sees something so glorified in the countenance of the rescued man that the tears fill his eyes.

Let us take a great liberty indeed and look over the shoulder of Clark Rainier as he spreads out the letter and reads:

Iloilo, December 20, 1902.

"Dear Friend:

"My heart is breaking today, for the Brigade sails away tomorrow and I am going to leave you far off in the mountains with our enemies. The troops have scoured the whole Island of Panay, they tell me, and they say that you are reported as dead by the 'amigos.' But, of course, I know that you cannot be dead. God, in his justice, would never have allowed so great a sacrifice to be made to save a worthless life, such as my own. No, you are not dead. And I am writing this to tell you that when at last you come back to us out of the mountains and find us all gone back to God's country—that when you do come back you may know that over on the other side of the seas I shall be loving my hero with my whole heart and praying that he may love me in return.

"Oh, it is a strange thing for me to say this to you. And perhaps I almost believe that you will not come back and thus I dare to tell you that I love you.

"But, no! You will come back to me some day, my hero. And I shall be waiting for you.

"God bless you, Clarke, and keep you, until we meet again. Benicia Royce."

CHAPTER XX.

"There Is But One Rainier."

For years Rainier's world had been rimmed by the jagged edge of Calabang volcano. Those same years took Benicia Royce twice around the planet and enrolled her high upon the list of America's famous daughters. She had followed the Ninth Infantry into Tientsin and Peking. She had won the Order of the Rising Sun from the Mikado in the Manchurian hospitals, she had found herself at the head of a detachment of veteran nurses in the first battle with yellow fever on the Canal Zone in Panama. Such experiences may harden or demoralize. In her case they had acted as a mysterious alchemy in ripening her womanhood to its finest fruition. Her sixth year found her back on special duty in the United States and queen in her own right of character over a world-girdling kingdom of ardent admirers. There were Panamanian cabinet officers, Japanese army surgeons, American physicians, colonels of a thousand men, war-correspondents and Washington officials who found their sole unity in their reverence for Benicia Royce. It became common knowledge, too, that reverence sometimes ripened into something far more ardent. Gallant attacks on the citadel of her heart were watched with surprising interest in one war zone after another. The end was ever the same and only those of the "old brigade" could understand the cause of so many shattered hopes.

Old Pap Gallahorn of the Sixty-first became at times the mouthpiece of a whole division when, after hearing the story of the latest refusal, he would open his leathered old lips and say, "It's few of these gay boys as knows they are fighting another man's ghost. Show her a corner of Rainier's casket an' she might have any one of a dozen of them. They're good enough men in their way. But her heart is up in the musty mountains of old Panay."

And now comes over the cable to Manila, to Hong Kong, to San Francisco, to all the world, vivid sentences of a man's rescue from the crater of Calabang. Soon there are columns about Calabang, about Fagan's suicide, about the reappearance of Rainier amongst his fellows. Dispatches describe him, quote him in interviews, speak of his wasted figure, his rags, his sufferings of mind and body, his plan for an immediate return to Seattle.

Seattle? Yes, there can be no doubt. At least three papers agree that Rainier is invited by urgent wire back to the impulsive arms of a certain uncle, prominent in Seattle real estate.

And here is Benicia, at the very moment of all this featuring of Rainier in the daily press, speeding under government orders from the Presidio at San Francisco to special duty in the Model Army Hospital on the very grounds of the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition, itself within the actual civic boundaries of that same city of Seattle.

Steamers are poky things and trains are easy victors! It was Benicia's part to wait four long weeks in Seattle while her lover came slowly to her across the vast Pacific. Outwardly those four weeks were active enough, for the inspecting eye of the general public was already upon the government exhibit, and much remained to be done after her arrival at the Model Hospital. But outward duties were welcomed with an eagerness that betrayed her intensity of mind in these days of deferred consummation. The quiet faith that Rainier was not dead but still living now changed into a storm of inner emotions. Six years of battling with doubts was victoriously over. Was there any good reason now why she should not creep off duty to weep, to fear, to accuse herself of hopeless delusion? When all the world said, "He is dead," she found herself commanded of bitter necessity to cry against their certainty with her piteous hope. But now that all the world said, "He lives and is coming nearer every hour," she could afford to indulge in the sorely needed luxury of fears and tears! It was impossible that he should still be alive. It was fearful to think that he might be alive and yet be another man than the one she had left in old Passi. Though he lived and remained the same would she not be foiled of his face by new calamities?

Each morning found Benicia weak with her nightly vigil of miserable emotion.

But God, who puts within the heart of a noble man or a gracious woman all the possibilities of refined suffering is able to adjust the load and time the carrying of burdens to the coming of relief. He locked the storms in the vaults of the winds and smoothed the sea before a good ship's prow and gave to an enthusiastic shipload of trans-Pacific passengers their first sight of Cape Flattery under a cloudless sky. Then came an eager moment when steamer nestled into dock and all formalities were over. And then a man, still strange in clothes that fitted Oriental ideas of tailoring, sprang down a gang-plank, greeted old friends and became wonderfully wise in ten minutes through a sheaf of yellow telegrams joyously thrust into his shaking hands, by cunning comrades of the old newspaper fellowship.

Wise lads, those newspaper boys. They just gave him the evidence, hauled him to an Exposition car, and waved him on board without a word.

There was a crowd on that car and Rainier was compelled to stand up. He felt wonderfully glad that he was alone and he read his yellow slips of cunning direction with a fearful mixture of cowardice and elation.

"Model Hospital, Government Exhibit, Facing Formal Gardens," he read and when the car slowed at the busy turn-stiles he did not give the tribute of a single look at all the carnival wonders about him but swung boyishly off the still moving car, passed through the gates, tore through the crowds on the "Pay Streak" and marched, with his heart acting like an anarchist, up to the little white Model Hospital.

It was a miracle that he found himself able to pronounce her name. The Japanese porter made him do it three times and then announced that Miss Boyce would not be on duty until six o'clock. He did not know her whereabouts, but she was fond of walking in the Formal Gardens before coming on duty. He might find her there.

And (blessed be that stolid porter!) it was there that he found her.

The Formal Gardens stretched out from the great central group of white buildings toward the distant lake. Beyond the lake were the blue foothills of the Cascades and piled high above the hills was the matchless white mass of Mount Rainier. It was a good omen—that great name in the southern sky.

And now along a flower bordered path he caught a glimpse of a little figure in nurse's blue. He quickened his pace and she turned her face toward the aproaching man. Her cheek went white with recognition.

"Benicia, O Benicia!" he cried.

Perversity seized her and she turned to flee. It gave him the courage he needed. One strong arm caught her around the waist and detained her. His free hand gently tipped her face up to his. Her eyes were closed, but her pallor suddenly changed to a mantling rose that matched the soft pinks on the far-off snowy flanks of the mountains.

"It's five years since—since you wrote it, Benicia. Does it still hold true?"

His voice was shaking, and drawn toward him, she found her faintly protesting hand pressing lightly against his heart. She would have been less than a true nurse had she not noted, even in her confusion, the fierce beating of his breast.

"Does it still hold true, Benicia?"

"It does, Clarke," she said, and hid her face in his breast from a rain of kisses.

* * * * * *

T'was a good hour after that eclipse of Benicia's face that conversation permitted an allusion to plans for the future.

"There is five hundred dollars in my bank account, dearest," she smiled.

"And there is my prosperous Uncle Jimmy" laughed Rainier. "He thinks I have an incurable wanderlust in me. And I have, Benicia. I'm going to bring him tomorrow to see you, sweetheart, and after he has had one good look at you and has lost his head, I will inform him that the International Committee of the Young Men's Christian Association has offered me a place in their Foreign Department. Won't dear uncle bounce with indignation! But we won't care, will we Benicia? It will mean good, hard, earnest work for the Blessed Savior in Pekin, or Ceylon, on Singapore or Calcutta. But it will mean a little bungalow dear, and the sight of the palms and the far away peaks over the sea."

"Don't say 'mountains,' dear," she shuddered. "They make my heart break again with the thought of all you suffered for my sake."

"Don't feel that way, dear girl" he said, smiling into her earnest, adoring eyes. We must get on good terms with the mountains. Look at Rainier. It is our witness and our benediction."

They stood together in the riotous beauty of the roses and looked far up into the sunset fires now kindling in the virgin snows of the great peak. A holy calm came on their hearts. They scarcely breathed as the wreaths of clouds, tinted in the setting sun, wound their delicate banners around the mountain's brow.

"There is—" said he, at last. "There is but one Rainier."

She turned her eyes from the glorified peak to his rugged but peaceful face. The lines of suffering were still there and ever would be, they were softened by a peace from the heaven of a fulfilled love.

"There is—" said she, at last, burying her face against his sleeve, "There is—but one Rainier."

And then—with all that matchless blending of heaven's gold and earth's green about them and with a builded mile of flashing, glorified mountain-side above them over the stately tree-tops, Rainier and Benicia turned their first bend on Paradise Trial and went out into that holy Will of God that we call Life.

THE END.

Lessons Learned Through Divisions

(Continued from page 11.)

seek for union, and the situation might be serious if the same conditions were not presenting themselves in the home field. The churches in America are just beginning to understood that the home missionary problem is too big for any single church to solve. They are beginning to feel that it is too big for all the churches to solve working independently as they have been. They feel that it calls for united efforts. The Home Missionary Boards, of fifteen denominations, are at the present time formulating plans for co-operative work in home missions. Many feel that even this will not meet the situation, but that it demands still closer unity. The feeling is quite prevalent that the church, in its present divided state, cannot satisfy the demands that are made upon it.

Many of the best men in the rural communities, where there are many churches represented but not enough members of any one church to do efficient service, feel that denominationalism is a curse. Many of the best men in the cities, where the churches are struggling with their individual problems and are doing but little to help solve the great social and economic problems, feel that denominationalism is a curse. When they see the churches being forced out of the congested districts, they feel that for self-preservation we must forget our differences. When they see the effort that is being put forth and the little that is apparently being accomplished, they feel that the only hope for the church is in union. Some of us in Cincinnati have felt that so keenly that a preachers' club, made up of eighteen ministers of the leading denominations in the city, spent three months this winter trying to formulate a basis upon which we would be willing to unite. There are ten Protestant churches in the community where I am located but we are not meeting the needs of Walnut Hills and we all realize it. So strong is that feeling that a committee has been appointed looking towards a union parish house. I am on this committee, and while we have not been able to accomplish anything yet, the appointment of such a committee is significant.

The most important lesson which the church has learned in her long period of division is her inability to cope with the situation in her divided state.

Walnut Hills Church, Cincinnati, Ohio,
A. W. FORTUNE.

That Religion is Vital Not Formal

Certainly, it may be said, that the church has been taught a lesson by her failure to live up to the full measure of her opportunity in the service of the world and in the promotion of the interests of the Kingdom of God, a lesson that is sure to have no small influence in bringing about ultimate unity. It is true that individual churches have grown to considerable proportions, and doubtless great good has been done in many instances. All this is in the nature of the case. In the massing of people in great cities it was inevitable that great institutions of every kind should have been developed, and the churches have participated in this general movement that has been going on for a century or more. The significant thing, however, is not that the churches have grown and increased in number, but that they have exerted so little influence in moulding the life of the people as a whole. The cities have not grown good as the churches in them have grown great and numerous. Righteousness has not been advanced, poverty and crime have gone on increasing, sometimes at a fearful rate, and our social peace and happiness have been repeatedly hazarded while the churches have been gathering adherents, building fine edifices and developing denominational machinery. Division has weakened their testimony, belittled the ministry of Christ, created false issues, fostered narrowness and selfishness and clouded the mental and moral vision of good people. Division is not wholly responsible for the church's lack of power but it is partially so and in so far as it is seen to be responsible it is a lesson which good men cannot fail to learn.

But still more significant is the fact that, during this long period of division, the church has been gradually learning that essential religion, the Christian religion, does not consist in doctrines, in forms of worship or in methods of organization. These are but the eccentricities of our minds in our efforts to express religious truth. We have been accentuating the importance of many of these things until their passing character has become apparent and we ourselves have been driven from the slight shelter they afforded. Division, in short, has reduced to absurdity many of the propositions we once held to express the very essence of religion. We are, therefore, beginning to see that religion is not a propositional thing at all, but a vital thing, a union of the soul with God. In proportion as this conception of religion gains ascendency over the formal, our doctrinal convictions will cease to have the hold upon us they once had and our essential unity will asert itself.

El Paso, Texas. P. J. RICE.

For Best News Item or List of Items

In order to raise the quality of our news contributions and increase their quantity—The Christian Century proposes to give each week until further notice, a book worth from $1 to $2.50 for the best-told news item or list sent in. Copy must reach the office not later than Friday morning, and is to be furnished exclusively to The Christian Century. The points on which the award will be made are: (1) The importance of the subject matter (2) the interpretation of the subject matter, and (3) the interesting style in which it is reported. The length of the article will not count. It may run from 100 to 600 words. The writer will take the editorial point of view unless his name is to appear as the author. The award will be announced in each issue of the paper for the preceding issue. The item will be designated and at least three books given from which choice may be made, but the name of the author will not be published. Illinois reporters will send their news to the Springfield office. All others should be sent to the main office.

Miss Rogstad, the first woman to represent a constituency in the Norwegian Storthing, made her maiden speech before that body last week. She is a school teacher and represents one of the Christiania seats made vacant by the resignation of Gen. Bratlie, president of the Storthing, who was compelled to retire temporarily in order to assist in the work of re-organizing the army. The entire assembly rose when Miss Rogstad began her speech. She said that the day would be a memorable one as it was the first time a woman had ever participated in the discussion in the nation's parliament and predicted that the movement for political enfranchisement of woman was bound to succeed and to result in many reforms.

The Daily Altar

An Aid to Private Devotion and Family Worship

SUNDAY, APRIL 9. (Palm Sunday.)
Theme for the Day—The Triumphal Entry.

Scripture—And many spread their garments upon the way; and others branches, which they had cut from the fields. And they that went before, and they that followed, cried, Hosanna; Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord. Mark 11:8, 9.

Ride on! ride on in majesty!
In lowly pomp ride on to die:
O Christ, thy triumphs now begin
O'er captive death and conquered sin.

Ride on! ride on in majesty!
The last and fiercest strife is nigh:
The Father on his sapphire throne
Awaits his own anointed Son.
—Henry Hart Milman ("The Entry into Jerusalem").

Prayer—Dear Lord, we are made glad by the story of our Savior's triumphant entrance into the city he loved. We are confident that if we could have been in the multitude that hailed him like a king, we should have rejoiced to bid him welcome. But may we understand that we can as truly receive him as king today, and that by opening the gates of our hearts to his entrance we can give him a more loyal and permanent welcome than that of Jerusalem of old. Help us to make him the royal ruler of our lives. Amen.

MONDAY, APRIL 10.
Theme for the Day—The Father's House.

Scripture—And they come to Jerusalem: and he entered into the temple, and began to cast out them that sold and them that bought in the temple, and overthrew the tables of the money-changers, and the seats of them that sold the doves. And he taught, and said unto them, Is it not written, My house shall be called a house of prayer for all the nations? But ye have made it a den of robbers. Mark 11:15 17.

My dear Redeemer, and my Lord,
I read my duty in Thy word,
But in Thy life the law appears,
Drawn out in living characters.

Such was Thy truth, and such Thy zeal,
Such deference to Thy Father's will,
Such love, and meekness so divine,
I would transcribe and make them mine.
—Isaac Watts ("The Divine Pattern").

Prayer—O God, we would not only welcome Jesus to the city, but we would make him supreme in the house of God. Too often we have allowed therein the things of which he would not approve, and we have not been quite willing that he should drive them forth. Enlighten us with the clear shining of Thy truth until we are as jealous as was he for the honor of the church. And may we, knowing that our souls are also temples of God, keep them pure for his coming. Amen.

TUESDAY, APRIL 11.
Theme for the Day—The Marriage Feast.

Scripture—And Jesus answered and spake again in parables unto them, saying, The kingdom of heaven is likened unto a certain king, who made a marriage feast for his son, and sent forth his servants to call them that were bidden to the marriage feast. Matt. 22:1-3.

The marriage feast is ready,
The marriage of the Lamb,
He calls the faithful children
Of faithful Abraham:
Now from the golden portals
The sounds of triumph ring:
The triumph of the Victor,
The marriage of the King.
—Gerard Moultrie ("The Lamb's Bridal").

Prayer—Our Father, we are following through the days of this memorable week the incidents in the life of our Lord. And as we read the parable in which he set forth the rejection which the divine invitation too often meets, we resolve afresh that we at least will not be of the number to put other concerns above the call of God. Help us to be worthy guests at the feast, and bestow upon us the robe of righteousness, wearing which we shall not be ashamed. We ask in our Savior's name. Amen.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 12.
Theme for the Day—Son of David, Son of God.

Scripture—Now while the Pharisees were gathered together, Jesus asked them a question, saying, What think ye of the Christ? whose son is he? They say unto him, The son of David. Matt. 22:41, 42.

He the mighty King has come!
Making this poor earth his home;
Come to bear our sin's sad load;
Son of David, Son of God!
He has come, whose name of grace
Speaks deliverance to our race;
Left for us his glad abode;
Son of Mary, Son of God!
—Horatius Bonar ("The Christ of God").

Prayer—We praise Thee, O Lord, for the son of Thy love, whom we have received as Savior and Master. We remember him in all the solemn scenes of the last days of his earthly life, and our hearts are touched as we witness his supreme devotion to his Father's will. May we take this lesson to our hearts, and seek by a similar submission to the will of God to make our lives triumphant over evil, and serviceable in the divine program for the world. Thus shall we also be Sons of God. Amen.

THURSDAY, APRIL 13.
Theme for the Day—The Holy Supper.

Scripture—And as they were eating, he took bread, and when he had blessed, he brake it, and gave to them, and said, Take ye; this is my body. And he took a cup, and when he had given thanks, he gave to them; and they all drank of it. And he said unto them, This is my blood of the covenant, which is poured out for many. Mark 14:22-24.

Jesus, this feast receiving,
We thee unseen adore;
Thy faithful word believing,
We take, and doubt no more;
Give us, thou true and loving!
On earth to live in thee;
Then, death the veil removing,
Thy glorious face to see.
—Ray Palmer ("The Living Bread").

Prayer—Eternal God, from whom come all our blessings, we would ascribe to Thee thanks and praise for the wonderful gift of Christ to us. Thou hast provided us a memorial of our Savior in the Holy Supper, which we observe in his name. Help us to see its deeper meaning. We would discern in it the lesson of our need of nourishment from him, who is the Bread of heaven and the Wine of eternal life. Satisfy our souls with ever fresh supplies of Thy grace, and may we be kept unto the life that remains for the people of God. In Jesus' name, we pray. Amen.

FRIDAY, APRIL 14. (Good Friday.)
Theme for the Day—The Crucifixion.

Scripture—They took Jesus therefore; and he went out, bearing the cross for himself, unto the place called The place of a skull, which is called in Hebrew Golgotha; where they crucified him. John 19:17, 18.

O Jesus, "Man of Sorrows,"
Sole Son of God, the King!
What language shall I borrow
Thy boundless love to sing?
No mortal words can measure
Thy burdens thou didst take,
Accepting pain as pleasure,
All for my sinful sake.
—George S. Dwight ("Man of Sorrows").

Prayer—Holy Father, we stand in deep sorrow before the cross of Christ. For though the events of his redemptive work belong to the distant past, we cannot but remember that such sins as ours brought him to his death. Save us, we beseech Thee, from the mistakes and errors that crucify afresh the Son of God, and put him to an open shame. And may the Cross be our joy and glory, as it is the symbol of our salvation. Amen.

SATURDAY, APRIL 15.
Theme for the Day—In the Tomb.

Scripture—Now in the place where he was crucified there was a garden; and in the garden a new tomb wherein was never man yet laid. There then because of the Jews' preparation (for the tomb was nigh at hand) they laid Jesus. John 19:41-42.

So rest, our Rest, thou ever blest,
Thy grave with sinners making:
By thy precious death, from sin
Our dead souls awaking.

Meantime we will, O Jesus, still
Deep in remembrance lay thee,
Musing on thy death; in death
Be with us, we pray thee.
—Richard Massie ("Jesus in the Grave").

Prayer—Heavenly Father, we mark with a sense of wonder and deep sorrow the completion of that tragedy which brought our Savior to the tomb. We cannot fail to ask in our hearts the question, What if he had not come back? For in that grave outside the city there rested that sad Jewish Sabbath all the hope and happiness of the world. Pondering on these facts, may we be fitted more fully to realize the wonder and the joy of the Resurrection. Amen.

The only real believer in Christianity is the man who does it as well as defines it. It is always easier to preach than to practise. This does not mean that preaching is to be dispensed with, but that the practice is indispensable. John Wesley was wont to inquire of this or that preacher, Has he fruit? This is a fair question to ask of the occupants of the pews as well as of the pulpits, Have they fruit?—New York Observer.

The Moral Leaders of Israel

BY PROFESSOR HERBERT L. WILLETT

Section XVI. The Moral Program of Amos

April 16, Text for Special Study, Amos. 5.

QUESTIONS.

1. What was the feeling of Israel regarding the character of the popular religion in the days of Amos?
2. In what way did Amos stand opposed to the common ideas of his time?
3. What was his conception of Israel's relation to God?
4. What was his teaching regarding the "Day of the Lord"?
5. What were the sins which Amos most frequently denounced?
6. How do they compare with the outstanding sins of our own day?
7. What was the attitude of Amos toward the worship of images?
8. What did Amos say about his relation to the order of prophet?
9. Did Amos oppose sacrifice and other religious rites in themselves, or merely their substitution for right conduct?
10. What did Amos have to say regarding Israel's worship in the wilderness period?
11. Where were the cities in which the work of Amos was probably performed?
12. How did Amos differ from the people of his day in his conception of God's rule in the world?
13. What changes did Amos exhort the people to undertake?
14. Who was the king, and where was the court at this time?
15. Describe the interview between Amos and Amaziah.
16. Why was Amos angry at the insinuation that he was one of the common prophets?
17. Describe the visions of the Book of Amos.
18. How did Amos regard other nations as compared with Israel?
19. What has been thought regarding the relation of the closing verses of the book to the remainder
20. What would you regard as the chief values of the message of Amos in our own time?

* * *

1. AMOS' CHARGES AGAINST ISRAEL.

In our study of last week it was noted that the feeling of Israel at the time Amos appeared, about 750 B. C., was one of confidence in the character of its religion, and assurance that God approved of the conduct of the people. The services at the religious centers at Bethel, Dan, Gilgal and other similar shrines, were elaborate. The company of priests was numerous; the prophets of the popular sort were active; and a general spirit of optimism and expectancy prevailed.

The voice of Amos must have brought a rude awakening to such of the more attentive spirits as he enlisted in his campaign. It was his purpose to stir up the nation to a consideration of ethical and religious values such as it had not hitherto recognized. Against the spirit of satisfaction and confidence Amos threw himself with determination to break down the trust of the people in the formal type of religion, which too easily satisfied them.

The common feeling of the time was that Jehovah was pleased with their rites and services. He had chosen them, they thought, to be his own people. He would therefore accept their offerings with satisfaction, and if they erred, he would make allowances for their shortcomings. But Amos denounced all this assurance. Speaking in the name of God he said, "You only have I known among all the peoples of the earth, but for this very reason I will punish you for the sins you have committed. The other nations did not understand. They had only gods of wood and stone to serve. But you know the truth, and therefore I will judge you for your failure to make it the rule of your lives."

"The Day of the Lord" was a frequent expression in the mouth of the nation. It meant the time of God's arousal in behalf of his people, and his destruction of their enemies. But with Amos the phrase had a more sinister meaning. It was the time when God would judge Israel itself for its failures as the instruments of his purpose in the world. The sins of the nation were those of blindness and self-indulgence. The people were unmindful of the higher order of religious instruction, and hated both prophet and sage when their evil lives were denounced (5:10).

Violence and robbery were common practices (3:10, 6:12). Luxury such as their ancestors had never imagined had become common among them (3:12, 15; 6:1, 3). Dishonesty in the common transactions of life led to sharp practice and the meanest of cheating (8:5, 6). The injustice of the courts and the ruling classes made the poor man's life a burden (5:7, 11, 12).

With unsparing severity Amos denounced the women of Israel, not because all of them were corrupt, but because in every nation women create the standard of moral character, and above the level of their conduct, manhood does not easily rise. Amos felt that the distresses under which the poor suffered were is most instances due to the extravagance and love of luxury on the part of the women. These women might be of excellent character, and even sympathetic in disposition; but the result of their failure to appreciate the cost of their social vanities led to nameless sufferings on the part of those beneath them, the victims of the cruel oppression of their husbands (4:1-3).

For the most part, Amos seemed largely indifferent to the worship of the images at the shrines. Perhaps his unconcern or contempt regarding these representations of deity was due to his deeper interest in morality and civic virtue. But the tendency to worship other gods was noted in some of his utterances, and met with stern reprobation (5:26, 6:13, 8:14).

* * *

2. THE INEFFECTIVENESS OF POPULAR RELIGION.

To the astonishment of all this stern preacher from the South made it clear that he had no use for the popular and formal religion of the times. He indignantly denied that he belonged to the ordinary prophetic order, or was a member of any of the schools of the prophets (7:14). This utterance is significant as pointing to the decline of that great order of men which had been organized by Samuel and brought to such efficiency under Elijah and Elisha. Its decline must have been due to the same causes which make it necessary to exercise ceaseless vigilance lest religious education shall decline to the lower levels of professionalism and self-interest.

In ironical words the prophet summoned the people to the sanctuaries for the performance of their stated religious duties, but with the scornful affirmation that it was but to multiply transgressions (4:4, 5). He insisted that resort to such sanctuaries as Bethel, Gilgal and Beersheba was not to be compared with a simple and humble turning to God (5:4, 6). Of the common forms of worship he spoke in the strongest terms of disapproval. "I hate, I despise your feasts, and I will take no delight in your solemn assemblies. Yea, though ye offer me burnt offerings and meal offerings, I will not accept them; neither will I regard the meal offerings of your fat beasts." (5:21-22). He pointed out significantly the fact that at the very moment they were making their offerings at the sanctuaries they were in reality wishing the new moon and the Sabbath passed, in order that they might go on with their money-making, which was too frequently practiced in utter disregard of decency or honor (8:5, 6).

Amos shares with Hosea and Jeremiah the

The Moral Leaders of Israel is a Sunday School course for Young People's and Adult Bible Classes. It will continue throughout the year 1911. The publishers of THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY will supply classes of six or more with weekly copies of the paper containing these lessons, at $1 per year for each copy, or 30 cents per quarter. The class members will receive in addition to their Sunday-school lesson all the rich things provided every week in THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY. The papers distributed to the class on Sunday will contain the lesson for the following Sunday. Orders should be sent through the regular Sunday-school Treasurer if you wish to pay quarterly; or you may deal directly with the Publishers, enclosing remittance at the rate of $1.00 per year for each copy ordered. Be sure and give name of teacher or class member to whom papers shall be sent for distribution.

conviction that in the wilderness God never demanded of his people burnt offerings and sacrifices, and that for them to make such external and contemptible things the substitutes for right living and holiness was an insult not to be forgiven (5:25; Cf. Hosea 6:6, Jeremiah 7:22, 23, Psalm 40:6, 51:16).

* * *

3. A PROPHETIC SERMON.

There is perhaps no better illustration of the variety, force, and value of Amos' preaching than is to be found in chapter 5, which constitutes our present study. Imagine the prophet standing in some public place in the sacred city of Bethel, or on the streets of Samaria. He speaks to the crowd gathered about him. He laments the degradation into which Israel has fallen, in spite of the popular feeling of confidence. A future black with disaster impends. It is of no avail that they seek God in their conventional and worthless rites. They must seek him with humility and repentance, lest he break forth upon them in anger.

For the God with whom they must deal is the Lord of the universe, whose glory is unspeakably great (Cf. 4:13). But what is the popular feeling regarding men who really speak in the name of God? It is one of disapproval. Men want to be free to trample on the poor and amass fortunes, that they may build luxurious homes. They have no regard for popular rights, but accept bribes and deprive the unfortunate of their privileges.

With a conclusive "therefore," which sums up the prophet's denunciation of future trouble, he paints the picture of the coming trouble when the Assyrians, whom he well forsees are to be the instruments of Israel's humiliation, shall devastate the land. That "Day of the Lord" which Israel hal imagined would be its time of prosperity and victory over its enemies, would in reality be only a day of trouble and disaster, as if one were to flee from evils to worse evils, from light to darkness.

With denunciation of the common and formal worship, and earnest exhortation to "let judgment roll down as waters and righteousness as a mighty stream," followed by the sad comment that they had paid homage to foreign gods, the prophet sternly announces the future captivity of the people in the distant Assyria, beyond the regions of Damascus..

* * *

4. AMOS AND AMAZIAH.

It must not be supposed that utterances so much at variance with the popular optimism of the day and the official religion of the Northern Kingdom would pass without protest. The reign of Jeroboam II, was in its full tide of prosperity. His residence was in the city of Samaria, but no doubt he resided a portion of each year at Bethel, which was a sort of cathedral town or royal sanctuary, and therefore a place of importance and luxury.

Amos' words of criticism and warning necessarily reflected on the royal policy as well as upon the religious program of the shrines. This fact aroused Amaziah, the priest of the temple at Bethel. He sent word to the king that Amos was stirring up trouble in the city by his strictures upon current affairs, and his predictions of disaster upon the royal house. Not content with this indirect thrust at the prophet, he confronted him in person, charging him with disturbance of the peace, and insinuating that Amos had come to Bethel as one of those traveling preachers who went about the country exhorting, and collecting money from the people. Amaziah bade Amos go back to his own land of Judah and do his preaching there.

In hot anger the prophet responded that he did not belong to any professional class, but had come as a simple farmer whose heart the Lord had touched; and he was there to make clear the will of God to the nation. He denounced the priest for his opposition, and predicted the overthrow of the city amid disasters that would reduce the priests own family to beggary and infamy.

* * *

5. WARNING AND HOPE.

No part of the little book of Amos is more attractive than the series of visions presented in chapters 7 and 8. These visions set forth the peril about to encompass Israel, and the prophet's earnest effort in behalf of the people. The four little pictures of the locust danger, the conflagration, the plumb-line of justice, and the basket of summer fruit, make clear how anxious was the prophet to bring the people to such repentance and amendment of life as would save them from coming trouble.

Amos had a splendid vision of the world-wide rule of Jehovah. He insisted that all nations were alike dear to God. Ethiopians and Hebrews were equally his care. He brought up the Philistines from Crete and the Syrians from the East, even as he had conducted Israel out of Egypt. He would sift Israel like grain, but none should be lost.

Thus with warnings of famine, drought, blight and locusts, plague and war, and even the nameless terror yet to come (4:6-12), he sought to turn his people from their sins, and to create in them a sense of justice and honor such as God could approve.

The last verses of the book (9:11-15), are written in a tone so hopeful and confident that they have usually been thought to belong to a later and a Judean hand. But they point to the restoration of Israel after its period of distress, when the evil shall have been purged out from its life, and the will of God shall once more prevail.

The message of Amos to our own time is not difficult to discern. The sins of his day were those which disgrace our own. His book might have come from the press but yesterday, so full is it of the lessons our own generation ought to hear and heed.

* * *

7. FOLLOWING STUDIES.

The next section will deal with "The Tragedy of Hosea." Then will follow "Hosea's Message to Israel," "Isaiah of Jerusalem," and "The Statesmanship of Isaiah."

* * *

TOPICS FOR SPECIAL STUDY, REPORTS AND PAPERS.

1. The doctrine of the "Day of the Lord" in the book of Amos.
2. The sins which Amos most emphatically condemned.
3. The contrast between the prophetic and priestly ideals in the days of Amos.
4. The contrast between the professional prophets and the ideals of Amos.
5. Amos' doctrine of national values.
6. The element of prediction in the book of Amos.

* * *

LITERATURE.

Addis: "Hebrew Religion." Cornill: "The Prophets of Israel," pp. 37-46. Kirkpatrick: "The Doctrine of the Prophets," pp. 83-108. George Adam Smith: "Book of the Twelve Prophets," I. 61-196. Harper: "Amos and Hosea" (International Critical Commentary). Willett: "The Prophets of Israel," ch. 5. Articles on "Amos" in encyclopedias and Bible dictionaries.

Christian Endeavor Lesson

TOPIC FOR APRIL 16.

The Spirit of the Resurrection. Rom. 6:1-14.

Paul had told the Romans that they were justified in faith. The power of faith lay in its object, Jesus Christ. Works were an evidence of faith not a ground for salvation. Then many said, "We do not need to be holy, grace will abound to us even if we sin." This Paul sharply denies. He shows that they are to be dead in sin, as Christ himself. He affirms that they are to walk in "newness of life," showing the spirit of the risen Christ. What is that spirit of the resurrection, as our topic puts it? We shall get light by rereading the scripture lesson and also the contemporary passage, I Cor. 6:17, where Paul significantly says: "He that is joined unto the Lord is one spirit."

Antagonism to Sin.

The spirit of the resurrection is therefore essentially one of antagonism to sin, vs 12, 13. Are you a good hater? How much do you hate sin? Have you ever seen the scathing indignation of a good man, to whom sin was attributed? It flamed forth like a sword. Do you have something of that feeling? It is good to feel it in one's soul and know that it has a right to be there.

Dr. Ross says "the sinful heart is ever the same, but sin changes its quality as society develops." He then calls our attention to "new varieties of sin" which have developed during recent years and affirms that modern sin lacks the familiar tokens of guilt. It has come to be impersonal and "smokeless." There is all the more reason then that we lay our hearts to God's word and keep them tender with reference to wrong doing, lest we grow to be feeble antagonists of sin.

"Weapons of Righteousness."

If I could be a sword and my Lord should deign to hold me in the battle, then would I be glad if I were tempered to the finest edge and the utmost hardness. It seems to me I'd be glad to be anything he could use. They gave a secretary the pen with which the President signed a great treaty one day, so I'm told. He'll keep the pen as a precious relic. If our lives could be like pens with which the Master would write his messages, what meaning they would at once take on.

Every figure obscures the vital fact: "present yourselves unto God—your members as instruments of righteousness unto God." That is the spirit of the resurrection life.

The Victory.

"Sin shall not have dominion over you." Christ will not let it reign there. You have called him to the Kingship and he will fight your battle against all intruders. The struggle may continue as long as you live but you can keep your feet on the neck of your enemy. Victory for your life is the ultimate result. No matter how you sweat and toil and strive today; no matter how often you wonder at nightfall whether the battle has been for or against you: victory is the certain goal of the soul under grace.

You will think of the resurrection as more than a victory over death and sorrow. It is a victory over death and sorrow, the results of sin. It is a victory over sin and therefore over everything that sin includes. It means a rebirth of everything holy and a flowering of all the finer, more beautiful and fragrant, qualities of Christian character.

Illinois Department

State Office, 24 Illinois National Bank Bldg., Springfield

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY is a national religious paper published by the Disciples of Christ in the interests of Christian unity and the Kingdom of God. While its circulation is nation-wide and impartially distributed among all the states, it recognizes a special obligation to the State of Illinois in which it is published. It desires particularly to serve the cause of Christ in Illinois by publishing its significant church news, by interpreting its religious life and by promoting the ideals of the Disciples within its borders. To this end the publishers of THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY maintain a state office at Springfield, the capital and central city. It is the purpose of the state editor to study the whole field of Illinois, visiting all the churches, reporting his observations and pointing the churches to ever higher ideals. Pastors and church workers are requested to co-operate by regularly sending items of news, clippings from local papers, parish papers, weekly leaflets, occasional paragraphs of sermons and any other information that will give to the state editor all the data for reporting and interpreting the progress of Christian work in the state. All communications to the editor may be addressed, 24 Illinois National Bank Building, Springfield. All business communications should be addressed to the Chicago office.

J. C. Adams, who graduates from Eureka College in June, has become pastor of the church at Sidney.

Atlanta church received an offering for missions of $80.70. The pastor, R. H. Newton, has recently taken the confession of twelve persons.

Mason City church, where Frank E. Welton is preaching, speaks in complimentary terms of W. H. Waggoner, who has been conducting an institute in their church.

Harvel church, where S. R. Lewis is pastor, took its first offering for foreign missions the first Sunday in March. The offering amounted to $5.

Catlin church has welcomed its new pastor, T. L. Cummins, who began his work in March. Mr. Cummins was formerly pastor of Bennett Church.

Keensburg church received an offering of $13.25 on foreign mission day. The pastor is J. E. Moyer, who has been with this congregation for nearly five years. The work is prospering.

Dixon church, where S. Elwood Fisher is pastor, received an offering for foreign missions of $50. The Christian Endeavor Society is expecting to assist in the India orphanage work.

Secretary J. Fred Jones held a two weeks' meeting at Louisville which closed March 12, on account of impassable roads and unfavorable weather. The congregation spoke in praise of the evangelist's sermons.

Ancona church, where Guy L. Zerby of Eureka is pastor, is enjoying a revival meeting with C. R. L. Vawter as evangelist. This is the second meeting held by this evangelist here and the prospects are encouraging.

The resignation of G. W. Wise at DuQuoin, to become pastor at DeLand, made necessary the appointment of a new secretary for the third district. Adam K. Adcock, pastor at Carbondale, has received the appointment.

L. O. Lehman and his congregation at Gibson City, are happy in the completion of plans for the new church edifice and the committee is preparing to have building operations begun at the earliest possible moment.

Eureka church enjoyed a lecture by Guy W. Sarvis of Chicago on "Through the Heart of Africa." The following night Mr. Sarvis spoke at Springfield. This lecture is delivered with great appreciation everywhere.

C. E. Booth left his pastorate in St. Louis for a short time, to assist Oliver W. Jennings in a meeting at Granite City. At last report the meeting had not been concluded. There had been four additions. Miss Vera Morris as singing evangelist was assisting.

Beardstown meeting being held by J. Fred Jones started with one addition the first Sunday and a splendid zeal in the congregation to encourage both pastor and evangelist. The Woman's Class in the Sunday-school had an attendance of sixty-two.

Evangelist Sword is securing splendid results in his Augusta meeting. At last report there had been thirty-six additions, all but one being by confession. Mr. Sword is being assisted now by J. A. Kay, who is contributing much to the meeting in his leadership of the music.

J. A. Barnett of Galesburg, officiated at the funeral of Mrs. W. E. Patterson of Monmouth two weeks ago. Mrs. Patterson was the daughter of D. E. Hughes, who for more than sixteen years has been pastor of the church at Monmouth.

The church at Girard, where R. Sheeler Campbell has recently become pastor, is in a flourishing condition. The Sunday-school is large and active. There is a class with an enrollment of sixty men, and congregations are uniformly large.

T. J. Clark conducted a meeting for his home congregation, lasting for two weeks, and resulted in twenty additions, fifteen being confessions. Not the least important feature of the meeting was the excellent Christian spirit and zeal which was manifested.

Champaign church is hoping to have its new church ready for dedication on Easter Sunday. The pastor, Stephen E. Fisher, besides a multitude of other duties, is conducting a conference one evening during the week for young people who have recently become Christians.

Concord church is awaiting anxiously the completion of its new church. The happiest relations are existing here between the pastor, E. P. Gish, and the congregation. The pastor has been re-called for a second year with a vacation of three months during the summer.

D. M. Durham has been pastor of Browns church for nearly six years and his work is progressing continually. The church has a large prayer-meeting, sometimes numbering more than fifty, and a Sunday-school with an attendance of 100. The congregation is happy in the continuance of Mr. Durham's ministerial relations with them.

The Men's Bible classes at Fisher had a banquet with about ninety men. After dinner, addresses were delivered by Charles Clark, pastor of Ludlow church, on "Man's Duty to Himself," and by E. D. Murch, pastor of Rantoul church, on "Man's Duty to His Church and Bible School." The pastor is J. Fred Hollingsworth.

Lewistown church, where B. H. Cleaver is minister, celebrated recently its thirty-seventh anniversary. Only three of the charter members are living. This church's organization was the result of a four days' debate between Dr. John Hughes, a Universalist, and Clark Braden. At the celebration a fraternal address was delivered by W. F. Davidson, who for fifty-six years has been editor of the Fulton County Democrat.

Danville Second Church, where J. Scott Hyde is pastor, is in a meeting with Evangelist Bloom that is assuming excellent proportions. Before the meeting had been conducted two weeks the Sunday-school had been increased 60 per cent. The membership was spiritually aroused. There were additions, and a floating indebtedness and all expenses of the meeting had been liquidated. The entire congregation sat down to dinner on Sunday after the morning service and remained for an afternoon meeting.

Cecil C. Carpenter has been pastor of the church at Princeton for more than five yars. On March 19, the fifth anniversary of the pastorate was celebrated. On the night preceding the celebration, the congregation assembled as a surprise for the pastor and his wife, and after a program of felicitations, a library table was presented them. Mr. Carpenter has set for himself high standards in his work, and the people of the congregation to which he ministers are responding nobly to his appeals. It is to be hoped that not less than another five years will be added to this pastorate.

I. R. Lines, of Monroe Street Church, Chicago, supplied the pulpit of Batavia church on a recent Sunday evening, while E. A. Henry of Batavia church delivered a stereopticon lecture on Palestine in Mr. Lines' pulpit. Mr. Henry returned last year from a tour of investigation in Palestine with a company of university men, and while abroad secured many interesting views which he has prepared to thrown upon the canvas. He enjoyed the experience of first-hand investigation which excellently prepares him for public lectures.

L. F. DePoister, who is pastor of the church at Keithsburg, was relieved from his pastoral duties for a time, to hold a meeting at New Boston. During the two weeks the meeting continued, there were eleven confessions. The evangelist was assisted by Elmer E. Rice of Dixon. In addition to the numerical results, the congregation has been revived and improvements are to be made on the edifice at once. Mr. DePoister will be glad to correspond with a young minister desiring to engage with this congregation at a salary not to exceed $700.

Gurnee church, in northern Illinois, where Royal L. Handley is pastor, is among the older congregations of the state. Its organization reaches back fifty-one years ago. It started with twelve charter members, of whom two are living today. At its semi-centennial celebration money was raised to greatly improve the present edifice, and the same is now complete. The church has the distinction of being the only Protestant church in the township. Three other Disciple churches in this county have in years past been organized, but none are living today.

Maroa Church dedicated its new building, March 19. This building cost $24,000, and all indebtedness was provided before the day of dedication. It is of glazed brick with Bedford stone trimmings, and has a seating capacity of 600. W. H. Harding, who has been minister here for three years, is deserving of great credit for this accomplishment. Outside of Decatur, the Sunday-school of this congregation is the largest in the county. This church has a history reaching back fifty years. On the day of dedication, O. W. Lawrence, pastor of Central church, Decatur, delivered the communion address of the afternoon. The morning and evening sermons were preached by the pastor.

T. C. Harris and the congregation at Blandinsville, will have a missionary institute during May, conducted by W. H. Waggoner.

Moline church, where W. B. Slater is minister, is prospering. This is a new church. The congregation is carrying indebtedness on its building, but is manifesting a spirited interest in reducing the same; each interest paying period there results a reduction of the principal.

Shelbyville church concluded a two weeks' meeting held by its new pastor, R. H. Robertson, assisted by F. J. Held as musical director. In two weeks there were nine additions, five of whom were by confession.

Pekin church is thirty-four years old and is in a flourishing condition. Present membership is 1,200. The Sunday-school has an enrollment of 250, with organization consisting of seven departments and each department with a superintendent. The church's prosperity is especially manifested since the beginning of the pastorate of O. C. Bolman, dating back only six months.

Petersburg church suffered a severe loss in the drowning of Professor Price, teacher of science in the high school and leader of the Boy Scout movement in this church. Mr. Price had recently purchased a canoe, looking forward to the organization of a Boy Scout Squadron later in the season. While acquainting himself with its handling, the boat capsized in some unknown way, and Mr. Price and the young lady who was accompanying him were both drowned.

News Editorials

A Suggestive Series.

O. W. Lawrence, of Central Church, Decatur, is preaching a series of Sunday evening sermons apropos of the 300th anniversary of the translation of the King James version of the Scriptures. The series includes four sermons on "The Bible, What It Is and What It Is Not." "The Bible and the Manuscripts." "The Bible—Its Authority." "The Bible in Tablets of Flesh." Sermons like these preached to many congregations would be enlightening and would prove conducive to intelligent Christian service such as is not often begotten by the ordinary textual sermonizing. It would prove stimulating to the ministry itself to read or reread several valuable modern books on these subjects and come before the congregation with fresh, spirited sermons. This third centennial year furnishes a good opportunity. We have much preaching from the Bible. Many a minister justifies his sermon by taking a text. If texts were human—and many are—the company they are compelled to keep in sermons preached with them as an excuse must often cause deep blushing. We do not doubt that many a church would be glad to be made acquainted with the Scripture, if the minister would come from a vital study of the Book itself, and from the great modern contributions to Biblical knowledge. In the method of many pulpits there is danger both to the preacher and his parishioners that a magnified importance may attach to a single verse and a minimized importance to the entire Scripture. Proportion is demanded in preaching as well as in other departments of life, and it is also one of the hardest virtues to attain. "Preaching the word" is not necessarily dwelling long on one verb, phrase, sentence, paragraph or subject. It means proportion. It signifies comprehensiveness. A preacher requires analytical power sufficicent to deal vitally and thoroughly with a subject suggested by a paragraph, or even a word, but without perspective his pulpit ministrations will not cultivate a deep spiritual life.

PREACHERS GOING TO CONGRESS.

The Twelfth Annual Congress of the Disciples of Christ will be held at Springfield, Ill., Apr. 18-20. Proceding it there will be a half day session of the Northern Illinois Christian Ministerial Institute. These two organizations seconded most heartily by the churches of Springfield extend an urgent invitation to the brethren in all these parts and the regions more remote, to come up to this feast. It will be a genuine mental tonic.

S. H. ZENDT,
Sec. N. I. C. M. Institute.
Bloomington, Ill.

Eureka College

Attendance.

When we entered upon this campaign three years ago for the enlargement of Eureka College, one of the criticisms waged against the college was, that no man had been able to find out the exact attendance for a number of years. In the first place the criticism was not true. The attendance in each department had been published annually in the catalogue, and in other ways, for years to my certain knowledge. But we have tried to meet legitimate criticism and profit by it. One of the first things done, therefore, was to issue a leaflet giving the average attendance in each department of the college for the past ten years, also the total enrollment and average enrollment for the same time. This destroyed much criticism. There were those, however, who felt that it was not a wise policy to give the exact enrollment. They felt it would hurt us. On the other hand, it has been to our advantage. We have not lost a single student, and we have had a gradual increase in the regular departments of the college ever since. We have not been able to push this line of work with the vigor that it demands, because the entire attention has been given to the financial side of the college work, and especially the endowment. But from now on Eureka College proposes to carry on a vigorous campaign to secure new students. The campaign has already commenced. We are studying every method of advertising and every plan that we can hear of for securing students. We need the help of our friends.

Business.

We also met two criticisms concerning what we supposed to be the business policy of the college. The statement had been made that a financial statement of Eureka College could not be secured. It may be that Eureka College, in common with all such educational institutions, was not as enthusiastic in stating the depressing financial problems as many of her critics would like. We have made no effort to play to the galleries; but we have done two things, which have put Eureka College absolutely beyond the pale of legitimate criticism. First: Sometime ago we issued a financial statement, giving in detail the assets and liabilities of the school. We have distributed these reports by the thousands. No man has been solicited, if we knew it, without being given a full statement of the financial situation. This, of course, is in addition to the annual statement that is published regularly concerning the income and expenditures of the college. Second: At the January meeting of the board of trustees a new committee was appointed. This committee is known as the Endowment and Investment Committee. From now on this committee will have charge of all the permanent securities of the college. The endowment that Eureka College had when this campaign commenced has been turned over to this committee; and with the completion of this endowment campaign, everything that is raised will be put into the hands of this committee. This became necessary because of the enlargement of the endowment fund, and a new committee, whose time could be devoted to this kind of work, was created. This committee will prepare annually a statement of the assets and liabilities of the college; and the only thing the critic of the administrative affairs of Eureka College need do, is to write anybody connected with the school and full and definite information will be given. Eureka College is a school of the Disciples, for the Disciples, and by the Disciples; and it is our policy to give the Brotherhood detailed information about the school. I hope this will be the end of all unjust and unwise criticism.

The Future.

If the Disciples of Illinois do the square thing by Eureka College within the next few weeks we will be able to report at Commencement the completion of our $125,000 proposition. This, just as soon as the money can be collected and invested, will give Eureka College enough to pay all indebtedness and add $100,000 to the permanent endowment. The college had $50,000 in endowment when the campaign commenced. This will give us at least $150,000 in endowment. It will not be the end of the matter; but will only be the beginning of larger and better things for Eureka College. In view of what has been done during the past three years, it will be nothing short of a disgrace to the Disciples of Illinois if this endowment campaign is a failure. It is a good thing, however, for the readers of this paper to remember that this work is not to be finished by a sort of hazy idealized something called the "brotherhood;" but by each friend of the college doing what he knows to be his part. I shall be more than pleased to hear from any friend who has been interested in what we are trying to do.

H. H. PETERS.

Chicago

By Vaughan Dabney.

A group picture of the Chicago Disciple ministers was taken last week.

C. C. Buckner, pastor at Irving Park, has recently organized a Boys' Brotherhood.

Austin Hunter's Men's Class of Jackson Boulevard Sunday-school, held a banquet in the church Thursday evening, March 30. Clifford G. Roe, was the chief speaker.

Nelson Trimble says that the Glen Park Church was dedicated free of debt; $575 was raised. The building will seat 200. Four additions at Glen Park on Sunday last.

Union Sunday evening services are being held by the various churches in West Pullman. At the last service the congregations met with the Disciples, with W. E. Hopkins, of the Baptist Church, preaching.

The regular monthly union meeting of Chicago ministers was held Monday, March 27, in the Y. M. C. A. auditorium. The main topic of discussion was the "World in Chicago"—a huge missionary exhibit, by which it is hoped our churches may become more interested in missions. The chief speakers were A. M. Gardner of England and Harry Wade Hicks of New York. Mr. Gardner, who now has charge of "The World in Boston" told of the great practical value of this enterprise to the English people. Mr. Lewis of the Young People's Missionary Movement, expressed the desire of his organization to assist in the undertaking. At this session it was voted to observe Arbitration Sunday, Apr. 2, or as near after that as possible. The Free Council of the churches of England were to observe April 2, as Arbitration Sunday, and the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, desirous of coöperating with our English brethren, through Dr. E. B. Sanford, urged that our American churches observe the day.

The Christian Century

Published Weekly by

The New Christian Century Co

700-714 East Fortieth St., Chicago, Ill.
United Religious Press Building.
Phone Douglas 3113.

Entered as Second-Class Matter Feb. 28, 1902, at the Post Office at Chicago, Illinois, Under Act of March 3, 1879.

EDITORS
CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON.
HERBERT L. WILLETT.

CONTRIBUTING EDITOR
SILAS JONES.

SUBSCRIPTIONS.
Subscription price $2.00. If paid strictly in advance $1.50 will be accepted. To ministers if paid strictly in advance, $1.00 per year. Single copies 5 cents.

EXPIRATIONS.
The label on the paper shows the month to which subscription is paid. List is revised monthly. Change of date on label is a receipt for remittance on subscription account.

DISCONTINUANCES.
Special Notice—In order that subscribers may not be annoyed by failure to receive the paper, it is not discontinued at expiration of time paid in advance (unless so ordered), but is continued pending instruction from the subscriber. If discontinuance is desired, prompt notice should be sent and all arrearages paid.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.
In ordering change of address give the old as well as the new. If the paper does not reach you regularly, notify us at once.

REMITTANCES
Should be sent by draft or money order payable to The New Christian Century Company. IF LOCAL CHECK IS SENT ADD TEN CENTS FOR EXCHANGE.

ADVERTISING.
Nothing but clean business and reliable firms advertised. Rates given on application.

Church Life

—Announcement will be made next week of the prize news item or news list in this week's paper. The author will have his choice of one of the following books:

1. New Testament Theology, by Henry C. Sheldon, Macmillan. $1.50 net.
2. The Truth of Christianity, by W. H. Turton, Putnam. $1.25 net.
3. Christian Unity in Effort, by Frank J. Firth, Lippincott. $1.50 net.
4. Souls in Action, by Harold Begbie, Hodder & Stoughton. $1.25 net.

* * *

J. Q. Briggs, of Christian University, Enid, Okla., has accepted a call to Pawhuska, Okla.

J. E. Teaney has resigned his pastorate at New London, Iowa, to accept a call to Murray, Iowa.

A new church was dedicated on Apr. 2, at Cummings, Kansas. B. L. Smith of Salina, Kansas, conducted the dedicatory services.

J. A. Cargill of Michigan has accepted a call from the East Side church, Toledo, Ohio, and is already on the field.

John W. Marshall and the Marshall quartette will assist R. L. Courtney in a meeting at Bartlett, Texas, beginning May 12,.

E. P. Wise, of East Liverpool, O., assisted the church at Bethany, W. Va., in a short meeting in March.

C. M. Yocum of the Central Church, Cincinnati, has accepted a call to Rushville, Ind. He will begin his new work about May 15.

The Sunday-school of the First Church, Brazil, Ind., is enjoying a prosperous growth. Recently the attendance was 430, and it was hoped that the 500 mark would be reached on the next Sunday.

S. M. Conner, who for forty-seven years was in the work in Indiana, is temporarily supplying the pulpit of Dean Avenue Church, Spokane, Wash., left vacant by the removal of Bruce Brown to Fullerton, Cal.

H. W. Schwan of Wooster, Ohio, has accepted a call to Danville and Millwood and is already at work in his new field. F. H. Scattergood has taken up the work at Wooster.

Thomas H. Popplewell, pastor at Arkansas City, Kan., reports two additions on March 19. Preparations are being made for a meeting to begin May 1, under the leadership of J. B. Boen of Seymour, Texas.

W. W. Winbigler, who has done faithful service under the Ohio Christian Missionary Society in the Central Church, Findlay, O., began work in his new field of labor at Sharon, Pa., April 1.

M. L. Buckley was assisted by R. A. Nichols in a twelve days' meeting at Collinwood, O., with fifty-three additions. There have been more than 300 added to this church during the ministry of Mr. Buckley.

J. M. Lowe, of Des Moines, Iowa, recently closed a meeting at Conway, Iowa, resulting in a new church with half time preaching. The meeting established a good spirit of unity among all the church workers there. Mr. Lowe is available for a meeting in April.

Leslie Wolfe, of Manila, P. I., reports a total of twelve baptisms during January. The first union Sunday-school convention ever held in the Philippines, was held February 24-26. F. L. Brown, a well-known Sunday-school worker in the United States, was present.

W. B. Crewdson, for two years pastor at Logan, Ia., who recently received a call to the church at Missouri Valley, Iowa, has accepted the unanimous call of his congregation at Logan to remain with them another year.

W. J. Lhamon assisted E. C. Harris and the church at Bedford, O., in a good meeting, beginning March 5. There were a goodly number of additions and at the close of the meeting the Baptist church invited Mr. Lhamon to preach in their house for a week.

The trustees of North Side Church, Omaha, Neb., have let the contract for their new edifice, and work on it will begin soon. The building is to be of brick and Bedford stone, and will cost $20,000. The seating capacity will be 600. The date of its completion is set for Sept. 1.

The ministers of the older churches in Columbus, O., H. Newton Miller, T. L. Lowe and C. A. Hill, are doing the preaching for the church in South Columbus, of which R. F. Strickler is minister. Mr. Strickler has been doing a remarkable work in this field during this year.

Harry G. Hill, pastor of Third Church, is preaching a series of Lenten sermons on the following subjects: "The Great Call and the Great Temptation;" "The Mountain of Glory and the Valley of Service;" "The Crisis at Capernaum;" "The Trial;" "Crucified, Dead and Buried;" "The Victory Over Death.'

W. J. Lhamon is assisting the Baptist church in Bedford, Ohio, in a meeting. The people of the Baptist church having heard him in a series of meetings and lectures in the Disciples church, gave him and his assistant, Samuel Lewis, an enthusiastic invitation to their church.

Dr Price's CREAM BAKING POWDER

Improves the flavor and adds to the healthfulness of the food.

Superlative in Strength and Purity.

PRICE BAKING POWDER CO., CHICAGO.

J. E. Davis, pastor at Beatrice, Neb., reports fourteen additions in the past two Sundays. The organization of a Brotherhood is almost complete. Mr. Davis will assist J. M. Kersey, of First Church, Omaha, in a meeting preceding Easter. J. W. Baker, of Washington, will represent the American Society at Beatrice, April 9, and take the offering.

Following the special meeting at Bowling Green, O., under the lead of State Bible School Evangelist, L. I. Mercer, who set things in order in that important church and made adjustment for advanced work, Z. E. Bates of Atchison, Kan., became minister for the congregation. Mr. Bates is well known in Bowling Green and vicinity and the church is delighted to have him with them as their minister.

The Disciples, Baptist and Methodist churches, of North Royalton, Ohio, united in a union evangelistic meeting of three weeks resulting in about thirty additions. The spirit of the meeting was fine throughout. This meeting was a practical demonstration of Christian unity on a small scale. More good was effected in this united effort than could have been wrought by separate revival services in each church. The union services were continued in young people's prayer-meetings and midweek prayer-meetings of old and young.

C. O. Reynard, formerly of Second Church, Warren, Ohio, who recently took up the work at Cecil Street Church, Toronto, is already making encouraging progress there. This church had been without a pastor for ten months, but its activities had been remarkably sustained by the faithfulness of the congregation. Mr. Reynard began at once on a campaign for the Living Link work in foreign missions. About half of the amount has been subscribed and it is hoped to raise the remainder on Children's Day in June. A men's Bible class was organized at once, which grew from an enrollment of eleven to thirty-two in two Sundays. The whole Sunday-school is gaining ground, and a corresponding activity is being manifested in all the departments of the church.

Evangelists Wilhite and Stewart are in a meeting with T. H. Adams at Grand Rapids, Mich.

J. T. Henson of Slater, Mo., has accepted the call of First Church, Moberly, Mo., and will begin work there Apr. 2.

S. B. Culp, pastor at Delta, Ohio, held a meeting this month with his congregation, resulting in seventeen additions.

H. N. McKee for two years pastor at Cape Girardeau, Mo., has accepted the pastorate at Vilvalvia, Cal., and is now on the field.

The congregation at Milton, Ind., is planning extensive improvements in their church building to be done at a cost of about $1,800.

In the meeting recently conducted by R. H. Crossfield at Pomona, Calif., there were eighty-three additions. M. D. Clubb is pastor of this congregation.

Roland Nichols has closed his meetings at Collinwood, Ohio, with fifty-three additions. During the two years' ministry of M. L. Buckley, more than 300 names have been added to this church.

J. P. Allison who recently accepted a call to Connellsville, Pa., has received a warm welcome from his congregation there. The Sunday-school made a new record of 201 present on the first day of his ministry there.

Charles Reign Scoville began a meting with William J. Wright, pastor at Enid, Okla., on March 26. The meetings are being held in the opera house, with large crowds in attendance. On the first day there were 102 additions.

A. P. Johnson, of Chickasha, Okla., has accepted a call to become minister of the Dunham Ave. Church, Cleveland, O. He will begin his new work the first of May. The congregation is congratulating itself on having secured so worthy a successor to J. P. Allison, who rendered faithful and efficient service in that field for five years.

Charles E. Taylor, pastor at Wadsworth, Ohio, has been extended an unanimous call by the Park Street Church, Geneva, Ohio, and began work there Apr. 2. This church is now out of debt for the first time in many years. Extensive repairs have been made on the church and parsonage, and enough money has been pledged to cover all obligations.

First Church, of Stockton, Cal., J. K. Ballou, minister, is spending about $1,500 for repairs on its building. This is one of the oldest churches of the Disciples in California and one of the largest of central or northern California. The outlook is good and congregation is prospering. A committee of the Ministerial Alliance was recently appointed to make recommendation concerning union evangelistic meetings.

A. C. Smither, of the First Church of Los Angeles, had a unique experience on Lord's Day, Mar. 26, 1911. On that morning he preached a composite sermon prepared conjointly with ten other pastors whose churches were joining with his in a series of union evangelistic services under the preaching of President R. H. Crossfield, of Transylvania University. It was the sixteen hundredth sermon preached in the same pulpit during his more than twenty years' ministry for that church. Just 2,500 persons have been added to the membership of the First Church during his ministry there. He has held the longest continuous pastorate of any church in Los Angeles, and the longest pastorate of our churches on the Pacific Coast. President Crossfield is engaged to assist in a series of evangelistic meetings beginning Apr. 9.

Wisconsin Notes

Work doing finely up here. Much to encourage. A wonderful opportunity is ours. We are coming to realize our obligation to this great state. What a privilege is ours too in taking this fine civilization for Christ!

The meeting at West Lima, held by Claire L. Waite closed Mar. 19, with twenty-one names added. A great deal of credit is due Mr. Waite for this fine meeting.

The meeting at Rib Lake, held by the writer, closed Mar. 12, with thirty-three names added. The minister, J. Sig. Stone, is doing a fine work and is beloved by all. Six names have been added since the meeting closed. The membership has been doubled with this effort and now we are the strongest religious force in the community.

A minister will soon be located at Green Bay. The right man will do a good work there. In time we will have a strong church.

The First Church, Milwaukee, is in a revival with C. C. Wilson, the regular minister doing the preaching, and Percy M. Kendall and wife having charge of music and personal work. We are expecting much from the effort.

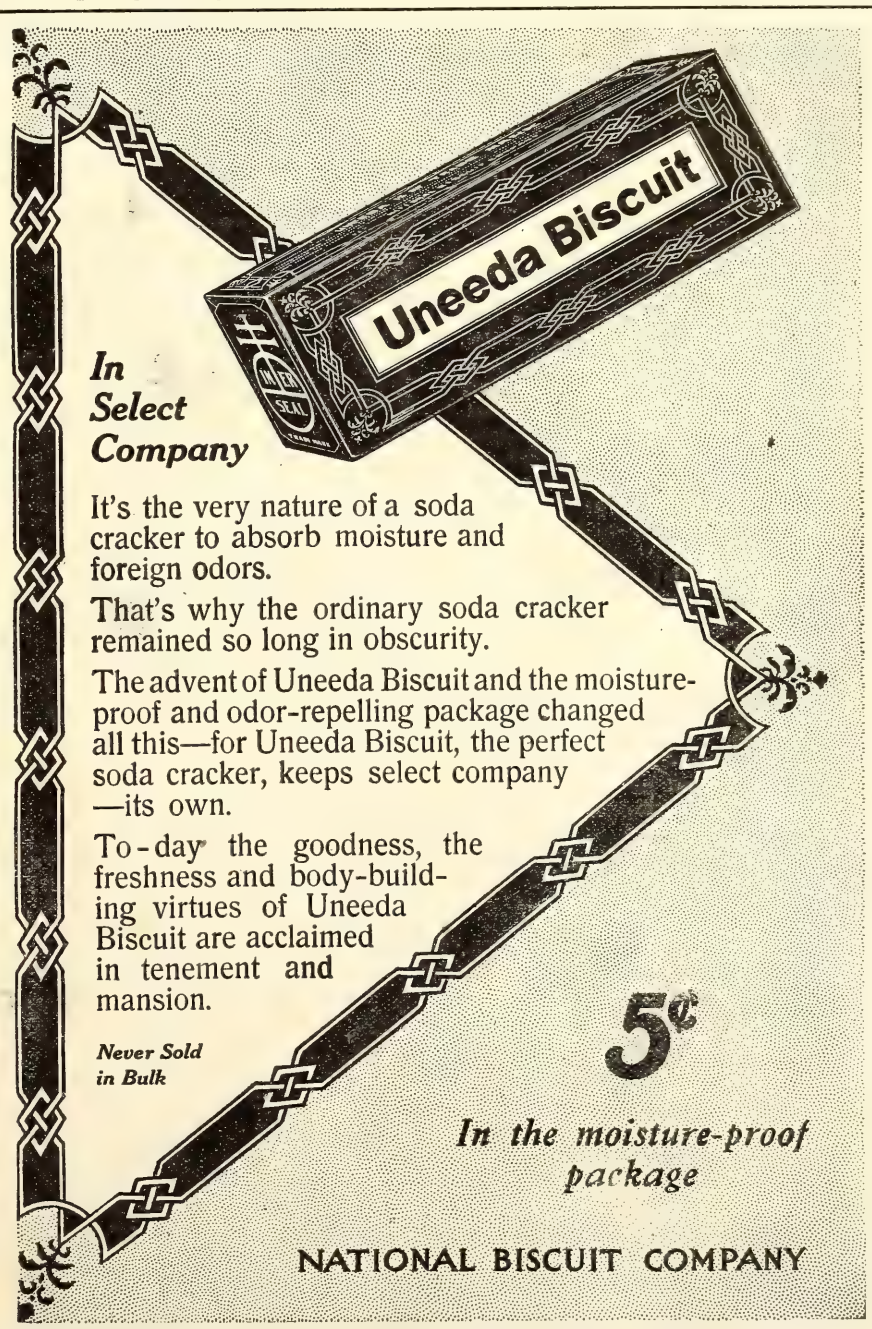
The work at Second Church, Milwaukee, is going steadily on. Mark Wayne Williams, the minister, is exerting an influence in the entire city. They are expecting to build a new church next summer.

Since our convention in September, 400 names have been added to the churches, making a gain of more than 20 per cent. Who can beat it?

We are planning for a District Convention at Footville for the Southeast, Apr. 24-25, and for the Southwest at Reardstown, Apr. 26-27.

We are expecting the National Convention for 1912. Wisconsin needs it and Milwaukee can take care of it. Brethren, remember we are expecting it.

Since coming to the state five churches have been organized and five ministers won or started in training for the ministry. We believe we can in time, raise up all the min-



Uneeda Biscuit
In Select Company
It's the very nature of a soda cracker to absorb moisture and foreign odors.
That's why the ordinary soda cracker remained so long in obscurity.
The advent of Uneeda Biscuit and the moisture-proof and odor-repelling package changed all this—for Uneeda Biscuit, the perfect soda cracker, keeps select company —its own.
To-day the goodness, the freshness and body-building virtues of Uneeda Biscuit are acclaimed in tenement and mansion.
Never Sold in Bulk
5¢
In the moisture-proof package
NATIONAL BISCUIT COMPANY

Books

WHEN YOU WANT BOOKS

Send your order to us. We handle the books of all publishers, at the lowest prices. Your order will be promptly attended to

THE NEW CHRISTIAN CENTURY COMPANY

700 East Fortieth Street - - - - Chicago, Ill

isters we will need. But until our boys finish their preparation we must have help. We want some men right now. Come and help!

Green Bay, Wis. FRANK L. VAN VORHIS, Supt. of Missions.

Washington, D. C.

The Ninth Street Church has just closed a short series of meetings resulting in forty-nine responses to the gospel invitation. Of this number forty were by confession. L. E. Sellers of Philadelphia was with us twelve days and rendered most excellent service. We began the Sunday before he came and continued the Sunday after he left. There were forty responses while he was with us and nine the other two Sundays. This makes seventy-seven since Jan. 1. During the year 1910, 193 united with our church. We have a good church of over 1,100 members and a Bible School which had an average attendance during March of 616.

GEORGE A. MILLER.

An Efficiency Dinner

Louis Brandeis won the Railroad Rate case for the shippers because he succeeded in showing that what was needed was not higher rates but higher efficiency. This is the newest up-to-the-minute idea in the business world. Merchants, builders, manufacturers are waking up to this demand.

The East End Christian Church, Pittsburgh, J. R. Ewers, pastor, having upon its board a number of big business men, is considering the plan of having at a prominent hotel an "Efficiency Dinner" where these men of affairs will decide how a modern church can be conducted upon efficient lines.

Would it not be considered a poor business policy which did not make the most of available financial strength? Would it not be considered a poor Sunday-school policy which did not gather in every man, woman and child who reasonably looked to any given church for spiritual life? Would it not be a bad business policy not to follow up every possibility to make a sale? Equally so, when a stranger enters a given church should he not be cultivated? Should not his name and address be learned and a pastoral call made if possible? The mere fact that he enters the church indicates that he is more or less favorably disposed. The efficient store must sell goods to every one entering the door. The efficient church must catch every stranger coming to the service. Would it not be a poor business policy which did not cultivate its territory? Thus also of the church. These are only a few of the possible problems of efficient church management, to say nothing of what an efficient minister ought to be today, which may be discussed at the proposed dinner. This is the day of "efficiency."

First Church, Marion, Ind.

The beautiful house, of which a picture is presented herewith, was recently dedicated by the church at Marion, Ind.

The building over all is 60 feet by 108 feet and three stories high. There is a fine basement throughout the main floor, and a balcony almost around the entire building. The seating capacity is estimated at 1,500 people. The aim of the Building Committee was utility all along the line. The church is a most substantial building of Bedford stone, Brazil pressed brick, and slate roof. The whole plant complete will cost a little over $33,000. The structure was begun under the ministry of J. Boyd Jones, now of Anderson Central Church. In September, 1910, the present pastor came to the field. George L. Snively, of Lewiston,, Ill., was the master of ceremonies on dedication day. It was a glorious day in the history of our movement, in the city of Marion. A short meeting of fifteen days followed. Counting those who came Sunday there were 129 additions. At least fifty of these are heads of families. They have now the largest membership save one, in this fine little city of 20,000. There have been 156 additions to the church since October 1, 1910. Marion Church, under the leadership of Mr. Myers, will soon be one of the strongest churches in Indiana.

Rev. J. P. Myers, Pastor, Marion, Ind.

Beautiful New House of Worship at Marion, Ind.

The Third District (Missouri)

Lamar has extended a call to Harry A. Cooke late of Memphis, Tenn. Buffalo has called Morgan E. Genge of St. Louis, formerly of Helena, Arkansas, and they report the work starting fine.—Fairplay has called J. A. Bloomer of Ash Grove for one fourth time. W. L. Ludwig assisted by J. L. Alexander, singer, is in the midst of a good meeting with his own congregation, Webb City. D. W. Moore of Carthage and Geo. L. Peters, Central Church, Springfield, are each contemplating holding their own meeting in their own church beginning Easter Day.—The work at Richland and Stoutland is progressing nicely under the ministry of

DON'T FORGET

CHILDREN'S DAY

For Foreign Missions

FIRST SUNDAY IN JUNE

SUPPLIES FREE

The Foreign Christian Missionary Society will furnish CHILDREN'S DAY SUPPLIES for the first Sunday in June FREE to those Sunday Schools observing the day in the interests of HEATHEN MISSIONS.

FREE SUPPLIES

1. CRUSADERS FOR CHRIST. The beautiful new Children's Day Exercise by P. H. Duncan. Sixteen pages of song, recitation, and drill. A bundle of sunshine. A high class exercise, yet simple enough for the smallest school.

2. LIFE-SAVER MISSIONARY BOXES. Like the picture above. Automatic, self-locking. They will please. Put your school to work with them.

ORDER AT ONCE. Give local name of Sunday School and average attendance. Write

STEPHEN J. COREY, Box 884, Cincinnati, O.

HIRAM COLLEGE. Send for Illustrated Bulletin, Souvenir Mailing Card and Complete Catalog to PRES. MINER LEE BATES, HIRAM, O.

BELLS.

Steel Alloy Church and School Bells. Send for Catalogue. The C. S. BELL CO., Hillsboro, O

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS. UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.

Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

(Please mention this paper.)

A. J. Baird. Brother Baird has an assistant pastor just arrived and making a good beginning. Ministerial training is the special order in his work now. Special missionary rallies have been conducted by I. N. McCash at Carthage assisted by D. Y. Donaldson, state secretary, and at Springfield and Nevada assisted by A. W. Kokendoffer of Sedalia. All these men delivered very helpful and inspiring addresses. No one can listen to the address of I. N. McCash on "Strategic America" without feeling that he is in the presence of a great American and that the only proper interpretation of his message is that Jesus crowned Lord and King will cause America to go down in history as the greatest of all nations.

The First Church, Joplin, extends a royal welcome to the Third District Convention, May 1, 2 and 3. The two evening addresses will be delivered by Prof. Alva W. Taylor of Columbia, Mo. J. H. George, president of Drury College will deliver the educational address. J. H. Bryan of Kansas City and R. P. Shepherd of St. Louis will tell us about the Bible School work. D. N. Donalson will bring us the message on Missouri missions. Let the churches send representatives. Have you sent in your report for your county or your church yet? Your superintendent wants to exhibit a report from every county in the district. J. H. JONES,
417 E. Lynn Street, Springfield, Mo.

Sunday-school News Notes

J. R. Bryan of Tupelo, is the newly appointed Sunday-school Superintendent of Mississippi.

The National Superintendent, Robt. M. Hopkins will spend two weeks in May with Edward Owens of Texas and ten days with L. I. Mercer of Ohio in short tours through these states.

The Sunday-school of Arizona with the help of the American Society are seeking to erect a tabernacle at Tuscon, Arizona, where we have one of the best Bible Schools in the territory meeting now in an abandoned adobe school house.

Bethany Park Assembly, Indiana, is to have a Summer School of Methods in August for Sunday-school workers under the direction of Garry L. Cook, state superintendent.

There is to be one graduate in the Sunday-school Department of the College of the Bible, Lexington, Ky. in June, who will receive the first certificate ever issued for the completion of such work in any of our colleges.

The Bay Cities Sunday-school Union (San Francisco) will have its first meeting at the West Side Church early in May. This Union was organized during the visit of the National Superintendent last February.

Judge W. W. Slabaugh of Omaha, Nebr. is not only the superintendent of the First Church Sunday school, but has brought about a superintendent's Union of schools in the country and is an active leader in the International County Sunday School Association. His school will take the American Mission offering in April and expects to reach the Front Rank at an early date.

The Seventh Church Sunday-school of Indianapolis, A. C. Ward superintendent, is planning a "Missionary Week" for information and education concerning the various phases of missionary activity. This is to be the first week in May.

E. M. Cosner of Denver writes—"I will do all I can to get every Sunday-school in our city to reach the Front Rank standard by the Portland Convention. There are five working toward it now."

Virginia has called J. T. Watson to become State Sunday-school Superintendent. Mr. Watson will give all his time to the work, but will not be able to assume the duties of his office for several months. Prof. J. S. Thomas of Lynchburg, Va. will give June and August to field work during this interim.

J. Albert Emrich is Chairman of the Local Sunday-school Convention preparing for the National Convention at Portland. He reports the Committee actively at work with the expectation that Sunday-school Day may be the big day at Portland as it was at Topeka.

The offerings for American Missions from the Sunday-school on March 17, reached $17,179.98. This is $492.45 contributed in the six months of the fiscal year (beginning October 1) more than was given in the whole of last year. This progress is indeed encouraging, but there is still a great effort necessary to enable us to reach the needed $30,000 for this year's work. Let every school that has not yet taken the offering do so at once. Helpful suggestions may be had from the office of the American Christian Missionary Society, Carew Building, Cincinnati, Ohio. We must report a great victory at Portland.

ROBT. M. HOPKINS,
National Superintendent.

Bethany Graded Lessons

CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON, Editor

International Interdenominational

Sixteen denominations have united to prepare a non-sectarian body of literature for the new Graded Lessons authorized by the International Committee.

The result is a most practical, fascinating, scientific and artistic series of lesson helps for teachers and pupils.

The Bethany Graded Lessons are now developed to the point where they supply the entire school—children, young people and adults.

Send today for prospectus.

The New Christian Century Co.
700 E. Fortieth St. CHICAGO

AN OPEN LETTER TO THE PREACHERS

A new voice with an inspiring message always enlivens interest in the interest in the church. We make bold therefore to suggest that Lord's Day, April 23rd, be observed as

"Pulpit Exchange Day for American Missions"

We earnestly request every preacher who reads this to immediately arrange an exchange and report the same to us. Each such exchange will call forth two inspiring addresses, delight two large congregations, interest two churches each in the other's work, quicken the conscience for home missions, and enlarge the heart of God's people for every worthy work

WHEN YOU SEE A GOOD THING, PASS IT ALONG

Yours To Serve

The American Christian Missionary Society
Carew Building, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Join the big Santa Fe Excursions to the

International Sunday-School Association

San Francisco, Cal.
June 20 to 27, 1911

The San Francisco meeting will be of unusual importance to you who are interested in the Sunday-school movement in America.

Every one who can attend should make every effort to do so.

Granted that you are going—

The Santa Fe is the most interesting and most comfortable summer route to California.

Interesting, because of its historical associations; its scenic attractions. No similar area contains so many unique sights. You may see the many-storied villages of the Pueblo Indians, the most advanced of all the aboriginal Americans.

And the Petrified Forest, with its tens of thousands of agatized tree trunks and branches.

And Meteorite Mountain, made by the fall of a giant meteor that plowed a hole in the earth over six hundred feet deep and nearly a mile in diameter.

And, greatest of all, the Grand Canyon of Arizona, a mile deep, miles wide, and painted like a sunset.

Comfortable, because after reaching the mountains the track lies nearly a mile above sea-level most of the way.

And because the cars are new, modern and perfectly appointed. The track is in fine condition.

You will enjoy the Fred Harvey meals—in dining-cars on the California Limited—and in the station dining-rooms on other trains.

The train service is ample for every need. Four fast transcontinental trains daily, including the luxurious

Santa Fe

California Limited

We want every one to read our Summer travel booklets. Copies will be sent, together with a special I. S. S. A. folder, free on request.

W J. Black, Passenger Traffic Manager,
1118 Railway Exchange, Chicago

The CHRISTIAN CENTURY

Bible College Library
Mar 12 ?

Volume XXVIII. April 13, 1911 Number 11

The Light of Easter

Editorial

A Good Soldier of Christ

By Archibald McLean

The Bible Preserved

By Ernest C. Mobley

Disciples' Congress Program

Springfield, Ill., April 18-20

CHICAGO

The Book World

FROM THE BOTTOM UP; The life story of Alexander Irvine. This interesting autobiography is the life story of one of those rare souls who will to its own self be true though it cost life itself. Prophets are rarely practical, but a world without them would be like a world without ideals—for indeed they are the idealists, though not of the philosophic kind always, but rarer the preachers of righteousness whose fervor will brook no compromise and bridge no difficulties with opportunism. Tolstoi's life was the record of a soul on fire with genius, seeking to justify its existence and to square with an unrelenting conscience. Alexander Irvine is but forty-seven and has been before the American public but a few years. Yet he has made himself a nation wide reputation without making a million, going to the senate or preaching to a multitude in some historic church. He has been at the central focus of some stormy scenes in his wrestle with the conventional and the rich and the respectable of religious life and in it all, however much his lack of opportunism may be criticised, his firm determination to follow the leadings of his conscience and to preach for the lowly and dispossessed of the earth cannot be gainsaid. It is a good book for the smugly conventional to read. (New York: Doubleday Page & Co., Pp. 304. $1.50.)

THE LEAST OF THESE, by Lincoln Steffens. Lincoln Steffens has been called the reporter of the biggest things that are happening. Here he shows himself the preacher of faith in fellow man through a simple report of what he found in a certain city prison in the person of a poor sinner who could not conquer himself, but who did devote himself most heroically to the welfare of his kind. It is not difficult to name the city as Cleveland, and the Director as Harris R. Cooley but the name of the hero who, while unable to conquer his own sin, devoted himself as warder to the most disagreeable tasks namable for the sake of the poor unfortunate devils who are sent to a great city's gaol is untold. This man literally kept the Master's demand that we care for even the least of these by his devoted care of the cast-offs of society. Best of all it is a true story. The hero lost out by yielding to his weakness but when he saw the story, wrote Mr. Steffens and told of his battles with self. It is a heartening story, showing the soul of things good in the bad. And it is a fascinating story as well, for it is human and not goody-goody. (Riverside, Conn.: Hillacre Book House. Pp. 57. 50 cents plus 4 cents postage.)

OPALS FROM AFRICA by Alfred F. Hensey. Missionary literature does not furnish a finer example of unaffected art than the stories told by Mr. Hensey in this little booklet. It reminds one of the simple directness of Tolstoi's gospel stories and parables. Just because our missionary did not try to produce a literary effect he has done it in the most approved style. The stories are those engaging narratives in which missionary experience is rich and fascinating with the "truth that is stranger than fiction." They are fascinating because they have the unaffected human interest. Great story tellers are those who can relate life's experiences in detail and with a sympathy that endows the narrative with the electric fluid of the human. The Foreign Society has printed this little volume of sixty-four pages in an artistic fashion that is quite in keeping with the delicate tracery of its pages. To read it sets the warm life blood going in one's veins and makes the missionary cause glow with optimism. Send twenty-five cents to the Foreign Christian Missionary Society—Box 884, Cincinnati, O., and they will mail it to you.

IN KALI'S COUNTRY by Emily T. Sheets The sub-title of this book is "Tales from Sunny India." It is a series of glimpses of Hindu life, especially that part of it in which the missionary is most interested. Here is the snap-shot of a "holy man" and his meditations over his failure to reach that peace for which he has macerated himself; there the young Parsi widow who has given up home and wealth to become a Christian, tells her story in the first person; again the author tells, as if an onlooker, the experience of a child widow whose parents-in-law are attempting to sell her into the temple service and of her escape; and these are but samples of the even dozen stories of real life that Miss Sheets tells in an interesting way. They make the experiences of the native Hindu vital and real to the reader and convince him of the worth there is in the native convert. There are a number of very good photographic illustrations. (New York: Fleming H. Revell & Co. Pp. 208. $1, net.)

THE DECISIVE HOUR OF CHRISTIAN MISSIONS, by John R. Mott. This invigorating study of missions is a sort of a resumé of the report made by Commission I. to the Edinburgh Conference on "carrying the gospel to all the non-Christian world." The matter herein presented is of special value in that it is from original sources, secured by trusted men and women representing practically every part of the world. With a style peculiar to Mr. Mott and a seriousness almost tragic, he makes one feel throughout the book that it is a decisive hour for non-Christian nations. The far-reaching movements—national, social, economic, religious—of these nations are shaking them to their foundations, Mr. Mott contends. Herein, he also contends, is the decisive hour of the Christian church at home. The challenge is unmistakable. The volume is of real merit; especially ought it be in the hands of the busy pastors and wide-awake young people. It grips and compels one because of its pointedness, its sanity and simplicity. (Young People's Missionary Movement of the United States and Canada, New York. Pp. 271.)

WESTERN WOMEN IN EASTERN LANDS, by Helen Barrett Montgomery. This brilliant woman who has led the hosts in the nation-wide celebration of the Jubilee of the Woman's Missionary Societies has here written one of the most fascinating of modern missionary volumes. This is the eleventh volume of the series issued by the Woman's Central Committee on the United Study of Missions. The total sales of this series had reached 600,000 before this volume was issued. All have been excellent books and this one of the very best. The impetus of the great Jubilee and the place Mrs. Montgomery has had in it ought to bring its sale to 100,000 quickly. It is written in a flowing and heart-felt style and is full of information as well as inspiration. The beginnings of woman's work for missions are sketched, the conditions of their sisters in foreign lands interestingly told, the methods and success of woman's work for woman set forth and the problems of this latter day are discussed. It is not a woman's book alone. It is virile and good for all to read. It has 286 pages but is sold for 50 cents so that everyone may buy. (Macmillan Co., New York.)

THE RURAL LIFE PROBLEM IN THE UNITED STATES, by Sir Horace Plunkett. Horace Plunkett is an Irishman of means who, on account of lung trouble, came to Wyoming some three decades ago and engaged in ranching. He returned to Ireland to be elected to Parliament and to attain distinction as a pleader for better farming and better economic opportunities for rural Ireland. He was made head of the new Department of Agriculture and Technical Instruction and has made it of invaluable use to Ireland. Last year he spent some time in close observations of rural life in our country, a land in which he has a vital interest and to which he has made an annual pilgrimage each year since he resided here. He recognizes the present prosperity of the farmer but forsees a less golden era unless conditions are grappled with and set in the right direction. "Better farming, better business, better living" is his motto and to that end he advocates coöperation. He believes that coöperation must be inaugurated by the people of the towns as the farmer is as isolated in his interests and initiative as in his residence. He advocates the theory that the farmer must organize as the business men do and that he must train his children in the science of farming if he would keep them on the farm. (New York: Macmillan Co., 174 pages. $1.25 net.)

Magazine Notices

THE AMERICAN MAGAZINE is a real tonic to those who are interested in the insurgent movements in both politics and business affairs. It is ably dealing with large and technical problems in the business world and making them clear and authoritative to the lay reader. Its present series on the Express Monopoly, the Personal Property Tax and Industrial Efficiency are enlightening, persuasive and timely. To this kind of reformatory material it adds Mr. Dunn's inimitable "Mr. Worldly Wiseman," a quaint and sarcastically humorous treatment of the Lord of Things as They Are, our modern and aristocratic financial superman. Wm. Allen White's contributions are superb in their style and in their philosophy. He deals with the moving spirit of the times. Miss Tarbell's exposure of the how of making tariffs and of the iniquities wrapped up in the schedules of the Payne-Aldrich bill showed her usual mental capacity and economically prophetic spirit. The fiction of the American is itself of a flavor that is peculiar. Phoebe's adventures and David Grayson's "Adventures" are charming. The American is preeminently the magazine for the modern man with a purpose in this busy world.

THE HOMILETIC REVIEW has showed remarkable improvement in the past few years. It is up to date, broad and full of utility to the preacher. Dr. Herbert Willett contributes the Sunday-school lesson comments this year and it is not saying too much to commend them as the best the Review ever published. The leading articles are uniformly able and written for thinking men. The modern aspect of the editorial comments and of the choice of material make the magazine valuable to all Biblical students who are in active service. The most telling feature of the magazine is the studies in the gospel of the kingdom by Dr. Josiah Strong. Some five hundred classes of adults are following these studies and finding them alive with interest as religious instruction. The burning social issues are discussed and the student given both adequate material and a wholesome interpretation of the same. The sermons are generally fresh, and the department conducted by Mr. Durban is always fascinatingly written. The attention given the social, missionary and psychological questions in their religious bearings make the Homiletic of large practical value.

The Christian Century
CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON AND HERBERT L. WILLETT, ... EDITORS

The Easter Light

FROM THE hour when he yielded up the hope that he might be made well again, a new expression sat upon his face, a wondrous mellowness filled his voice and a light beatific seemed to shine upon his soul.

It was many weeks after our own hearts had been convinced that he was stricken with a fatal disease that we could bring ourselves to even suggest to him the seriousness of his condition. He held so tenaciously to life, to his work, to the conception that he was still young.

We must not break his spirit, we said one to another. His days will be shortened if he knows they are numbered. Besides, the one long chance of recovery lies in his will and his hope, not in his medicines.

But some said, to face death will not break his spirit. Firmer than his grip on life is his grip on Christ. The fiber and foundation of his soul is faith. He knows whom he has believed.

We knew this to be true. We knew that he had lived by faith. The one supreme reality of all his years was religion. To his mind the changes of fortune were strung upon the gracious providence of God like beads and worn about his neck with joyous resignation. We never saw him depressed with respect to the really serious things of life. If he ever doubted, his doubt never escaped his lips. His faith was of oak and iron.

And yet we were not content to tell him the bald truth, never so delicately. Reassured in the direction of his faith, we feared for his reason if we should open his eyes and let him see that death was in the room. We had never seen his faculties out of poise. His intellect was characterized by its sanity, its reserve, its canniness, its grasp on substantial realities. We dreaded to see him otherwise, and lest the knowledge that he was near death might carry him away into an ecstasy of unreality where we could not follow, we kept on greeting him with the good cheer of apparent unconcern, and talked the talk of the day—its news, its politics, its casual experiences.

And all the time the debate waxed hotter in our hearts. At length one day we laid by the mask and talked as if he were one of us, and not himself our theme. He made no protest. There was no tear. We calmly faced the truth and death—and God. What change took place in him in those days that the full meaning of the truth we had confessed to him worked its way into his soul, we know not. But we did know that our freedom from further dissembling was a great relief, and that between us and him there was now established a free-masonry of the spirit such as we had never before presumed upon. The eternal values were the coins of our common intercourse from that day on. The big chapters of the Bible, the mighty texts, were discussed not as material for sermons now, but as revelations of the life indeed.

We loved to have him tell the unfamiliar story of his youth and early ministry. He dwelt half-fondly upon the hardships, the sacrifices, and traced with exquisite faith the plan of God in everything.

One day he said he was eager to get to work again. We suggested that his days of working were done. But he smiled and said his day of work was just dawning. Then we remembered a sermon he used to preach from the text, "I go to prepare a place for you," and how he affirmed that not Christ only but all redeemed souls pass into the eternal to prepare a place for others yet to follow. There was a work to do in heaven. There was something to be effected, not by Christ alone but by all good souls who pass into the Unseen. So instead of longing for rest this master-craftsman of earthly toil longed to set his hand to the tasks of heaven.

A talk with him opened up new meanings in one's own soul and in the word of God. He spoke but little and that faintly. But one felt a spirit which seemed more substantial than his body. A breath from the invisible seemed to come with his words.

A good pastor who came to call, has since written of this interpretative power of his spirit: "I shall never forget the hour I spent with him a few days ago. When he asked me to read to him I happened to open to the eighth chapter of Romans, which I always loved for its mystery and optimism. It gained a new value and depth as I talked it over with a dying man who was undaunted by death."

His faith was so natural, so part and parcel of himself. He did not seem to be groping in the dark. No "lame hands" were his. There was no strain at being brave—no bravado. Death did not shock nor surprise him: it seemed but the next number on the program. He faced the future without fear and without heroics.

He slipped away very gradually, very slowly, but very steadily. This morning we could not perceive any change from yesterday, but we could look back two, or three, days and see that there was some feat of strength like sitting up in his bed, or holding the morning paper in his own hand, or carrying the spoon to his lips, which he had left off doing meantime.

He had traveled much. He knew all portions of this continent, and his feet had touched the shores of lands on many seas. It seemed as if he were going on another journey. As for all his travels, his preparation was very simple. He was ready.

And his ship went out with the tide,

"— such a tide as moving seemed asleep."

He talked to us, but as a man calling to his friends upon the receding shore: his words grew fainter and fewer, his gestures less distinct and meaningful; and when there was no longer any voice or sign from him, the passenger, we strained our eyes like watchers on the quay until the boat itself was lost beyond the sky line of the world.

It was all so sane, so strong, so spiritual, so revealing. There was no moaning of the bar. There was no protest, nor trembling nor hysteria. Even youth standing, watching, felt a longing to go with him. It was a moment when the strange word of Thomas lost its strangeness: "Let us also go that we may die with him!"

Probably he was unfamiliar with the great lines beginning, "O sane and sacred Death!", for the poet who uttered them was not numbered among his friends. But these lines interpret the experience of those days when Death and he together made ready for the journey to the distant shore:

O sane and sacred Death!
The sights of the open landscape and the high-spread sky are fitting,
And life, and the fields, and the huge and thoughtful night;
The night in silence under many a star,

The ocean shore, and the husky whispering wave whose voice I know,
And the soul turning to thee, O vast and well-veiled Death.
And the body gratefully nestling close to thee.

Come, lovely and soothing Death:
Undulate round the world, serenely arriving: arriving
In the day, in the night, to all, to each,
Sooner or later: delicate Death!

Dark Mother, always gliding near with soft feet,
Have none chanted for thee a song of fullest welcome?
Then I chant it for thee: I glorify thee above all:
I bring thee a song, that, when thou indeed come, come unfalteringly.

And now his children have gone back to their tasks taking each his share of their father's estate. Riches he left them: of heroism, of hardihood, of rugged honor, of piety, of tenderness, of an unquenchable spirit, of faith fixed but ever widening, of thrift, of thirst for truth, of courage to act up to the truth—aye, riches indeed!

But no memory of him will be cherished more vividly, more tenderly, than the recollection of his quiet, conscious leave-taking, his brow radiant with the light of the eternal Easter!

Social Survey

A New Aviation Season

During the past winter, experimental aviation has been carried on in the warmer countries, and soon the season will open in the cooler climates where it has received its greatest impetus. Flying under conditions which prevail here in winter is possible and there will come a time when it will be general, just as automobiling is now becoming acclimated to winter conditions. But that end will come when the commercial stage is reached. As long as aviation is experimental, or is carried on as a form of amusement it will never be popular in winter. It is highly probable that the coming season will see an almost complete change in the direction of the greatest effort. The days of spectacular flights are numbered. There is no longer any doubt that the heavier-than-air machine can fly. The greatest aim will be to make it useful. That trend was traceable last season in the attempts to carry freight and passengers. For use in the navy, the aëroplane has now been adapted to lighting in the water, and on the decks of vessels, and to rising from them. Recently we read of a French aviator who made a flight of two miles with eleven passengers. The total weight of the twelve persons was 1,315 pounds. We may expect to see much better records than this made before another season. Safety will be emphasized. Steadying the machines is a problem that is hard to solve. Danger lurks even there. If the gyroscope is used it is said to make the machine too rigidly stable, and a sudden flaw in the wind, such as is often met with, will break the delicate wings and bring sure death to the aviator. Nevertheless, much progress in stability is anticipated this season. Automobile races are often conducted on the basis of endurance. Speed is one factor contributing toward the winning of such a race, but only one. Endurance is the main test. Similar contests in the field of aviation will be introduced this year. Flights such as the one suggested from San Francisco to New York may be expected. Already the Royal Aëro Club, of London, is projecting an endurance race of 1,000 miles around England. A prize of $50,000 is offered to the winner. Such contests as this, carried on under rigid conditions, will be of more value than mere sensational gyrations. It will act as a stimulus to invention and production of thoroughly practical and efficient flying machines.

A Case of Criminal Lawlessness

Booker T. Washington, the distinguished Negro, universally recognized as one of the foremost educators of this country, was recently set upon and brutally beaten by a white man in New York. The incident is another case of the injustice to which the Negroes of this country are often subjected, through race prejudice, and is cause for reflection by those who regard all Negroes with antipathy. On Mar. 19 Mr. Washington went to an apartment house, looking for a family with whom, he was informed, the auditor of Tuskegee Institute was staying. He rang the door bell under a name which he thought might be the family to whom he had been directed, but received no answer. He went away for a few minutes and then returned, thinking the parties were out at first and that they might have returned. When he again rang the bell several men suddenly set upon him. One, a Mr. Ulrich, was the principal, and severely injured Mr. Washington by the brutality of his attack. Mr. Washington was taken to a hospital where his wounds were dressed. Ulrich was arraigned in court. He claims Mr. Washington was prowling around like an irresponsible Negro, that he insulted the former's wife, and that he peeked through the keyhole. Says Mr. Washington: "I'm a man of honor. I'll swear by the God above me that I spoke to nobody. I spoke to no white women, and I wouldn't know Mrs. Ulrich if I saw her now. I don't recall any one passing me while I was in the vestibule, and no one spoke to me. I did not peep through a keyhole. That charge is ridiculous, as I never was inside the hallway. I think, to do Mr. Ulrich justice, he made a mistake in perhaps believing I was a burglar." The affair is a disgrace. Southern newspapers lost no time in pointing out that Mr. Washington always moved in safety in the South and that he had to go North to receive this kind of treatment. That this distinguished gentleman should be mistaken for a common ruffian seems incomprehensible. That he should be assaulted without warning, and without having given the least offense, disgraceful. Ulrich made no effort to learn the nature of Mr. Washington's visit. He blindly took the law into his own hands. That is criminal lawlessness and should receive a stern rebuke in the New York court.

The Russian Prime Minister

After holding office for almost five years, P. A. Stolypin, premier of the Russian cabinet, resigned his office. This action was wholly unexpected, and whether it is the result of Russian policy in the far-East or the rejection of his bill for the establishment of zemstvos (local assemblies to deal with certain local affairs), is merely a matter of conjecture. It was at once announced that V. N. Kokovtsef, minister of finance, was to succeed him, but later the Czar acceded to the wishes of M. Stolypin, removing certain high officials. The premier then withdrew his resignation. The position of the head of the Russian cabinet is a hard one. M. Stolypin was chosen in the year 1906, in the midst of a reign of terrorism, because he was thought to be a man of indomitable courage and determination. He proved that he was possessed of these characteristics in a remarkable degree. With an iron hand he set out to stamp out the reign of terror, and wavered not in the least when his own house was blown up and his daughter severely injured. In two years he reduced the entire empire to a state of "order"—the same color of order as was notorious in the early days of the city of Warsaw. His first pledge, to restore order, he has thus kept to the letter, but the latter part he either has not the power, or the inclination, to carry out. Freedom of conscience, freedom of speech, freedom of association, and freedom of assembly are apparently as far off today as they were in 1906. Martial law is the rule throughout the empire, and newspapers and societies are suppressed or rigidly censored. Premier Stolypin excuses himself on the ground that reform must necessarily be very slow, and that political implements with which he must work reforms are antiquated and inadequate. Probably the best of all the laws secured by M. Stolypin is the Agrarian law, passed in 1906, of which the object is to break up the peasant communes; the transformation of the peasantry from communal tenants to freeholders. This law has not yet operated to a great extent, but will be more effective in the future. Another notable act of the premier is known as the "Revisions." Thieves, grafters, and embezzlers were found in every branch of civil and military officials, and Stolypin pushed an investigation so far that several close to the throne were involved. Opposition to the premier thereupon became suddenly, formidably powerful and many now credit this opposition with being the real reason for the intended retirement from public activity of M. Stolypin.

New Mexican Ministry

Simultaneous with the return of Señor Limantour from Europe, the entire Mexican cabinet resigned. Minister Limantour is the only one to be retained, and he will organize a new ministry upon more liberal lines. The suggestion that Limantour's return portended a yielding on the part of the government to demands of the rebels is improbable. A better explanation is that the time for a more progressive policy has come, and upon advice of Señor Limantour, a new ministry is to be substituted to carry out this policy. Reforms will probably be instituted in elections, in the government of states and cities, and in distribution of lands. The old cabinet was composed of old men; patriots who have rendered much valuable service to their country, but wealthy, and it is charged that the tax laws unduly favored them. The reform program will, therefore, involve a radical revision of the taxation system. Señor Limantour found foreign aspects of the revolution more serious than he had anticipated, and his influence will be exerted toward protection of foreign interests.

Jewish Persecution in Russia

The Jews are having a hard time in Russia. No less than 120,000 of these people were driven out of Russia during 1910 by systematic, official persecution, according to the annual report of the Central German Jewish Relief Association, which acts in coöperation with the leading Jews of America and Great Britain in ameliorating the lot of their oppressed co-religionists in Russia. Of this total mentioned, 23,107 emigrated to the United States, or 25 per cent more than during 1909. These figures, the report states, are more complete than the official American immigration statistics, because the latter are made up for the fiscal year ending with June, 1910. The German association declares that the anti-Jewish propaganda in Russia is becoming more heartless, tyrannical, and widespread from hour to hour. The Czar's government has now adopted the principle of limiting educational opportunities for Jewish children as the most practical and surest way of driving the Jews out of the country.

The Christian World

A Page for Interdenominational Acquaintance.

Roman Catholic

Waiting for Protestantism to Die.

Protestants have been waiting for centuries for the death of the Roman Catholic Church. The Catholics, it seems, have long thought they were standing at the death bed of Protestantism. Perhaps both are growing weary of watching. A writer in The Catholic World says that Protestantism has been an unconscionably long time dying. He says:

The end seems still far off; for any widespread and once powerful religion, unless force intervenes, will lose its hold only very gradually. In a certain sense, indeed, Protestantism is already dead; for the distinctive doctrines of Luther and Calvin slumber in old tomes or live a languid life in the hearts of a few old-fashioned pastors and professors. They have vanished from the hearts of the people. But the protestantism of Protestantism—the opposition to Catholic principles and doctrines and to the Catholic Church—is still vigorous, though a grateful change has tempered much of its bitterness; and a Protestantism which clings to the Bible and finds therein the words of eternal life, which believes in Christ and accepts Him as Savior—however vague its ideas of doctrine—remains to-day the dominant faith of our land. Its adherents are not all church-goers; there is still, thanks be to God, a great deal of faith in God and in Christ, and much deep religious spirit, bearing fruit in religious life, as well among many who seldom go to church—a delinquency for which Protestantism has only gentle blame—as among those who are strict church members.

Bigotry Against Bigotry.

The divorce of Catholicism from the spirit of Christ is the discovery of John F. Fenlon, a writer in The Catholic World. His charge is against the Catholic Press and not against the Church as a whole. "They have the tone of party organs and the spirit of party; but the broad spirit of Catholicism, which is the spirit of Christ, seeking to draw all men unto itself and not looking for petty transient victories, seems a stranger to their pages." "They succeed only in producing a species of journal fit neither for our own reading nor to give to a friendly inquirer." The situation, as Mr. Fenlon sees it, does not provoke the partisan spirit. The American is not bitter in his attacks on the Catholic Church. The argument continues:

The pity of it all is that American Catholics have to deal with the fairest, the most open-minded, and open-hearted people on this planet. We can say this, quietly, with a clear conscience, in the depth of winter, with the Fourth of July six months away. There is, of course, no lack of prejudice and bigotry in many of our fellow citizens, much of it crass and hard to bear; there are many more, however, whom it would be unfair to class among the deeply prejudiced and bigots, who have definite and sincere beliefs contrary to our own, and so are consistently opposed to the spread of Catholic influence. But the residue of anti-Catholic prejudice, which exists in nearly all, is not very strong or very active in the great majority; though it might become both in certain circumstances. We are unwise then; most unwise, when we attune our voice to the small bigoted minority, rather than to the friendly and open-minded majority. The everlasting sharpening of knives in the editorial sanctum becomes an exasperating noise. Continual controversy is a vexation of the spirit. It is sometimes wise and necessary to answer a fool according to his folly; but it is a delicate undertaking, of which the Wise Man points out the danger in his proverb: Answer not the fool according to his folly lest thou be made like him. The answer to bigotry often seems to be merely another piece of bigotry. Too great eagerness to reply defeats its own purpose; for when the occasion comes to say a strong word, one is not listened to. No one heeds the snarler.

Methodist

Controversy, Stability and Progress.

Dr. J. M. Buckley, editor of The Christian Advocate (New York), has been a valiant fighter for the truth. Spiritualism, Christian Science, and other strange movements have been searchingly examined by him. In the General Conferences of the Methodist Church, Dr. Buckley has been conspicuous for his ability as a parliamentarian. In the Advocate of March 24, there is an editorial on religious controversy from which we quote:

The decline of religious controversy also has a great effect on the evening service. When Christianity dispenses wholly with controversy it will be like a sleeping man—harmless and helpless.

We were entertained at the house of a friend in New Hampshire, where Henry Ward Beecher was spending a day or two. It was his birthday and he was jubilant. He conducted prayers, and his utterances were equal to any of his published prayers in beauty, simplicity, and comprehensiveness. Immediately after he arose, he called the writer to him and pointed to a large picture hanging on the wall, representing a huge mastiff sound asleep with a piece of meat placed before him, and a lap-dog quietly drawing it away. Said Mr. Beecher, pointing to the sleeping mastiff, "That is Orthodoxy," and to the little dog, "That is Heterodoxy."

So it is and ever will be. Controversy was the life of Paul's works; polite controversy, brotherly controversy; but strong in exposing error and building up the truth. The Epistles are full of controversy. Moreover, many of Christ's sayings were strictly controversial.

It is more than a fine art to combine in one sermon the forcible overthrow of an error and a heartfelt appeal; but it is possible to attain unto it.

Presbyterian

The Barrenness of Bigness.

"We have the largest church in our town. A majority of the people are affiliated with us." This sort of talk is heard sometimes. It may not mean much, for the bigness of the church may depend upon its lack of moral passion. Bigness may be an indication of feebleness for more than one reason. In the Presbyterian Advance we have this comment on mere bigness as an evidence of religious prosperity and importance:

Dr. Aked, of the Fifth Avenue Baptist Church, New York, has resigned. He wanted his congregation to move out of a side street on to the avenue (for the Fifth Avenue Baptist Church isn't on Fifth Avenue), and he is quoted as saying that he had in mind "one of the biggest churches in American Protestantism," where immense crowds might attend his somewhat sensational ministry. But his church did not agree with him. In fact, the majority seems to be made up of a more conservative class of people who feel that bigness is not the essential thing nor the synonymn of true success in the life of a church. One of the deacons is reported to have remarked, using an alliterative phrase that is remarkably suggestive, "We are not sure that we want a huge auditorium, filled with rambling religious rubbernecks, and that's about what it means to have a great church and a pulpit orator." There's a world of truth in that remark. There are "rambling religious rubbernecks,"—lots of them—that is, if they are really religious. Instead of being in sympathetic touch with their own churches and working at the job, they roam about to the places where they are furnished a kind of religious or pseudo-religious entertainment. They don't "mean business" as church attendants; they seek rather the gratification of their perverted tastes. And the man who thinks he is accomplishing great things when he tickles their ears is likely to realize some day that he was badly mistaken. Mere bigness may be woefully barren. The minister's business is to bring forth fruit. By getting crowds he may glorify himself, but it is only by fruit-bearing that he can glorify God. True success in the ministry does not consist in catching the crowds, but in bringing men to Christ and building them up in Him.

Letting Your Light or Your Egotism Shine?

There is no victory for the church unless the gospel is preached in the open. The world must know that the church has a message for every man. But there are different ways of advertising the wares of the church. The business man who advertises what he does not have is reckoned a fraud. Is it not possible that churches may become so interested in inviting men to come to their services that they overlook the necessity of having something for those who come? On the question of church advertising, the Presbyterian Banner (Pittsburg), remarks:

We have received a copy of a newspaper, published in a city in the eastern part of this state, which contains an advertisement of the First Presbyterian Church of the place. It fills about one-fourth of a page and is set with display type. It contains paragraphs answering the questions, What? Where? When? Who? Under the first question it says in part: "We make the best article in America. Our finished product is the most desirable thing in the world—a Christian citizen. The First Church has given to Home and Foreign Christian work over $95,000 during the past six years. We have spent over $30,000 in bringing our plant up to date. See our educational and social rooms; the finest in Pennsylvania. . . . Frankly, however, 'retired Christians' would not feel comfortable with us. Yet, we cordially believe that 'the bigger the house the better the service.'" The other questions are answered in the same style. At the bottom it speaks of the organist of the church as "a student of the famous Guilmant and the leader of church music in Central Pennsylvania," and says: "Hear the First Church choir in the perfect work they are doing these days." The affair is well written up in a taking style throughout; and while we do not find any serious fault with it, yet we have our doubts. For one thing, if this thing is going to be maintained regularly the advertisement will have to be rewritten and the taking style kept up or it will grow stale and the last state be worse than the first; and for another thing, there have already crept into this advertisement bits of comparison and touches of self-exploitation that are of questionable propriety and taste. This is the danger of all advertising: that it tends to grow boastful in its terms, and it would require exceptional care and restraint to keep this spirit out of church advertisements. And if all churches set about this thing, how strong would the tendency and temptation be to exploit the merits and success of each church. We are not wholly condemning church advertising, but speaking a word of caution.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

Published Weekly by

The New Christian Century Co.

Entered as Second-Class Matter Feb. 28, 1902, at the Post Office at Chicago, Illinois, Under Act of March 3, 1879.

EDITORS—CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON AND HERBERT L. WILLETT.
CONTRIBUTING EDITOR—SILAS JONES.

SUBSCRIPTIONS—Subscription price $2.00. If paid strictly in advance $1.50 will be accepted. To ministers if paid strictly in advance, $1.00 per year. Single copy 5 cents.

EXPIRATIONS—The label on the paper shows the months to which subscription is paid. List is revised monthly. Change of date on label is a receipt for remittance on subscription account.

DISCONTINUANCES—In order that subscribers may not be annoyed by failure to receive the paper, it is not discontinued at expiration of time paid in advance (unless so ordered), but is continued pending instruction from the subscriber. If discontinuance is desired, prompt notice should be sent and all arrearages paid.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS—In ordering change of address give the old as well as the new. If the paper does not reach you regularly, notify us at once.

REMITTANCES.—Should be sent by draft or money order payable to The New Christian Century Company. IF LOCAL CHECK IS SENT ADD TEN CENTS FOR EXCHANGE.

700-714 EAST FORTIETH ST., CHICAGO, ILL.
United Religious Press Building

Men and Women Who Have Blessed My Life

Many who have blessed our lives are unknown to us. They have no place on the pages of history, but their thought and their deeds appear in the structure of society and modify our thought and conduct. This age needs to recognize its debt to the past. Shallowness may boast of its independence of what has gone before and deride the ways of the fathers; the thinker rejoices that he is a link in the chain of life. In showing honor to his intellectual and spiritual ancestors, the thinker singles out representative men, men in whom the virtues of the common man were conspicuous. The American speaks reverently of Abraham Lincoln because Lincoln exemplified to a remarkable degree the virtues of every-day life.

The benefits we receive from those whom we know are often unrecognized. We do not know ourselves, and the forces that have made us. Of a distinguished American churchman recently deceased it has been said: "He was especially considerate of the respectable and sensitive poor who concealed their needs, and he always helped them in the most delicate manner." If we understood fully the circumstances of our lives, we should have to acknowledge obligations to many whom we now regard as having no part in building our character and reputation. These unrecognized benefactors have been so wise and tactful that they have served us in spite of our sensitiveness and selfishness.

We have been blessed by many whose theories have been distasteful to us. The passion for truth which is manifested by some who reject beliefs dear to us has made us ashamed of our careless thinking. The reader of Charles Darwin misses his opportunity if he does not gain a deeper reverence for facts. Professor Huxley said of a distinguished writer that his idea of a tragedy was a generalization killed by a fact. Religion is hurt more by the loose generalization of its friends than by the attacks of its foes. It is not without anguish that we come to clear ideas of our relation to God and if the keen thought of a hostile critic has compelled us to go deeper and lay more enduring foundations, the bitterness of the experience should not cause us to deny the obligation we owe to a clear thinker.

The debt we owe to those who invariably put the emphasis in the right place may be tardily acknowledged, but the honest man does not overlook it. It is so easy in religion and in business to exhaust our moral energy on the unimportant details. The men of whom the prophet demanded mercy and not sacrifice, knowledge of God rather than burnt-offerings, thought they were religious. They felt indignant that the prophet had no respect for their worship. We observe certain formal rules of business and feel very virtuous, although in fact we may be stealing every day. The harsh, uncompromising prophets of righteousness who sweep away the refuge of lies and lay bare the meanness and selfishness of much that is classed as respectable and honorable are our benefactors. It may be hard to love them, for they are not always lovable; that does not matter if we learn to hate sham morality and to love fairness and kindness.

There are the sturdy conservatives whom we should delight to honor. They bring out the worth of what we now possess. The outcry against what is unjust and brutal in government and business and social life turns the mind away from the genuine riches we have inherited. The conservative appreciates the treasures gathered by the labors of the fathers. He does not live on the cheap intellectual and spiritual food prepared for lovers of the sensational. He is acquainted with men whose ideas have stood the test of time and have been found serviceable in the great crises of human history. When we talk with him, we become aware that much of what we called progress is nothing but change of form, that we are just as barbarous as were our ancestors whom we charge with cruel deeds, that, on the other hand, it is our ignorance of history that enables us to feel superior to some of the ancients.

They are fortunate who have come into contact with a man or woman of truly catholic mind and feeling. Do the best we can, we are narrow enough. It is a blessed thing to be with one who daily reminds us that not all who disagree with us in opinion and in practice are hopelessly bad. The world is bigger than any one party or sect and he is most unfortunate who does not learn this. [Midweek Service; April 19. John 4:27, 42; 2 Tim. 1:3-6; Heb. 11:32; 12:2.]

S. J.

Churches and Cults

A correspondent has sent us part of a newspaper containing the Sunday announcements of a city on the Pacific Coast.

It is not a large city, and yet in addition to the announcements of the regular evangelical churches, there were such notices as these: "First Spiritualist Church," "New Thought Church," "Practical Metaphysics," "The Independent Church of Christ," "Metaphysical Center of New Thought," "Union Liberal Religious Service," "People's Spiritualist Church," "Home of Truth," etc. The announcements of these cults ran the gamut from a lecturer on spiritualistic therapeutics to a certain Baba Bharati, who was to edify his audience on the subject, "Have you Loved?"

Then of course there were the regular church announcements, all the way from the Roman Catholic churches, with the statement of the bishop regarding the observance of Lent, to the summons of a "Church of Christ," with the added significant words, "Worships only as ordained by the New Testament; no innovations."

The friend who sends these announcements comments on them in this manner: "Chicago has churches and a few scattering cults. This place has cults (or perhaps "cultures," looking at them from a bacteriological standpoint) and a few churches."

The survey of such a series of announcements is likely to arouse a sense of suspicion and perhaps resentment in the mind of one who has been accustomed to the regular orthodox evangelical ministry of most of the cities and towns of America.

It would seem at first glance that the Pacific Coast is a sort of happy hunting ground for the odds and ends of religious emotionalism, such as can find only sporadic opportunity in the more settled life of the middle and eastern states.

It is true, however, that any large city will show a considerable margin of these unclassified and independent circles of alleged new and higher thought. Most of them are merely instances of some more or less emotional experiment in fields which are already fairly familiar to the average informed student of religion.

There is always a fascination about the announcement of a new discovery in religion which draws together a circle of the inquiring. Either they are such as have never paid the price of any competent investigation of religious phenomena, or they are in such spiritual need that they are willing to try any experiment in the hope of finding answers to the deep problems of the religious nature.

But the study of such a series of announcements is at least reassuring upon one point. The quest of the religious life is one of ceaseless significance, even in an age which, like the present, seems to be so largely given over to material and sordid things.

It is easy to assume a scornful and deprecatory attitude regarding religious teachings or inquiries which do not fall easily within the circle of evangelical truth. Yet the fact that so many excellent people have become restless through the lack of adequate spiritual nourishment in the churches they have attended, and are seeking, often in vain, to find rest for their souls in extra-ecclesiastical groups, is the best possible proof of the fact that the soul's craving for God is the supreme passion. And too frequently in our present state of religious attainment the means of grace offered by the churches are inadequate to the satisfaction of the religious desire.

This is an encouragement rather than a sign of danger. It is a proof of the fact that the church needs to fix its attention upon the deepest and most vital elements of the faith, rather than upon the superficials and accidents which too frequently absorb its interest.

These passing phases of religious inquiry have no power to hold permanently the regard of even the circles which they attract. They undertake little or nothing in the way of organized and effective service in behalf of humanity. They are at best attempts to satisfy the religious nature with inquiries and speculations in the region of religious experience. Ultimately their weakness reveals itself, and their adherents either fall away to some other novelty, or seek the stronger and more satisfying activities of organized Christianity.

But in the meantime they serve a certain purpose as offering temporary help to those who are in quest of religious reality. Then, too, they illustrate the ever-insistent demand of the soul of man for religious experience. Even if they prove merely "cultures," in the bacteriological sense in which our correspondent refers to them, mere experiments in the production of new forms of religious emotion, they are perhaps not without value. Students of the varieties of religious experience have been assured by all the experts, from James outward, that none of these forms of religious inquiry has been wholly without avail in providing response to the essential and ever-insistent demand of the soul for God.

Personal Atmosphere

It used to be common to lament the absolute lack of all religious influences in the state universities. One does not hear so much of this condition now, for, thanks to the activity of the Young Men's Christian associations and to the efforts made by the different denominations to bring religion and knowledge of the Bible to the attention of the students, more effort is being exerted to elevate the moral tone of the great schools of the commonwealths. Conditions are none too good even now and infinitely more might be done in behalf of the denominational agencies such as those at Ann Arbor, Mich., Champaign, Ill., Madison, Wis., and elsewhere. Pastors could more adequately sustain these agencies by just a little coöperation. In a certain state only one pastor notified the Y. M. C. A. secretary of the coming of a student from his church, while secret societies and fraternities sent new students' names by the score, and this in a state school, in which there was no strictly denominational organization at work. Students might well assume, in such an event, that their home churches were less interested in their religious welfare than the student societies. Pastors and others ought not to complain of the lack of religion in secular and denominational schools when they fail to do their part to render helpful assistance to students in new and strange environment with the restraints of home and church removed.

Not How Big, But How Good

There seems to be some ground for believing that in the much desired and altogether worthy effort made in recent years toward unification and better coöperation of the religious forces in the church, the church has suffered somewhat from an overplus of zeal to secure big things. This has been the characteristic of all denominational activities as well as the activities of all denominations. We are, unquestionably, in the current of a peculiar religious trend. Religion, like society, is affected by certain moods which set the fashion of the day. The church has always believed in the efficacy of organized life, but it has seldom given so much attention to getting its organization linked up to practical service as in the past few years. More recently its chief aim has been toward the coördination of its forces and a more harmonious adjustment of interdenominational relations. All of these things are highly desirable, but in their working out we seem to have allowed our organizing abilities to run largely into conventionalizing activities. We readily admit this is to be a day of big things in denominational enterprises and we love to talk of our big conventions, big undertakings and big movements. In fact we hesitate to identify ourselves with any denominational or religious scheme unless it promises to be something big from the start. So far has this spirit of the modern world of enterprise gotten possession of us that in nearly all of our denominational organizations today, little work can be undertaken and little interest aroused unless in planning and in carrying out the work for which the organization exists, the work must be inaugurated and carried forward in some kind of a convention, assembly or rousing get-together program. Nearly all the new religious movements of today seem to be characterized quite as much by the frequency and bigness of their meetings as by the practical efficiency for which the movements were organized. We are not attempting to argue against the advantage of great enthusiasm and power in big meetings but to hint at the evident loss our organizations are in danger of experiencing from frequent and large public demonstrations. The energy, expense and time which go into public meetings and great gatherings, are not always so much practical efficiency added to the organization, but that much energy and revenue taken out of the practical work of the organization. Big conventions and big meetings not infrequently become substitutes for downright, practical, personal work in the daily service of life. Big meetings are justifiable and desirable in so far as they energize the organization and give it increased power for service.

Good Stories and Good Truth

Next to Mrs. Helen Barret Montgomery no woman connected with the "troupe" that toured the continent in the Woman's Missionary Jubilee campaign has met with such popular response as Miss Florence Miller. Miss Miller represented the Christian Woman's Board of Missions, and spoke in every one of the thirty-two rallies from Oakland to New York. She addressed two of the four banquets in the latter city and spoke at the Carnegie Hall meeting and the Disciples' rally. Judging from the way in which Miss Miller's addresses are featured in the reports it would seem that to her missionary enthusiasm and catholicity of outlook she adds the happy faculty of telling a good story effectively. In New York halls were so big that a few of the women speakers had difficulty in making themselves heard. Miss Miller, whose voice is as clear as a bell and remarkably flexible and agreeable, said at one meeting: "We want to be heard. We do not wish to be like the speakers at a meeting which the women of a certain place were holding. The subject was Systematic Giving. Two men dropped into the rear of the hall to learn what was going on, but could not hear much. Finally one man said to the other 'What is it all about.' The other man replied, 'I cannot tell sure, but I think they are holding a memorial service to Sister Mattie Given.'"

In Louisville, Miss Miller told a story that went widely through the secular press and has given occasion, we note incidentally, to the Christian Standard to call her application of it "foolish, undignified and erroneous." It was the story of the Negro bridegroom whose employer brought a marriage license for him, but had the wrong girl named in the instrument. When it was explained to him that it would cost two dollars to change the license, he said: "Boss, there's not two dollars' difference in them gals."

"Friends," said Miss Miller, "there's not two dollars difference between us in this work. We have all joined hands. I am a Methodist-Baptist-Congregationalist-Episcopalian sort of a Christian myself. Christ came to establish a kingdom, not a church. The churches are simply means for us to use in hastening the coming of his kingdom."

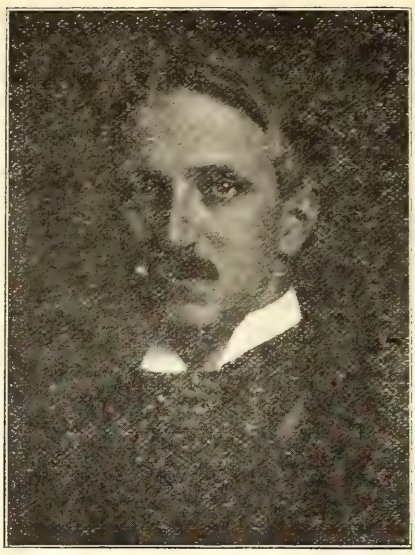
That, despite her critics, is the truly great word for a representative of the Disciples of Christ to speak.

The Changed Attitude Toward the World

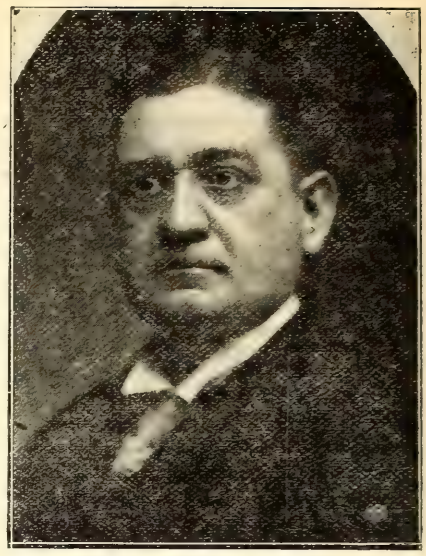
The church of the present has its eyes open to the beauty and order of the world. It finds the revelation of God written on the heavens above and on the earth beneath. The dualism that regards matter as evil cannot get respectful consideration among intelligent Christians. The contrast between the new and the old is brought out by the Central Christian Advocate (Kansas City), thus:

> The essential badness of the world will no longer be believed. Men love the beautiful too well to refuse to see the beauty of flowers, of skies, of art, of progress. Mr. Brierly tells us that it was boasted of St. Bernard that he journeyed a whole day by the lake of Geneva without being aware that there was a lake at all. St. Francis ate off the bare ground. St. Alphonse Liguori lived in a filthy chamber, in which scarce any ray of light penetrated. The same view with many extended to things of the mind. Ignorance was held sacred, and secular knowledge put under taboo. What a difference between the noble idea of Alexandrian Clement, that the Logos, the Light of the World, was the light of philosophy and the view of Tertullian! Mr. Brierly recalls the gibe of Erasmus, that in his time amongst the clergy it was thought a mark of holiness not to be able to read; and that caustic remark of Montesquieu concerning the church fathers: "Doubtless they have a laudable zeal for the things of the future life, but with a very small knowledge of this one." Ignorance certainly can not be looked upon as a Christian virtue; for the simple reason that to study is to try to think the thoughts of God. He made the universe, with its mysteries, its hidden secrets which tantalize man till he simply must go find them out. No, let knowledge grow from more to more, but likewise more of faith—that faith may soar upward on her larger sympathy with the lovely and enchanting ways of God.

Prof. E. H. Lindley.



Prof. Edward C. Moore.



Rev. C. H. Winders, Indianapolis, President.

Congress of Disciples of Christ

West Side Church, Springfield, Ill., April 18-20

The outlook for a successful Congress of the Disciples at Springfield next week is every way cheering. Indications point to a large attendance of our most thoughtful churchmen. The program is one of the most attractive that has been offered by any committee during the entire life of the Congress. Its themes and its speakers are full of significance.

Psychology, "Modern Thought," Biblical Interpretation, The Church in Its Present-Day Environment, Missionary Efficiency, The Disciples' Education Problem, Religion in State Schools—these are some of the great subjects for consideration. There is an absence of crowding in the make-up of the program. Much room is left for open parliament and impromptu discussion.

There, for example, is a whole afternoon given to a discussion of Professor James' Views of Religion and Life, with Professor Lindley of Indiana leading; and an entire forenoon, beginning at 9:30, with Prof. Edward C. Moore, of Harvard, leading an open parliament on Modern Thought and Religious Belief. These two men—the guest speakers of the Congress—will bring an inspiration to every delegate sufficient to pay him for the time and expense in attending.

It would not be fair to call attention to any of the remaining numbers on the program without characterizing them all, and this we have not space for at this time. But there will be an exceptional interest centering in the paper by Professor Ames on "Religion and the Social Consciousness." The Glasgow Herald and The Scotsman (Edinburgh), the two most authoritative book critics in Scotland, pronounce Dr. Ames' new book on "The Psychology of Religious Experience" the most important contribution to the psychology of religion since the appearance of Professor James' "Varieties of Religious Experience." In his book Dr. Ames defines religion as "a phase of the social consciousness." His Congress paper may, therefore, be expected to treat of the essential core of his book.

The fellowship of the Congress is alone worth the trip. The visiting in smaller informal groups is always one of the most valued delights of such gatherings. Springfield church homes are co-operating to entertain the delegates over night and for breakfasts at a merely nominal charge.

Not the least attractive will be the opportunity to visit the tomb and home of the great Lincoln. Illinois' capital city is a mecca to which thousands go annually to see the monument and relics and to study the life of this "typical American."

Readers of The Christian Century will be interested in the report of the Congress which, we assure them, will be as adequate an interpretation as we can make.

Rev. J. R. Golden, Pastor West Side Church.

Program

TUESDAY, APRIL 18.

7:30 p. m. "Schools of the Disciples of Christ," Pres. Miner Lee Bates.

8:00 p m. "The Religious Need of Our State Universities," Dean Chas. M. Sharpe.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 19.

9:30 a. m. "Psychology and Biblical Interpretation," Rev. E. F. Daugherty, Vincennes, Indiana.

Written Review, Rev. H. A. Denton, Troy, New York.

2:30 p. m. "William James, His Personality and His Views of Religion and Life." Ernest H. Lindley, Ph. D., Professor of Philosophy in Indiana University.

Open parliament for Questions and discussion.

4:00 p m. Visit to Home and Tomb of Lincoln.

7:30 p. m. "Religion and the Social Consciousness," Prof. E. S. Ames, Chicago

THURSDAY, APRIL 20.

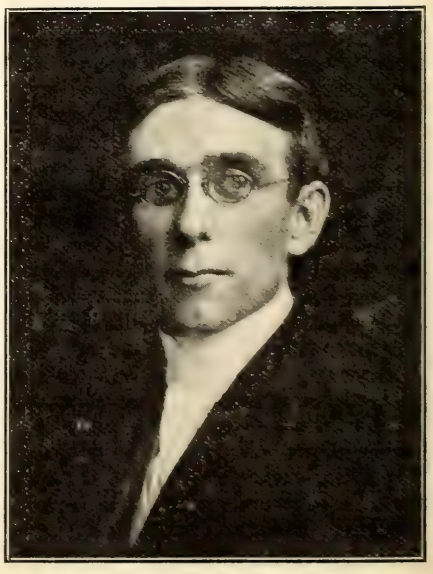
9:30 a. m. "Modern Thought and Religious Belief," Prof. Edward C. Moore, Parkman Professor of Theology, Harvard University.

Open parliament and questions.

2:30 p. m. "The Church and the Life of Today," Rev. David H. Shields, Eureka, Ill.

Written Review, Rev. T. E. Winter, Fulton, Mo.

7:30 p. m. "Liberal Christianity and Missionary Efficiency," Prof. Edward C. Moore.



Rev. J. C. Todd, Secretary, Bloomington, Ind.

A Good Soldier of Jesus Christ

Story of the Life of Hugh T. Morrison (1842-1911)

BY ARCHIBALD McLEAN

Two weeks after my father obeyed the gospel at Summerside, Prince Edward Island, Archibald McLean, a fellow-craftsman, though a younger man, followed him in like obedience. Out from a little group of seven young men who met often for prayer and Bible study there came four preachers—these two, Andrew Linkletter and Neil McLeod—all honored by the Disciples of Christ. The affection between my father and the president of the Foreign Missionary Society grew with the years. The Centennial gavel which Mr. McLean mentions in this article was wrought out as a token of my father's regard. He used a great number and variety of woods gathered from countries all over the world during his travels, and curiously, but exquisitely fitted together. It took him more than a year to make it. Mr. McLean's comforting words at the funeral service in Springfield deepened the regard in which from childhood we had been taught to hold him, a sentiment which is rendered yet more tender with the reading of these lines of biography.—C. C. M.

Hugh T. Morrison was born near Truro, Nova Scotia, December 4, 1842. As a child and boy he had few advantages of any kind; the community in which he lived was backward and depraved. His parents were poor and each child as soon as he was able was obliged to work to supply the needs of the family. So it came to pass that Hugh was required to do a man's work when he was only a lad. Among the things in which he became expert were these: Picking stones on a rocky farm, plowing with oxen, picking potatoes, mowing with a scythe, and using the axe in clearing land that was heavily wooded. Schools being few and private, he received almost no education in his youth.

Early Education Amid Difficulties.

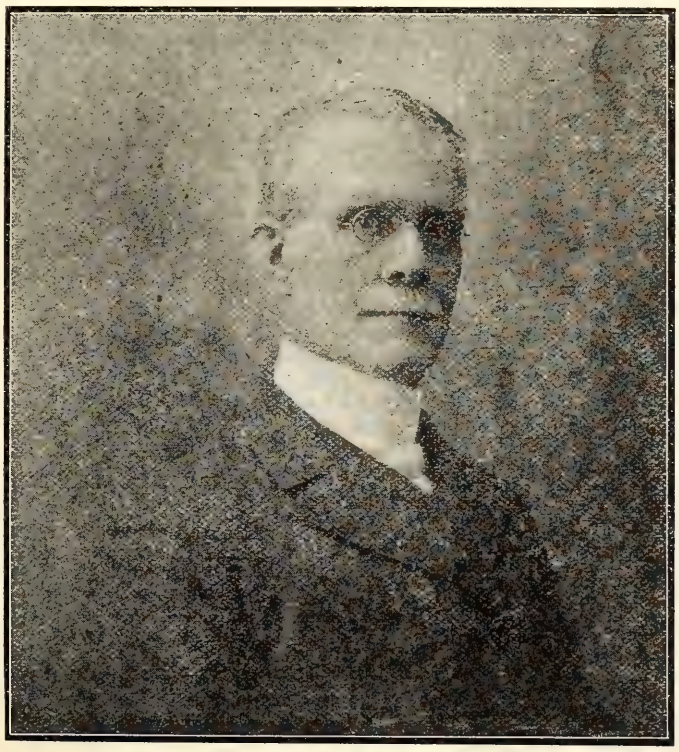
When he was nine years of age he attended school one whole day. When he was fourteen he attended three months; after that he attended a night school for a few weeks. He did not enter a school again till he was a grown man. While working for the neighbors he heard much profane and filthy talk, and that often from men who had families of their own. Drunkenness was so common that no one thought much about it. On election and other days when men came together half of them would be under the influence of liquor. As was natural, drinking led to fighting. It would not have been strange if a boy in such circumstances had imitated his seniors and lived on the same low plane. The fact that he did not is a proof of a different moral fibre. As the lily grows out of mire, so the subject of this sketch came up out of the most adverse conditions.

Three Years Apprenticeship.

At the age of nineteen Hugh began to learn the carpenter's trade. His apprenticeship lasted three years. Being naturally of a mechanical turn, and having had considerable experience with tools, he was as valuable to his employer from the first as most apprentices whose course was half finished. But that made no difference with his employer. He had promised to pay him fifty dollars for three years' work and he would not pay any more. It was with the greatest difficulty that the apprentice could provide clothing and supply his other needs on so small an income. His father was dead and the family could do nothing to assist him. He learned to practice the most rigid economy and to do without many things that he wanted. This lesson was worth much to him in after years, when he had a growing family to support on a very small salary. Having finished his apprenticeship, he crossed over from Nova Scotia to Prince Edward Island and worked at his trade in Summerside for two years.

Becomes a Christian.

It was not until he went to Summerside that he gave any serious thoughts to religion. Before leaving home he joined the Good Templars. That kept him sober and brought him into touch with some good people. But he was irreligious and worldly-minded. He thought of being a successful carpenter and of nothing else. In some way he was induced to attend a series of meetings in the Christian church in Summerside. Some one who knew him spoke to him and urged him to deal honestly with himself and accept Christ as his Saviour. He held back because he was confused about the mysterious notions of conversion that were prevalent at that time. But under the teaching of Donald Crawford he was led into the light. Before the meetings closed he surrendered himself to Christ and was baptized. The church was small and obscure. There was preaching once a month and no midweek service. There were few to encourage the young convert to continue faithful. While working as a carpenter he was thrown much with irreligious people. At times he was tempted to give up the faith and drop out of the ranks. But he did not. By the grace of God he was enabled to hold fast the beginning of his confidence.



The Late Rev. Hugh T. Morrison.

Early Efforts at Self-expression.

Several things helped to this end. At a place where he was working he was asked to give thanks at the table. He could not refuse, as he was known to be a Christian. That was a heavy cross, but it was a fresh avowal of his faith and strengthened him. At a prayer service held in a private house he was called upon to lead in prayer. He got as far as "O Lord," and then broke down completely and spent the rest of the hour in tears. At first he thought he was a fool for making the attempt. But that experience was but one of the most valuable in his life. Soon after, in a small gathering in the church, he spoke a few words and with such freedom and joy that he determined to conquer his timidity and speak whenever there was an opportunity. He was helped, too, by the discussions on religious subjects in which he took part. Religious discussions were the order of that place and time. All sorts of people discussed theories of conversion and the form and subject and design of baptism and other religious topics. A mid-week prayer service was started in the church. In this service he was a leader. All these experiences contributed to his growth in grace and in the knowledge of Christ.

Quits Trade for Ministry.

About this time Mr. Morrison decided to give up his trade and study for the ministry. When he united with the church and for some time after nothing could have been farther from his thought than this. He was a good workman and delighted in his work. His employer was so well pleased with him that he offered to make him a partner in his business. He could have gone on and prospered. But he felt that God called him and he left all and obeyed. He spent a profitable year in the home of his father in the gospel, in New Glasgow. Mr. and Mrs. Crawford taught him grammer and history and geography and the Bible. Mr. Crawford took him with him on his preaching tours and divided the time with him. After that experience he entered Bethany College. At the end of a year his funds were exhausted. Leaving Bethany, he spent a year in West Virginia and Ohio, and then returned to Prince Edward Island. He evangelized in the Island and in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick.

Marriage and Early Labors.

On the 19th of January, 1871, Mr. Morrison was married to Miss Anna J. MacDonald, the daughter of a Baptist minister. Neither had any money worth mentioning, but both had youth, and faith, and hope, and love, and energy and devotion. They had to endure many trials. Often they were at their wit's end. Sometimes their supplies were exhausted, but they did not give up heart or hope. They trusted in God and did their best, and His goodness never failed them. Mrs. Morrison was a gifted and accomplished woman. In her radiant presence it was impossible to be other than brave and cheerful and enterprising. She was a constant support and stimulus to her husband.

After their first child was born, Mr. and Mrs. Morrison left the Island and sought work in the United States. They went out like Abraham, not knowing whither they went. They found work in Ohio, in Indiana, in Michigan, in Wisconsin, in Minnesota, and Iowa. The churches they served were small and poor. The salary paid was never over eight hundred dollars; part of the time it was not more than half of that. They had sickness and reverses; their family increased and often they were sorely pressed for funds to meet expenses. But they praised God for the privilege of serving him in the ministry. They rejoiced that he had counted them worthy, putting them into this service. Sometimes the head of the house went out and sold Bibles. It was necessary to turn his hand to different things to keep the wolf from the door. While serving the churches his mechanical ability and knowledge served the cause well. He could build a house of worship or make repairs where repairs were needed.

An Expository Preacher.

Mr. Morrison served the churches as pastor and as evangelist and won a good degree of success in both lines of work. His preaching was mainly expository. He preferred God's thought to his own. Like Wesley, he was a man of one book. He read other books because they helped him to understand the Book of God. He made the Bible the man of his counsel; he meditated upon its teaching day and night. It was more to be desired by him than gold; it was sweeter than honey and the droppings of the honeycomb. He studied it diligently and honestly and brought from its treasures of wisdom things both new and old. He dealt with the people he served as a father with his own children, exhorting them, and encouraging them, and testifying, to the end that they should walk worthily of God, who had called them into his own kingdom and glory. His blameless and noble life reinforced his preaching and teaching. He was an ensample to them that believed, in word, in manner of life, in love, in faith, in purity. As an evangelist he declared the whole counsel of God. He kept back nothing that was profitable to those with whom he had to do. As an ambassador on behalf of Christ he besought men to be reconciled to God. The results of his work can be stated in a sentence: "Many people were added to the Lord."

A Constructive Ministry.

As a minister his work was constructive. As a carpenter he liked to see buildings go up; as a minister he liked to see churches grow in all directions. He had experiences that tried his soul. Wicked and unreasonable men opposed him and sought to defeat his efforts. He remembered the words, "The Lord's servant must not strive, but be gentle towards all, apt to teach, forbearing, in meekness correcting them that oppose themselves." He worked with such men as long as he could; then he resigned and sought another field of labor. He never wrecked a church or left it weaker than he found it. He loved the church and prayed and labored for its peace and prosperity.

Mr. Morrison's four children survive him. Remembering his own limited education and how he was handicapped by it, he resolved, as many other men have done, that his children should have advantages that were denied him. With this thought he took his family to Des Moines, that his children might enter Drake University. While they were in the university he went out and evangelized, that he might provide the necessary funds. For years he was away from home most of the time. He felt lonely many times but did not complain. He was ready to make any sacrifice in the interest of those whom he loved more than his own life.

Purpose Not Deflected by Hardships.

While serving Christ in the ministry, Mr. Morrison had his full share of hardships and disappointments. But he was ever joyful and hopeful. He never regretted that he had dedicated his life to the preaching of the gospel. He earned less money than he would have if he had continued working at his trade. But he felt that he was where God wanted him to be and where his life counted for most, and he was satisfied. He realized that a true minister of the gospel, whether he preaches for a large church or a small one, fills the most influential position of any man on the globe. Other men may have more of this world's goods and fill a larger place in the public mind, but in God's sight he fills the first place. Mr. Morrison not only rejoiced that he was permitted to preach the Word in many parts of the world, but praised God when his own children followed in his steps.

Travels Around the World.

Seven years ago Mrs. Morrison entered into the perfect life. Her husband mourned her departure; but he did not lose his interest in the Lords work. Like Livingstone, he resumed his task, though it was with chastened spirit he set about it. In the years that have elapsed since her death he circumnavigated the globe. He preached in Australia and New Zealand. He served the church in Wellington as its pastor. While there he persuaded the church to leave the suburbs and build a suitable house of worship in the heart of the city. Having completed his work under the Southern Cross, he returned home by way of Palestine and Egypt and Europe. His last work as a pastor was done in Prince Edward Island. After closing his work there he preached at different points in the Maritime Provinces of Canada and then started to join his children in the central states. On the way he attended the Centennial in Pittsburgh, and presented the Foreign Society with a gavel that is a work of art.

Declining Days.

Knowing that his health was failing, he went to live with his children in Springfield, Illinois. Later he was taken to a hospital in Chicago. He was found to be suffering from pernicious anaemia. He had every attention that the medical profession could give him, but medical science could not effect a cure or prolong his life. Six weeks before the end came he was taken to the home of his son, Charles Clayton Morrison. There he made all the arrangements for his funeral. He selected the hymns, the scripture lesson, the text on which the address should be based, and the men who were to take part in the service. He suffered greatly in the last year of his life. He had suffered much before that. It was this that led him to select the text: "And he shall wipe away every tear from their eyes; and death shall be no more; neither shall there be mourning, nor crying, nor pain, any more." He died in Chicago on the 26th of March. On the Wednesday following he was buried in Springfield, in the cemetery in which the mortal remains of President Lincoln lie.

Would Educate Two Chinese Boys.

This good man desired to project his influence into the future. In order to do this he provided for the education of two poor ministerial students in the University of Nanking, China. He assigned his own poverty and lack of education in early life; his desire to have the gospel preached to the lost; his wish to honor Robert Morrison, the first missionary to China; and his desire to honor the writer, who was bound to the testator by a love such as bound David and Jonathan together, as his reasons for setting aside a part of his modest estate for this purpose.

Like Barnabas, Hugh T. Morrison was a good man, full of the Holy Spirit and of faith. Those who knew him testify that few truer or better men ever lived. Like Moses and Elijah and Elisha he was a man of God. He loved God as revealed in Christ with his whole nature and spent forty-four years in his service. He sought to deserve the favor of God: he was ambitious for no other reward. The blessing pronounced upon the good and faithful servant was his. He was not only faithful in every relation, but his life was filled with the fruits of righteousness, which are through Jesus Christ, unto the glory and praise of God. He rests from his labors, and his works follow him. Blessed be God for his noble and fruitful life and for his triumphant death. Such a life and such a death are among the best evidences of the divine origin of the Christian religion.

Commending the Cross

In our preaching and in our hymnology we have much to say about the cross. In this we follow the practice of the apostles. By this sign the church has won great victories. But it requires something besides words to persuade the world of the saving power of the cross. We dishonor the sacred name by which we are called when we preach the cross but practice self-indulgence. On this the British Weekly says:

When a man says that modern civilization is not compatible with the ethics of Jesus, when he even goes the length of declaring that the Christian religion is an obstacle to human progress, you can meet him on his own grounds. You know at least where he is. But when you come across people who are notoriously self-indulgent, self-centered, unforgiving and censorious, and yet who are tenacious upholders of orthodoxy, you sometimes realize for the first time how the cross of Christ can be of none effect. And this is the supreme reproach of the Gospel, the obstacle which stands often in the way of its acceptance by outsiders. If there is no conscientious and instinctive effort on the part of Christian men and women to reproduce the law and spirit of the cross, as it meets them in the daily opportunities of self-denial and forgiveness, they never commend or transmit it to the world, for the simple reason that they do not themselves understand its elementary significance.

As an English modernist observes, "The one infallible note of all false Christs and all anti-Christs, of all and indeed the only false gods, however they may be disguised by trappings of royalty, is the absence of a crown of thorns, and certainly the men who have, above all other men, set God before the eyes of an unwilling world, have shared that crown." There is no other way of commending the cross to men. These qualities of self-sacrifice and humility, of devotion and generous service, are its living proof. If they are wanting, nothing will ever make it a reality to us or to other people. But, if they are present, if the cross is obviously relevant and organic to the life which we openly live, we shall be better able to spell out its open secret and glory; and, further, we shall be spelling it out unconsciously for many people who could never perhaps be willing to take the trouble to read another message of its intense relevance to their own lives.

Translating the Bible

Scholarship's Difficult Task in Giving the Bible to the People

BY ERNEST C. MOBLEY.

The Tercentenary celebration of the English Bible is to be observed throughout the English-speaking world on April 23, and the week following. Great themes are proposed for the discussion of orators and writers: The Debt of English Literature to the English Bible; The Influence of the English Bible on Customs, Laws, Government and Social Life; The Place of the English Bible in Missions; The English Bible in the Spiritual Life of the English Speaking People. It was an immeasurably great event in art and human life when the King James Version was given to the world. The moment is propitious for every pastor to interpret the history of the Bible and the human methods by which it has been divinely preserved and given to the people. Mr. Mobley's instructive and accurate article will prove suggestive in such a task.—The Editors.

No other document has been subjected to such intelligent, thorough, searching criticism as has the Bible during the past generations. The expensive, scholarly and persistent research into the strange, locked mysteries of the Orient has revealed overwhelming confirmatory evidences of the historicity and authenticity of our sacred Scriptures. To apply the canons of modern criticism to our Bible is considered sheer sacrilege by multitudes of conscientious Christians. They honestly believe the Authorized Version of 1611 to be the absolutely accurate expression of the inspired words, even to the dotting of the "i's" and the crossing of the "t's."

We must remember that the Old Testament was originally written in the Hebrew, and the New Testament was originally written in Greek. The Old Testament used by the Apostles was called the Septuagint, because it was translated into Greek, made by seventy learned Jews of Alexandria about 280 B. C.

Original Manuscripts in Early Churches.

Original manuscripts of the Bible were to be found in all the larger early churches. As the churches multiplied and the demands for the Scriptures increased, copies necessarily became more numerous. These copies were made by hand—letter by letter, and word by word. It was a laborious work of love. In this long tedious process, it was next to impossible to prevent copyists' errors. One letter would be substituted for another. The copist would close a sentence with a certain word; another lower line would close with the same word, and instead of beginning below the first line, he would begin below the second line, thus omitting a line or two. Marginal explanations would be written into the body of the manuscript. This process would continue from generation to generation, until the manuscripts became very faulty by reason of numerous insignificant errors. You may copy a page from a book and let a dozen friends copy the last copy and then compare the twelfth copy with the original. Do this, and observe how many errors have crept in. This copying business for centuries was a most difficult task. The letters were all the same size, with no spaces between them. Even when printing became an art, with careful, expert proofreading, it was impossible to prevent errors.

Slight Change Makes Great Error.

In an early printed copy, Paul writing to the Corinthians, is made to say: "Know ye not that the unrighteous shall inherit the Kingdom of God." The use of two letters changed the entire meaning of the Apostle.

One can readily see the great need of a new version. That appears easy to the average Christian. Just get those original manuscripts in the early churches and translate them. But there is not one of the original manuscripts in existence. How, then, can the scholars get an exact version of the original Bible? There is accessible an immense old heap. This heap has been gathered from the libraries and museums of the ancient world. The scholars divide the heap into three parts; the ancient manuscripts made from the original manuscripts, and dating from about 300 to 450 A. D. There are more than fifteen hundred of these important documents.

The question of age is determined by the character of the letters. The manuscripts are put into two piles. The first pile of one hundred manuscripts, with long straight letters and no divisions, are called Uncials, and are the oldest; consequently the most valuable. The second pile of nearly fifteen hundred manuscripts, with curves and loops very much like our writing, are called Cursives.

The scholars take the most valuable of these and study them closely, comparing and correcting the errors in each by the other. It is not likely that every manuscript would have the same errors. The three most important Uncial manuscripts have become available since the appearance of the King James Version in 1611.

The Alexandrian Manuscript.

The Alexandrian manuscript is in the British Museum, London, and was presented to Charles I, by the Bishop of Constantinople in 1628. I had the pleasure of seeing it through glass. The Sinaitic manuscript is in the Library of St. Petersburg, and under the Greek Catholic Church. It was found at St. Catharine's Convent, at the foot of Mount Sinai, by Dr. Tischendorf in 1859. Dr. Tischendorf, the distinguished German scholar, gave his life searching and studying ancient manuscripts in the countries of the East. He went to St. Catharine's Convent first in 1844. While walking through the corridors, he observed some monks with a basket full of loose papers. He picked up a few leaves and gave vent to his great joy in finding them to be from some ancient manuscript.

The monks refused to let him have any more. After fifteen years of persistent efforts, he returned to Mount Sinai from his home in Germany, armed with letters of authority from the Emperor of Russia. He searched the convent to no purpose, and was preparing to leave. On the evening preceding his departure, he engaged a monk in conversation and was invited to tea with the monk. Scarcely had he sat down to the table in the dungeon, when the monk put a large bundle before the doctor. It was wrapped in cloth. It was the queen of Bible manuscripts.

The Vatican Manuscript.

The Vatican manuscript is in the Vatican Library in Rome, and is the treasure trove of the Roman Catholic Church. Its existence was known of for four or five hundred years, but Catholic authorities guarded it closely. No scholar was allowed to copy even one verse. Facsimile copies were made by Pope Pius IX, and are to be seen in the great libraries of the world. I saw facsimile copies of the Sanaitic and Vatican manuscripts in the British Museum.

There are other valuable Uncial manuscripts and a great pile of Cursives. Next to the manuscripts come the ancient versions. There is an immense heap of them. The Syriac and Egyptian date back within fifty years of the original manuscripts. The versions commonly used by scholars are the Latin. These versions preserve our Bible in the languages of early Christendom, and make silly the claims that the Bible is of more recent date. The most valuable Latin version is that of St. Jerome, and called the Latin Vulgate. St. Jerome, the great scholar of the fourth century, had just gone to Rome from his hermitage at Bethlehem. The Latin Bible had become very faulty.

St. Jerome and the Vulgate.

Damascus, the Bishop of Rome, insisted that St. Jerome should employ his great ability in making a new version. He understood the hard work required, the bitter criticism it would occasion. With all accessible material, St. Jerome finished his version of the New Testament in 385 A. D. He then translated the Old Testament from the Hebrew.

Continuous, unmerciful criticism was the appreciation of the Christian people. They pronounced it rank heresy. Just like the people of this enlightened twentieth century received our Revised Version. They thought it heresy to change one word of the King James Bible. Time tells. One thousand years later, at the Council of Trent, the Latin Vulgate received ecclesiastical indorsement, and has been the authorized version of the Roman Church.

The quotations from the early Christian fathers are very valuable. Their writings bristle with full and free quotations from the Scriptures; the Epistle of Barnabas, who was a companion with Paul; Polycarp, a disciple of the Apostle John; Ignatius, a student of Polycarp; Clement and Justin Martyr, who wrote his "Apologies," and other books, about 150 A. D.; Clement of Alexandria, Origen, Basil and Jerome of the third and fourth centuries. With this superabundance of material, why doubt the possibility of having a true Bible?

Our Revised Version Most Accurate.

I am thoroughly convinced that our Revised Version is the most accurate expression of the original Hebrew and Greek Bible that we have had in the English language.

The three great Uncial manuscripts were not accessible when the Authorized Version was made. There has never been a time in the history of the world when our scholars were such experts in the science of "textual criticism," as they are today.

The English language is growing and must change. More than two hundred words in the King James are obsolete. Did you ever think of how old the English language really is? We cannot determine definitely when it became a language. The Saxon was declining in 1150, one hundred years after the conquest. The English was established in 1250, one hundred years after the Saxon began to decline. English came as a fusion of the Saxon and Norman French. Wycliff gave his version of the Bible in 1384. About this time Dan Chaucer was crystallizing the language.

Yes, we have our most perfect English Bible.

Gainesville, Texas.

THE JUBILEE MOVEMENT: WHAT NEXT?

BY CATHARINE FRAZEE LINDSAY

In two vital respects the Woman's Missionary Social Union is the most important factor in the church life of Springfield, Ill. Its service to missions consists not in the direct raising of money, but in the cultivating of missionary intelligence and outlook. Its service to Christian unity is wrought through the social fellowship of the most influential members of all the churches and the emphasis upon the large and vital concerns of Christianity upon which all Christians are agreed. To Mrs. Lindsay, the founder of the Union, and its leader for over a score of years, belongs chief credit for its notable efficiency.—The Editors.

The Jubilee Movement, celebrating the fiftieth anniversary of the organization of Woman's Missionary enterprise, has swept over the United States, from California to New York. It has awakened the devoted, church-going woman to realize that the Missionary Society has been her chief school of education in mind and spirit, and, in its service, has brought her into her birthright as the eldest in the World-Sisterhood.

Wherever the rallies have been held, there is an earnest desire to embody the generated enthusiasm in a living, permanent, interdenominational organization. This is a necessity. The reaction that often follows union revival meetings is often urged as an objection to exciting waves of enthusiasm. The fault is not in the enthusiasm, but in the failure of the veterans to immediately engage the recruits in active service, not only by giving them an important part in the real work of the campaign, but by keeping them informed and up-to-date in the great world movements and victories.

This need is being fully met wherever the Woman's Missionary Social Union has been inaugurated and developed. This organization is made up of all the local auxiliary Missionary Societies of any one vicinity, usually a town or city being the center. Its purpose is to disseminate knowledge of the world-wide missionary enterprise carried on by all evangelical Christians; to increase interest by mutual conferences concerning successful methods for the development of the auxiliary life; to promote united prayer; and last,—perhaps most important,—to hold two or three great mass-meetings each year. The most effective speakers possible are secured for these rallies, and, through large and persistent committees on invitation, every available woman in the vicinity is brought into the popular current, led up to a high point of vision, and if possible, induced to enroll herself as a part of the movement.

Pledges for financial offerings, reinforcements at home and volunteers for the field, are urgently called for. These are afterward assigned to their respective Boards, the organization handling no money, except for its own absolutely necessary expenses.

Thus gradually, year by year, through the work of the Woman's Missionary Social Union, the seven-tenths of Christian women who are still unidentified with this great forward movement of the Church of Christ, will become a part of it. Many of them have been gathering resources from clubs, study-classes, and the educational activities of our modern America, and are only waiting for a motive power to use their mother-life in mothering the race.

The Woman's Missionary Social Union was inaugurated in Springfield, Illinois, in 1890, consequently is now just twenty-one years old. It has constantly grown not only in local influence, but by forming a large number of similar organizations in various cities, towns, and country districts, from California and Texas to Washington, D. C. It has vastly increased the membership, gifts, and spiritual power of the various societies thus associated together, broken down all rivalry and prejudice among the religious bodies identified with it, and brought about a mutual helpfulness and realization of unity of purpose that is quite remarkable.

Wherever it is planted and cultivated, the Woman's Missionary Social Union must bear these same fruits, as its God-ordained fruition.

Mrs. Catharine F. Lindsay and her grandchild, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Paul Wakefield of China.

The Christian Woman's Board of Missions has been among the leading National organizations that have co-operated in the great jubilee rallies. Our own Miss Florence Miller has nobly represented us. The one distinctive plea of the Disciples is the unity of the church. In Christ's prayer He makes the evangelization of the world depend upon this one condition. The great World Conference at Edinburgh, composed of delegates representing the important missionary activities of all Christendom, continually emphasized, "The Unity of the Church," as the necessary antecedent to "The Evangelization of the World."

We of the C. W. B. M. therefore cannot be true to our cause without taking the initiative or fully co-operating, wherever opportunity offers, in every movement that, without surrender of principle, may prove a step toward the consummation of this unity which must precede the complete fulfillment of our specific mission: to do our part in evangelizing the world.

The Executive Committee of the W. M. S. U. has published a tract, giving details of the methods and activities of the organization. It can be obtained on application at C. W. B. M. headquarters, Missionary Training School, Indianapolis, Ind.

Donald's Discovery

BY ANNE GUILBERT MAHON.

Donald felt very big. It was grandmother's birthday, and she had invited all the children and the grandchildren to supper.

It was Donald's first real grown-up party, and he had scarcely slept the night before for thinking of it.

When the afternoon came, he was dressed early and ran into grandmother's house—which was just next door to his own—before any of the aunts and uncles and cousins began to arrive.

Grandmother was busy setting the table.

"Come right into the dining room, Donald," she called.

"Can I help you, grandmother?" he asked.

"Yes, indeed. I need a useful little boy like you. You can help me bring in these dishes from the kitchen."

Donald ran swiftly in and out of the kitchen, bringing in the dishes with the tempting things on them—plates of cold meat, dishes of jelly, of candies and salted nuts. His eyes grew bigger and bigger. He could scarcely wait until it was time for the others to come and they could enjoy the good things.

The doorbell rang. Grandmother hurried out to greet some of the aunts and cousins. Donald was left alone in the dining room. The table did look tempting, and it was a long time to wait. Of course Donald would not touch anything, Oh, no! But—what was that in the fancy little dish beside the plate of cold meat? Donald had never seen anything like that before. Mother never had anything like it on her table. The candies and the nuts, the jellies, the flaky biscuit, the cold meat, were familiar to him, but what could that be in the fancy dish—that white, flaky stuff?

Donald's curiosity was too much for him. He looked around to see that no one was near, then he picked up a spoon and helped himself generously from the little dish. He put the spoon to his mouth and tasted the contents.

Poor Donald! He choked. He gasped. The spoon fell from his hand. The tears came into his eyes. His mouth was burning up. What was that dreadful stuff?

Grandmother heard the noise and ran, frightened, into the dining room.

"Donald!" she cried. "What is the matter?"

Then she understood. "Oh, the horse-radish!" she exclaimed, relieved.

She brought a glass of cool water and told the little boy to hold the cooling liquid in his mouth as long as he could.

"Didn't you know it burned?" she asked, gently.

Donald could only blink back the tears and try to hold the water against his burning tongue.

"I'm awful sorry, grandmother," he said, as soon as he could speak. "I didn't know what it was—I wanted to find out—I know I shouldn't have done it,—"

"Never mind," said grandmother. "You've found out what it's like—and I think your act has brought its own punishment. We won't say anything more about it," and she stroked his curly head gently.

But Donald did not enjoy the birthday supper at all. The horse-radish had burned his mouth so that he could not taste any of the good things he had so looked forward to enjoying, and he found, as grandmother said, that his act had brought its own punishment.

Be cheerful and seek not external help, nor the tranquility which others give; a man must stand erect, not be kept erect by others. —Marcus Aurelius.

Our Readers' Opinions

The Test of Superiority

There is nothing more repugnant to Christian civilization and cultured minds than bigotry—blind partisan zeal, arrogant dogmatism, and nothing more indicative of shallowness of thought and character. "Still water runs deep," is a maxim that has a moral as well as a material application. The man who can see nothing good outside his own political party is a political demagogue. The man who can see nothing good outside his own church is a religious demagogue, a Pharisee—"God, I thank Thee that I am not as other men."

A young man is born in a certain political party or in a certain church, grows up under the influence of his environment, fired with youthful enthusiasm he enters the arena of life believing "we are the people and wisdom will die with us." He cries aloud and spares not. If a politician, everything outside his own party is audacious and mendacious. If a preacher, he says, Who teaches salvation by grace as we do? Who really and truly understands repentance, faith, regeneration and santification but us? Who in fact, wants to know what the Bible says about baptism and the Lord's Supper but those in our "little pent up Utica." And the great religious world of scholars and consecrated men look on with mingled feelings of pity and amusement.

Rev. A. B. Jones.

I am speaking from experience as well as from observation. I once thought all virtue and excellence was confined to my own church. But as I grew older and became better acquainted with the people of other religious bodies, I saw from their conversation and conduct that they were just as sincere and intelligent as myself and in many instances more so. I changed front. During the first half of my ministry I was hunting the strong points of my own church and the weak points in others, and preached on these topics. During the last half of my ministry I have reversed this. I have been looking for the weak points in my own church and the strong points in others and preaching these. And I think my last days have been my best. Every church like every man has its strong and weak points. And every church has made valuable contribution to the moral and spiritual wealth of the world.

It is an encouraging sign of the times that men are growing tired of partyism, and with broader vision are asserting their independence in politics and religion. The leading political parties come into power and go out, rise and fall according to their fidelity to the fundamentals of truth and righteousness. The large increase of independent voters is the hope of the nation. The blind bigot in ecclesiastical circles who is more wedded to Churchianity than to Christianity is a diminishing and disappearing factor in the religious life of the world. The great leaders in religious thought of all churches are seeking for common ground on which Christian men and ecclesiastical bodies may stand closer together in solid phalanx against the hosts of darkness and sin. The call of the little zealot for my church versus your church is like the cry of a sick child in the night.

"What do ye more than others?" is the question that comes ringing down through twenty centuries from the lips of Jesus Christ our Lord. Not the dogmatical but the pragmatical in religion is what the world most needs today. Intelligent, thoughtful men of the present day are not interested in fine spun theological theories, but they are asking with deep concern "What do ye more than others?" And they are saying with our blessed Lord—"By their fruits ye shall know them."

Are the members of your church any more truthful in their utterances, any more honorable in their dealings, any more humane in their relations to others, any more liberal in their offerings for charity, any more considerate and sympathetic toward the fallen and helpless, any more fervent in their prayers, any more tender and gracious in their songs, any more eloquent in their sermons, any more self-sacrificing and reverent in their living, any more devout and humble in their daily walk, any more forgiving to their enemies? If not, where the superiority of your faith and your regeneration and your religion over others? "What do ye more than others?" A. B. Jones.

Liberty, Mo.

Baptism and Fellowship

Editors The Christian Century: In an article in The Christian Century some weeks ago Mr. Garvin quoted from Dr. Stalker a striking delineation of the evils growing out of the doctrine of baptism. The situation as there depicted is true to fact and is so distressing that one can be forgiven for seeking to alleviate it in at least a small degree. A more recent article in The Christian Century setting forth the embarrassment experienced by missionaries on account of the baptism problem accentuates this desire to improve the situation. In reading the last article one is moved to inquire whether the embarrassing situation is of God's making or of man's. If Jesus imposed upon us the necessity of refusing fellowship in the church to all but such as have been immersed, then our duty is clear and we can not be held responsible for the consequences of insisting upon the enforcement of this condition. But what if Jesus did not so instruct his disciples? Then we who insist that he did are responsible and will have to answer for the consequences. In view of this fact it is at least worth while to reopen the question for discussion and inquire whether we may not be mistaken in our attitude.

A recent writer has asserted that we have been mistaken about this. The contention of those insisting on the doctrine that Jesus commanded baptism is based on a certain interpretation of a few scattering passages. What if some other interpretation is the right one? All of us very readily assent to the spiritualization of Jesus' words, "you ought to wash one another's feet," why object to the same method of interpreting the baptism passages? Moreover, not only is the baptism doctrine based upon a single interpretation of passages capable of more than one interpretation by accepted methods of exegesis, but it is possible that these passages themselves are spurious. Capable and conscientious scholars have said they are. The ground upon which the doctrine of immersion-baptism rests is too sandy for any such structure as we are wont to build upon it. We attach too much importance to it when we make it a test of fellowship. Jesus does not do that. We all know many unimmersed persons who have fellowship with Jesus. If Jesus admits these into fellowship with him, why should we think that he does not want us to take the same attitude towards them?

Why must we think that we have to do otherwise? Simply because someone constructed a system of theology in which a formal induction into the church was a doctrinal necessity. Let us look away from this formal constitution of the church and get a glimpse of a church with doors open for every soul that is seeking in the least to draw nearer to God. Instead of guards at the doors, demanding pass words and shibboleths from every comer, we see men whose faces beam with the love of God and whose hands are outstretched and whose lips repeat the divine invitation, "Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the fountain and drink." On the inside we see men of every rank and station in life, some far along on the upward way, others just taking their first steps, but all assisting one another and all working for the upbuilding of the kingdom of God among the children of men. The day is coming when this vision shall be realized. Let us all strive to hasten the day of its coming! Wm. F. Clarke.

Forsyth, Mont.

The Larger Fellowship

"The hand of fellowship," "Conditions of fellowship," meaning passports to the favor of a certain congregation, how meagerly they suggest the fullness of that great word! To be received into the fellowship of a body of people, this may be like taking a spin in a new auto to inspect the parks and boulevards of a new city.

Fellowship: to put your heart under the burden of the world, and feel its crushing weight of woe and care, of municipal corruption, of national perils, of nations sick and dying, of peoples and races calling with empty hearts for knowledge and sympathy, for cash and character, for service and sacrifice, for trials and tears, for faith and courage equal to the impossible task.

Fellowship: to feel the call of childhood, to lead their feet into the right way by walking therein yourself, to note with caution your relation to the public school, to look with painful foreboding upon numerous nets set for innocent feet. To rise up in seemingly useless wrath against the monstrous evils that lie like tigers at your very doors.

Fellowship: to go with Jesus down the stairway of humiliation and suffering—

The Form of God
Emptied himself
Likeness of men
Form of a servant
Obedient unto death
The death of the cross.

How many of us have understood that this ladder waits for everyone who seeks the fellowship of Jesus? There is no other way. If we suffer with Him, we shall also reign with Him. The only way to get a man out of the depths is to go after him. The only way to go up is to go down. He that humbleth himself shall be exalted.

Des Moines, Iowa. J. M. Lowe.

The Moral Leaders of Israel

BY PROFESSOR HERBERT L. WILLETT

Section XVII. The Tragedy of Hosea

April 23. Text for Special Study, Hosea 1:1-3:5.

QUESTIONS.

1. In whose reign did the work of Hosea fall?
2. What events were most conspicuous during the period when Hoset was preaching?
3. What was the character of the worship at the high places?
4. What was the effect of the popular worship upon the morals of Israel?
5. Why is the book of Hosea among the minor prophets?
6. Was Hosea related in any manner to Amos?
7. What is known of Hosea's position and expectations at the time he began his prophetic work?
8. What was the character of his domestic life during the first years?
9. What was the course of Hosea's domestic tragedy?
10. What was it that led Hosea to begin the career of a prophet?
11. Why was he specially fitted for such a work?
12. In what way did his experience seem like that of God?
13. How had Israel proved herself an unfaithful wife?
14. What was the effect of the worship of the Baals upon the character of Israel?
15. What is the nature of the book of Hosea as regards its style?
16. What became of Hosea's wife?
17. What final act of sympathy did Hosea perform?
18. What bearing does this conduct of his have upon his character as a man and prophet?
19. How do you explain the fact that the Bible represents Hosea as commanded to marry a woman of impure life?
20. What light do other prophetic experiences and the teachings of Jesus throw on this problem?

1. THE DAYS OF HOSEA.

The prophetic work of Amos fell somewhere in the reign of Jeroboam II., the great king whose success had widened so broadly the territories of the kingdom of Israel. The closing period of Jeroboam's reign was one of grave danger for the nation, and only the king's personal influence saved the state from the decline which so rapidly set in after his death. The period following his reign was the time of the decline and fall of Northern Israel. Only twenty years after the great king was buried in 741 B. C., Samaria fell under the conquering assaults of Sargon of Assyria.

The age of Hosea was contemporary with the last days of Jeroboam and the unhappy years that followed. He was the prophet of the decline and fall of Israel, even as Jeremiah was the prophet of the last days of Judah. But the conditions in Israel were worse than those which Jeremiah faced, for though the nation was outwardly prosperous the moral tone of the people was sinking. The ceremonial of religion went on without cessation at such sanctuaries as Bethel, Gilgal, and Dan, but as Amos pointed out, religion had no vital hold upon the life of the people They were content to accept the verdict of priests and popular prophets, that as long as tithes and sacrifices were offered Jehovah was pleased with their conduct and would assuredly prosper them.

Meantime the worship of the high places degenerated. The worship of the Baalim or local gods was supposed to have been exterminated in the drastic reforms of Jehu, but in reality all of its worst features persisted in the high places which abounded in Israel. The feasts which were held in the name of religion were attended by scenes that were scarcely better than orgies. The morals of the nation were degraded by licentious and vicious practices that were countenanced by the religious leaders. Drunkenness and immorality became so common as to attract little attention. And when such conduct received the sanction of religion under the impression that God was pleased with the irresponsible festivity of the people, there was little hope of moral amendment.

2. THE MAN HOSEA.

The book of the prophet Hosea is the first, because it is the largest, of the minor prophecies. It is divided into two sections. The first three chapters contain the story of the prophet's tragic domestic experience; and the remainder of the book records some of the public messages which he delivered as the most conspicuous preacher and reformer of his day.

He was a younger man than Amos, and whether he ever heard that stern preacher of righteousness on the streets of Bethel or Samaria we do not know. But it is not improbable that he had in some manner come under the influence of the older man. He seems to have been a man of culture and perhaps of opulence. It is barely possible that he may have belonged to the priestly order. Or he may have been destined for some public service. At all events he was a man deeply sensitive to happiness and sorrow, the one man of his generation capable of viewing with deep and sympathetic insight the process of events.

The one event which did more than aught else to shape the character and destiny of Hosea was his marriage to a young woman, Gomer, the daughter of a certain Diblaim. It is probable that he regarded her as the embodiment of those attractions and virtues which a young and high-minded youth would seek in a woman who was to become his companion for life. As we shall see in the sequel, any other views seem impossible. But Hosea did not understand all the influence of the popular religion upon a beautiful and impressionable maiden. No doubt she had become sufficiently familiar with the popular religious practices of her time to understand and enjoy their seductiveness and appeal to a light-hearted and superficial nature. But of all this Hosea was ignorant and unsuspicious.

Time went on, and a child was born, who was named Jezreel. The latter significance of that name Hosea was yet to perceive. But already there were signs of trouble in the little family. The woman's interest was not in her home. Other shadows were lurking about; other affections and allurements were striving with those of domestic virtue. When the second child, a daughter, was born, Hosea, conscious already of his wife's indifference to her home responsibilities, named the girl Lo-ruhamah "the uncared for."

It was not long before the tragedy came to its climax. By the time the third child entered the household, the man had become confident that he no longer possessed the affections or the fidelity of his wife, and the child was given the significant and sinister name Lo-ammi, "not mine." From this it was but a step to that abandonment of the home by the woman, which left Hosea and his children in solitude and sorrow. She had gone forth with her lover to the vicious life of the gay city. Left in desolation amid the ruins of his deserted home, this sensitive man of Israel pondered the state of morals among his people which had been the basic cause of his own heart-breaking experience.

3. THE PROPHETIC CALL.

Hosea was by no means the only man in Israel who had suffered such a disaster. The bonds of moral faithfulness had been loosed by the careless and superficial nature of religion in the land. Indeed, the cultus actually encouraged lax domestic relations and the abandonment of chastity. Many other homes had been broken asunder through the dangerous prevalence of such popular ideas of morality. But Hosea was the one man of his generation who, having suffered, possessed the sensitiveness and the insight to understand the true meaning of his experience.

The Moral Leaders of Israel is a Sunday School course for Young People's and Adult Bible Classes. It will continue throughout the year 1911. The publishers of THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY will supply classes of six or more with weekly copies of the paper containing these lessons, at $1 per year for each copy, or 30 cents per quarter. The class members will receive in addition to their Sunday-school lesson all the rich things provided every week in THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY. The papers distributed to the class on Sunday will contain the lesson for the following Sunday. Orders should be sent through the regular Sunday-school Treasurer if you wish to pay quarterly; or you may deal directly with the Publishers, enclosing remittance at the rate of $1.00 per year for each copy ordered. Be sure and give name of teacher or class member to whom papers shall be sent for distribution.

For he could not fail to perceive the fact that his own sad estate was precisely analagous to that of the God of Israel had been called to worship and obey. Had not Jehovah chosen Israel in her youth and beauty to be his wife? Had he not led her with gentle hand through the wilderness, and given her the rich inheritance of a land flowing with milk and honey? Had he not lavished upon her all the blessings of a fertile and gracious inheritance?

And what was her response? She had looked with curiosity after the gods of neighboring lands; she had erected to them altars on every high hill and under every green tree; she had persuaded herself that they were more generous than her own divine husband. She fell under the delusion that their rewards were more immediate and satisfying. She thought they furnished the corn and the wine of her harvest. She was too superficial and lacking in insight to perceive that all her blessings came from Jehovah, and that he alone was worthy of her love.

And now, precisely as the woman Gomer had left her husband to follow the paramour who had fascinated her, so Israel had abandoned her sincere and unquestioning faith in God, and had fixed her affections upon the Baalim. Amos had spoken with indifference or contempt of these other gods, because it seemed incredible to him that Israel could ever take seriously the worship of images or the cult of the local gods. But Hosea, a native of Northern Israel, knew better the actual situation, for he himself had suffered the most grevious of all tragedies through the influence of this false religion upon the woman he loved.

It was out of just such circumstances that the citizen came to awareness regarding his own prophetic duties. If he had suffered the loss of the wife he loved, even so had Jehovah. He was the one man of his generation who, knowing the facts, could speak of them with authority and urgency. Dowered with such a message he felt that no disinclination could restrain him from his prophetic task. Little by little he came to read all of the nation's experiences of apostasy in the light of his own tragic suffering. His prophetic vocabulary is that of a heart-broken and forsaken lover and husband, who still loves and with deep passion resents the causes that have wrought the disaster. The book is full of vibrant, passionate, pleading, resentful, hopeful and condemnatory words. There is no utterance of prophecy that moves so rapidly backward and forward from hope to despair, from faith to doubt, and from yearning to denunciation as this. All the tender love and passionate anger of Hosea's domestic life seem embodied in these words addressed in the name of God to the people.

4. THE SLAVE MARKET.

The career of Gomer, the unfaithful wife of Hosea, was not unknown to him in the days that followed her departure from his home. He saw her gradual descent to degredation and infamy upon the streets of the city. At last her lover abandoned her, or took that last desperate recourse which the laws of ancient Israel permitted, and brought her to the slave market to sell her as a common chattel. Hosea knew of this new and pathetic phase of her life. He had been pleading with the people to return to the God whom they had betrayed. He had preached to them the pardoning grace of Jehovah, and had assured them that they would be met more than half way upon their return to accept the divine mercy. How could such a message fail to have significance for his own personal problem in a moment of such emergency as this?

He went to the slave market and bought back the woman for himself, for fifteen pieces of silver and a homer and a half of barley. He could not restore her to her place of honor and affection in his household, but he could at least offer such shelter and seclusion as would protect her from public shame. And thus the pardoning grace which he had proclaimed as God's free gift to Israel was divinely illustrated in the life of this suffering man, who paid the last debt that love could demand, and hoped against hope that the future might bring him again some remnant of the happiness he had lost.

One cannot read these chapters without a sense of that sublime devotion which Hosea of Samaria must have felt to the woman he had once loved and who had so greviously wounded him. And one naturally recalls the words of King Arthur to his unhappy Queen, on the night when he took his last farewell at the little convent of Almsbury, before he set his face to fight his last great battle by the western sea.

5. THE RETROSPECT.

Upon the first reading of this passage which is set for our present study, the reader will be puzzled to understand how the biblical facts justify the picture presented above. Does not the prophet say that the Lord sent him deliberately to marry a woman of blemished life, and to rear children in that unhappy and unholy estate? How then can we suppose that his experience is capable of a normal and commonplace interpretation such as has been attempted here?

The answer is not easy, and yet the principles to which Bible study must evermore lead us may do something to point the way. The Father never leads his children into sin not even to accomplish the holiest ends. The doctrine that the end justifies the means is believable only in the ranks of Jesuitism. It is not difficult to see that Hosea's explanation of his call to the prophetic office was given long years after he had begun his mighty task. It was his apology or vindication to the people of his boldness in denouncing their sins. By that time he had come to feel that whatever had been the agony of his domestic experience, it had somehow helped him to frame aright his message to the nation. As a Hebrew, unaware of any doctrine of second causes, he would naturally conceive his whole experience as directly ordained of God.

In the light of our knowledge of all prophetic activity, in which so often the unhappy experiences of the men of God worked out for them an appeal to the life of Israel which could not otherwise have been so effective, and in the light of Jesus' interpretation of the Father's character, we are compelled to conclude that the misfortunes of Hosea's life were no part of the purpose of God, but that as always the divine Father was "within the shadow keeping watch above his own," and that out of the disaster he enabled the Man of Samaria to rise to the responsibilities of prophethood and to form for himself a message of such urgency and authority that it touched the heart of Israel and made itself an age-long appeal to the world.

FOLLOWING STUDIES.

The next section will deal with "Hosea's Message to Israel." Following that will come "Isaiah of Jerusalem," and "The Statesmanship of Isaiah."

TOPICS FOR SPECIAL STUDY, REPORTS AND PAPERS.

1. The effect of the popular religion of Israel upon the morals of the nation.
2. A character study of the man Hosea.
3. The references to Judah in the book of Hosea.
4. The psychological significance of Hosea's explanation of his experience.
5. The value of suffering as a preparation for religious service.
6. Other suffering prophets and reformers in religious history.

LITERATURE.

Addis, "Hebrew Religion"; Cornill, "The Prophets of Israel," pp. 47-55; Kirkpatrick, "The Doctrine of the Prophets," pp. 109-142; George Adam Smith, "Book of the Twelve Prophets," I. pp. 211-354; W. R. Harper, "Amos and Hosea," cxl-clvii (International Critical Commentary); Willett, "The Prophets of Israel," ch. vi.; Articles on "Hosea" in the encyclopedias and Bible dictionaries.

Some Common Errors

The fourteen mistakes of life, as Judge Rentoul recently told the Batholomew Club of London, are:

To expect to set up our own standard of right and wrong and expect everybody to conform to it.

To try to measure the enjoyment of others by our own.

To expect uniformity of opinion in this world.

To look for judgment and experience in youth.

To endeavor to mold the dispositions of everybody alike.

Not to yield in unimportant trifles.

To look for perfections in our own actions.

To worry ourselves and others about what cannot be remedied.

Not to alleviate if we can all that needs alleviation.

Not to make allowances for the weaknesses of others.

To consider anything impossible simply because we ourselves happen to be unable to perform it.

To believe only what our finite minds can grasp.

To live as if the moment, the time, the day were so important that it would live forever.

To estimate people by some outside quality, for it is that within which makes the man. —The Continent.

Panama Canal Figures

The excavation in the central division of the Panama canal, including the great Culebra cut and the Chagres section during February was the greatest on record, being 1,409,338 cubic yards. Altogether 71,033,522 yards have been excavated in that division, leaving 26,091,495 yards to be removed. In the Atlantic division the total excavation was 574,199 yards and in the Pacific division 509,217 yards. Taking the canal as a whole up to March 1, there had been taken out 131,829,436 yards, leaving to be excavated 50,708,330 yards. The canal at the Pacific entrance is completed from deep water to a point opposite the Panama railroad wharf at Balboa, a distance of about five miles. Inland from this point the open water channel extends three miles, varying from 30 to 45 feet in depth, and certain sections have been excavated to its final width of 500 feet. In the Atlantic entrance to the canal the channel is completed to its full width of 500 feet. There remains to be taken out of this section 30,600,000 yards of earth, and 3,800,000 yards of rock, so the earth excavation is 66 per cent and the rock 59 per cent completed.

THE MORE EFFECTIVE PRAYER—The Parson: "I intend to pray that you may forgive Casey for throwing that brick at you." The Patient: "Mebbe yer riv'erence 'ud be saving toime if ye'd just wait till Oi git well, and then pray for Casey."—The Continent.

Illinois Department

State Office, 24 Illinois National Bank Bldg., Springfield

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY is a national religious paper published by the Disciples of Christ in the interests of Christian unity and the Kingdom of God. While its circulation is nation-wide and impartially distributed among all the states, it recognizes a special obligation to the State of Illinois in which it is published. It desires particularly to serve the cause of Christ in Illinois by publishing its significant church news, by interpreting its religious life and by promoting the ideals of the Disciples within its borders. To this end the publishers of THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY maintain a state office at Springfield, the capital and central city. It is the purpose of the state editor to study the whole field of Illinois, visiting all the churches, reporting his observations and pointing the churches to ever higher ideals. Pastors and church workers are requested to co-operate by regularly sending items of news, clippings from local papers, parish papers, weekly leaflets, occasional paragraphs of sermons and any other information that will give to the state editor all the data for reporting and interpreting the progress of Christian work in the state. All communications to the editor may be addressed, 24 Illinois National Bank Building, Springfield. All business communications should be addressed to the Chicago office.

J. E. Stout is in a revival at Keyesport with splendid prospects.

E. S. Thompson, of Flora, held a meeting for the congregation at Louisville, with ten additions.

The meetings at Cowden, conducted by J. E. Story, ended with a total of thirty-one additions.

C. M. Wales of the Bible College of Canton, Mo., devotes half time to the pastorate at Denver.

Kansas church has welcomed its new pastor, LeRoy F. Carter, who began his ministry there the last Sunday in March.

Walton A. Roberts and his congregation at Sumner are in an evangelistic campaign, led by Lew D. Hill of Decatur.

The church at Frederick was recently assisted in a meeting by J. H. G. Brinkerhoff, whose ministry was an inspiration to the people.

Z. M. Brubeck has become pastor at Lawndale, where the prospects are encouraging. On a recent Sunday there were eleven confessions.

J. F. Rosborough, it is understood, has resigned the pastorate at Centralia, where an excellent work has been accomplished in a pastorate through several years.

Dalton City has called Lew D. Hill of Decatur as half-time pastor. Mr. Hill can be secured for the other half time by some church in Central Illinois.

The church at Carterville is without a minister since the resignation of J. E. Pritchett. The services of Mr. Pritchett may be obtained by some other church.

At Jackson Boulevard, Chicago, where Austin Hunter is the pastor, a Chinese Sunday-school with an attendance of twenty is conducted each Sunday.

The meeting at Granite City, conducted by Charles E. Booth of St. Louis, has resulted in fifteen additions. The pastor is O. W. Jennings.

W. G. McColley, who recently resigned at Normal, will be in the evangelistic field for a time and is ready to accept calls for meetings.

Bridgeport church is having frequent additions under the ministry of J. W. Scaroeder. A new $10,000 church is about to be erected at this place.

Watseka meetings, held by Coombs, McKinney and Halstead, assisting the pastor, Ellmore Sinclair, was concluded after about two weeks' time, with forty-five additions resulting.

The missionary offering at Latham for the foreign fields was $40.00. C. S. Weaver is the pastor. Twenty-one recently took the examination for the teacher's training class and several others are to do so later.

Ernest H. Reed is concluding three years of labor at Washington. He has resigned and will be ready for work elsewhere in a few weeks. Some desirable church should call Mr. Reed to its pastorate.

District Secretary, D. R. Bebout of the seventh district, will preach for the church at Beecher City and Mason three-fourths of the time and the extra Sunday of the month will be spent in the field in connection with his district secretaryship.

Chapin church wisely adopted the plan of asking for a contribution from every member for Foreign Missions. As a result, there was a large increase of contributors and the offering amounted to $47.50. The minister is A. E. Underwood.

W. H. Harding has resigned at Maroa, to take effect the first of May. Mr. Harding has done a fine work in Maroa, where only recently a $24,000 church was dedicated, and he has been similarly successful in other pastorates in Illinois.

The church at Erie is without a pastor. As a result of a union meeting here, probably thirty or more persons will unite with the Disciples church, and Paul M. Mundy is temporarily assisting the congregation to follow up the union services.

Central church, Kankakee, made the largest offering to foreign missions ever given by this church. The amount was $54.00. C. G. Kindred, of Englewood church, Chicago, is to address the Men's Bible Class banquet in Kankakee the latter part of April.

Secretary J. Fred Jones' meeting at Beardstown is resulting in some valuable pioneer work. The congregation at this place is new and the character of work which Mr. Jones is doing is certain to eventuate in results far into the future. There have been four additions.

B. O. Aylesworth, former president of Drake University and later of the State Agricultural College in Colorado, delivered an address at Pontiac church on Equal Suffrage. Dr. Aylesworth has for a number of months been giving all of his time to the cause of woman's suffrage, and is in demand in various parts of the country.

At Arrowsmith, where J. C. Reynolds is minister, the congregation is in a prosperous condition. An effort is being made to attract the young men and boys to the church. For this purpose a fine room has been fixed up in the basement of the building for gymnasium, games and other attractions. The Sunday-school is alive and efficient.

James Small, evangelist of the Independence Boulevard Church, Kansas City, came into Illinois to conduct a funeral service at Springfield and while there preached at First Church for F. W. Burnham. The daily paper's report of the service describes Mr. Small as "rector" of "Christ Church." Are many of our evangelists taking orders, Brother Small?

Lewistown church made an offering almost twice as large for foreign missions as in previous years. B. H. Cleaver, the pastor, is using the duplex envelope, during the months of April and May, to secure a worthy offering for home missions. The Living Link enterprise, promoted on behalf of the churches of the county in which Lewistown is situated, is assured.

Paris church, where W. W. Sniff is minister, has recently closed a splendid meeting which resulted in seventy-five additions. J. F. Harbison of Ohio was musical director. Of the additions, forty-seven were by baptism. This meeting was the third conducted by Mr. Sniff in about two years, the other two meetings resulting in one hundred twenty-three and one hundred additions each.

Springfield was made state headquarters of the C. W. B. M. several months ago. Most of the board meetings are accordingly held in that city. April 4, the quarterly meeting was held at which Miss Lura V. Thompson was appointed the delegate to the National Convention at Portland, with Mrs. Carrie F. Zeller, alternate. Steps were taken to provide secretaries for the districts temporarily without such officers.

W. F. Turner, pastor of Central church, Peoria, is preaching a series of practical sermons on "Model Young Woman," "Model Young Man," "Model Wife," "Model Husband," "Model Home." The sermons are being listened to by the largest congregations had at Central church for a number of years. The church is prospering under the ministry of Mr. Turner. There have been forty additions since the first of the year.

C. R. Mitchell is pastor of the church at Cooksville while doing college work in Eureka. The church exceeded its apportionment in the foreign mission offering, receiving about $60.00. Under Mr. Mitchell's leadership, this congregation is cultivating fraternal relations with other religious bodies. The congregation recently dismissed its Sunday evening service and went in a body to hear the pastor of the Presbyterian church. On the following Sunday night they went similarly to hear the Methodist minister, and at both churches received a very cordial welcome. The Presbyterian people have returned the compliment since that time, their congregation coming to the Christian church and enjoying the fellowship of that body. The congregations are planning for a union meeting to be held in August and there is considerable expectation for results from the same. The Disciples are enthusiastic in their commendation of the plan which they have adopted for creating more cordial relations with their brethren of other churches and suggest this method as a desirable one for churches in other towns where there is an excessive number of curches.

The congregation at Gurnee is one of the historic churches of northern Illinois. In a county where three other congregations of Disciples have had to yield to bad religious conditions the Gurnee church has maintained its work for fifty-one years. It has had some able and honored pastors. In early days L. H. Dowling, John Aylesworth, Landis Correll and T. W. Grafton preached here. In the last quarter of a century among men who labored here are E. E. Hartley, Dr. Butchart, W. W. Frost, John S. Kenyon, Bruce McCulley, John R. Ewers, A. W. Fortune, J. H. McCareney, J. S. Zeran and J. D. Williams.

The congregation recently completed improvements on its church house. These included painting, rich interior decoration, hard wood floor, art windows, furnace, lighting plant, pews, platform furniture, and organ. All necessary money was placed in the bank before the improvements were begun. The church owns a parsonage. It has a live Sunday-school, Christian Endeavor Society and Young People's Club. It now has a better prospect than ever of meeting the needs made by the fact that it is the only Protestant church in the township. Royal L. Hanley is pastor.

Committees from the Methodist, Presbyterian, Baptists and Christian churches met in the parlors of the First Christian church, Saginaw, Mich., recently, to arrange for a union evangelistic campaign in the city, to begin not later than June 20. It was decided to ask the churches to appoint one or more delegates to meet with the committee Monday evening at the First Baptist church to make the final arrangements. Albert R Adams, of the First Christian church, made an earnest plea for co-operation on the part of the churches, urging those present to "forget their denominationalism" and work together for the betterment of the city.

J. S. Hawkins, for two years past pastor at Cadiz, Ky., has resigned to accept a call to Murray, Ky. He will begin work at the latter place May 1.

News Editorials

A New Assessment of a Revival Meeting.

J. Scott Hyde, pastor of Second Church, Danville, estimates a revival meeting more deeply than is commonly done, if newspaper reports are a criterion. Charles H. Bloom of New York, has concluded a meeting in this church. In reporting it, the pastor states there were thousands of additions, of love, hope and gratitude to the life of the members. Evidently, while there were a number of additions of the sort usually reported, Mr. Hyde does not think these of any more importance than the spiritual increase resulting in the meeting to those already members of the congregation. He does not state the number of new members received. It may be suspected that sometimes we are not aware of the virtue of training our army, we become so passionately interested in the enlistment of recruits. If we are to judge by the work which Jesus did, and Paul, as shown by his missionary tours and the oversight of the churches evidenced in his Epistles, recruiting is not to be emphasized above training. Many a church is failing, not because it lacks additions, but because there is not intelligent Christian service. Many a pastor seems not to have entered full way into the great opportunity his congregation manifests for discipline and culture. "Feed My Sheep" needs a re-emphasis. A church may be easily as great for what it is as for what it numbers. The temptation is always very great, for preacher and layman, to lose the passion for spiritual life and be content with mere institutional values.

Ministerial Institute Single Session.

Central Illinois ministers will bear in mind the single session of the Central Illinois Ministerial Institute, held on Tuesday afternoon, April 18, just prior to the opening of the Disciples' Congress. The place is the same as that for the Congress, viz.: West Side Church, Springfield. The committee has prepared an excellent program for this session, as follows:

2:00 p. m.—Devotional Study, Milo Atkinson, Bloomington, Ill.

2:30 p. m.—The Problem of the Spiritually Unemployed, W. W. Sniff, Paris, Ill.

3:00 p. m.—Discussion, Led by S. S. Jones, Danville.

3:30 p. m.—Future of the Ministerial Institute, W. H. Cannon, Pittsfield.

4:00 p. m.—Discussion, Led by L. O. Lehman, Gibson City.

E. M. Smith, Decatur, is president, and S. H. Zendt, of Bloomington, secretary.

State Secretary's Letter

The field secretary is asked to dedicate the Mt. Zion church, April 9th.

L. B. Appleton has taken the work at Christopher full time. He reports two recent additions and house well filled at all services.

C. S. Evans, of Kansas, Ill., is open for engagement with churches within reach of his home, either half or full time.

F. A. Sword's meeting at Augusta had reached 79 additions by the 29th, nearly all baptisms and a large per cent men. E. T. Cornelius, the pastor, sends to our office for 100 baptismal certificates. Sword will be in Freeport for a short meeting in April and at Donovan in May.

Polo will want a minister May 1st. Geo. Woodman, who has resigned there, is very highly spoken of and the church give him up with reluctance. Concerning the work at Polo address Daniel Wolf.

A. O. Pasley, of Sweetwater, has located at London Mills, giving half time there and half to Hermon. The work starts in good shape.

We are pleased to note that Geo. W. Schroeder, of Bridgeport, at the earnest solicitation of the church, has consented to remain with them another year. This seems the logical thing to do since the church is planning to erect a new house and will need Mr. Schroeder's wise leadership, although it will be a sacrifice to him.

J. D. Dabney, Pike county's missionary at Griggsville, writes very hopefully of the work there. Fourteen have been added since January 1, more than to all the other churches combined. The church now has forty active members, only seven of whom are men. The plan is to make it self-sustaining in three years, and sooner if possible.

J. Newton Cloe, of Greensburg, Kans., formerly of Illinois, can be secured for a pastorate in this state. He is alright and we would be glad to welcome him back. Some wide-awake congregation would do well to give him a call.

C. Wesley Johnson, formerly at North Crystal Lake, has located at Lynnville full time.

Paul M. Mundy has accepted a unanimous call to the work at Erie and has already begun.

W. H. Kern, who took the work at Cisne, may be compelled to seek another location, for he says there is not a house nor even a room that he can rent in the town. Possibly the church may arrange to build or buy a parsonage. Every church should do this as soon as possible.

C. H. Hands will close his work at Flanagan, May 1st, and will be open for another location. Write him and make a date for a visit. He is an able preacher.

Francis H. DeVol, of Holden, Mo., has taken the work at the First Church, Cairo, and begins his labors with bright hopes of accomplishing much good. The members are taking hold with a will and things are looking brighter. They will finish their new house soon, which will add materially to their power in the city.

J. R. Golden's meeting at Pittsfield with pastor W. H. Cannon, had resulted in thirty-one added up to March 31.

F. A. Sword's meeting at Augusta with E. T. Cornelius has passed the hundred mark at last report.

Our preachers of McLean county had a meeting this week and organized an association for mutual fellowship and helpfulness with officers as follows: President, S. H Zendt, Bloomington; Vice-president, John P. Givens, Lexington; Secretary-Treasurer, C. C. Wisher, Saybrook. They anticipate some very pleasant meetings, perhaps once a quarter.

The district conventions are to be held as follows; in the order of their dates:

District.	Time.	Place.
Third.	May 2-4.	Macomb.
Fifth.	May 31-June 2.	Litchfield.
Fourth.	June 6-8.	Minonk.
First.	June 14-16.	Lanark.
Sixth.	June 20-22.	Champaign
Seventh.	June 21-23.	Sandoval.
Eighth.	June 27-29.	.....

At this writing we have not learned the place of the eighth district convention.

Every delinquent church should make a special effort to take its state and district offering soon as possible, so it can be reported at the district convention. Many of the district secretaries have adopted the plan of publishing a complete list of contributing churches on the last page of the district programs. You will take pleasure and pardonable pride in seeing your church thus reported.

We have had one bright Sunday out of twelve in central Illinois. So many rainy and stormy Sundays in succession has retarded the work in the village and country churches very seriously. But keep cheerful and push your work all the more vigorously. Reach your rural members often by mail with letters and tracts and literature and keep closely in touch with those who have not been able to get to the services very often. It helps to hold your work together, and when the bright days come the interest will be quickly manifest in large audiences. The people like to know that the pastor has not forgotten them in their absence from church. And when they do come to church through the mud and rain don't scold those who are absent, but brag on those who are present.

J. Fred Jones, Field Secretary.
W. D. Deweese, Office Sec'y-Treas.
Bloomington, Illinois.

Illinois Jubilee Rallies

To help in these rallies it was planned to have a returned missionary but illness in families of those upon whom we depended, made it impossible to carry out our plans. Disappointments will come, so we went right on and have held nine very successful rallies. National, state, district and local workers helping in every way possible.

Mrs. Atwater kindly came to Lawrenceville and Danville and Mrs. Ferris to Decatur and Mrs. Lindsay to Decatur and Bloomington and Mrs. Zeller to Jacksonville and Galesburg and Miss Guthrie assisted in Centralia, Fairfield and Lawrenceville.

The attendance at Bloomington was the largest and Decatur came next.

The weather greatly interfered at Jacksonville and Danville. The interest was excellent throughout and the letters coming to the state secretary since, show a marked increase in the interest taken in all departments because of the rallies. To many of the rallies came women of other churches and reports from all directions show a decided awakening along the line of the uniting of forces. The Missionary Social Union idea is making wonderful progress. Macomb reports a new union and Monmouth and Champaign will organize soon.

Since the Bloomington Rally the Second Church has decided to become a Living Link under the C. W. B. M. This makes four Living Links under this board. Champaign supports Mrs. Burner in South America, Paris, Dr. Martha Smith, in India, and Bloomington First Church, Miss Lacock, in Porto Rico.

Several interdenominational rallies have been arranged by the missionary societies of other fellowships and our women invited to participate. The state secretary was invited to deliver an address on the Jubilee Movement at the thirty-seventh annual meeting of the Woman's Missionary society of the Rushville Presbytery, which met in Hamilton, March 28-29. A splendid attendance and much enthusiasm.

LURA V. THOMPSON, State Sec'y.

Village and Country Church Conference

A village and country church conference of Christian church workers will be held at Stanford, April 24 and 25. Stanford is on the C. & A. railroad about 12 miles west of Bloomington. The program is here presented:

Monday, April 24.

2 p. m. The unchurched communities lying near our fields of service and what we owe them. Rochester Irwin, Long Point, Illinois.

2:15 p. m. Open discussion.

3:30 p. m. Organizing the village and country church forces for active service in community building. Lee Tinsley, Franklin, Indiana.

3:45 p. m. Open discussion.

8:00 p. m. Robert E. Henry, Niantic, Illinois, chairman. Address: The village and country churches as I see them. J. Fred Jones, Bloomington, State Secretary.

Tuesday, April 25.

8:00 a. m. Women's work in the advance movement of the village and country church. Mrs. A. I. Zeller, Cuba, Ill., president of Illinois C. W. B. M.

8:15 a. m. Open discussion.

9:00 a. m. Definite work for village and country churches. S. S. Lappin, Cincinnati, Ohio, editor Christian Standard.

9:15 a. m. Open discussion.

10:00 a. m. Watchman, what of the night. R. B. Doan, Armington, Ill.

This conference is for all workers in village and country churches. There is need for a change in method of their work and we come to this meeting to hear from those who have not only given much time to the study of the subject but have actually worked out some plans that have succeeded. This meeting is not seeking the village and country church to secure their help for other fields but to help themselves to grow apace with the times. A sleeping place will be furnished free but meals will be furnished at popular prices. Send your name at once to N. H. Robertson, Stanford, Ill., for reservation. Any inquiries about the meeting should be sent to J. W. Street, Mackinaw, Ill. We urge each church to send a small contribution to W. D. Dewees, Bloomington, Ill., to defray the necessary advertising expenses of this meeting.

Eureka College

Two Important Agencies.

Every college has plans of work that are more or less helpful. A plan that will work for one college and in one community may be of no value in another. In Illinois we have found two agencies of great value to us, and as we near commencement this year, and therefore the completion of our $125,000 proposition, we are very anxious to present to our constituency the things upon which we shall permanently rely for help. It should be thoroughly understood by all the friends of Eureka College that the completion of this Endowment Campaign will in no wise settle our educational problem. It will not excuse us from giving large or small amounts to the college. We propose to develop as rapidly as we can these two agencies:

First: The Illinois Christian Educational Association. This association came into being about a dozen years ago. It has raised thousands of dollars, and is in better condition for work today than ever. The past year, in spite of the emphasis put upon the Endowment Campaign, has been the best in the history of the I. C. E. A. Membership fees are $1.00 a year; a life membership costs $25; $100 constitutes an individual or a church a Living Link. It is encouraging, that during the past year a large number of people have become life members of the association, and some seven or eight of our churches in Illinois have entered the Living Link list. Miss Luceba E. Miner has been Field Secretary for a year, and has done extraordinary service. She is an attractive speaker, popular with the people wherever she goes, and does the college great good. We propose to prosecute this work with added vigor, and have every reason to believe that in a short time we can have at least 5,000 people actively affiliated with us in the work of our Educational Association. Mrs. Ella S. Stewart, of Chicago, who is so well known in the Equal Suffrage movement, is president of the association, and gives quite a bit of time to the work.

Second: Education Day. This day is coming to be regarded by many of our churches as a part of the missionary program of the church. More than 100 churches in Illinois have already observed the day this year, and others will yet send in offerings. In view of the fact that this is a comparatively new thing among our people, we are more than pleased with the success of the movement. We have adopted the plan of spending as much time and money in the observance of Education Day in Illinois as any missionary society among us for its particular cause. It will take time, but we have every reason to believe that the number of churches will increase in this fellowship.

With the completion of the Endowment Campaign, and the settling back into the regular channels of work for the college, these two things will be pushed more vigorously than ever. It is understood by the constituency of the college everywhere that the Campaign Committee has only been a temporary expediency to do some things, that could be done better by an independent committee than through the regular channels of the Educational Association. But it is encouraging as we near the end of the work, to realize that the Endowment Campaign, instead of injuring the regular work of the association, has only helped it.

H. H PETERS.

Chicago

By Vaughan Dabney.

E. S. Ames of Hyde Park, preached for the Evanston Church Sunday evening, March 26. His subject was "Baptism and Christian Union."

C. B. Stevens of Marion, Ohio, who is now engaged in evangelistic work, spoke Sunday, April 2, in his old home church at Monroe street.

C. C. Morrison, of the Christian Century, spent Sunday, April 2, in Austin, preaching for the Austin church. Mr. Morrison reports interest on the part of the congregation which is planning to extend a call to the man of their choice.

April 23 is the date finally selected to be observed as Laymen's Missionary Movement Sunday. This is observed in connection with the Laymen's Missionary Movement, missionary conferences to be held in Chicago April 20-25. The general theme for discussion on the 23rd, will be "Stewardship of Means and Service in Our Personal Relation to the Missionary and Benevolent Activities of the Churches."

Despite the inclement weather, the audience at Hyde Park on April 2, was the largest in the history of the church. An aim of 200 became a realization of nearly 300, and the seating capacity of the building was taxed to its fullest. It is proposed to strive for an audience of 200 for the next five Sundays, and from every indication the desire will be realized. Dr. E. S. Ames feels that such large congregations will indicate a healthy interest on the part of the community and a vision of large things on the part of the church. With such support Dr. Ames will have no hesitancy in soliciting funds for a building, which would be a credit not only to the local church, but a source of pride to the whole community.

G. W. Muckley, of the Church Extension Society, spent Sunday and Monday of last week in Chicago. Mr. Muckley came on invitation from the Chicago Christian Business Men's Association, to study the situation at Douglas Park. On Sunday morning, April 2, he gave one of his characteristic inspiring addresses to the Douglas Park people: Despite the snow storm nearly every member of the church was present. On Monday afternoon at the ministers' meeting, in an informal way, Mr. Muckley explained the methods of work of our Church Extension Board. After listening to the secretary, one is not surprised that out of two millions loaned only $1,013 has been lost by failure to repay loans. On the evening of April 3, the Business Men's Association met for dinner at the Boston Oyster House, where the Douglas Park work was discussed with Mr. Muckley.

The Federated Churches of Christ in Chicago, through the Church Federation Council, have united with the Young Men's Christian Association in inviting all Chicago to participate in the four noonday services for Holy Week, April 10-14.

These services will be held in the association auditorium, 19 South LaSalle street, beginning promptly at 12:15 and closing at 12:45. A special service is arranged for Good Friday, from 12:00 to 1:00 o'clock. The list of subjects, the speakers who will discuss them, and the time for their discussion, is as follows:

Monday—"Jesus and the Traders in the Temple," Herbert L. Willett, D. D. The Memorial Church of Christ.

Tuesday—"The Greeks at the Feast," Austin K. de Blois, D. D. The First Baptist Church.

Wednesday—"To Cæsar the Things that are Cæsars," Chas. Bayard Mitchell, D. D. St James M. E. Church.

Thursday—"With Jesus in the Upper Room," John Balcom Shaw, D. D. Second Presbyterian Church.

Friday (beginning at noon hour)—"Watching Beside the Cross," Pres. Ozora S. Davis. Chicago Theological Seminary.

CHICAGO HEIGHTS DEDICATION.

After a distressingly discouraging struggle, of over seven years, the church at Chicago Heights has come into it own, with an enthusiastic and united membership housed in the best church home in the city.

The crowning day was dedication day, April 2. Because of its fruitful fellowship, the interest manifest by local workers and Chicago Disciples, and the liberal gifts of members and friends of this day, filled to overflowing the cup of church happiness.

Chicago Heights is a child of the Englewood church. About seven years ago C. G. Kindred, pastor of Englewood church, and "Father Larrabee" then city missionary, visited the Heights and organized a church, subsequently financed by the American Society and Englewood. Later a lot was purchased in the center of the city, and a temporary structure erected. In this tabernacle the people met until last July. when it was decided to build. Under the leadership of E. D. Salkeld, who came at this time for just such a purpose, and financed by the Englewood church, this aim was realized and the present building is the result.

Rev. E. D. Salkeld, Pastor at Chicago Heights.

The Special Train.

A special train carried about one hundred interested Chicago Disciples to the afternoon services. While en route regular Sunday-school services were conducted, offering taken and membership noted. It was a very stormy day. Dinner was served the visitors by the Aid Society of the church.

Immediately after lunch the people gathered in the auditorium for the afternoon services. The special features which gave tone and depth to the service was the communion, conducted by C. G. Kindred and Elder W. N. Hixon. Besides Evangelist Geo. L. Snively's address, greetings were brought by the pastors of Chicago Height's churches. They extended to pastor Salkeld and people sincere congratulations and emphasized the continuance of the same spirit of unity and co-operation that marked their previous fellowship.

Tribute to "Father" Larabee.

After greetings from the Chicago Disciple preachers present, C. G. Kindred proposed a tribute to the memory of Father Larrabee and wife, whose untiring efforts in the beginning of the work, had made possible the achievements of the present E. M. Bowman and Carl Bushnell, of Chicago, offered to place a memorial window in the auditorium, but Pastor Salkeld announced that the Chicago Heights church desired to pay this tribute themselves.

On the whole, the day was fruitful in every way, exceeding the fond hope of the most optimistic. Pledges were taken to the amount of $12,110. There were five $1,000 pledges. These were made by W. W. Smith, W. N. Hixon, J. C. Coale, the Ladies' Aid, the Sunday-school, and the Englewood church, which latter gave $1,180. There were twenty-one additions to the membership during the day.

Too much cannot be said of the work of Dedicator Snively and Pastor Salkeld. E. D. Salkeld is an efficient leader. He has worked with persistence and pluck. Only by his untiring zeal and patience has the victory been won: so said his members and the pastors of the city. The membership is now 100, with a Sunday-school of 250 enrollment.

Description of Building.

The building, erected on rear of lot, is of bronze mission brick. A basement with fifteen foot ceiling provides for kitchen, Sunday-school rooms, and athletic equipment. The main auditorium is furnished in mission. The pulpit set of fumed oak is a gift from Pastor Salkeld. The communion table and chairs were donated by the manual training class of the high school. The building itself is valued at $22,000; the lot at $800.

The building was formerly dedicated at the evening worship. After a sermon on "The Home of the Soul" by Mr. Snively, Mr. Salkeld, pastor and chairman of the building committee, presented the key to the chairman of the Board of Trustees, John C. Coale. After this the dedication vows were read by pastor and people.

With such equipment, leadership and interest the Disciples at Chicago Heights should lead in the religious activities of the city. Centrally located, they should be the center of the city's religious life. Such a building rightly used, such leadership devoted to the cause, and such interest centering in things spiritual, cannot but produce the results besought in the service of dedication. "To Thee let our labors and business be dedicated, that their fruit may tend to the glory of Thy great name and to the advancement of Thy Kingdom."

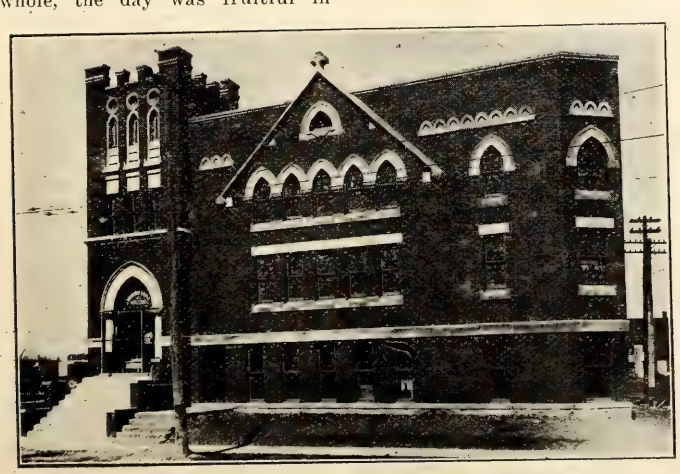
Pins and Needles

Pins and needles had a party,
But they quarreled so
That they all went home a-crying
'Fore 'twas time to go.

"What a creature!" groaned the needle,
"Hasn't any eye!"
"What's a dozen eyes worth, stupid?
Heads come twice as high!"

When they met, pins tossed their heads up,
Needles shut their eyes.
'Tis in little bits of quarrels
That the danger lies.

St. Nicholas.



A View of the New Church.

Church Life

—Did you heed the request of the American Society for a ministerial exchange on April 23 in behalf of American missions?

—The writer of the item "An Efficiency Dinner" on page 22 of last week's issue is awarded the prize for best news item. He will please accept this statement as due notification and indicate at once by postal-card which of the following books he prefers:

1. New Testament Theology, by Henry C. Sheldon, Macmillan $1.50 net.
2. The Truth of Christianity, by W. H. Turton, Putman $1.25 net.
3. Christian Unity in Effort, by Frank J. Firth, Lippincott $1.50 net.
4. Souls in Action, by Harold Begbie, Hodder and Stoughton $1.25 net.

* * *

A. B. Reeves, of Paris, Tenn., has accepted the pastorate at Ashland, Ky.

S. W. Elam, pastor at Clinton, Mo., has accepted the pastorate at Osceola.

The church at Milton, Ind., will undergo extensive improvements in the near future.

Claude B. Frampton has accepted the work at Durand, Mich., going there April 1.

Thomas Martin has concluded a successful meeting at Aransas Pass, Tex.

Lowell C. McPherson is in a meeting at Central Church, Kansas City, Kan.

Granville Snell, evangelist for Northwest Missouri, will supply the church at Euston until a pastor is called.

J. C. Creel of Plattsburg, Mo., accepts the work at Amazonia for one Sunday of each month.

The Sunday-school of South Joplin (Mo.) Church had an enrollment of 358 on Apr. 2. John R. Blunt is pastor of this congregation.

As a result of an evangelistic meeting held by L. W. Klinker and James Myers, a new church has been organized at Los Angeles, Calif.

C. E. Taylor began his pastorate at Geneva, Ohio, on April 2. Mr. Taylor was minister of the church at Wadsworth, Ohio, for four years.

N. C. Buckley, pastor of First Church, Charleston, S. C., for the past three years, entered upon his duties as pastor of Highland Park Church, Chattanooga, Tenn, Apr. 2.

J. T. Adams is in a meeting with R. A. Thibos, pastor at Fremont, Mich. At last reports, thirty had been added, with audiences increasing.

Percy G. Cross, pastor of Third Street Church, Little Rock, Ark., reports that all former records were surpassed in this year's offering for foreign missions.

J. C. Harris and J. P. Garmong held a meeting at Panora, Ia., during March. There were a number of additions and the church received a great spiritual uplift, much needed in this field.

At the close of his recent meeting in Bedford, Ohio, W. J. Lhamon received an invitation from the Baptist church in Bedford to continue the meeting in their church. The invitation was gladly accepted both by Mr. Lhamon and the Disciples church, and during the week the utmost harmony and good-fellowship prevailed. At a joint meeting of the officers of the two churches a resolution was adopted looking toward further steps in the way of the union of the two bodies. The leading people in both congregations are desirous of such final action.

W. T. Ratcliffe, for the past year pastor at Plattsmouth, Neb., has tendered his resignation there.

Chas. A. Coakwell of Ironton, Ohio, began a meeting April 3 with the church at Grayson, Ky.

W. J. Lockhart dedicated the new church at North English, Iowa, on March 26. Frank W. Sutton is pastor of this congregation.

William E. Sweeney has accepted a call to the Harlem Avenue Church, Baltimore, Md.

Harry E. Tucker, minister at Platte City, Mo., reports six additions at the regular services recently, and growing audiences.

H. G. Connelly, for three years pastor at Ardmore, Okla., has resigned to accept work at Minneapolis, Minn.

J. K. Shellenberger spoke at First Church, Keokuk, Ia., recently in the interest of the brotherhood movement.

Joseph A. Serena, president of Keuka College, addressed the congregation of Sterling Place Church, Brooklyn, N. Y., March 26.

A new church erected at a cost of $10,000 was dedicated at Altoona, Ia., April 3. L. G. Parker is pastor of this congregation.

Charles Darsie, pastor at Urichsville, Ohio, has resigned there and accepted the pastorate at Crawford Road Church, Cleveland, Ohio.

C. M. Yocum, pastor of Central Church, Cincinnati, Ohio, has accepted a call to Rushville, Ind. and will take up the work there May 15.

Special services were held at First church, Birmingham, Ala., on March 19, in celebration of the eighth anniversary of the pastorate of A. R. Moore.

E. C. Wilson has returned to the pastorate at Forest Avenue Church, Knoxville, Tenn., after an absence of four years. Mr. Wilson formerly occupied this pulpit for seven years.

L. C. Oberlies, superintendent of Sunday-school work in Nebraska, spoke on "The Aroused Manhood of the Church" at a meeting of the Men's Brotherhood of North Side Church, Omaha, Neb., on April 2.

W. A. Tate, pastor at Bloomingdale, Mich., reports two additions on April 2, with splendid attendance. A children's service was planned for April 9, with a chorus of children to lead the singing.

The Protestant churches of Louisville, Ky. have united in the most widespread evangelistic campaign the city has ever experienced. First Church is the center of the movement two services being held there daily, one for women and one for men.

Charles Reign Scoville's meeting at Enid, Okla., with Wm. J. Wright is drawing larger audiences than can be accomodated in the theater where the meetings are held. In the first seven days of invitation 319 were added.

The last report from the meeting at Wilson Avenue Church, Columbus, Ohio, held by J. J. Tisdall, indicates an addition of thirty-eight names to the membership of the church. The meetings continue.

In a meeting at South Columbus, Ohio, in which R. F. Strickler is being assisted by the pastors of other Columbus churches, T. L. Lowe and H. Newton Miller, twenty-eight were added to the church up to April 2.

O. P. Spiegel, who has accepted the work at Montgomery, Ala., began there the first Sunday in April. Montgomery is growing substantially in population and business interests and there is abundant room there for a church such as Mr. Spiegel will endeavor to build.

A. J. Sever, who has served the church at Mentor, Ohio, for about eight years, tendered his resignation April 2. Mr. Sever has done a most substantial work for this church and community. The church is now in possession of one of the finest parsonages in the state.

C. R. L. Vawter and C. E. Marty will assist C. M. Smithson in a meeting at Central Church, Streator, Ill. Mr. Vawter is now in his second meeting with the Ancona Church, six miles from Streator.

The Disciples Missionary Union of New York City has authorized the erection of a frame building at Ridgewood Heights, Brooklyn, to care for the growing work there under the leadership of Robert Wittchen. A Sunday-school was started there on Feb. 7, 1909, with 25 members and 175 are now enrolled. It is hoped to dedicate the building on Easter Sunday.

For Best News Item or List of Items

In order to raise the quality of our news contributions and increase their quantity—The Christian Century proposes to give each week until further notice, a book worth from $1 to $2.50 for the best-told news item or list sent in. Copy must reach the office not later than Friday morning, and is to be furnished exclusively to The Christian Century. The points on which the award will be made are: (1) The importance of the subject matter (2) the interpretation of the subject matter, and (3) the interesting style in which it is reported. The length of the article will not count. It may run from 100 to 600 words. The writer will take the editorial point of view unless his name is to appear as the author. The award will be announced in each issue of the paper for the preceding issue. The item will be designated and at least three books given from which choice may be made, but the name of the author will not be published. Illinois reporters will send their news to the Springfield office. All others should be sent to the main office.

Under the leadership of A. E. Dubber, the work at Bedford, Ind., is showing marked improvement. Recently they started to raise $600 for a Living Link and nearly $650 was given. They now expect to increase this amount to $1,000 or $1,200 and keep a man at work in the county.

Charles W. Gardner of Bailey, Mich., assisted W. F. Schrontz, pastor at Pentwater, Mich., in a four weeks' meeting recently. There were twenty-three additions. Nearly all of these being from the Sunday-school. Fifteen were men and young men. Mr. Schrontz reports that the work there is having an encouraging growth.

Cecil J. Sharp, of Hammond, Ind., is in a meeting with Charles M. Fillmore at Hillside Church, Indianapolis, Ind., which began March 26. This congregation had planned a temporary tabernacle to be used during the meeting and it was expected that the Sundayschool would hold its first session there on April 9. An earnest effort had been to have the attendance reach the 300 mark on this day.

A card from Leslie Wolfe, now at Manila, P. I., tells the interesting news of the baptism of Augustino Camerino, who was formerly colonel of the famous Katapunan, which gave origin to the insurrections against Spain and later against the United States. Camerino is now an influential and law abiding citizen, and the influence of his example will probably make itself felt in the community.

Notwithstanding the return of many winter residents, the work at Kissimmee, Fla., is moving forward with good audiences under the leadership of S. J. Vance. Improvements have been made in the building recently and a large baptistry completed, without incurring any indebtedness. To any who contemplate a residence in this part of the country, Mr. Vance says that there remains yet a considerable amount of land which can be obtained free under the homestead law.

Luther Elmer Sellers, pastor of First Church, Philadelphia, Pa., is conducting a series of Passion Week services beginning with Palm Sunday, April 9. The services will be in the nature of meditations and calls to decision. The following are the subjects: "The Royalty of Jesus;" "Judas Iscahiot;" "Spectators of the Cross;" ""The Secret of the Cross;" "The Keys of Death and the Grave." On April 11, I. N. McCash and Carey E. Morgan were present and gave addresses on "Our Cause in America."

E. B. Bagbey, pastor of First Church, Fort Smith, Arkansas, writes that good and bad fortune visited them the first week in April. On April 3 lightning struck the handsome tower of their church, the falling stones demolishing the steps. The interior was not injured, however, and the damage was covered by insurance. During the same week word was received that Andrew Carnegie would contribute one-half the cost of a $3,400 pipe organ. The church has nearly $1,000 raised and the contract for the organ will be let at once.

Floyd A. Bash reports good progress in the work at Sheridan, Wyo. Mr. Bash took up the work there January 1, finding the congregation becoming discouraged and scattered, having had no pastor for several months. This church was organized eight years ago and ranks among the first in influence in the town, especially along the lines of home missionary endeavor. A flourishing mission is also maintained at North Sheridan which it is hoped will become self supporting in a few years. A union evangelistic meeting is being planned for the coming year.

Charles M. Watson, pastor of First Church, Norfolk, Va., has introduced some changes in the regular prayer-meeting topics though carrying out the church history idea. On a recent evening the subject was "Our Debt to Our Pioneers." Carefully prepared papers on the history of the Norfolk church gave for the first time many interesting facts. One of the charter members was present and gave a spirited appeal for continued work and prayer. At a meeting of the Christian Endeavor Society, four papers were read relating to the educational philanthropic, religious and business interests of Norfolk, which it is hoped will mean an awakening of the church to its opportunities for social service. The missionary committee of the society is now engaged in philanthropic work. Mr. Watson began his ministry with this congregation the first of the year, and the work has already taken on a most encouraging aspect.

On April 2, the Tabernacle Sunday-school of North Tonawanda, N. Y., became a "Front Rank School," being the second of the Disciples Sunday-schools of New York state. The graded lessons will be followed in the Primary, Junior and Intermediate departments, twenty commence teacher training study, and the first of the four offerings for Missions was taken. This school operates under the commission form of government in that there are three superintendents or "mayors" who preside from month to month over the school, changing each month, and in addition have certain departments of the school under their care.

San Francisco Letter

The West has been visited by a new preacher—Theodore Roosevelt. The Pacific Theological Seminary (Congregational) has the thanks of the churches for bringing the man here at this particular time. Mr. Roosevelt preached five sermons in the Greek theater in Berkeley, and nine thousand people heard him each time. His sermon on the eighth commandment will hardly pass with the dying echo of his voice in that great, open-air, classic structure in the Berkeley Hills.

There is considerable speculation about the visit of Mr. Roosevelt to the coast at this time. Of course he came to give the Earl lectures. But other reasons are being given —reasons ranging from the rumor of the stork's visit to his son's home in the city on to reasons of international politics. But the church looks upon his coming as most opportune for institutional religion. While all denominations will share in the results, in the far reaching influence, the Congregationalist, in particular, has been benefited. This religious body is awakening to the peculiar needs of a new civilization which is altering its heritage, and is adapting the church to the life, the thought, and the manners of the people. Dr. Aked, who comes to the First Congregational Church in the city, has already had a most salutary effect on other churches of this body, and with the preaching of Theodore Roosevelt, under the auspices of the Congregational seminary, this denomination has made an advance, something which no denomination has made for years.

The people who heard the former president were the bourgeoisie. Neither the rich nor the proletariat took notice of him. Doubtless he was heard by church people for the most part, for each day while waiting for him to appear the vast audience would sing the old hymns and a spirit of devotion seemed to fill the place.

He was rather untimely in one instance, though this did not occur exactly in connection with his seminary addresses. Mayor Hodgehead of Berkeley is having a most difficult time in holding his job, for Stitt Wilson, socialist, is after it. Think of it, and in classical Berkeley, too! Mr. Roosevelt was unfortunate in endorsing the present mayor, for the race was on its merits. The socialists see in this, of course, a scheme on the part of the churches to use this national figure in a local political fight. It is to be regretted, for a great proportion of western preachers are socialists, and are doing all they can to Christianize the movement.

By the way, last week we held a Christian Socialist Fellowship service in the First Christian Church of Alameda. A Baptist, Rev. Mr. Cato; a Presbyterian, Dr. Street of Oakland; and a Disciple, Rev. H. J. Loken of Berkeley, were the speakers. The church was filled. An understanding, much needed, was reached. Local socialists are attending regular church services. Christian union is far less possible in the West after the manner some have conceived of it than is union among the ministers on social subjects and issues. This meeting made this clear to us all, and we are wondering if we really haven't stumbled upon the crux of the matter insofar as we, in the West are concerned. J. R. PERKINS.

Alameda, Cal.

Drake University

Drake University is entering upon the last quarter of its thirtieth year. In every particular this has been the best year in the history of the school. Students and faculty are working in entire harmony, the enrollment is larger than ever before, reaching at one time 1,398, which is almost one hundred larger than at any previous time.

Professor Bruce E. Shepperd, who has been with the school from the beginning and who has been for years head of the Department of Philosophy, will retire in June on a pension. Professor Shepperd's influence upon the student body of the university during the entire history of the institution has been such as to endear him to all who are interested in the welfare of the school. It is expected that large numbers of former students of the university will be present at the annual commencement exercises to pay honor to Professor Shepperd. Dr. Herbert Martin, a graduate of Transylvania University, also of Yale University, a graduate student of the University of Chicago and of Columbia University, at present head of the Department of Logic and Psychology in the New York Training School, will become head of the Department of Philosophy at the opening of the next school year. Dr. Martin comes to the university with a record that insures success from the beginning.

The College of the Bible held a week of special instruction in the form of lectures delivered by Dr. E. D. Starbuck and other prominent men in the field of religious education. These lectures were well attended and enthusiastically received.

In the educational field, the university's work is being felt through the many teachers who are sent into the public schools of Iowa and other states in the middle west. The success of the university in supplying teachers may be indicated by the fact that nearly one hundred graduates of the university are now teaching in the city schools of Des Moines, this being about one-third of the entire number of graduates employed by this school system.

Drake University is the only institution in the brotherhood conducting a summer quarter. Students desiring to take review work for teachers may enter for the teachers' short course continuing six weeks only. Those desiring credit work may enter for either six or ten weeks.

Lebanon, Kansas

The meeting at Lebanon, Kansas, where Percy R. Atkins is minister developed great power, and to our great regret we had to close when the harvest was only apparently reaped. In twenty-seven days of invitation 153 persons responded to the Gospel call, of whom 123 were by confession and baptism. The large number of men and boys brought to Christ by this revival was very gratifying there being seventy-four men among them, some of the most stalwart citizens and wealthiest farmers in the community. The fine new church building which was dedicated last fall proved entirely inadequate to accommodate those who desired to attend the meeting, hundreds being turned away. This was really a county meeting as people came in great numbers from ten to fifteen miles around. Percy R. Atkins, the minister, came to this country from Southampton, England, about eight years ago. He came to Lebanon from Saskatchewan, Canada. He is an indefatigable worker and his faith in the gospel is boundless. Every body here loves him, and in fifteen months he has done wonders for the cause in Lebanon. When he predicted 150 additions in this meeting the people thought him a dreamer, but his dreams were realized because he planned big things and seconded the evangelist in every effort possible. Our church is now on a solid basis and has the confidence of all. No sensational methods were used in the meeting, indeed our brethren here are, if anything, a little ultra-conservative, but they do love the plain old gospel and it won as it always will for "divine love always has met and always will meet every human need."

This revival has been a great joy to all and "the sowers and the reapers rejoice together." J. Ross Miller and his wife, who is a fine violinist did invaluable service in the meeting. R. W. ABBERLEY, A. C. M. S. Evangelist.

Dr. Price's
CREAM
Baking Powder
MAKES HOME BAKING EASY
Young housekeepers find in its use the beginning of success in cookery.
Price Baking Powder Co.
CHICAGO.

Christian College, Columbia, Mo.

Christian College has up to date enrolled 132 boarding students, with a total enrollment of 223. The year is proving to be one of enthusiasm and marked achievement. At the Y. W. C. A. State Conference recently held in Columbia, eighteen delegates were entertained at the college by students giving up their rooms to the guests, who included Mrs. Harriet Christie, one of the Conference speakers from New York, and Miss Anna Brown, Student Volunteer Secretary, also of New York. During the conference a number of the special music contributions were by Christian College talent including the chorus, "List the Cherubic Host," sung the closing night of the conference. Miss Carson of the college faculty was the local chairman of arrangements and President Luella W. St. Clair was toastmistress at the banquet attended by more than four hundred university and college women. Mrs. St. Clair also conducted the conference service on Sunday afternoon for faculty and advisory members. Christian College has a Y. W. C. A. of 125 members being one of the strongest college organizations in the state.

The School of Music continues to grow steadily, the enrollment now being 215. A number of unusually good voices give brilliant promise for the successful production of the opera "Martha" during Commencement Week. Recently the music students have heard two great artists, Yolanda Mero, pianist, and Mischa Elman, violinist.

Mrs. St. Clair was recently a guest of Howard-Payne College in Fayette, Mo., where she was one of the speakers at the dedication of a new building. March 8, Mrs. St. Clair attended the annual meeting of the Union of Presidents and was elected secretary of the union. The following day the Kansas City Alumnae and former students of Christian College gave a beautiful luncheon in honor of Mrs. St. Clair at the Baltimore Hotel. Eighty-four were present at the luncheon and a program of brilliant toasts followed the serving of an elaborate luncheon.

Many representative women were present at this interesting reunion; hearts were stirred with the memory of old college days and many promised to attend the Jubilee Week in May. A strong Kansas City Alumnae Association was formed and a pledge made to hold an annual reunion.

The subject of present absorbing interest for the college and its friends is the Jubilee Week to be held in Columbia, May 23-30, at which time will be celebrated the sixtieth anniversary of the founding of the college. A brilliant week's program has been planned, including the dedication of Dorsey Memorial Hall, the splendid new academic hall just being completed.

The present administration of the college and the board of trustees have sent an official invitation to more than seven hundred living alumnæ, and the strong and active local members of the Alumnae Association are bending every effort to the success of this great occasion. The homes of Columbia alumnae and those of the friends of the college will be filled with Jubilee guests, while the college itself is making extensive plans for the entertainment of many of the "old girls" and a number of distinguished guests. Many acceptances to the Home-coming Week have already been received and the special Jubilee secretary, Miss Mary S. Hill, is kept busy with her official duties.

RUTH MEDLEY, Secretary.

The Call of the West

At a banquet at the Palace Hotel in San Francisco, I heard Marion Lawrance say that the battle whose issue would decide the fate of Christianity in America and perhaps in the world, must be fought on the Pacific coast. Here the tide of the Occident will meet the tide of the Orient. Four months' residence in the metropolis of the Pacific slope convinces me that this is no idle dream, but the vision of a seer. Already the battle is joined and a hand-to-hand conflict is being waged. The hand of Protestantism is so feeble that it is hardly reckoned with as a force. The only institutions calling themselves religious that loom large before the eyes of Orientals, are Judaism and Romanism. The imperative demand that the Orient, coming to our coast, shall be met with a force whose potency is born of purity, is apparent to all who think. As Uncle Sam is rushing his forces to the west to ward off a possible blow from an Oriental power, so Protestantism should rush her forces to this Western coast to ward off a disaster more to be dreaded than all that could be wrought by all the navies of the East. All that will come to the A. C. M. S. through the May offering could be profitably spent in San Francisco alone and still leave our work here utterly inadequate. What are two churches and two or three struggling missions in a city of 400,000 situated as San Francisco is?

W. H. BAGBY.

National Benevolent Association News

A good woman in Illinois has just sent the Association another good annuity. This lady has formed the annuity habit. She has something like a half dozen bonds, and is planning to take others. She is surely laying up treasures in heaven by investing in the Lord's poor.

A dear old preacher, ninety-two years old, was received not many days since into the Home at Jacksonville, Ill. After long years of faithful service he is glad to find a quiet place in which to rest until the Lord has finished the mansion he is preparing for him. What a joy to help save from suffering such worthy veterans of the cross! "Ye did it unto me."

The Homes of the Association are all anxiously awaiting the answer of the churches to the Easter call. Nearly all of them are in debt for the necessities of life. Surely our great brotherhood will answer the cry of the orphan and the appeal of the aged with a generous Easter offering.

A contribution for benevolences is a requisite for a place in the Front Rank among our Bible schools. A good Easter offering will mean not only a place in the Front Rank, but fellowship in one of the sweetest ministries of the church.

The Benevolent Association has but one day in all the year, and that is limited to the Bible schools. Surely justice to the poor in our midst, to ourselves, to the cause we represent, and to the Christ, demands that this ministry of pure and undefiled religion shall have the right-of-way.

The Indiana Convention

The annual convention of the churches of Indiana will be held at Columbus, May 15-17. The convention will begin with a "Brotherhood Banquet" on Monday evening, May 15. E. L. Powell of Louisville will deliver the address of the evening on "Citizenship in the Republic." Dr. Fred Kline and J. K. Shellenberger will also speak. The business session will be held Tuesday morning at 9:45. All the state and national interests will have representation. A Bible study each morning and the convention sermons will be features of the convention worthy of special mention. Lodging and breakfast will be furnished without cost. Write W. H. Book, Columbus, Ind.

L. E. MURRAY, Cor. Secretary.
416 Majestic Bldg., Indianapolis.

Front Rank Schools

The first six months of the fiscal year finds 887 schools definitely lined up in the Front Rank Campaign, 172 of them being five pointers. This is indeed a remarkable showing and no man can say what the next six months will reveal. Kentucky remains at the top of the column, while Illinois is a close second. Kansas and Missouri are in a tie for third place. Some of the other states show creditable work this week, notably California and Florida.

The front rank pennants are to be beauties. The contract for their making has been let this week. Twenty states hold conventions in May or June, and special arrangements are being made for the awarding of the pennants in these states. Two new leaflets are off the press, "Teacher Training" by E. W. Thornton and "The Workers' Conference" by Garry L. Cook. This makes a helpful leaflet now on every one of the six points by such men as Stevenson, Thornton, Frazee, Fisher, Cook and Corey.

The Bible-school offerings for merican Missions show a gain of $415.14 for March over that month last year; a gain of $3.885.09 for the half year over the same period of last year. We are now $972.78 ahead of the total offering of last year, with hundreds of our best schools to respond. Evidently our Bible-schools are making progress.

ROBT. M. HOPKINS.

Foreign Society Notes

Mr. and Mrs. Donald McCallum reached the Philippine Islands on the 6th of February. They are stationed at Vigan, and will be associated with Mr. and Mrs. Hanna in the work at that station. Mrs. McCallum, on being asked by the custom officer how long she expected to stay in the Philippines, answered enthusiastically "Forever."

Bruce L. Kershner has been down with malarial fever. At the last report he was much better.

Dr. W. N Lemmon, of Laoag, P. I., gives the following report for the month: Baptisms 75, visits in the homes 184, hearers 6,981, sermons 258, tracts distributed 2,934, funerals 2, medical treatments 1,569, surgical treatments 122, operations 15, outside towns visited 10, visits in the city 13. This is only a partial report on the evangelistic work as three churches had not sent in their reports. One evangelist is sick and one out of the province on a visit.

Three baptisms are reported from the Philippine Islands, four from Japan and two from Batang on the border of Tibet. These two at Batang are Chinese. They have been very faithful in attending the services. They have manifested much interest in the subject of religion. The step they took was not easy for them as they had to face hatred and persecution.

Dr. A. L. Shelton, of Batang, on the Tibetan border expects to take back with him the equipment for the new hospital to be built there. The beds, medicines and other supplies will have to be carried many hundreds of miles over the high mountains of West China on the backs of Chinese coolies and native yaks. The equipment will cost about $1,000, and the Endeavor societies

DON'T FORGET

CHILDREN'S DAY

For Foreign Missions

FIRST SUNDAY IN JUNE

SUPPLIES FREE

The Foreign Christian Missionary Society will furnish CHILDREN'S DAY SUPPLIES for the first Sunday in June FREE to those Sunday Schools observing the day in the interests of HEATHEN MISSIONS.

FREE SUPPLIES

1. CRUSADERS FOR CHRIST. The beautiful new Children's Day Exercise by P. H. Duncan. Sixteen pages of song, recitation, and drill. A bundle of sunshine. A high class exercise, yet simple enough for the smallest school.

2. LIFE-SAVER MISSIONARY BOXES. Like the picture above. Automatic, self-locking. They will please. Put your school to work with them.

ORDER AT ONCE. Give local name of Sunday School and average attendance. Write

STEPHEN J. COREY, Box 884, Cincinnati, O.

Books

WHEN YOU WANT BOOKS

Send your order to us. We handle the books of all publishers, at the lowest prices. Your order will be promptly attended to.

THE NEW CHRISTIAN CENTURY COMPANY

700 East Fortieth Street - - - - Chicago, Ill.

Bethany Graded Lessons

CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON, Editor

International Interdenominational

Sixteen denominations have united to prepare a non-sectarian body of literature for the new Graded Lessons authorized by the International Committee.

The result is a most practical, fascinating, scientific and artistic series of lesson helps for teachers and pupils.

The Bethany Graded Lessons are now developed to the point where they supply the entire school—children, young people and adults.

Send today for prospectus.

The New Christian Century Co.

700 E. Fortieth St. CHICAGO.

are making up this in a special offering. Already about $200 has been pledged.

Secretary Rains writes that while taking dinner recently with Dr. W. E. Macklin, of Nankin, China, a messenger came in with a note. On opening it the doctor found it was from the Viceroy of Nankin, who is the chief official of that great city. The note contained $300 for the medical missionary work. Brother Rains speaks of attending a union evangelistic meeting addressed by Doctor Macklin with eighteen hundred Chinese in attendance.

Mr. and Mrs. Rains met with the annual convention in China. This convention lasted for five days. All matters needing consideration were carefully considered.

One of our good business men of Indianapolis takes up the support of two native evangelists in China at about $100 each. Many individuals are asking for special objects of support this year.

Dr. C. C. Drummond, of Harda, India, writes that the mission has succeeded in purchasing a piece of land near the hospital. This plot of ground contains six acres and cost the mission $333. The Mohammedans were eager to buy it, but we had the first chance. That is more land than is really needed but the mission had to buy the whole tract.

Mrs. Myrtle Hagin, of Tokyo, Japan, writes that there were twenty-one additions in and around Tokyo in February. She reports a fine work among the Japanese women.

Mr. and Mrs. R. Ray Eldred have reached Bolenge. They had a pleasant voyage from Antwerp to Matadi.

Mr. and Mrs. R. S. Wilson, of Bolenge, Africa, are rejoicing over the advent of a little girl baby. The natives are greatly interested in this child and all wish to see her.

A good brother in England has just sent a gift of $1,000 on the annuity plan.

Mrs. Ella G. Morrison, of Colorado, takes up the support of her own missionary at $600 a year. Her Living Link will be Mrs. Saum, of Bilaspur, India.

A good man and his wife in the Euclid Avenue Church, Cleveland, gave $600 and are thus in the Living Link class.

The regular receipts of the Foreign Society are about $7,000 ahead of this time last year. STEPHEN J. COREY, Secretary.

Cincinnati, Ohio, April 5, 1911.

A. P. Johnson, pastor at Chickasha, Okla., has resigned to accept a pastorate at Cleveland, Ohio.

BEWARE OF RICH FOODS.

One should eat very sparingly of rich and heavy foods, especially if one wishes to retain a good digestion, or suffers at all from indigestion.

A most delightful and sustaining article of diet—nourishing yet very pleasing to the taste—consists of Graham Crackers and milk. The Graham Crackers baked by the National Biscuit Company have a delicious nut-like flavor and also strengthens the digestion, being made of the best of the wheat. For luncheon, for Sunday-night tea or at any meal, they are really a beneficial delicacy.

They are packed by the National Biscuit Company in moisture- and dust-proof packages, bearing their In-er-Seal Trade-Mark.

HIRAM COLLEGE. Send for Illustrated Bulletin, Souvenir Mailing Card and Complete Catalog to PRES. MINER LEE BATES, HIRAM, O.

BELLS.

Steel Alloy Church and School Bells. Send for Catalogue. The C. S. BELL CO., Hillsboro, O

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS. UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY. Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O. (Please mention this paper.)

BOWLDEN BELLS FOR CHURCH AND SCHOOL. Sweet Tone Far Sounding Durable. Catalogue Free. AMERICAN BELL & FOUNDRY CO., NORTHVILLE, MICH.

WE READ and clip for you daily everything printed in the current country and city press of America pertaining to the subject of particular interest to you.

NEWSPAPERS contain many items daily which would inform you exclusively of where you can secure new business, an order or a contract; where a new store has been started, a new firm incorporated or a contract is to be let. A daily press clipping service means more business

FOR YOU. Send Stamp for Booklet

THE CONSOLIDATED PRESS CLIPPING CO.

1109 167 W. Washington St., Chicago, U. S. A.

THE AMERICAN

CHRISTIAN MISSIONARY SOCIETY

1849--1911

FACTS - - FIGURES - - FILOSOFY

Mother of Organized Missions
Established 3,803 Churches
Baptized 82,025 Believers
Raised $1,985,604.07

Our First and Fairest Fruit of Fellowship
Our Heart and Hand Dedicated to Home and Native Land
Our Servant for Promoting the Plea for Christian Union
Our Supply of Men and Means for World Evangelization

REMEMBER THE OFFERING FIRST SUNDAY IN MAY

Join the big Santa Fe Excursions to the

International Sunday-School Association

San Francisco, Cal.
June 20 to 27, 1911

The San Francisco meeting will be of unusual importance to you who are interested in the Sunday-school movement in America.

Every one who can attend should make every effort to do so.

Granted that you are going—

The Santa Fe is the most interesting and most comfortable summer route to California.

Interesting, because of its historical associations; its scenic attractions. No similar area contains so many unique sights. You may see the many-storied villages of the Pueblo Indians, the most advanced of all the aboriginal Americans.

And the Petrified Forest, with its tens of thousands of agatized tree trunks and branches.

And Meteorite Mountain, made by the fall of a giant meteor that plowed a hole in the earth over six hundred feet deep and nearly a mile in diameter.

And, greatest of all, the Grand Canyon of Arizona, a mile deep, miles wide, and painted like a sunset.

Comfortable, because after reaching the mountains the track lies nearly a mile above sea-level most of the way.

And because the cars are new, modern and perfectly appointed. The track is in fine condition.

You will enjoy the Fred Harvey meals—in dining-cars on the California Limited—and in the station dining-rooms on other trains.

The train service is ample for every need. Four fast transcontinental trains daily, including the luxurious

Santa Fe

California Limited

We want every one to read our Summer travel booklets. Copies will be sent. together with a special I. S. S. A. folder, free on request.

W J. Black, Passenger Traffic Manager,
1118 Railway Exchange, Chicago

The CHRISTIAN CENTURY

*Sharpe C Al Dec11

Volume XXVIII. April 20, 1911 Number 16

My Reward

BY GRACE WOOD CASTLE.

An old, old house, within whose upper room
A child, deformed, had spent all his short life;
Not his the spring's enchantment, summer's bloom,
With color, melody and fragrance rife.

His window framed his world; a bush or two,
A stretch of sand, a bit of grass, a wall—
These watched he all the long day through,
Though tiny, crooked paned distorted all.

I, pitying, thought to make him happier,
And while he slept, within the window space
Set one broad sheet of crystal, shining clear:
Then waited for his joyful waking face.

But when he saw the change my hands had wrought,
With tears instead of looks of glad surprise
He viewed it. I, chagrined, the reason sought,
And hearing, saw my act in altered guise.

The truthful picture pleased him not, he said;
He loved the tale told by his window dim
Of shadowy vales and hills. He begged, dismayed,
That I would give his window back to him.

I could not. Of such chance I had not dreamed;
Destroyed was worthless glass and crumbling sash;
And I, who meant to do him service, seemed
To him a meddler, wanton, cruel, rash.

CHICAGO

The Book World

SOCIAL AND MENTAL TRAITS OF THE NEGRO, A Research into the Conditions of the Negro Race in Southern Towns; A Study in Race Traits, Tendencies and Prospects, by Howard W. Odum, Ph. D. Dr. Odum has made a technical study of the negro in the southern towns and in this volume brings to the public the results of his researches and his deductions therefrom. Whatever one may think of the deductions he will find the research a very valuable one in helping to arrive at an understanding of the negro psychologically and socially. This reviewer is not expert in knowledge of the negro though he has been in the south and studied the problem superficially through observation and reading of many books. To him Dr. Odum's deductions seem too sweeping but true to the fact with that exception. It seems too much to say that the young negro is practically devoid of affection for parents once he has reached a position of comparative independence. There is doubtless, also, a very loose code of morals but our author fails to show us enough of the better side of their home life or of the homes of the better classes among them. In the same way, he treats their religious life with a photographic exactness but brings the picture of the superficial without toning it with the better light of the best their religion manifests. In other words the delineation is more of a diagnosis of the pathological of their social condition than it is a description of their all-round life. In the closing pages the author really makes this acknowledgement in saying there is much that is good and more that gives healthy promise. Those who are interested in the negro problem will be led to see that the colored man has a great deal to plead his case in the fact that there is much of the unpurged aborigines yet in him. It is shown rather in his psychology than in his clothes and other outward manifestations that the unschooled can see but it explains his shortcomings and argues that he must not, as a people, be judged by the criterions of the white race with their age of schooling in the arts of civilization. It makes, too, for patience, both with the southern white man who must live with him in his ignorant state and for himself in his failings in the midst of a civilization whose exterior he can so easily copy but whose inner stability he can acquire only through training, if indeed he can hope to profit deeply from it until it has become a part of his inheritance as well. (New York: Longmans, Green & Co., Pp. 308, paper, $2.)

PARTICEPS CRIMINIS, by Ervin S. Chapman. The grand old man of the Californian temperance crusade, the author of "The Stainless Flag" and of a learned treatise upon the legal and constitutional status of the saloon, adds this strikingly popular volume to his contributions. He tells graphically the story of a California Rabbit Drive and upon it builds in detail the analogy of what he terms The Boy Drive of the liquor traffic. The detailed literary analogy may appear to be a little strained at some points but the deadly facts involved never are. He tells how the bunnies are driven by an outward compulsion that carries no warning of the deadly corral at the end of the drive, and so the lads are driven by influences that give no warning of the deadly habit and its upas poison. Parents who indulge the glass at the family board, men who drink temperately before their youthful associates, voters who think only of self and immediate interest or think not at all but only follow appetite, could find the writing upon the wall in this profusely illustrated little volume. (New York: Revell & Co. Pp. 107. Illustrated.)

CHRISTIAN UNITY IN EFFORT, by Frank J. Firth. A not unprofitable survey of the historic creeds of the church such as the Apostles, Nicene and Athanasian, and of the leading denominations of the present time with a sketch of their histories and present form of organization. The book is not in any sense a contribution to the Christian union movement except that it is one more vote on the side of that ideal. A proposal at the close for an "American Christian Church" of which the present denominations may be constituent members is about the only positive suggestion made and this is artificially conceived. (Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott Company. Pp. 273, $1.50, net)

SOULS IN ACTION, by Harold Begbie, continues the stories of conversion begin in Mr. Begbie's widely selling book "Twice-Born Men." The author points out this difference between the two books, that while the earlier volume treated entirely of sudden conversional experiences the later treats of cases in which "a gradual and quiet tranquil change of heart leads to the new birth." The testators whose spiritual biography was told in "Twice-Born Men" were all men, in the present volume they are all women. Mr. Begbie makes much of what he calls the "miracles" of conversion. Taken in the sense in which he describes it it is not objectionable, though many of the terms in which he justifies its use are not thoroughly criticised by the author. The book is throbbing with life, passionate, earnest and triumphant. It is works of this sort that present the irrefragible apologetic of Christianity. (New York: George H. Doran Conmpany. Pp. 310, $1.25 net.)

KLAUS HINRICH BAAS, by Gustav Frenssen. A prominent editor has said of this book, "In a word this is a vital book, one that stands out from the ruck of fiction manufactured to sell today and to die tomorrow." Klaus is the son of a North-German peasant, and with the inheritance of the characteristics of his forbears is an ambition which he follows consistently to the culmination of a successful commercial career. This story, intimate in its details of his everyday life, with its doubts, struggles and moments when his deepest emotions are touched, is a record of life, and the reader will find in it the counterpart of a many an inner struggle. All through his life, from the beginning of his career as a stable boy to the capable business man who saves his former employers from bankruptcy, there is a constant struggle with forces seemingly arrayed against him, and which his teachers, school and church, afford him but little help. Only through life itself does he gain the poise and knowledge that gives him the mastery. (New York: The Macmillan Company. Pp. 440. $1.50.)

THE CALL OF THE NATION, by David Starr Jordan. This is a beautifully bound little volume of ninety pages by the wise and public spirited president of Leland Stanford University. In it he succinctly treats the fundamental moving questions of the time in relation to political welfare. He sees the doom of the party system because of its use for partisan and corrupt ends. In other words partisanship will end party government. He advocates denying to any candidate the privilege of spending his own or his followers' money for obtaining office. Let the government make an allowance for legitimate expenses of publicity. He thinks the fundamental law involved in the Dartmouth case, viz, that a franchise cannot be revoked by the state even if given without conditions that involve duties corresponding to the privileges granted, must be revoked and a franchise made a public trust instead of private property. By the same signs he argues against permanent maintenance of the tariff. It has become the instrument of privilege and therefore must go. These are but samples and are backed with vigorous thinking. (Boston: American Unitarian Association. $1.)

Subscribers Wants

Readers of the Christian Century find its columns valuable for advertising their wants or wares. The charge is one cent for each word, with a minimum of thirty cents for each insertion. Cash must accompany the order to save bookkeeping.

DO YOU NEED HYMN BOOKS for Church or Sunday-school? Write for prices, care of M, New Christian Century Co.

CHURCH CLERK: Do you need church letters? We furnish a well designed letter in blocks of fifty at 50 cents. Write us, care of X, New Christian Century Co.

WANTED.—Ministers and teachers for organizers. Pleasant, profitable work. We teach you. Men are making $50 weekly. UNIVERSITY RESEARCH EXTENSION COMPANY, Milwaukee, Wis.

HIRAM COLLEGE. Send for Illustrated Bulletin, Souvenir Mailing Card and Complete Catalog to PRES. MINER LEE BATES, HIRAM, O.

BELLS.
Steel Alloy Church and School Bells. Send for Catalogue. The C. S. BELL CO., Hillsboro, O

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS. UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.
Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.
(Please mention this paper.)

DON'T FORGET
CHILDREN'S DAY
For Foreign Missions
FIRST SUNDAY IN JUNE
SUPPLIES FREE

The Foreign Christian Missionary Society will furnish CHILDREN'S DAY SUPPLIES for the first Sunday in June FREE to those Sunday Schools observing the day in the interests of HEATHEN MISSIONS.

FREE SUPPLIES

1. Crusaders for Christ.—The beautiful new Children's Day Exercise by P. H. Duncan. Sixteen pages of song, recitation, and drill. A bundle of sunshine. A high class exercise, yet simple enough for the smallest school.
2. Life-Saver Missionary Boxes. Like the picture above. Automatic, self-locking. They will please. Put your school to work with them.

ORDER AT ONCE. Give local name of Sunday School and average attendance. Write

STEPHEN J. COREY, Box 884, Cincinnati, O.

The Christian Century
CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON AND HERBERT L. WILLETT, ... EDITORS

When You Start to Scold--Don't!

IS THE PREACHER EVER JUSTIFIED IN SCOLDING HIS CONGREGATION?

It is a very easy question for the congregation to answer.

They know how uncomfortable it makes them. If they are guilty they resent that kind of punishment. If they are innocent they feel that a service of worship has been ruined and the good cause harmed.

They feel a certain disillusionment toward the pastor. He had seemed strong and patient and appealing. Now he seems to have broken the spell of his influence upon them. He is not their leader now, but one to be led; not a help in their problems but himself a problem to be reckoned with. This is their feeling as his words sting their hearts.

Besides, there are the Phillips' and the Browns, outsiders, who have come this morning for the first time after months of invitation: the pastor will have to be apologized for; and it was so hard to get them here once—can we ever get them back again?

Yes, the question is easy for the congregation.

And it is just as easy for the preacher to answer.

He feels how indifferent, how unresponsive, are the people to the call of the church. It is hard to get Sunday-school teachers. The official board meeting last Friday night was attended by only three out of fourteen office bearers. The people are late at the service today, or their contributions are delinquent and his salary is much overdue.

Besides, the plans for a forward movement of the church which he has been revolving for a long time are likely to fall through. Deacon Albright's skeptical attitude toward everything proposed by the pastor irritates him.

Moreover, there is upon his soul the burden of the spiritual life of his people. They are so slow of heart. The prayer-meeting drags: few are there and they are unresponsive. The missionary plea falls on deaf ears for the most part: there is no vision of the big work of the kingdom.

What this congregation needs, he is saying to himself, is a blast of dynamite. This idea seizes him on Saturday and obsesses his mind far into the night, forcing out of his brain all the invective he ever knew.

The sermon that he has prepared seems very clever to him. The mental image of the wagon which he and the deacons started to pull up the hill and which now he pulls alone while the deacons ride—this image stands in the front of his mind and affords him a certain thrill of satisfaction as he anticipates the smarting they will have when he lashes them with the hot words of his sermon.

Yes, the answer to the question is easy for the preacher.

* * *

But honor bright, now, brother preacher, did you ever scold your church when you felt that they were blessed by it or you were blessed? Cannot you remember how sheepish you felt afterward when that big friendly deacon asked you quietly at the door what you had had for breakfast? It made your pulpit heroics seem so silly.

He invited you to his home for dinner and in the fellowship of himself and Mrs. Deacon and the half-awed playfulness of their children, together with the not wholly commiserating attitude of Mrs. Preacher, you found that you were really not mad at all, that a far larger proportion of your members than Elijah's seven thousand were faithful to the church and loyal to you.

There is no question about it, scolding does not go well with the gospel, and a scold cannot be a bearer of the good news, a publisher of peace.

"Comfort ye, comfort ye my people," saith the Lord to his prophet. Blessed, blessed, blessed,—are the opening words of the great sermon by the Master-preacher.

There will be times when the preacher will be tempted to use coercive words, stinging words; to set himself up as a judge of his people and administer a harsh rebuke. This temptation may come to him on impulse or it may be a deliberately chosen means of getting results like certain evangelists who have carried the mean art of scolding to the nth power where, to many, it appears as a virtue.

Howsoever the temptation comes the true man of God should be strongly fortified against it.

And he will be thus fortified if he lays deep in his soul this fundamental principle of his ministry:

That his essential business as a minister is to create faithfulness by his own faith, to create hopefulness by his own hope, to enlist workers by his own unselfish zeal.

The true minister is a radiator of good will, of optimism, of expectancy, of faith. This is his business in the church and the community. When he scolds he denies his profession. The sources of his courage and hope are not in his congregation but in his own soul's contact with God.

"My springs are in Thee," he says with the psalmist.

What the world is needing, what the church is needing, is a ministry which conceives its responsibility for faith and courage as resting not upon a contract with the church but upon the call of God.

Too much does the minister divide his sense of responsibility with his people. This is my work: that is yours, he says tacitly. When they do not perform their share he feels free to threaten or to scold.

But he has no more right to threaten and to scold than has the evangelist to scold the unrepentant, or the missionary to scold the undiscerning heathen.

The fact that his people are professors of religion gives him ground for most earnest exhortation, for pleading, but not for scolding.

* * *

There is need of considering well, in the days when one is deciding to be a minister, whether one possesses this gracious gift of inspiring others with faith and zeal. There is nothing more pathetic than the discovery by a congregation that their minister is a pessimist or a bluffer or a man of uncontrolled temper.

No brilliancy of speech can compensate for the lack of hope and patience and the love that beareth all things.

In the long run of his pastorate and of his life the preacher's great asset is his own strong self.

A sudden outburst of passion may get an immediate result but it sacrifices the long-time good. It is probable that it is just here that the explanation is to be found of the preacher's customary resignation after he has built a new church house. In the crises of that enterprise he lapsed into scolding or resorted to public artifice in order to gain the object at once.

But he weakened his soul-relationship with his people, thereby.

No particular enterprise of the church is so important as to justify the preacher's betrayal of a lack of inner calm and patience and sufficiency.

The preacher's whole asset, after all, is not facile speech, nor an eloquent style, nor learning, but his own life, his own patient, good tempered way of meeting his problems and showing his people what it is to walk in the footsteps of Christ.

In entering into a contract with a congregation the assumption in the minister's mind that they are going to furnish so much zeal and so much faith and so much service to put with the quantum of these virtues which he furnishes, will blight his ministry at the start. It will secularize his relationship with them and when they fall down he will fall down too.

But the minister must not fall down.

The minister, by all the terms of his profession, is the one man in the community who must stand—radiant, optimistic, pleading, patient. He must not be irritable, not easily provoked, but regard the failure of others as his best chance to show forth the mettle of his gospel by his own patience, courage and faith.

So when you start to scold—don't!

But rather, go apart and pray for reinforcements of grace!

Social Survey

Many Priceless Relics Lost

Many of the nation's priceless papers and relics were destroyed in a fire which broke out in the state capitol building at Albany, N. Y. The fire was discovered in the assembly room and spread, working its greatest havoc in the wing in which is located the state historical library. Practically the entire 600,000 volumes, together with 700,000 papers, manuscripts and pamphlets were destroyed. Among the more serious losses is that of many of the 40,000 documents in the famous Van Rensselaer collection, and many records of the early history of New Amsterdam. By sheer good fortune, the most valuable of the papers in the library were preserved. Two years ago Commissioner Draper transferred to the safe, in his office on the first floor, the original manuscripts of the Emancipation Proclamation of Washington's farewell address, of the state constitution, the papers taken from Major André, and a score more of the most valuable papers. These are still intact. The replaceable damage will total up to about $5,000,000, of which the greater part is to contents of the structure. The building itself was not greatly injured. Completed in 1899, at an expense of $25,000,000, the building was rated as fireproof. The greater part of the interior will have to be redecorated. Had the fire occurred a few months later, the valuable relics would not have been lost, as the new educational building, adjacent to the capitol, is nearly completed.

Roosevelt Reclamation Dam Completed

The recent dedication of the Roosevelt Dam in Arizona marked a triumph for our valuable Federal Reclamation Bureau. Not only is the dam one of the largest in the world, but it holds back the largest artificial lake in the world. That body of water would cover the entire state of Rhode Island to the depth of one foot. The dam is built in a narrow defile up in the mountains, through which the Salt River passes. It was constructed under immense difficulties. Almost inaccessible, even on foot, a road had to be constructed first, blasted in many places from the solid rock of the mountain side. Then all the machinery and material for a cement factory as well as all construction machinery for the dam, had to be hauled many miles by team over this road. The river itself presented many difficulties to be overcome. While during a part of the year it is only a small stream threading its way down between the rocks, in the spring when the winter's snows on the mountains melt it becomes a rushing, raging, mighty torrent, sweeping everything in its path. The tremendous engineering feat has been accomplished to conserve that water for use the year round. From the dam it is conducted many miles through aqueducts and canals to the lowlands where it will convert 250,000 acres of nonproductive land into a most fertile district. On its way down to the lower country, the water is made to operate pumps and thus to increase the volume of the available supply from deep natural reservoirs. Mr. Roosevelt was the principal speaker at the celebration over the completion of the dam, and he will long be remembered as one of those, through whose efforts that reclamation was undertaken.

The Sixty-second Congress

At twelve o'clock noon, Tuesday, Apr. 4, the sixty-second congress met in extraordinary session at Washington to consider the reciprocity agreement with Canada. For the first time in sixteen years Democrats in the lower house have a majority, and in the senate they hold a large minority. The first few days was given to organization. As was predicted, the Hon. Champ Clark, of Missouri, was chosen speaker of the house, and Representative Mann, of Illinois, was selected as the minority leader. What is accomplished in the special session and what fails of accomplishment will depend entirely upon how the members of each party get together. So far, the Democrats have worked harmoniously and with military precision and smoothness. No actual hitch has taken place in the ranks of the Republicans, but the progressives realize they hold the balance of power in their hands to pass or reject legislation. This power they are using to compel recognition and representation on the important committees in both houses. The Republican regulars have wisely adopted a conciliatory attitude toward them, and have promised them the recognition they demand. This attitude followed out will unite the factions and will leave the houses lined up about as follows:—Senate: Republicans, fifty; Democrats, forty-one; vacancy, one; Republican majority, nine: House: Democrats, 228; Republicans, 162; Socialist, one; Democratic majority, sixty-six.

President Taft's Reciprocity Message

The President's message to congress is singularly direct and short —so short in fact that it caused some surprise. It was a simple, straightforward statement of the reason for calling congress in extra session. Congress was urged to act upon the reciprocity measure as speedily as possible, but no elaborate defense of the agreement was presented, nor was any needed. No one can plead ignorance in opposition to this measure. Says Mr. Taft: "When the full text of the agreement . . . and data explaining its purpose and its scope became known to the people through the message transmitted to congress, it was immediately apparent that the ripened fruits of the careful labors of the commissioners met with widespread approval. . . The volume of the support which has developed shows that its broadly national scope is fully appreciated and is responsive to the popular will. . . I am constrained in deference to popular sentiment and with a realizing sense of my duty to the great mass of our people whose welfare is involved to urge upon your consideration early action on this agreement." In the house the message was referred to the ways and means committee and in the senate to the finance committee. Chairman Underwood, of the house ways and means committee, within the next few days will present a reciprocity bill which in essentials will agree with the reciprocity agreement presented last session. what the differences will be have not been divulged. But the Democrats have practically declared their determination to revise several tariff schedules and in all probability will attempt to omnibus several revisions through as riders on the reciprocity pact. Caution should be used there. If the Democrats attempt to force their hand too strongly the Republican majority in the senate will refuse its sanction and not only will the tariff measures be lost, but reciprocity as well.

Employers' Liability Law Decision

The employers' liability law, enacted by the New York state legislature in the last session, and universally welcomed as a liberal and highly desirable measure, has been declared void in the highest court of that state. There is no appeal from its decision. Compensation for injuries due to the hazardous nature of certain employments, or to the failure of employers, or employers' agents, to exercise due care or to comply with any law affecting the employment, has always been uncertain, owing to the fact that each case, unless settled privately, must be settled in a lawsuit. Lawsuits are expensive, and at best are uncertain of results. These facts render them prohibitive to the poor workman. Law suits often compose considerable portions of employers' expense accounts. Of mutual advantage then, would be an automatic scale of compensation for injuries. Such a scale must, of necessity be obligatory to be effective, and it is at this link that the chain snapped. The court based its decision on two points. It held that this mode of compensation is taking property without due process of law and is "plainly a deprivation of liberty and property under the federal and state constitutions, unless its impositions can be justified by the police power." The decision designates provisions to conserve the health, safety and morals of employés and to increase the duties and responsibilities of the employers and declares that such provisions fall within the police power. It emphatically denies, however, that the present law falls within those provisions. In annuling the law, the court explains that it "must regard all economic, philosophical and moral theories, attractive and desirable as they may be, as subordinate to the primary question whether they can be molded into statutes without infringing the letter or spirit of our written constitution." Some solution of this problem will doubtless be found, but the decision is of interest to the entire country because the personal liberty clauses in the New York charter to which it refers, are practically identical with those in the United States Constitution.

Two New Battleships

The two first-class battleships authorized by the last session of congress will be about equal in strength to the battleships Texas and New York, now in process of construction, and which will be the most powerful ships in the navy. According to tentative plans, the two additional vessels, yet unnamed, will have 10 14-inch guns arranged in four turrets. Two of the turrets will contain two guns each, while the other two turrets will be armed with three guns each. The displacement of the new ships will be 27,500 tons each. These vessels will be the first in the navy to have three guns in a turret.

The Christian World

A Page for Interdenominational Acquaintance.

Methodist

What the Catholics are Going to do to Us.

If the people who utter prophecies about the destruction of the liberties of England and America by the forces of Roman Catholicism would spend their energies in building up Protestant institutions they would serve the world far better. If the Catholics are getting the upper hand, howling protests will do no good. Protestantism will save itself by producing the right kind of men and women and the right kind of institutions. After reading some direful prophecies of what Catholics will do to us, The Western Christian Advocate remarks:

Now that surely is dreadful enough to contemplate. But where is the evidence of the plot or the least probability of its success, even if it existed? It would seem, indeed, from the present situation of affairs, as if the poor pope—with France and Portugal broken loose and Italy and Spain full of indifference or remonstrance and insubordination, and with modernism daily gaining ground—has just about all he can do at this time to hold his own, without undertaking the little job of overthrowing the democratic institutions of England and America and stamping out Protestantism throughout the world.

But perhaps we are too easy and tolerant and not suspicious enough. We confess that we think we wouldn't make a very good Sherlock Holmes. Unless proof positive to the contrary is forced upon us, we prefer not to believe more evil of any man, organization, or church than is absolutely necessary. We like the spirit of Lincoln which would refuse to "set down aught in malice." "With malice towards none, with charity for all," we desire to give to all our fellow-mortals the "benefit of the doubt,"—to regard them as innocent, at least until they are proved guilty. At the same time we hope we are not so purblind and pusillanimous as not to see when real dangers threaten and not to defend the truth when it is actually assailed. But we don't get frightened at scare-crows or go tilting at windmills with Don Quixote. The muck-raker is abroad in the land, and he takes up not only a good deal of real muck, but much that is only counterfeit muck.

The Big Church—Empty!

Dr. Charles Aked left the Fifth Avenue Baptist Church, New York, because the trustees did not see their way clear to build for him a building holding many thousands. Dr. Aked drew large crowds. He wanted to have an auditorium that would hold all who might wish to hear him. What he demanded the trustees said would cost $2,000,000. Then, said these men of business, what will happen if Dr. Aked becomes ill and has to give up his work? They decided not to spend so much money on one man. The Christian Advocate, New York, thinks they are wise. It says:

We do not wonder at this. No more miserable condition is possible for any church than to have an immense edifice, able to hold five or six thousand, erected solely on the reputation and gathering power of one man. That man may sicken or die, or accept a call to another church; then the members scatter, the crowds diminish, the pews are left unrented; hollow echoes resound through the arches, or under the dome, and no successor is found who is capable of filling the house. Horror of horrors! These possibilities the trustees perceived, whereas Dr. Aked saw them not; but in fancy he beheld the great crowds, the immense church and the correspondingly vast opportunity of doing good.

Congregational

Ministers Changing Denominational Relations.

When a minister goes from one denomination to another, not because he has changed his theology but because he finds a better field for work, it is evident that denominational fences are not very high. Of course there are those who feel that preachers who make such changes have no convictions. Doubtless they do not have very strong convictions as to the importance of the things that divide the churches; this does not indicate that they do not have profound convictions with respect to the fundamentals of the faith. The coming of Dr. Jowett to New York gives The Congregationalist and Christian World occasion to say the following:

It is quite within the memories of living men active in the churches that ministers accepting a call to another denomination than their own either were criticised for unworthy motives or were supposed to have passed through profound mental and spiritual experiences resulting from changed convictions. The farewell luncheon of the Congregational Council in London to Dr. Jowett as he was leaving for New York strikingly illustrates how completely this phase of denominationalism has passed away. Rev. Silvester Horne, who presided, remarked that Dr. Jowett's going to a Presbyterian church was only a lease. Dr. Jowett, he said, "is a Congregationalist, and will remain a Congregationalist, and as such, will be invaluable in a denomination which, at any rate, has one grace left—that it knows good preaching when it hears it!" Rev. J. D. Jones said it is a sign of the times that a minister can pass from one denomination to another without serious trouble. He believed that Dr. Jowett in a Presbyterian pulpit in New York would be a sort of living example of the essential unity between the two denominations. Probably few persons realize how extensively interdenominational Protestant churches have become in their choice of official teachers and leaders. Our largest Congregational churches in New York and Brooklyn have pastors trained in other denominations. Dr. Cadman, of Central and Dr. Waters, of Tompkins Avenue, and Dr. Jefferson, in the Tabernacle, New York, came from the Methodist; Dr. Hillis, at Plymouth, from the Presbyterians. Dr. Charles Parkhurst, of Madison Square Presbyterian Church was called back to that pastorate from a Congregational church. Dr. Hugh Black, Dr. Bradford's successor for a time in the First Congregational Church, Montclair, was a little while ago one of the most brilliant of the Presbyterian pastors of Scotland. Dr. Aked's departure from the Fifth Avenue Baptist Church in New York provokes no surprise so far as the denominational change is concerned. These instances could easily be multiplied. They require no important change in belief or practice. What hinders yet closer relations between these denominations?

Personal Experience Deeper Than Theology.

Rev. Reginald J. Campbell, the City Temple, London, "heretic" receives a beautiful tribute from Rev. Joseph Parker, of Freemantle, Australia, in the Australian Christian World. Mr. Parker comments on the spirituality of Mr. Campbell's prayer and the marked spiritual fervor of the audience of nearly three thousand persons only about two hundred of whom left the house when an after-meeting for prayer was announced to follow the regular service. The Northwestern Christian Advocate commenting on the account says it "goes to show that a man's personal experience of God may be vastly better than his speculative theology, and that for purposes of religious leadership the man with little aptitude for the 'kittle pints' of doctrinal subtleties is wise in letting them severely alone."

Missions

Missions and Apologetics.

The art of theological warfare used to be taught in the schools of the church. The professor of polemics was an important member of the faculty. He has disappeared but we are not to think the church has no need of defending its faith and of pulling down the strongholds of error. The wars of the sects are losing their bitterness. Christianity is now face to face with the great non-Christian religions. These challenge its claim to be the universal religion. The situation appeals to man of the highest intellectual and moral power. But before these men can do their work, the church must know what ought to be defended. How is it to learn what is essential? Professor David S. Cairns, United Free Church College, Aberdeen, answers that it is only the missionary church that produces apologists of the right sort. He writes in The Student World:

But it is equally true that while it is the absolute religion, the understanding which the church has of it in every age is relative, it is time and place conditioned in many ways. Hence there is in it always an undiscovered or a lost element, hidden truths, wasted forces, fountains of inspiration choked with rubbish while the eternal fountains murmur below. The problem of the church in every age is how shall it transcend these limitations, realize the unrealized, pierce through the veil to God. Such is the problem of today. Our existing understanding and experience of Christianity is insufficient for the tasks we have to do. Is not this in part at least because the church at large has never fairly grasped the fact that Christianity is essentially a missionary religion? An absolute religion must necessarily be a missionary religion. Therefore the church's past refusal to face the missionary call and its present miserably imperfect response to it has inevitably limited and distorted its understanding of its own essential nature, and so God has been hidden or dimly understood. Christianity was meant to be developed, meant to disclose its true genius on the mission field. God meant to reveal ever deeper and deeper things in Christ and in Himself amid the clash of faiths, amid the movement and action and mission of the spiritual warfare of the kingdom of God. Is not the whole New Testament a proof of this? The whole world of thought and life is conditioned throughout by the missionary aim. The gospel develops its riches in the conflict with Judaism and Hellenism, in the endeavor of these first missionaries to carry on the peculiar work which calls for Christian Apologists today. Each and all of the great doctrines of the gospel comes to maturity and clearness as those first missionaries who wrote the book endeavor to meet the truth in those other religions and destroy the error by preaching Christ as the Life and Light of men. Does not the conclusion follow that had the church remained persistently missionary the conflict with ever new religions, as her field expanded, would have led her deeper and deeper into the riches of God? Hence the restoration of that early method and aim must needs be fraught with abounding discoveries of God for the Christian Church everywhere, an ever deeper and deeper penetration into the unsearchable riches of Christ.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

Published Weekly by

The New Christian Century Co.

Entered as Second-Class Matter Feb. 28, 1902, at the Post Office at Chicago, Illinois, Under Act of March 3, 1879.

EDITORS—CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON AND HERBERT L. WILLETT.
CONTRIBUTING EDITOR—SILAS JONES.

SUBSCRIPTIONS—Subscription price $2.00. If paid strictly in advance $1.50 will be accepted. To ministers if paid strictly in advance, $1.00 per year. Single copy 5 cents.

EXPIRATIONS—The label on the paper shows the months to which subscription is paid. List is revised monthly. Change of date on label is a receipt for remittance on subscription account.

DISCONTINUANCES—In order that subscribers may not be annoyed by failure to receive the paper, it is not discontinued at expiration of time paid in advance (unless so ordered), but is continued pending instruction from the subscriber. If discontinuance is desired, prompt notice should be sent and all arrearages paid.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS—In ordering change of address give the old as well as the new. If the paper does not reach you regularly, notify us at once.

REMITTANCES.—Should be sent by draft or money order payable to The New Christian Century Company. IF LOCAL CHECK IS SENT ADD TEN CENTS FOR EXCHANGE.

700-714 EAST FORTIETH ST., CHICAGO, ILL.
United Religious Press Building

Prayer for Home Missions

"Recognition of and prayer for the agencies being used for the evangelization of the home field," is the statement of this week's topic as it came from the committee. Any one who is interested in Christianity will be interested in one or more of these agencies. The individual disciple, the church, the Sunday-school, literature, music and science are being used to liberate the minds of men from the bondage of ignorance and sin and to give them their inheritance of freedom. It would be in disregard of the facts if we should think of missionary societies as the only agencies for the evangelization of America.

The missionary in non-Christian lands pays tribute to the home as an agency in teaching the gospel. The importance of the home in the evangelization of America is recognized, but in popular discussions attention is often withdrawn from this institution without which all others avail nothing for the advancement of the kingdom of Christ. The man who fulfills all the obligations he owes to his wife and children, the woman whose home duties are never neglected, and the young men and women who are loyal to their parents and have learned from father and mother the meaning of love, have some right to enter the church and talk of the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man. Such persons are consistent when they undertake to advance the interests of the church and when they demand that men be righteous in all their conduct.

The connection between business and evangelization is intimate. The farmer who tells the truth about the horse he is selling, whose hired men trust him as a friend, commands respect when he stands before his class on Sunday or speaks to his neighbor privately about religion and duty. The merchant who is absolutely honest and who stands before the world as a disciple of Christ is teaching the simple gospel in a convincing way. The Christian physician is often the best preacher in his town. The law of the land as well as the law of Moses may be used to lead men to Christ. The lawyer who thwarts the designs of thieves and saves the property of widows and orphans may well say to his neighbor, "You ought to be a Christian." All these winners of souls do more by their conduct than by their words. Their words are often few.

The Sunday-school has been and is an institution making for the progress of the gospel. Among its teachers are found workers of every sort, common laborers, skilled mechanics, farmers, housewives, teachers in the public schools, colleges and universities, public officials from the highest to the lowest, lawyers, physicians, learned and unlearned. With such a teaching force every aspect of religion ought to receive emphasis. American citizens meeting to discuss religion may be expected to express their opinions freely. The Bible class is criticised because it is a sort of debating society. It ought to be a place for debate. It deserves condemnation only when the wrong subjects are discussed and when one member claims the right to solve all problems for the other members. A Bible class with no differences of opinion is useless.

Religious literature is an agency in evangelization. By means of the printed page we have brought to us the wisdom of the great scholars, and poets, and saints. Our associates may be stupid, irreverent and untrustworthy. We can nevertheless rejoice in the companionship of the nobility of the kingdom of God. If there is no preacher to interpret for us the words of scripture, if the preacher is narrow-minded, lacking in spirituality, and unsympathetic, we do not need to go without the food of the soul. What would be the result if there were within the reach of every man, if there were placed before him, expositions of the Bible, explanations of the aims of the church, calls to service, and in language suitable to his experience and ability?

All the agencies mentioned, and others that might be considered, need the help that organization can give. The individual is stronger when he knows that not only his local congregation but also all the congregations of like belief are united to assist him to be a Christian and to help others to be Christians. The power of the home is increased through the counsel and the faith of the missionary who represents all the churches. The Sunday-school that tries to do its work without the co-operation of other schools needlessly limits itself. There are many communities that have to depend on outside leadership for the direction of their religious activities. [Midweek Service, April 26. Acts. 8:1-17.] S. J.

A Personal Note

Mr. Morrison finds that he will not be able to respond personally to the great number of sympathetic and appreciative words sent to him and his family in connection with the death of his father. The good friends who have written have added much to the interpretation of the character of the brave soul that has passed and have made yet more vivid and comforting the hope of the immortal life. The Christian faith and hope and the disclosure of human friendship afforded by this correspondence go far toward compensation. Our friends will accept, we are sure, this expression of appreciation as if it were personally addressed to them.

An Illuminating Precedent

It is by an appeal to apostolic precedent that our cautious contemporary, the Christian Evangelist, meets the threat of the Christian Standard to embarrass and discredit the Disciples' missionary societies.

The latter paper is incensed at the discovery that among our missionaries on the foreign field there is strong sentiment for the practice of Christian union. The freedom of fellowship among Christian missionaries of all denominations and the tentative steps taken by an interdenominational conference in India, in which the Disciples were represented, looking toward a federation and the ultimate union of the Churches of Christ in that country, have reawakened the sometime dormant wrath of our Cincinnati co-worker.

The Standard calls the roll of our missionary agencies—official and independent—and demands from each an explanation.

Fearing lest any root of bitterness should spring up among the brethren, the Christian Evangelist refers its Cincinnati neighbor to the New Testament with the plea that the spirit and principles of apostolic procedure in the case of uncircumcised Gentile Christians may obtain in the attitude of The Standard and the entire brotherhood toward union with Christians who were not immersed at baptism. It says:

Let the subject, therefore, be approached in the light of the facts and in the same Christian spirit in which the leaders of the early church faced the problem of circumcision with reference to the Gentiles. Coming to the subject in that spirit we shall be able to find a satisfactory solution of that question as we have of many other questions.

This is admirable. The Christian Century gives it the heartiest endorsement, and believes that not only the phrases but the facts of New Testament procedure are often the best possible guide in the threading of mazes and the unravelling of tangles that are sometimes found in the practice of the church.

We are concerned to examine for a moment this apostolic precedent to which our contemporary so pertinently refers. The case is so nearly parallel as to afford a striking interpretation of the present situation. The Disciples strive to be an apostolic people, and surely the practice of the early church ought to be illuminating where controversy arises today as it arose over vexed questions in the first century.

But first it will be profitable to restate one of the aspects of the situation as it has been previously described in this paper.

* * *

Christian communities in India as well as in other mission fields are few and far between. Christian fellowship is, therefore, very precious. Those converts who move from one locality to another in the shifting conditions of oriental life must attach themselves to the group of Christians in the community where their new homes are cast, or else must remain outside of the church. This is a situation hardly paralleled in the West, where the churches are so numerous that Christian converts are sure to find some sheltering organization.

This condition has compelled our missionaries to face the question whether they can consent to withold fellowship from those who have been brought to Christ through other ministries than their own. To refuse to receive a convert into full and cordial fellowship because he happens to come from a district in which neither Baptists nor Disciples have a mission station, would mean that such a man must either go elsewhere or remain in the condition of an outsider, disfellowshipped, or admitted only upon sufrance, and this because in all good faith he has been baptized in accordance with a practice not admitted as regular by the Disciples.

The serious efforts of the missionaries of all evangelical churches in India have been enlisted in a plan so to unify their forces as that each shall recognize as valid the ordinances and orders of the others, insofar as they relate to church membership and Christian standing. This would involve the free admission, with full recognition of their Christian character, of the converts who come to a church of the Disciples from the missions of the other societies.

On the part of The Christian Century it does not appear how they can decline to do so. We have no desire to settle the question for them, nor for the churches at home; but we are perfectly confident that the situation on the mission fields involves a problem which has not been fairly faced by the churches in America, and compels a readjustment on the question of membership to meet the conditions which have arisen.

There are signs that the question is certain to be the ground of serious and earnest debate. Facts show that the sentiment of many of our missionaries is pronounced in favor of the more tolerant view. These men believe just as firmly as do any of us at home that immersion only should be practiced in baptism, and for themselves both in receiving and administering the ordinance it is the only practice. But they are unwilling to erect this conviction of theirs into a test of brotherhood when the unity and the welfare of the native Christians on the mission fields are involved.

* * *

It is most gratifying to read the pertinent and judicious appeal of the Christian Evangelist. The Disciple habit of carrying all our troubles to the New Testament should stand us in good stead just now, inhibiting all acrimony and threatening and revealing to us the way appointed by the spirit of God for us to take.

One of the most perplexing of the problems of the early Christian community was the admission of Gentiles into the church. In the Christian community at Jerusalem there were at first only Jews. Jesus himself was a Jew. All the apostles were Jews. The early disciples were entirely of the same nationality. No Gentile had as yet been received into the fellowship.

Had a non-Jew applied for admission he would have been compelled not only to accept the usual obligations of the Christian life but as well those of the Jewish community. He would have been required to submit to circumcision, the washing of the body and the ritual sacrifices. Not one of the early Christian leaders, not even the apostles themselves, would have felt free to depart from this procedure.

It was upon the mission field that divergence of views first arose. Stephen had made clear the line of separation between the synagague and the church. Peter had received Cornelius and his family into the church. But it was in the mission community of Antioch that the question as to how the Gentiles were to be received first became significant.

In the Jerusalem church, which represented the home field, the entire membership was so thoroughly Jewish that the principle of compliance with the customary Jewish rites was accepted without question. It seemed as simple and natural to these early disciples, from the study of the Scriptures, as the practice of immersion has seemed to a group empasizing, like our own, the lexicon and the customs of the first disciples as authoritative and satisfying statements of Christian obligation.

But on the mission field at Antioch the question assumed a very different aspect. It was soon perceived that the demand for Gentile compliance with Jewish custom was divisive and in defiance of the spirit of Jesus. To be sure, there were those who interpreted with insistence and conviction the attitude of the Jerusalem church, affirming that any recognition of Gentiles, save upon terms of circumcision, would be a compromise with the divinely expressed law of the new society. Others felt, and among them were Paul and Barnabas, that the demand for comformity to the Jewish practice was impossible on the wider field. It was with this deep conviction that they consented to submit the entire matter to the judgment of the mother church in Jerusalem.

Yet so sure was Paul that the conservatism of the Jerusalem disciples would largely outweigh his arguments and the proofs of Gentile discipleship which he could produce, that he was at pains to visit the leaders of the apostolic group and lay before them his plea for the liberty of those who found the acceptance of the law impossible. In that plea he was successful, for Peter, James and John were persuaded that his contention was right, and that the progress of the faith must not be hampered, even by the cherished convictions of the church on the home field.

The most significant moment in the history of early Christianity was that at which the question was presented to the Jerusalem conference. There is every evidence in the classic passage in the fifteenth chapter of Acts that the subject was fiercely debated, and every argument of conservatism was hurled against the new and seemingly radical plea for the abrogation of the circumcision test. Even the apostles themselves did not suceed in convincing the more determined of the conservatives.

It was James the Lord's brother, the most trusted of all the leaders of the community, who finally settled the vexed question by a personal decision which removed the matter entirely from the hands of the assembly, and without even permitting a vote decided that the Gentiles should not be troubled by the restrictions which zealous and consecrated Jewish Christians would have thrown around the progress of the faith.

* * *

We can conceive of no happier settlement of this vexed question of the recognition of those unimmersed Christians who turn to the churches of the Disciples than that reached by the early church on the equally vexing question of circumcision. The parallels are exact. All the earlier members of the church, including the apostles, accepted implicitly the view that the practice of the time-honored, divinely commanded, and universally accepted Jewish rites was a Christian duty.

Within the home church there was little or no question as to the soundness of this view. The few voices raised in protest were hardly heeded, and the church gloried in the fact that no Gentile had entered its fellowship except upon submission to these ritual requirements. Then came the protest from the mission field, and instantly when the issue was raised Paul, Peter, and John saw the validity of the broader and more constructive view, and the uselessness of maintaining an attitude which was certain to limit the effectiveness of the gospel to a comparatively small company.

It was the apostles themselves who championed the emancipation of the church from the conservatism that threatened it. Not without controversy and protest was the victory achieved. But it was the most honored, trusted and revered leader of the early church, the saintly brother of Jesus, who pronounced the word that opened the door of the church to the waiting millions of Gentile believers, and to that unity and fellowship of which the Lord himself had spoken.

If the Disciples of Christ have the courage and the wisdom to deal with the vexed question of church membership, as it applies to the reception of those who are members of other and non-immersionist churches of Christ, in the spirit with which the leaders of the apostolic church dealt with the equally perplexing question of circumcision, we do not doubt that to them as to the early church there will be opened a new door of vision, service and opportunity, incomparably greater than any through which they have as yet passed.

We wish, therefore, to repeat the admirable words of our contemporary and to affirm with emphasis that they define the precise attitude which the Disciples should take on this theme: "Let the subject therefore, be approached in the light of the facts and in the same Christian spirit with which the leaders of the early church faced the problem of circumcision with reference to the Gentiles. Coming to the subject in that spirit, we shall be able to find a satisfactory solution of that question as we have of many other questions."

Nothing Owing

Mr. Booker Washington tells a good story of a negro church which refused to pay its minister's salary. He was sent down to appease the strife, and asked why they made this refusal. He received the reply from an aged colored brother, who, rising from the back of the meeting, said: "We paid for them sermons last year."

A Tremendous Moral Document

The Report of the Chicago Vice Commission

Chicago's vice commission of thirty prominent men appointed by Mayor Busse last July has just made its report of 365 pages. The commission investigated 52 of the larger cities of the United States. In many of those cities conditions were found to be worse than they are in Chicago. In some they were found to be better. As a whole Chicago is a better city morally than most of the cities of the United States that are in its class.

White Slavery Profits.

The commission estimates that the aggregate profits reaped from the vice of "white slavery" in Chicago amount to the enormous sum of $15,699,449. This sum is made up of the profit received by the owners of property used for resorts, the keepers and the inmates, amounting to $8,476,689; the profit from the sale of liquor in disorderly saloons only, $4,307,000, and the profit from the sale of liquor in resorts, $2,915,760.

The report, dealing first with the necessity for a change from the existing system of dealing with the vice problem in Chicago, says:

"We believe that Chicago has a public conscience which, when aroused, cannot be easily stilled—a conscience built upon moral and ethical teachings of the purest American type—a conscience which, when aroused to the truth, will instantly rebel against the social evil in all its phases.

Against Segregation.

The commission is convinced that the continental system of so-called segregation "has proved itself degenerating and ineffective." "Furthermore, the overwhelming majority of the citizens of Chicago and the fathers and mothers of its children never will countenance the recognition or legalization of a commercial business which spells only ruin to the race. It is, therefore, incumbent upon us to take a bold stand against this curse of society. It behooves us to raise social life to the highest possible standard of righteousness—to teach the youth of our land loyalty and honor to womanhood.

"The immensity of the social evil problem is no excuse for us to stand idly by and do nothing in an attempt to solve it.

"We may enact laws; we may appoint commissions; we may abuse civic administrations for their handling of the problem; but the problem will remain just as long as the public conscience is dead to the issue or is indifferent to its solution.

Religion Must Curb Men.

"Until the hearts of men are changed we can hope for no absolute annihilation of the social evil. Religion and education alone can correct the greatest curse which today rests upon mankind. For this there is a mighty work for agencies and institutions of righteousness in our land.

"The statement is also made and supported by facts, learned from long and faithful experience in caring for dependent and delinquent children, that more delinquent girls come from small families where they are spoiled than from large families where there may be poverty, but a sort of unconscious protective union of the children shielding one another. Divorce, to a large extent, is a contributory factor to vice.

Torturing Temptations.

"As to the economic side of the question—the life of an unprotected girl who tries to make a living in a great city is full of torturing temptations. First, she faces the problem of living on an inadequate wage—six dollars a week is the average in the mercantile establishments. If she were living at home where the mother and sister could help her with mending, sewing, and washing, where her board would be small—perhaps only a dollar or two towards the burden carried by the other members of the family—where her lunch would come from the family larder, then her condition might be as good as if she earned eight dollars a week.

"The girl who has no home soon learns of 'city poverty,' all the more cruel to her because of the artificial contrasts. She quickly learns of the possibilities about her, of the joys of comfort, good food, entertainment, attractive clothes. Poverty becomes a menace and a snare. One who has not beheld the struggle or come in personal contact with the tempted soul of the underpaid girl can never realize what the poverty of the city means to her.

Country Girls.

"Country girls would better stay at home and go into domestic service than to come to the city to live a hand-to-mouth existence. Of the five thousand women who are consumed annually by Chicago's social evil, hundreds are from the country.

"Hundreds, if not thousands, of girls from country towns, and those born in the city but who have been thrown on their own resources, are compelled to live in cheap boarding or rooming houses on the average wage of $6. How do they exist on this sum? It is impossible to figure it out on a mathematical basis.

The Remedy.

"The commission would abolish the levee districts by wiping them out of existence. Constant and persistent repression, it says, must be the immediate method; absolute annihilation the ultimate ideal."

For the immediate initiation of the policy thus set forth the commission made two recommendations. They were embodied in ordinances submitted to the council with the report and are as follows:

Morals Commission.

First, the appointment of a morals commission: The morals commission is designed to take up the work of vice suppression at the point where the Busse commission gives up its task. It is to consist of five members, to be appointed by the mayor and approved by the council, to serve for two years and to receive no salary. The commissioner of public health is to be a member ex-officio of this commission.

It shall be the duty of this commission to gather evidence and to take the necessary legal steps for the suppression of vice in Chicago wherever such suppression is believed to be advisable. Its jurisdiction is to cover the whole of the city of Chicago and the district three miles beyond the corporate limits.

Morals Court and Police.

Second, the establishment of a morals court with large powers. The function of the morals court shall be to consider the cases submitted to its consideration by the morals commission. The morals court shall have the power to invoke the aid of the municipal police in enforcing its orders.

The commission also recommends that a special morals police squad should form a part of the police force of the city. We recommend that women officers be added to the police force, whose duty should be to render assistance to women or girls throughout the city, especially at all railroad stations or other places where inexperienced women are liable to need help. We also recommend that some of these women officers be able to speak foreign languages.

Parks, Preachers, Parents.

The report says in part: "The parks should be better policed and playgrounds supervised more carefully. Park managers should extend greater protection to unaccompanied young girls, especially in the evening. Public parks should be better lighted and equipped with searchlights. Seats should be removed from the deep shadows.

"Pastors and religious workers should aid in arousing public opinion against the open and flagrant expression of the social evil in this city. The churches should endeavor to counteract the evil influences in the community by opening rooms attached to the church buildings as recreational centers during week day evenings.

"Great emphasis should be placed on parental responsibility and upon the effects of church and school in informing parents how to safeguard their children."

Harrison Opposed.

Mayor-elect Carter H. Harrison is in favor of segregation and opposed to the Busse Commission's recommendation against it. He declared that scattering of vice would make it ten times as bad. He will work towards the elimination of the evil, but insists that a new plan must be offered.

"Dispersion of vice will not be favored by me," he said. "There is no question but that every person would favor any proposition that would result in the elimination of the evil. So far I have heard of no plan that will bring this result. The moment you scatter vice you make it ten times as bad, for then it cannot be controlled by the police.

"While vice segregated is a deplorable thing, it seems about the only solution."

Record-Herald Editorial.

Speaking editorially the Record-Herald says that the report "challenges the serious attention of good citizens and lovers of decency, morality and justice. Many of its suggestions are intensely practical, constructive and realizable without any undue expenditure of time, energy or money.

It is possible to give greater protection to immigrant girls and girls arriving from the country. It is possible to employ a "morals squad" of trained, incorruptible women police officers to visit questionable resorts and rescue unfortunate girls cruelly exploited by brutal owners of white slaves.

The proposed commission and court of morals are also entirely practical, and great good would come from them if they should be properly organized and properly directed.

The report is free from sensationalism. It recognizes that Chicago is a better city morally than most of the world's great cities, but it is not as good as it should be. A profit of over $15,000,000 from vice staggers right-thinking persons. Much can be done by co-operation and system to improve conditions and secure greater respect for law and decency. Attention should now be concentrated on the things that can be done and that ought to be done beyond question or doubt."

The chairman of the commission was Dean Sumner, of the Episcopalian cathedral; its secretary, Edwin W. Sims, who, as United States district attorney, has fought white slavery continuously; and among other members were Dr. F. W. Gunsaulus, President A. W. Harris, of Northwestern University, Father O'Callaghan, of the Paulist order, Professor Graham Taylor, Chief Justice Harry Olson, of the municipal court, John C. Whitman, keeper of the bridewell, and Professors W. I. Thomas, C. R. Henderson, and H. L. Willett, of the University of Chicago.

Why I am a Disciple

A Statement to a Jewish Congregation

BY JOHN RAY EWERS.

The East End Church of Disciples, Pittsburgh, is doing not a little to break down the silly and un-Christian prejudice between Jews and Gentiles. Recently The Christian Century reported an earnest address of Mr. Samuel Harden Church, a member of the East End congregation, dealing with the foolish charge that the Jews as a nation are to be held responsible for the death of Jesus. A short time since, Rev. J. R. Ewers, pastor of the church, spoke in the Jewish Temple on the subject of his own personal church affiliation. The attempt to state the position and ideals of the Disciples to a Jewish audience called out a unique form of statement, even as Paul on Mars' Hill cast his address in different form from that to which he was accustomed in speaking to the typical Jewish audience. Mr. Ewers says that the discussion at the close of the address in which Rabbi Levy and a number of laymen took part was especially instructive. Questions were asked the speaker freely. Among them were: Whom do you consider God's people to be? Do you plead for the union of Protestants alone or for the union of all religious peoples? The creeds have been formed by the great intellects of the world, why are they not correct? You decried dogma—Is not immersion a dogma? Would you not gain in your plea if you made Jesus more human?—THE EDITORS.

Representing a church which has for its foundation principle the union of all of God's people, I eagerly embrace the opportunity to address this brilliant group this evening. Your purpose, in this series of lectures, must be a scientific one; you desire to see how other men regard religion. Avoiding, therefore, harsh dogmatism on the one hand, and soft liberalism on the other, I shall endeavor to tell you precisely what I believe.

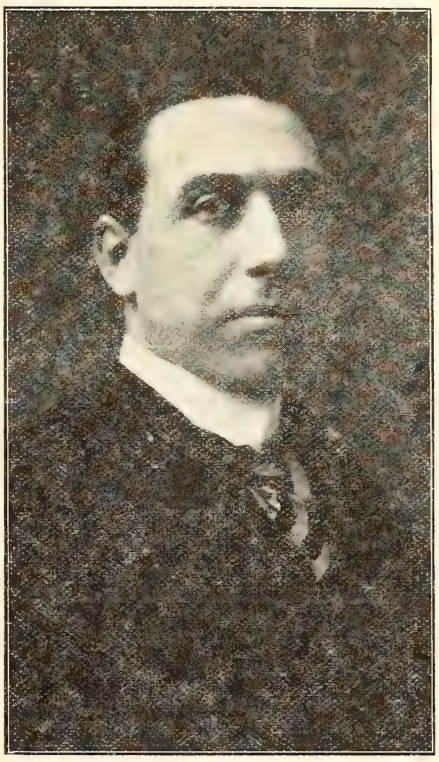
(1) I am a member of the Christian Church, in the first place, for the very same reason that you are what you are. I was born into it. We get our religious convictions from our parents, relatives and Sunday-school teachers. The average man never changes his household of faith. Growing up, he finds his friends in his church. He also comes to believe that the causes of religious difference are of little value and, accordingly, he remains in his own church. Had I been born of good Methodist parents I would probably be a Methodist preacher today.

Believes in His People.

(2) Thinking men are usually not as frank as this, but prefer to give a reason for their position. Coming to man's estate, and studying the various creeds, I came to believe that the ideas of the Christian Church were the nearest right. I am not a bigot. I do not believe that "wisdom will die with us." If I could I would change one or two things in my own church, but I believe in the message of my communion. I believe in the virility of our people. Our faces are toward the dawn. Ours is not a fossilized creed. We always speak of our cause as a "movement." We live close to the people; we are democratic; we are evangelistic; we are missionary; we believe in education; we work for social betterment; we see the good in others and appreciate it; we know tolerance. We are not all thus. We have our share of reactionaries, but they are not representative.

Supremacy of Christ.

(3) We love to say that we have no creed but Christ. We were among the first to scorn the foolishness of human creeds. We seek for the vital essentials—the lowest term of union. We abhor the tyranny of opinion. We will not allow anyone to thrust a doctrine down our throats and we respect our neighbor's mind. We do not believe in an infallible church nor in an infallible book, we fasten our faith upon the supreme Person, Jesus. I was delighted to hear your esteemed Rabbi say recently that the man must be blind who could not see that the religious currents of our time were circling around the Man of Galilee. Every man must define divinity for himself. The content is different for every man. Ninety thousand people united with our communion last year. They were asked to answer just one question. "Do you believe that Jesus is the Christ, the son of the living God."



Rev. John Ray Ewers.

Among all these people I suppose that the content of sonship ranged all the way from what your Rabbi would call "divinity," on up to absolute deity. At least we have no means of knowing for we have no "very God of very God" clause in our statement. I believe, however, that the vast majority, not having reasoned deeply in theology, would, while being nominally orthodox, simply be affirming their love for, their confidence in the great personality of Jesus, God's unique son, and their willingness to obey him. Fortunately one can be a Christian without being a theologian. I am not a Unitarian, if by that you mean to make Jesus a mere man. Jesus is to me the outstanding Personality of all time; in him there is more of God than in any other man; he is great enough to be my Saviour; he is divine in a way such as I am not, and, while I waste no time or words with the incomprehensible doctrine of the Trinity, there is no adjective big enough to describe my Lord. I say with Brooks that Jesus was the unimpeded channel for God. I say with Charles Lamb that "If Shakespeare came into this room we would all stand to greet him, but if Jesus entered we would all bow down before him." I say with Richard Watson Gilder:

"If Jesus Christ be a man,
And only a man, I say
That of all mankind I will cleave to him,
And to him will I cleave alway.

But if Jesus Christ be God,
And the only God, I swear
I will follow him through heaven and hell,
The sea, and the sky and the air."

I believe in the finality of the Christian religion and in Jesus as the religious leader of the whole world.

The Plea for Union.

(4) I am a member of the Christian Church because we plead for union. This is statesmanlike. Thomas Campbell, the leader of our movement, published one hundred years ago a famous document called, "A Declaration and Address," in which his great, loving heart expressed its passion for union. Alexander Campbell, his brilliant son, a graduate of Glasgow, a man concerning whom General Robert E. Lee once said, "If I were to select from all the men I know one man to represent upon another planet the best in our race, I would choose Alexander Campbell," this great character, a higher critic and a heretic of the most marked type, developed the program of the union of all God's people upon the person and teachings of Jesus. He was a full century ahead of his time. (The speaker here read from pages 222, 244, 308 and 311 of James Egbert's book, "Alexander Campbell and Christian Liberty." These quotations afterward elicited high praise from some present.) Every division in the church is the direct result of some human interpretation and dogmatic attitude, as when Luther cries out in a most stubborn spirit, "Hic meus corpus est." I need not speak to you of the great present day movements toward union. Big business men demand it. The foreign mission field insists upon it. Jesus prayed for it. Twenty-five years hence we shall see it.

The Right Name.

(5) Our name is right—"Christian." What's in a name? Enough to divide. Men say: "I am of Paul, I am of Luther, I am of Calvin." Because we want all the truth in all the creeds, as well as all the truth outside the creeds, we accept the all-inclusive name of Christian.

(6) We preach a simple, rational, ethical gospel. When men ask what they must do to be saved we offer no foolish formula, we insist upon character. Faith means confidence in the person of Jesus, a whole-hearted acceptance of his way of living. In that manner Jesus becomes the Saviour of all who accept him in truth. Repentance means the ceasing to do evil, the learning to do well. It means just what it meant upon the lips of your great prophets—an ethical change. Confession means the open declaration before men of the faith of the heart. Baptism means the beautiful ceremony of initiation into the Christ-life.

We believe in immersion, not in baptismal regeneration. We believe that only those should be baptised who are old enough to understand the significance of this holy act. Immersion is much discussed among us and while the vast majority still make it essential to church membership, a growing body of us are coming to feel that, while they cannot preach or practice any other form than immersion, they would be willing to admit into church fellowship all Christians of undoubted integrity of life. Conditions upon mission fields make this a pressing problem at this precise moment.

The Common Denominators.

We observe the Lord's Supper every Lord's day, but in this we are very liberal, allowing anyone who desires to partake with us, according to his own conscience. Thus for the sake of union we have chosen immersion and weekly communion as common denominators. Our government is congregational and we are consistently democratic. For the rest we allow perfect freedom of opinion. Someone will say, "Ah yes, but I perceive that you still have an unwritten creed." To which I answer, yes; but I submit that it has the minimum of dogma. You desire to know precisely how religion appears to us and I have tried to tell you plainly. Our great word is this:—We stand for the union of all God's people around the person of Jesus, and upon his most apparent and undisputed teachings, to the end that the world may believe in him. Our appeal has met with popular approval, for in less than a century we have become a mighty host of 1,400,000. You know something of the great Centennial which we celebrated in this city last year.

Truth Not Tested by Popularity.

However, I know that the ultimate appeal is not to popularity but to absolute truth. I know that truth, even on the scaffold, is truth still, and that wrong, even upon the throne, is still wrong. I know that the ultimate victory is with absolute truth, and I pray daily that God will guide me into such paths. Thus the hope of union, and of what we shall do when united, lies in our sincerity. The words of Lincoln may fittingly conclude my statement, "With malice toward none, with charity for all, with firmness in the right as God gives us to see the right, let us strive on to finish the work we are in."

ENGLISH TOPICS

BY LESLIE W. MORGAN.

The National Council of the Evangelical Free churches has just held its annual sessions at Portsmouth, England's great naval port. Upward of 2,000 delegates from all over the country assembled.

The program was very full and varied. The Rev. F. B. Meyer was at the helm for the first time in his position as honorary secretary. There are but few things in free church circles which Mr. Meyer does not take a hand in one way or another. He does most things well, but even his best friends admit that he might do them better if he did not undertake so much.

Sir Oliver Lodge Participates.

The platform of the council meetings was occupied by various types of men, representing almost every school of thought. Sir Oliver Lodge was there, and gave his contribution concerning science and religion. He is recognized as an authority on science, and of late is having a great deal to say about religion. His tendency is to confirm many religious claims and principles by the application of scientific principles. He admits that science has no quarrel with miracles, and says that it should seem no more strange that they should take place than it seems to the ants in an anthill when disturbed by a thoughtless boy. It is perhaps not fair to say that Sir Oliver Lodge uses a patronising tone when he talks of religious things, but there are some who say they fear that the hearty welcome he is given will tend to the feeling that Christianity is willing to be patronised.

Christian Union Prominent Theme.

Christian union occupied a large place on the program, one whole session being devoted to it with addresses by Dr. Forsyth of New College, Rev. J. H. Shakespeare, the Rev. Canon Hensley Henson and others.

A resolution was passed committing the scheme presented last year at Hull by Mr. Shakespeare to the careful consideration of the council. The scheme looks to the closer federation of the Free Churches, and a more or less careful supervision to prevent overlapping, but sternly refuses to suggest any interference with present denominational lines.

It does seem to take a lot of talk concerning Christian union before men, even in the front ranks of its advocacy, are willing to practice it in deed and in truth. Does this remark apply to ourselves?

Membership and Ministry Must be Valid.

One thing that was pointed out in the discussion was that before there could be Christian union there must be the common recognition of the legitimacy of the membership of the various churches; and as relating to union with the churches of the episcopal order, the common recognition of the ministry of the various churches.

Cannon Henson still insists upon a creedal basis of some sort, and also upon the agreement that no person should be received into the church before reaching the age of fifteen, and that after at least three months of special catechetical instruction. He definitely repudiates the claim of his church in regard to the episcopacy, and indignantly denounces its sacredotal tendencies.

Dr. Jowett Ill But Present.

Dr. Jowett was too ill to deliver his sermon, for which he was set down as the retiring president, but was present, and received an address presented on behalf of the council by Dr. Horton. The papers have been full of his going to New York during the past few weeks. He has certainly had evidence that he is held in high regard amongst the free churches. Dr. Aked's recent boast that he used to minister to England from his Liverpool pulpit may have contained a good deal of bombast, nevertheless it is true that a man of prominence in this country serves his country from one point of vantage, as it is not possible for any man in America to do. It is only natural considering the size of the two countries, and yet there is a unity of interest here that does not obtain in America, and would not were the country ever so small. The fact that Dr. Jowett passed from Congregationalism to Presbyterianism has caused no little remark. The transition has been explained both here and in America by each saying that denominational lines are but slight in the opposite country. Knowing both countries as I do, the remark, in both cases, is both true and false. Ministers in America are more likely to pass from one of these denominations to the other than they are in England, but, on the other hand, there is a freer exchange here, say between the Congregationalists and Baptists, than in America. On the whole, the members of the various Free Churches in England are more free in their inter-changes than in America. This is specially true in London where denominational lines have practically broken down. It is in the provincial towns and in the country districts where denominationalism is still reckoned, and, strange to say, it is there that union is most needed. Doubtless the same conditions prevail in America. A splendid campaign is needed in the interests of Christian union in the country districts.

The Peace Movement.

The chief topic of conversation at present is the discussion of the suggested arbitration treaty between this country and America. The country is being set aflame from end to end in the endeavour to so arouse public opinion as to strengthen the hands of Sir Edward Grey in his negotiations, and to give the Government courage to go forward. With only a few days' notice, the preachers, both in Free Churches and in the Established Church, up and down the country, preached on peace, and probably thousands of resolutions were presented commending the suggestion. The proposal is supported by the leaders of all political parties, and is thus being lifted out of the realm of politics, and made a great national question. A demonstration is being organized to take place at the Albert Hall in London in the near future, and America is being called upon to organize demonstrations on the same day. I shall be very greatly disappointed in my countrymen if they do not rise to the occasion and in one voice demand that the proposed treaty be carried speedily into effect. If the U. S. Senate rejects the measure, as they did a similar one a few years ago, they should be treated as the House of Lords is now being treated. To my mind it only requires the leadership of Great Britain and of the United States to eventually secure the following of the civilized world.

"Wringeliff," Priory Road, Hornsey, London, England.

The Scottish Church and a New Confession of Faith

Dr. James Moffatt is quoted by a writer in the Hibbert Journal as saying that the churches have not outlived the Gospel but that the Gospel has outlived the Creed. The following remark is quoted from Professor Menzies: "Not long ago the churches were vying with each other for the reputation of orthodoxy, each pointing with an air of virtue at the heretical tendencies appearing in a sister church. Now they have found out, all at once as it were, that the Confession of Faith is, as the creed of a living church of the present, impossible." After presenting the facts, the writer of the article from which these quotations are taken, proceeds to express himself thus:

Surprise may be expressed, in view of all these facts, at the reluctance of the Scottish Church to make a new Confession of Faith. A sufficient answer might perhaps be found in the difficulty of such an undertaking. Thought is not sufficiently ripe, the age is too restless the churches themselves may not be convinced. The truth, however, seems to be that there is a fear lest making a new creed, however short and simple—even though it were as brief as the one which Professor Denney recommends when he suggests that the symbol of the church's unity might be thus expressed: "I believe in God through Jesus Christ. His only son our Saviour"—might endanger the freedom which is at present enjoyed. This is very well expressed by Professor Ernest Scott in his contribution to the series of articles that appeared in the Glasgow Herald: "The very reluctance to abandon the Westminster Confession arises in large measure from the half-conscious feeling that the days of creed-making are over. A new confession framed in however generous a spirit, would impose definite obligations to which few would care to submit themselves, and it seems better on the whole to leave things as they are."

Is Christian Union Talk Sincere?

A Study of Overtures

BY WILLIAM E. BARTON.

Every now and then some religious body convened in its national organization cries out against the great scandal of a divided Christendom. Reports from mission fields give emphasis to the arguments, while overchurched communities where sectarian rivalry flourishes on home missionary appropriations add their double element of perplexity to the problem and urgency for its solution. Every now and again some body of this character announces to the world its serious intention to meet all Christian bodies half way, or a little more, and to terminate so far as in it lies the evils of a church professing one common Lord but divided into a multitude of conflicting and inharmonious sects.

Not Taken Seriously.

These proclamations and overtures have never been taken very seriously by the world at large, or by other branches of the Christian Church. Each one has been duly advertised and been declared the beginning of a new era, but the evil of sectarianism goes straight ahead. The amenities between denominations grow; old sectarian hostility diminishes, and the rancor of the old-time argument has almost completely disappeared. A very considerable degree of Christian toleration has grown out of this and kindred movements, yet it must be confessed that the declarations of the several denominations that they individually intend hereafter to move straight forward to Christian union, have never been taken very seriously. In the judgment of the present writer they have been treated quite as seriously as in general they have deserved.

Speaking broadly, I think it may safely be asserted that those denominations which have talked most in favor of Christian Union have done most to render it impossible. They have cried out in horror against the harm resulting from sectarian divisions, but in general have felt so virtuous over the mere fact of that discovery that they have done but little more.

After This Fashion.

I think I might fairly characterize a number of these movements somewhat after the following fashion:

The representatives of a certain denomination, let us say the Christotheists, if we may invent a name, assemble and pass resolutions something like the following:

Resolved, That all Christians should be one.

Resolved, That there ought to be no division in the body of Christ.

Resolved, That we ourselves, as representatives of the whole body of that part of the church known as the Christotheists, will from this day forward do all that in us lies to remove this sin and reproach from the whole church of Christ.

Resolved, That we propose to all branches of the Christian church an organic union on the basis of the four simple doctrines hereafter named:

(1) One and one are two.

(2) The shortest possible distance between two points is a straight line.

(3) Everybody ought to be good.

(4) All Christian bodies must recognize as of divine appointment the central principle of the Christotheists.

This quadrilateral is adopted, the Doxology is sung, prayer is offered to God for his blessing upon the movement and the convention adjourns, after appointing a body authorized to treat with all other denominations for the reunion of Christendom on this basis.

The Other Bodies Resolve.

One by one the other bodies meet. They receive with dignified courtesy the official overtures from the Christotheists. It is referred to a committee or commission, which, after due deliberation, reports as follows:

Resolved, That we have received with great gratitude and sincere appreciation of the brotherly spirit shown by the Christotheists the foregoing resolutions and believe that they present a nearer approach to possible Christian union than anything we have previously considered from them.

Resolved, That we heartily accept propositions 1, 2 and 3, but believe that some slight modification of No. 4 would be necessary before this denomination, as a whole, could accept it.

Resolved, That we sincerely hope these negotiations may not terminate, and we appoint a commission authorized to confer further with the Christotheists and other Christian bodies in the sincere hope that these negotiations may not end until all the churches of our country and of the world become united in essential unity.

Whereupon they sing the Doxology and adjourn, and something like unto this happens in each of the other denominations as they consider it one by one.

Report Back.

A year or two or three or four years later the Christotheists hold their next convention. Among a multitude of other reports on every conceivable matter of church business and politics is wedged in the report from the commission on Christian unity, which sets forth the fact that these other denominations have acted as they have and deplores the fact that any of them should have quibbled at Article 4. The commission, with tears in its eyes, sets forth the fact that great concessions had been made by this denomination in granting Articles Nos. 1, 2 and 3, and that it could not possibly concede any more without completely surrendering everything which has been held vital in its own history and its centuries of religious teachings. It, therefore, mourns over the obduracy and hardness of heart of these other communions, but thanks God that so far as it is concerned, responsibility for the division of Christendom has ceased. It sends for water and washes its hands and proclaims publically that it has done all that could have been asked of it, and more, and that henceforth the guilt of a divided Christendom must rest on the heads of those who have insisted upon perpetuating it.

Much Literature.

Having done this, it proceeds to issue sectarian literature of the most uncompromising sort, virtually denying the right of any other religious organization in the Protestant world to consider itself an integral part of the Church of Christ, and carries on a vigorous campaign of proselyting, all the while proclaiming that it stands foremost among the denominations as an exponent of Christian union.

The present writer has no doubt that good has come even out of this absurd advance towards Christian Union, but he ventures to suggest that any overture looking toward the reunion of Christendom need not be taken very seriously so long as the denomination making it insists upon including in its prerequisites for union a recognition of that which constitutes in whole or in part the essential element in its present division from the rest of the church of Christ.

The Irishman's Lenten Effort.

There once was an Irishman who went into a restaurant on a Friday in Lent and seating himself at a table said to the waiter, "Bring me a whale!"

The waiter told him that they were just out of whales.

"Thin bring me a shark!"

The waiter replied that they were not serving sharks today.

"Thin bring me a jelly-fish!"

The waiter responded that jelly-fish was not on the bill of fare.

"Thin bring me a good, big beefsteak; for the saints in hiven know I've tried hard enough to get fish!"

The perfectly clear conscience with which this son of the old sod addressed himself to his beefsteak on a Lenten Friday is paralleled by the assurance with which those denominations set forth to do the most sectarian acts, comforted by the knowledge that the saints in heaven know they have tried hard enough to obtain union—upon a basis that would disfellowship a vast majority of Protestant Christians.

A Suggestion.

If it were to be asked, what then shall be our future basis of union, a tentative answer might be made of this sort: Hitherto each denomination has proposed union on the basis of that which has separated it from other Christian bodies. It might be worth while to propose a union on the basis of that which each denomination has in common with all other Christian bodies. When the re-union of Christendom comes it will not be brought about by each denomination shouting its own tenets and then making grudging and parsimonious concessions by way of compromise, each one going reluctantly a mile, while the others insist that it shall go twain. Our fathers were very sure that they were right in the things concerning which they differed from each other. Possibly some day we shall discover an equal confidence that we are right in the things wherein we mutually agree. The writer ventures humbly to suggest that hereafter overtures on behalf of Christian union proceed upon this hitherto untried basis.

Chicago's Bible Celebration

Plans are now well under way for the Chicago celebration of the three hundredth anniversary of the translation of the authorized version of the English Bible. Requests are being sent, accompanied by helpful literature, to all Protestant pastors in the city and immediate suburbs asking that all churches observe Sunday, April 30, as "Bible Day." Let sermons be preached and other appropriate services be held in each individual church according to the individual judgment of the pastor.

On Thursday evening, May 4, a general celebration, interdenominational in character, will be held in Orchestra Hall. The Hon. William Jennings Bryan will deliver the principal address, preceded by brief addresses by two prominent clergymen whose names will soon be ready for announcement. The Apollo Musical Club will furnish the special musical program.

The Cause in Australia

Past, Present and Future

BY A. J. SAUNDERS.

The writer of this article is one of the very welcome contributors to The Christian Century. He is a native of Australia, widely traveled, and has studied in the University of Chicago, where he received the B. D. degree. Mr. Saunders' assessment of Australian conditions among Disciples has been read and commended by another pastor from that country, who agrees that the article correctly diagnoses the situation.—THE EDITORS.

Seven years ago in the city of Melbourne was celebrated with much prayer and earnestness the jubilee of our movement in Australia. It was a notable and successful gathering and showed a substantial and encouraging growth in half a century. The pioneers in this work began almost simultaneously in the two colonies of South Australia and Victoria. They were for the most part Scotch and English people who had migrated to the new Southland. In South Australia the Scotch Baptists were the first known immersionists to establish themselves in that colony. A little congregation was called together, and for some time the father of the celebrated Dr. MacLaren, of Manchester, was their minister.

The doctrines of this church being distinctly and strongly "calvinistic," soon became distasteful to the younger men who had not been indoctrinated with these dogmas and the result was discussion and friction. Thomas Magarey may be regarded as the leader in this new movement. He had recently been influenced by reformation views. The outcome of it all was the opening of the historic Grove Street Church of Disciples in the city of Adelaide on Sunday, December 14, 1856.

Beginning of the Work.

In the city of Melbourne in Victoria a similar thing was taking place. Away back in the year 1853 there appeared in the columns of the Argus an advertisement to this effect: "All Disciples of Christ are earnestly invited to wait upon Bro. J. Ingram, 20 Queen street, Melbourne, with a view to remembering the Lord in his own appointed way."

This was really the beginning of our work in Victoria. The pioneers of the movement were from the old country, sturdy, true men of God they were; of course characteristically conservative. And so the Australian work received a British bias in methods, in point of view and in theology. From time to time there arrived preachers from England who have been the main stay of the movement, and many of whom are still preaching —T. H. Wilner; M. W. Green; C. Watt; H. D. Smith; J. Pittman; and the veteran Edward Lewis.

Contribution of American Men.

But the United States' contribution in the form of great and earnest preachers to these early principles was very great and much appreciated. One can only mention their names with this remark that each name represents an unique and distinctive work done for which Australia will always be grateful. As standing out prominently among these I may mention the names of H. S. Earl; O. A. Carr; G. L. Surber; J. J. Haley; A. B. Maston and T. J. Gore. The last named is with us still doing a noble work in Adelaide, loved and honored by all.

So that two influences have played upon the cause in Australia in its formative days—a British influence, which has predominated, which is naturally cautious and conservative and which has consumed much energy over such petty questions as: The organ, a paid ministry, the title of Reverend, the finances of the church, etc. The British influence has emphasized the restoration of primitive Christianity. And an American influence, which has been much broader and uplifting, giving a world-mission conception of the plea, a greater co-operation with other religious people, and an emphasis on Christian union as our distinctive religious business. So that the Australian church for nearly fifty years has been between these two contending influences—that represented by Peter and that represented by Paul of the first century. Peter has commanded the situation, but now the spirit of Paul is asserting itself and is gaining ground.

Rev. A. J. Saunders.

Middle of the Road.

The church in Australia has prided itself on the middle of the way position. It has repudiated both the conservatism of England and the liberalism of America. But withal the cause in the Southland has been marked by an intense evangelism. It is commonly reported at conventions of other churches that the Disciples are multiplying more rapidly in Australia than any other religious body

But having said this much I must now refer to some grave problems which are lying right across the line of march of this young church. It is or should be of interest to American readers as showing the development of a movement, and how even a religion is modified by its environment and becomes stereotyped. Then the form is locked and method and interpretation become infallible. Such is the history of every creed, theology, and church.

Mutual Exhortation Plan.

The Australian church has committed itself to what is known as the mutual exhortation plan. That is, the morning meeting is an exclusive gathering of the members of the church. Other people do come occasionally, but they are so unwelcome that they seldom come a second time. The speaking members of the church take it in turns to address the meeting. But sometimes the speaker fails to appear, at other times he is unprepared, and again the speaking is often dry and doctrinal. The regular minister occupies his own pulpit in the morning about once a month. What does that mean! The minister—a specialist and leader—has no hold upon and control of the one specific meeting of the church, irrespective of an inspirational and educational value in his sermons. The church, as it seems to me, is suffering by this method.

Doubt Others are Christians.

There is also a sad failure to co-operate with other religious bodies. They are called the sects, and each individual is called a sectarian. Some of our people go so far as to deny that such sectarians are Christians. And hence the only logical conclusion is: Come out from among them, and be ye separate! I know one of our churches in a large and important town which positively refused to co-operate with other religious people in a series of meetings for the good of the town. That church is in bad repute in the town. It is called narrow, sectarian, unchristian, and that church wonders why it does not succeed. Brethren, such a church is not a church of Jesus Christ. It is a denomination. It itself is far more sectarian than those are with which it refuses co-operation. Such people have not the faintest conception of our real business in the religious world. Thomas Campbell's ambition was not to establish another church, but to organize an association—a movement within the church to emphasise love, co-operation and Christian union. Our movement has gained some things, but it has lost many other important things, in our separate, denominational life. The Australian church has and is losing very much by its persistent sectarianism.

Disciples Practice Close Communion!

Perhaps the greatest sectarian agency of the church in Australia is its practice of close communion. It is a strange paradox, but nevertheless a fact, that in Texas and throughout the South the Baptists are close communionists, while our people universally practice open communion. In Australia it is the reverse. The Baptists welcome any and all earnest disciples of Jesus to the Lord's Table, while our people are strictly and I may say, at times, insultingly, close communionists. A strange thing, too, is the fact that many of the rank and file of our members lament and cannot understand the practice of close communion, while the preachers and speakers almost to a man are bitterly opposed to open communion. One may hear again and again from the presiding brother at the table the awful statement: This is the Lord's Table, and only immersed believers have a right to partake of these emblems. How sad it is that we so soon should have entirely lost the noble Christian conception of that great soul, Thomas Campbell! He went throughout the scattered disciples of western Pennsylvania calling the people of God to unite around the Lord's Table. He was opposed by his Presbyterian Church. They were sectarian. Has not the church in Australia reverted to those sectarian days and practices which obtained prior to the call and plea of Thomas Campbell?

Silent Forces Work for Change.

But we are at the beginning of the transition. There are forces silently at work which are making for a brighter and larger day. Our people the world over, the very spirit of our movement will finally overcome all narrowness and sectarianism. We are too earnest a people, and our plea is too much needed to be swallowed alive by pharisaism. God is in the significant upward and onward movements of our time. The whole earth is in the turmoil of movement. It is the birth of a new day.

"He has sounded forth the trumpet
That can never call retreat;
He is sifting out the hearts of men
Before the judgment seat.
Oh, be swift, my soul, to answer him;
Be jubilant, my feet,
Our God is marching on."

The ultimate question with the people of this religious movement is: What is our distinctive message to the religious world? There art two answers given: A plea for a return to primitive Christianity; and a plea for the spirit and practice of Christian union. The American church for the most part has adopted the plea for Christian union. The church in England, that is the David King movement, emphasises the plea for a return to primitive Christianity. While the cause in Australia also emphasises more a return to first century Christianity. At this present writing I have not the time to discuss the merits and demerits of these two positions. But they are fundamental, and we have here the possibilities of two distinct movements. I sincerely trust that our leaders shall never force the issue. If we rightly understand the spirit of this movement, and if we really are not, as we insist, a sect, a denomination, there should be place for men of varying views and interpretations demanding unity in common supreme loyalty to the ideals of Jesus and a passion for the coming of his kingdom.

Prospects are Bright.

If one may interpret the signs of the times the prospects for the church in Australia are bright. Many of the practices and interpretations of thirty years ago will not stand the light of the twentieth century. We need a world-consciousness, a vision. Some of the things I have mentioned are already passing. Others are to follow. Time is a great leveller. But in the process some good earnest souls will be misrepresented and misunderstood. The old order has still its prison, and stake, and wild beasts, and cross, which the new order is made to experience. It has always been so, and I suppose will always be so.

"We rise on stepping stones of our dead selves to higher things."

But even in far-away Australia the twentieth century's watchword—progress—is being felt. And just as soon as we are ready for it the day of larger things will dawn. We cannot stand still. Our look must not be a backward one. We must move onward.

"It is the hour of man: new purposes, broad-shouldered, press against the world's slow gates."

"Always there will be vision for the heart,
The press of endless passion: every goal
A traveler's tavern, whence he must depart
On new divine adventures of the soul."

Our Readers' Opinions

Editors CHRISTIAN CENTURY: In answering Bro. Frazier's question, "Is baptism a part of the process of becoming a Christian?" you answer in the affirmative; and then in reply to his second question, in your issue of March 9, you unhesitatingly say, "one can be a Christian who has not been baptized."

1. Then, in replying to my question, as to whether you meant water, or spirit baptism, you say you had in mind the ceremonial act of baptism in replying to Mr. Frazier's inquiry—not the Holy Spirit baptism. Now it seems to me that the idea that baptism is a part of the process of becoming a Christian, and that a man can become a Christian and not comply with this part of the process, is a contradiction; and for that reason, you will please give a further explanation of your meaning.

2. You will also please give your meaning of "the ceremonial act of baptism;" for the ordinary meaning of the word "ceremony" when used in a religious sense is an outward form or rite; generally used to indicate an internal change that has already taken place; and not a part of the process by which the change is brought about.

Then, my idea of becoming a Christian is the process by which the Christ type of righteousness is brought into the heart by faith; or the operation of spiritual truths upon the mind and heart.

If I understand Paul's teaching in his letter to the Hebrews, he thereby shows that the old ceremonial law, or covenant, was faulty, on the ground that external forms and ceremonies could not cleanse the heart and conscience; and for that reason, a new and better covenent was brought in to take the place of the old.

3. Now, do I understand you to hold, that the baptism of the body in, or with water, is a part of the process of becoming a Christian, by purifying the heart and conscience from sin?

I can hardly think this is your meaning; when facts teach that thousands as good Christians as ever lived,—such as Friends or Quakers, and others—do not hold and practice water baptism. Then how is it possible to bring about Christian union while holding that water baptism is a part of the process of becoming a Christian in character, instead of merely in name?

From this point of view, it seems to me that the important question at this time, is this: Is not church fellowship on the basis of Christian character, the main part of the process of bringing about Christian union in its true sense?

Fulton, Mo. W. H. THOMAS.

---

1. The process of becoming a Christian is never completed in this life. To be a Christian is to be in the process of becoming one. The definition of a Christian quoted from Alexander Campbell by W. L. Hayden in the same issue in which Mr. Frazier's question was answered, namely, one who "believes in Christ, repents of sin, and obeys Christ in all things according to his measure of knowledge of his will," can hardly be improved upon. In this view it is plain how one may be a Christian who has not been baptized and yet how baptism is part of the process of becoming a Christian.

2. In using the expression "ceremonial act of baptism," we had in mind the church as a social institution into which men come by a solemn ceremony of public commitment. In this aspect of the church baptism is a human necessity, and it or its equivalent would have been invented by the church had it not been already provided.

3. Becoming a Christian is assuredly "the process by which the Christ type of righteousness is brought into the heart by faith," but this "process" does not end in the heart: the new type of righteousness impels the possessor of it to ally himself with all others of like mind with himself concerning Jesus Christ, to give and take with them in the fellowship of inner experience and to coöperate with them in realizing the ends that are dear to their common Lord. This is the psychology of the church, and this psychology is a sufficient justification for the church without resort to theological dogma. But it also suggests the psychology of baptism, the solemn initiating ceremony into the communion of saints. We have no hesitation, therefore, in saying that baptism is a part of the process of becoming a Christian. It would hardly have any meaning to say that baptism "purified the heart and conscience from sin," if by that is meant sins of the past. But if the omission of the ceremony were conceived of as a lack in Christian experience then it would be not incorrect to say that the performance of it had significance for the conscience and the heart. It is from this point of view that we are able to find meaning in the Scripture interpretation of baptism which regards it as not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, not a physical act, but the answer of a good conscience toward God.—THE EDITORS

The New Spirit in the Church

Editors The Christian Century: Your recent symposium on the divided church has suggested certain thoughts to me. The churches are gradually growing toward Christian Union. In coming out of the apostasy it was impossible in the very nature of things to discover all the truth at once. Truth is many sided. Each reformer placed special emphasis upon some striking phase of truth. For example: Luther upon justification by faith; Wesley on vital religion; Campbell on Christian union, etc. Denominations were once a necessity. They were necessary to the full elucidation of the truth.

But now we have come to the place where we can get a broader view of truth. We can scan the whole field of discoveries by the great reformers and can place due stress upon all the special phases of the various truths of the churches. We can give each truth its proper setting in a crown we can all wear.

Luther, Wesley, Knox, Campbell and all the other great leaders, did well their part in the great reformation. We can all see now that each of these men was divinely moved by God's Spirit. We are learning more and more the Spirit of the Master.

We can see that His mind is broader than all. He sees with wider, clearer vision. He had a people in the northern kingdom—the kingdom of Israel—as well as in Judah, the southern kingdom. He sent his prophets to each kingdom. Our Lord was leading the Jews to look upon the Samaritans and heathen with different eyes. He would have all know that each nation, each individual, is precious in his sight.

We never shall, perhaps, view all doctrinal points in precisely the same light. Some may prefer one form of church government and some another. Yet, all will be one in the vital things of life. No two now, perhaps, have precisely the same views of God, Christ, the Holy Spirit, heaven or hell, yet we may be one. Paul and Peter differed in their views of certain things; yet, they were one in aim, spirit, and faith. They were the Lord's. We, as Disciples of the one Lord, have his spirit, yet we differ in gifts and knowledge.

If every Disciple must know just as much as every other and hold to precisely the same list of tenets, then Christian union will never come. Let us continue to study the Great Teacher and imbibe His Spirit and He will bring the desired unity when the fulness of the times shall have come.

Brecksville, Ohio. S. C. PIERCE.

The Call of the Home Field

Chorus of Urgent Voices Ask the Church to Remember May Offering

A GLORIOUS PLEA FOR A RIPE FIELD.

American missions should have our best gifts. God is calling us today to great things. If we fail to respond we are nothing less than guilty of contempt. The call is urgent, the need is great. The call is for Christ and for our country! America is the ripest mission field for our glorious plea of all nations on earth. Wonderful opportunities are before us. Lift up your eyes and see. Shall we measure our love to Christ by our interest in this glorious world, by our gifts? More of Christ! More of missions—here at home,—everywhere! Let us be true to our trust!

Richmond, Va. GEO. W. KEMPER.

SOUTH TEXAS SEED-BED.

As the fertile soil of South Texas, long wooed by sun and shower, has waited, and is now being planted to crops of cotton, corn, cane and vegetables, by the incoming tide of homeseekers and homemakers, so this veritable paradise awaits the coming of the gospel seed-sower to scatter and culture the germinant truth of the Master's kingdom in the seed-bed of the multitudinous hearts of men, women and children flocking to this garden-land. We are doing what we can, who are already here; but the soil is so broad, the labor-need so great, that we are in despair before the fairest prospect that ever gladdened the eyes of a preacher or missionary. We have the message, the seed; we have the soil incomparable; God send us sowers and reapers adequate to the task! Ten or twelve preachers, fifteen to twenty little congregations, are not enough; and that is all we have in South Texas. Brethren! send us aid or we die! This fine land will be swamped with godless greed, or swayed by superstition, if we move not quickly. Uncle Sam is mobilizing 20,000 troops on the Rio Grande. What for? No one knows, just now. But if we could mobilize 100 good men in South Texas mission fields we should soon have 100 good churches and 20,000 soldiers of the primitive faith. Oh, send them on!

EDWARD O. SHARPE.
Missionary at Corpus Christi, Texas.

THE EMPIRE OF OPPORTUNITY.

The state of New York is the Empire of Opportunity for the Disciples of Christ. We have many large cities of over 25,000 souls that have never heard the plea for the unity of the church. All of these centers are ripe unto the harvest. But we have not the men nor the money and this problem finally narrows to that of the right kind of leaders to put in our mission churches. When we have the right kind of men the mission grows in spite of its inadequate equipment which problem is soon solved.

C. R. STAUFFER, Cor. Sec'y.

BILLINGS, MONTANA.

Our churches are prospering as never before. Opportunity is ours to take Montana for Christ. The daily arrival of people from Iowa, Missouri, Illinois, Indiana, to settle upon our Montana ranches, near the smaller towns, is the present order of things. A large percentage are our brethren. The Congregational church has appropriated $20,000 this year for Montana and is placing men to organize and preach to Union Congregational churches in these small towns. Our people in Montana are the most loyal to the cause to be found anywhere. Their giving is heroic, over $1 per member throughout the state to state missions. The brotherhood at large should respond to the appeal of Montana's minister, "Loyalty to our Loyal Montana Congregations," by giving $10,000 to the C. M. S. for extending the work in this state. Remember desirable church lots will soon be too expensive to buy, members lost and the present open door closed.

FRANK MAPLES, Minister.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

The field is ripe for the harvest. There are disciples in every town and on the farms about them. The opportunity for unifying all Christians cannot be duplicated anywhere. The one great need is men who are stayers. The whole state has not more than a half dozen. These cannot evangelize our great population. For the strong man who loves his fellows, there as much of romance, as much of sacrifice, as much opportunity to serve and richer returns, as any foreign land can offer. We want men who are stayers.

Oacoma, S. D. NEWTON BUNDY.

MICHIGAN, MY MICHIGAN.

"From Saginaw's tall whispering pines
To Lake Superior's farthest mines,
Fair in the light of memory shines
Michigan, my Michigan."

They go out west to die, but they come to Michigan to live—for re-creation. Michigan, with her lakes and streams, her tall timber, her pure copper, her luscious fruit, her fine farms and her clean cities with their cultured people. We may not move quite so fast as they do in the far west, but on the other hand we do not move so slow as do the eastern people. We have found the golden mean.

For conservative investments, for sure returns, there is no place like home. We challenge the world to produce a better field on which to sow missionary money than that territory lying between the lakes, known as Michigan. Those who are familiar with the changing conditions in this state know that a more fruitful field or more responsive people cannot be found. I have traveled from the southern border of the "Soo," and the entire territory is open. In the whole "coper country" we are doing nothing except at Sault Ste. Marie, where a great church has grown up in three years. Large cities in this north land are Christless and we are standing by helpless.

In the upper part of the lower peninsula the same is true. We have touched but a few points. Wherever we have dropped a dollar, churches have sprung up like magic. Witness Traverse City, Cadillac, etc.

The timber has been cut. The small towns are dwindling. The cities will double in less than a decade. The day of our opportunity is dawning. Let us be wise and send workmen into the field in the morning.

Large work, with small means, may be done in the rural districts from which the tall timber has been taken. These tracts are being transformed by Ohio and Indiana farmers, many of whom are members of the Christian Church.

J. FRANK GREEN,
Associate Sec. M. C. M. S.

MAN! WHAT A CHANCE!

We possess the basis of the greatest empire of the world. As the mighty tide of population surges toward the West, studding our rivers, building up our hearts and cities, destined soon to number a hundred millions, there is only one bond that can hold together so great a people—the gospel of Jesus Christ. As a religious people, we have placed six thousand churches in as many centers to help each ninety millions of people when lo! we find that forty-eight millions have not been touched by any religious body.

To reach this forty-eight millions we are asked by the American Society to raise $1,000,000 in five years. This would be the merest child's play if each Christian had a conscience of about seventy-five cents a member, or fifteen cents each per year. We ought to be giving $1,000,000 every year. Churches, preachers, people, what a chance! The American Society has done marvels with its hands tied. It would perform miracles with half a chance.

WALTER MANSELL.

FROM THE FIRING LINE.

No other religious body is doing so little in North Dakota as the Disciples of Christ. No other has accomplished so much with so limited a supply of funds and workers. No other interpretation of the Christ and his message seems to be so welcome as ours. If we are to be taken seriously in this pragmatic era of thought, we must not only resolve but perform. The test of our loyalty to Christ is our love for those for whom he lived and died. The test of our love is the measure of our sacrifice. Clergymen with "holy tones" and platitudinous utterance will fail. Manly men of scholarship and reserve power who dress in citizen's clothes will win when all others fail. Our chief need is men,

F. B. SAPP.
Fargo, No. Dak.

FRUITFUL FACTS FROM VIRGINIA.

Four hundred and forty-eight have been added in the Virginia mission work in six months, three groups have been made and seven new preachers have begun work in Virginia, while only two have left in the same time. An evangelist will begin work May 1, and we are expecting a Bible-school man June 1. One new church has been organized in a good county-seat, upon which a group will be made. A meeting at Harrisonburg, recently, resulted in thirty-seven additions, the membership more than doubled and the church put on the highway to success. A meeting is now on in Portsmouth. Seventeen have been added in two weeks, and everybody is enthusiastic. Our outlook is unusually encouraging.

H. C. COMBS.

OKLAHOMA'S NEEDS.

America is leading the world in progress. Oklahoma is leading America in rapid growth in wealth and population. From every state in the Union people are coming to Oklahoma. The struggle between the church and the intense commercialism, that blights the religious life of men, is a battle royal. Good men soon lose their zeal for the church in this country if they are not surrounded by strong Christian influences when they come. Yet we have here conditions that challenge the best in us, and develop strong Christian characters. Just in the edge of our own city we have a large dancing pavilion that is operated on Sunday nights, and Sunday base ball during the summer. We are now having a contest as to whether the Lord's Day shall be turned over to the Sunday picture shows.

Prize fights are common enough that they hardly call forth a comment. What we have here in Tulsa we have in most of the large towns of the state. While we are fighting for the supremacy, that Christ may rule in this one of the most beautiful states in America, we need your help. We need it now. And, men of Oklahoma, we need to help ourselves, and need to render that help now.

D. A. WICKIZER.
Tulsa, Okla. Cor. Sec. of Oklahoma.

The Daily Altar

An Aid to Private Devotion and Family Worship

SUNDAY, APRIL 23.

Theme for the Day.—The Resurrection.

Scripture.—But now hath Christ been raised from the dead, the first-fruits of them that are asleep. For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead. For as in Adam all die, so also in Christ shall all be made alive. —I Cor. 15: 20-22.

Today is Resurrection! Take the word,
Cry it aloud to all the waiting earth.
Today is Resurrection! Thou hast heard.
Man must arise unto a nobler birth.

'Tis human thought alone is dead and sleeping.
From orb to orb God's world flames wide awake,
From vast to vast dynamic tides are sweeping,
God's not to blame that man will not partake.
—Angela Morgan ("Resurrection.")

Prayer.—Our God and Father, the world seems very bright and beautiful to us today, as we contemplate it in the light of our Saviour's conquest of death. In his triumph we have a share, for we know that the divine life which he has revealed cannot be holden of death. In him and his redemptive work we are victors over the lower life and all its experiences. Help us to rise from the commonplace to the divine, from sense to spirit and from death to life. For we ask in the name of the Risen Christ.—Amen.

MONDAY, APRIL 24.

Theme for the Day.—Waiting with God.

Scripture.—My soul, wait thou in silence for God only; for my expectation is from him. Psalm 62:5.

For thus saith the high and lofty One that inhabiteth eternity, whose name is Holy: I dwell in the high and holy place, with him also that is of a contrite and humble spirit, to revive the spirit of the humble, and to revive the heart of the contrite. Isa. 57:15.

My soul, in solitude her post has taken,
Between the two seas, on the narrowing bar,—
Sees on each hand the stormful waters shaken,
The twin Eternities unite afar.
There mid faiths slain and idols shattered low,
And many a fallen friend and fallen foe,
She waits by night the flooding tides to be.
—Frederic W. H. Myers ("Pallida Morte Futura").

Prayer.—O God, we are set in a world of mystery where our deepest and most searching questions find but partial answer. Yet in Thy companionship we have peace, for if we cannot learn all the secret of Thy life and purpose, we can learn the daily lesson of growing knowledge, and wait for the larger truth to come. Help us not to be distressed by life's perplexities, but to wait with Thee for the flooding tides of a fuller life. In Jesus' name we ask. Amen.

TUESDAY, APHIL 25.

Theme for the Day.—Things that Fail Not.

Scripture.—We may have a strong encouragement who have fled for refuge to lay hold of the hope set before us, which we have as an anchor of the soul, a hope both sure and steadfast. Heb. 6:18, 19.

There hath not failed one word of all his good promise. Kings 8:56.

In the bitter waves of woe,
Beaten and tossed about
By the sullen winds that blow
From the desolate shores of doubt,
Where the anchors that faith has cast
Are dragging in the gale,
I am quietly holding fast
To the things that cannot fail,
—Washington Gladden ("Ultima Veritas").

Prayer.—Our Father, we praise Thee for this new day. We come to Thee with a prayer for strength to do the day's work courageously and well. We do not wish to slight any duty. We want to live with a sense of completion and achievement. And we know that this is possible only as we hold fast to Thy truth and Thy promises. We renew our covenant with Thee, and take firmer hold on things eternal. In Christ's name. Amen.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 26.

Theme for the Day.—The Divine Life Within.

Scripture.—I have been crucified with Christ; yet it is no longer I that live, but Christ liveth in me; and that life which now live in the flesh I live in faith, the faith which is in the Son of God, who loved me, and gave himself for me. Gal. 2:20

As some rare perfume in a vase of clay
Pervades it with a fragrance not its own,
So, when Thou dwellest in a mortal soul,
All Heaven's own sweetness seems around it thrown.
The soul alone, like a neglected harp,
Grows out of tune, and needs Thy hand divine;
Dwell Thou within it, tune and touch its chords,
Till every note and string shall answer Thine.
—Harriet Beecher Stowe ("Abide in Me").

Prayer.—O Lord, we adore Thee as the Author of our being. Thou hast made us in Thine own image, and our lives gain dignity from this divine relationship. Yet it is for us to determine how much this privilege shall mean to us. We know that it must depend on our deliberate choice whether or not we shall reveal to the world the harmony and fragrance of God's life in our own. Save us, we beseech Thee, from the defeat of failure in this high purpose. Enfold us in Thy love, and make our way plain to the city of God.—Amen.

THURSDAY, APRIL 27.

Theme for the Day.—The Heavenly Harmony.

Scripture.—And they sing a new song saying, worthy art thou to take the book, and to open the seals thereof; for thou wast slain, and didst purchase unto God with thy blood men of every tribe, and tongue, and people and nation. Rev. 5:9.

All time, all bounds, the limitless expanse,
As one vast mystic instrument are touched
By an unseen, living hand: the conscious chords
Quiver with joy in this great jubilee;
The dying hear it and as sounds of earth
Grow dull and distant, wake their passing souls
To mingle in this heavenly harmony.
—Richard Henry Dana ("Immortality").

Prayer.—Dear Father, Thou art daily teaching us the secret of our truer, deeper life. We are grateful for home and family, for friends and food and raiment. But we are richest in the possessions that are invisible, and that cannot be lost. Prepare us to make our best belongings permanent, to count our lives as only capable of beginning here, and to look forward for the consummations of life in the Father's presence. Hear us in love for Thy name's sake. Amen.

FRIDAY, April 28.

Theme for the Day.—The Coming Era of Peace and Unity.

Scripture.—Having abolished in his flesh the enmity, even the law of commandment contained in ordinances; that he might create in himself of the two one new man, so making peace. Epr. 2:15

And he that sitteth on the throne, said, Behold, I make all things new. Rev. 215.

Come clear the way, then, clear the way;
Blind creeds and kings have had their day.
Break the dead branches from the path:
Our hope is in the aftermath—
Our hope is in heroic men,
Star-led to build the world again.
To this event the ages ran
Make way for Brotherhood—make way for Man.
—Edwin Markham ("Brotherhood").

Prayer.—Our Divine Guide and Teacher, we put ourselves as little children into Thy hands. We are yet unformed and immature. Thou alone canst shape us to the great ends of being, for Thou art making us in Thine image. We are grateful for the good and holy men who have wrought at the task of bringing in the new and better day. We would share, to the limit of our strength, in this high enterprise. And thus we shall be joined to the great brotherhood of faith. Amen.

SATURDAY, APRIL 29.

Theme for the Day.—The Unsearchable God.

Scripture.—Canst thou by searching find out God? Canst thou find out the Almighty unto perfection? It is high as heaven; what canst thou do? Deeper than Sheol: what canst thou know? Job 11:7, 8.

We think, we feel, we are;
And light, as of a star,
Gropes through the midst—a little light is given;
And aye from life and death
We strive, with indrawn breath,
To somehow wrest the truth, and long have striven,
Nor pause, though book and star and clod
Reply, canst thou by searching find out God?
—Edmund Clarence Stedman ("Quest").

Prayer.—In our own wisdom, Good Father, we seem to know not anything. All our searchings cannot find Thee in nature, and all our phrases cannot give Thee such description as to satisfy the soul. But in the life of our Lord Jesus Christ we have found Thee revealed, and our hearts have grown glad with a deep and holy joy. Trusting to his guidance we can discern Thee in all the works of Thy hands, and our faith grows to strength and joy. Amen.

The Moral Leaders of Israel

BY PROFESSOR HERBERT L. WILLETT

Section XVIII. Hosea's Message to Israel

April 30. Text for Special Study, Hosea, 11, 12.

QUESTIONS.

1. In what period did Hosea live?
2. What was the character of the closing days of Samaria?
3. What were the policies of the two rival parties in the kingdom of Israel?
4. How did Hosea feel regarding the political conduct of his people?
5. What kind of leaders were in power?
6. What was the effect of the shrines upon the religious life of Israel?
7. What events at the court are commented upon by the prophet?
8. What was the attitude of the priest and the other prophets toward Hosea?
9. What did Hosea regard as his mission?
10. What caused the prophet to display so much emotion in his preaching?
11. What different moods does he show in his words?
12. Point out the chief features of chapters 11 and 12 which form the special study of this week.
13. What use does the gospel of Matthew make of Hosea's reference to the childhood of Israel (Matt. 2:15)?
14. What threat concerning the future did Hosea constantly repeat?
15. What references does Hosea make to the patriarchs of the nation?
16. What do you imagine was the success of Hosea's work?
17. Why are there so many references to Judah in the Book?
18. Why is the book of Hosea of so much importance?

1. THE DECLINE OF SAMARIA.

Hosea was the prophet of the decline and fall of northern Israel, which came to an end as a political power in 721 B. C., when its capital, Samaria, was captured and destroyed by Sargon of Assyria.

Its recent history had been wavering and uncertain. The brilliant reign of Jereboam II. (781-740 B. C.) was followed by changes so rapid and so disastrous as to portend an early and certain destruction. Within twenty years seven kings reigned in Samaria. Assassinations were frequent. A monarch would be dethroned by one of his courtiers or generals, and the nation was plunged afresh into civil war. There was no settled political program. Two parties contended fiercely in the city, the one advocating submission to Assyria, and the other incited by Egyptian promises contending for independence. Some of the kings, like Menehem and Pekah, were men of character and ability, but for the most part the rulers were the puppets of court intrigue. Hosea points out the scenes of debauchery and blood which took place in the palaces of Samaria (7:3-10; 8:4-10).

The prophet was strongly impressed with the futility of these wavering and vacillating policies. Ephraim, he said, was like a silly dove that turned now to Assyria and now to Egypt for help. Ephraim was a cake not baked, because there was no thorough going plan of action (5:13; 7:8-11; 8:9).

The leadership of the nation was untrustworthy and vicious. Princes, priests and prophets all used their power for selfish and unholy ends. Not only were the ordinary forms of graft practiced, but these spoilers of the people did not hesitate to rob even on the public highway (4:4-9; 5:10; 6:9).

The sanctuaries like Bethel, Gilgal and Dan were supported with costly gifts from all classes, and there was a general feeling that everything was safe so long as the ritual was duly performed. Yet to the prophet these shrines were the very centers of iniquity. He warned the people away from them as from places of moral pollution (4:15; 9:15; 12:11). Unlike Amos, who seemed unconcerned and contemptuous in reference to the images and other symbols of the popular worship, Hosea was deeply moved with anger and alarm at this side of the religion. He knew by sad experience what the idol worship meant, with its origin of sensualism and its disregard of moral integrity. He therefore charged the use of images in the worship with much of the degeneracy of the time.

2. THE MISSION OF HOSEA.

Conscious of the fact that he represented the higher religion of Israel in a day when it stood in deadly danger of decline and extinction, the prophet proclaimed his unalterable antagonism to the popular tendencies in church and state. The predictions of Amos, his great predecessor, were already coming true. During the successful reign of Jeroboam II. the people might well insist that Amos had falsely warned them of impending danger, for what could be greater than the strength and success of the nation? Now, however, all was changing. Hosea's active ministry lay in the period of decline when the nation was sliding rapidly downward to the abyss.

The intrigues and assassinations at the court were the tokens of an incurable weakness in the state (4:1, 2; 7:1, 2). With figures taken from the work of a baker, near whose shop the prophet may have lived, he refers again and again to the constant revels of the court and the scenes of debauchery which only tarried while jaded human nature was revived to plunge into fresh excesses (7:4-7).

The terrible experience through which Hosea had gone gave him sufficient awareness regarding the deadly character of the religion of the shrines. It was not only unfaithfulness to God which he described by the new word adultery, for the first time employed in the vocabulary of religion, but the actual tendencies of such practices as those of the cultus was to loosen the bonds of domestic fidelity, and to encourage an immorality that to Hosea's stern and sensitive mind was nothing less than an image of horror. Words fail him as he attempts to show how the lax principles of his day issued logically in the terrible profligacy that had degraded and ruined so much of Israel's manhood and womanhood (4:10-14; 5:3, 4; 9:1, 10).

To maintain this attitude of protest was a dangerous and unhappy duty. Like Jeremiah in later times he found that the people were inclined to follow the popular and smooth-spoken preachers of the day rather than one who denounced their sin and attempted to stir their consciences. He complained of their attitude of opposition toward his work (9:7, 8). To them he seemed like a pessimistic misanthrope, a half mad fanatic who labored incessantly to destroy the happier side of life. They claimed to be on easy terms with God and were confident of his favor (8:2). But the prophet knew that they were only building on unsubstantial foundations. It was his mission to enlighten the people by showing them what God really wanted, and how they were being misled by the men who pretended to speak in his name.

Even common honesty in business dealings was outraged by the eager and avaricious traffickers. They did not hesitate to cheat in weights and measures (12:17), and the darker crimes of the day, taking their inspiration from the court itself, filtered down to the common classes of the population (4:1, 2; 7:1, 2).

In opposition to all this it was the insistent purpose of Hosea to proclaim the divine will and to show that God had no interest in the mere externals of religious observance, but only in right conduct and good will. An utterance of Hosea's which Jesus loved to quote sets forth this great truth, "I desire mercy and not sacrifice" (6:6). There was no virtue, the prophet taught, in any formal expression of religion, unless it was informed by genuine piety and the spirit of honest citizenship (8:13).

The Moral Leaders of Israel is a Sunday School course for Young People's and Adult Bible Classes. It will continue throughout the year 1911. The publishers of THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY will supply classes of six or more with weekly copies of the paper containing these lessons, at $1 per year for each copy, or 30 cents per quarter. The class members will receive in addition to their Sunday-school lesson all the rich things provided every week in THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY. The papers distributed to the class on Sunday will contain the lesson for the following Sunday. Orders should be sent through the regular Sunday-school Treasurer if you wish to pay quarterly; or you may deal directly with the Publishers, enclosing remittance at the rate of $1.00 per year for each copy ordered. Be sure and give name of teacher or class member to whom papers shall be sent for distribution.

3. THE PROPHET'S EMOTION.

One of the singular features of Hosea's message is its rapid changes of tone. He was so deeply sensitive to his own tragic experience and to the similar abandonment of Jehovah by Israel that his preaching tended always to take the direction of this relationship. His own passionate love of the woman who had dishonored him seems never to have ceased. Yet as he watched the waywardness of the people in their tendency to forsake Jehovah for the other gods he was unable to control his emotion.

At one moment he would speak in the tender words of forgiveness and entreaty, even as he must often have spoken to the woman whom he had loved and whom he sought to win from her unfaithfulness (6:1-3). Then there would come a mood of despair as he detected in the popular conduct some fresh sign of hostility or some indication that they preferred their evil way to the good life he interpreted (6:4, 5). In such moments he was filled with a desperate anger, and felt as if he could tear them in pieces even as he had been furious in the old days when the conduct of his wife was so exasperating and insolent (5:14; 9:13).

Sometimes this denunciation reaches an intensity which seems to leave no possible hope of pardon. In one terrific utterance Hosea cries, speaking for God, "Shall I ransom them from the power of the grave? Shall I redeem them from death? Oh death, where are thy plagues? Oh grave, where is thy destruction? Repentance shall be hid from my eyes" (13:14). At a moment like this the prophet felt that death was the only possible sequel to such conduct as he was witnessing, and with bitter anger he called aloud for the stroke of death and the plagues of the grave, affirming that never again would the divine and retributive purpose be changed.

Yet the book closes with a loving and winsome appeal, to which apparently the prophet believes there will be a glad response, and thus with the outlook upon a brighter future Hosea ends his message to Israel.

4. THE FOLLY OF EPHRAIM. Chapters 11, 12.

Perhaps no section of this deeply interesting book is more admirably illustrative of Hosea's style and message than the two short chapters which have been chosen as the special study of this week. All the qualities which have been pointed out in the preaching of this great prophet will be discovered in these sections.

Hosea first refers to Israel's experience as a youth when Jehovah calls his out of Egypt, but even in that early time the nation was never true to its God. It sacrificed and burned incense to the gods around and did not understand that Jehovah was its only source of strength and its only provider of blessing (1-3).

Because of this disobedience devastation and exile must fall upon the nation. Yet they shall never go back toward Egypt, but rather the Assyrian shall be their master in the days of trouble ahead. All this is because of their refusal to listen to the instructions of God through his prophet. They call upon God but do not really attend to his wishes (5-7).

Then there is a note of tenderness and compassion, as the prophet cries out in grief, "How shall I give thee up, O Ephraim?" It seems impossible that the people he loves so truly shall be given over to the merciless cruelties of a foreign race. He cannot bear to think of Bethel and Samaria becoming like those cities of the plain long since blotted out and even as he thinks of it his mood changes and he returns to something of his warmer and more sympathetic feeling in the assurance that he will not destroy Ephraim. Rather does he believe that they will follow after Jehovah whose voice they can so clearly hear and with humility and confession of sin they will return to their true God (8-11).

But what an unsteady and deceitful people it is. Israel pretends one thing and performs another. Judah is as yet faithful, but Israel is filled with conceit and tries to follow out vain and impossible policies of government. The nation was always untrustworthy, even from birth, in spite of those wonderful opportunities which had come to it for culture and wisdom. Only by accepting the higher ideals which Jacob had seen afar in his dream at Bethel and his wrestling at Penuel could the nation achieve its true estate (11:12; 12:6).

But what was the actual condition? The nation had forgotten these loftier purposes and had plunged madly into the quest of money. The people had forgotten all moral restraint in their desire to become wealthy.

God could not look with tolerance upon such conduct. They would either have to repent in the humility of a solemn feast or go back to the desert in its rude and primitive life (7-9).

What could God do for such a people that he had not already done? He had given them prophets, visions and parables, yet look at the sanctuaries like Gileod and Gilgal. Upon places where only the externals of religion were practiced destruction must surely come (10, 11).

The lesson of their patriarch Jacob they had never laid to heart, and Moses, the prophet by whom God led Israel out of Egypt, was not longer revered or followed save in pious platitudes of worship. The sins of Ephraim had provoked God to anger and the only future was one of darkness and disaster (12-14).

5. RESULTS OF HOSEA'S MINISTRY.

It is always of interest to conjecture what the results of Hosea's preaching must have been. That no considerable body of the people turned to better things is shown by the fact that the nation soon came to its end. Perhaps the visible fruit of Hosea's preaching was dishearteningly small. That he gathered about him a group of discerning and sympathetic minds is probable. The fact that the book in which Hosea's experience and messages were enshrined took form and was preserved would point to such a group of believers.

More than this, the frequent references of Judah in this book seem to be less the comments of Hosea himself upon the neighboring nation than the utterances of some prophet of Judah who used Hosea's words at a later time to bring home to the southern kingdom a message of warning and encouragement adding his own references to current events to make his preaching more applicable to his audience. Such passages as 1:7, 1:10-2:1, 4:15-17, 6:11 and 8:14, would seem to be of this character. Particularly interesting are those which warn Judah away from the companionship of Ephraim, "Ephraim is joined to his idols. Let him alone." There was hope still for the southern people, although the day of grace for the northern kingdom was passed.

The book of Hosea is a tract for the times. The times of Hosea and the times in which we live. If religion has reached a far higher plane it is still in danger of formalism and legalism and the sins of society, while not so gross, are not less alarming than those that wasted the life of Samaria. Still must the prophet's voice be lifted against the things that war against the soul, still must he insist upon domestic fidelity and moral uprightness. The book is the first and largest of the minor prophets, and as such, in spite of its forbidding picture of the prophet's own experience and its constant portrayal of the degenerate life of Israel, it is one of the most illuminating of all the Old Testament writings. One can rise from a careful study of this book with the feeling that now he knows something of the mystery of sadness which looks out from that hooded face of Hosea's in Sargent's panel of the prophets. It is the sufferer who brings this urgent and persuasive message, and if his words did not avail to save the city he loved, even as Jesus could not save Jerusalem, yet they are words which may well be laid to heart by the generation to which we belong.

FOLLOWING STUDIES.

The next section will deal with Isaiah of Jerusalem, and then will follow with the story of his work as a public leader in the days of Ahaz and Hezekiah.

TOPICS FOR SPECIAL STUDY, REPORTS AND PAPERS.

1. The last days of the kingdom of Israel.
2. The chief sanctuaries of Israel and their effect upon the public life.
3. The contrast between Amos' attitude toward the religious use of images and that of Hosea.
4. The permanent results of Hosea's work.
5. The relation of Hosea to the popular prophets of his day.
6. The literary features of the book of Hosea.

LITERATURE.

Addis, "Hebrew Religion;" Cornill, "The Prophets of Israel"; pp. 47-55; Kirkpatrick, "The Doctrines of the Prophets," pp. 109-142; George Adam Smith, "Book of the Twelve Prophets," 1, pp. 211-354; W. R. Harper, "Amos."

Christian Endeavor Lesson

BY W. D. ENDRES.

A Missionary Journey Around the World. IV. Missions in Hawaii and the Philippine Is. 60:1-2. Topic April 30.

In our former lessons in this world-wide journey we had to explain why we should call the United States a field for missionary work. It now perhaps is in order to say that Hawaii is a Christian nation. These islands present one of the most remarkable examples of missionary conquest in Christian history. Soon after Henry Obookiah was found on the steps of Yale College weeping for an education for himself, and for the conversion of his native people, attention was turned to his people, and in October, 1817, the first missionary party of seventeen people, led by Hiram Bingham and Asa Thurston, set sail for the islands, and in 1863, forty-four years after that date, they were formally declared a Christian nation. The work was handed over to the Hawaaian Evangelical Association. But the large number coming to the islands from China and Japan has made the resumption of missionary work necessary. This work will doubtless have to be continued for some time.

Conditions are widely different in the Philippines. Here is a group of islands, rich in natural resources. The climate is tropical and soil is fertile. They have been known to civilization for a number of centuries and many immigrants with a knowledge of European civilization have gone to the islands. For three centuries they were a colony of Spain, but despite all this when they came into the possession of the United States in 1898, the vast majority of the inhabitants were a primitive people. That is, people who live for the most part without any settled habitation and regular industry. They subsist upon what the land and streams spontaneously produce, dwell unclothed in the forests and caves, and war upon their neighboring tribes. From a present-day Christian point of view their vice and moral depravity is unspeakable.

With American occupation of the islands, religious freedom was established, and simultaneously Protestant missions entered. The Friars who conducted the only form of Christian work up to the time of the Spanish-American war, were unable "to evangelize, educate, and civilize the backward portions of the community." Unoccupied territory, dissemination of a knowledge of the Bible, the rescue of those who had grown skeptical under the immoralities and injustices of the priests, and the salutary effect that the work of Protestants will have upon the Roman church itself, are among the big reasons for Protestants in Philippines. Their success in the past has been phenomenal, and their work of the future promising indeed. Says one author, "Here are millions of people eager for education, thrilling with half-formed and immature, but beautiful aspirations toward nationality, dissatisfied with the narrowness and torpor of their past, not yet ready to cope with the problem of the future. The present is to them like the period of adolescence—ardent, aspiring, with the boy's will which is the wind's will, but open to influences of good as never again."

Notes From the Foreign Missionary Society

The Foreign Society has recently received a $2,000 gift on the annuity plan from a good brother in Ohio and another gift of $1,000 from a friend in Pennsylvania. One thousand has also been received in bequest from the estate of Mrs. Nancy J. Mecham, of Springfield, Mo.

Orders for Children's day supplies have been received from Cuba, Jamaica, Mexico, Japan and Australia. The day will be observed around the world. A great many schools have already ordered supplies and are at work. The greatest Children's day in the history of the work is assured.

F. M. Rains writes: "All told we have 700 pupils under instruction in Nankin, China, and a teaching staff of more than thirty, counting native teachers. This includes one-third of the attendance in Nankin University, but does not include the large number in Bible classes."

Dr. Zenas Loftis, who died two years ago at Batang on the Tibetan border, left a very complete and fascinating diary of his long journey from America to Tibet. The Fleming H. Revell Company of New York are publishing this book. The title is "From Far Batang." The book will be of thrilling interest and we predict for it a large sale.

The adult Bible classes have been asked to support the hospital work of the Foreign Society as their special Children's day work. Twenty-five thousand dollars is the annual expense of this great work aside from the salary of the missionaries. Ten dollars will provide medicines and bandages for 100 patients; $25 will support a hospital bed for a year; $50 a hospital evangelist for a year, and $100 will provide the entire support of a branch dispensary for a year. Nearly 200,000 patients are treated annually in these hospitals. These patients are all taught concerning Christ and many become Christians.

Miss Mary Kelly, of Nankin, China, is now in Pasadena, Cal. She has come home on furlough earlier in the year than usual because she was thrown from a donkey and injured so that she could not carry on any work.

Dr. John Sergis has been in Persia for the past eight years. He has been healing the sick and preaching the gospel. He has built up quite a work in that land. He is preparing to return to Persia under the auspices of the Foreign Society. His work will be the same as heretofore, but his connection with the society will keep him in closer touch with the brotherhood everywhere.

STEPHEN J. COREY, Sec'y.

Illinois Department

State Office, 24 Illinois National Bank Bldg., Springfield

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY is a national religious paper published by the Disciples of Christ in the interests of Christian unity and the Kingdom of God. While its circulation is nationwide and impartially distributed among all the states, it recognizes a special obligation to the State of Illinois in which it is published. It desires particularly to serve the cause of Christ in Illinois by publishing its significant church news, by interpreting its religious life and by promoting the ideals of the Disciples within its borders. To this end the publishers of THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY maintain a state office at Springfield, the capital and central city. It is the purpose of the state editor to study the whole field of Illinois, visiting all the churches, reporting his observations and pointing the churches to ever higher ideals. Pastors and church workers are requested to co-operate by regularly sending items of news, clippings from local papers, parish papers, weekly leaflets, occasional paragraphs of sermons and any other information that will give to the state editor all the data for reporting and interpreting the progress of Christian work in the state. All communications to the editor may be addressed, 24 Illinois National Bank Building, Springfield. All business communications should be addressed to the Chicago office.

A unanimous call to the church at Erie has been extended Paul M. Mundey and the same has been accepted.

Lynnville Church is to be ministered to by S. Wesley Johnson, who has been pastor at North Crystal Lake.

Albert E. Smith held a meeting at Glover College, resulting in 6 confessions, with splendid congregations.

D. E. Hughes, for many years pastor of Monmouth Church, is being assisted in a meeting, by Allen Wilson and his singer, Mr. Lewis.

St. Elmo Church recently burned a mortgage of long standing on its building. The congregation is happy over the result. S F. Farner is pastor.

Andrew Scott, of Danville, district evangelist for the Sixth District of Illinois is planning to spend the summer in Scotland, his native home.

J. E. Story in his meeting at Keysport is preaching to large congregations of people and has succeeded in securing 10 additions up to last report, all being by baptism.

Central Church at Streator will be assisted in a meeting by C. R. L. Vawter and C. E. Marty. The pastor at Streator is C. M. Smithson.

At Ancona, where Guy L. Zerby is pastor, a meeting is being conducted by C. R. L. Vawter. This is the second meeting which Mr. Vawter has conducted for this church.

W. W. Weedon is pastor at Assumption. The fine fellowship existing among the churches here is manifest by a Union Service held the first Sunday evening in each month.

The meeting at Pittsfield where W. H. Cannon is pastor and which is being conducted by John R. Golden of West Side, Springfield, resulted in 43 additions to the church.

The new church, at Cairo is nearing completion. The congregation has secured F. H. De Vol of Missouri, who begins his pastorate there at once with conditions favorable to a successful ministry.

Under protest of the church, George Woodman has resigned, and will leave the Polo congregation May 1. This pastorate has been successful. Some church should call Mr. Woodman to its pastorate at once.

At Palestine where D. W. Conner recently became pastor there are frequent additions. There were nine baptisms at a Wednesday evening service a few weeks ago and the work is in a prosperous condition.

At Johnston City where W. E. Moore is minister, a meeting is being conducted by George P. Bramel of Kentucky. Beside stimulating the membership of the church there are indications of an excellent increase in the membership.

Following the Biederwolf meeting at Streator there were 27 additions on a recent Lord's day. The minister, C. M. Smithson, will be assisted in a meeting by C. R. L. Vawter, and indications are that a meeting of considerable proportions will be held.

Evangelist H. M. Barnett is in a meeting at Creal Springs. The church has had no pastor for some time, but the prospects for the meeting are good. Mr. Barnett will hold a meeting in a tent at Lewis Chapel next month. E. E. Hartley is the pastor.

Tallula Church, where C. E. French is minister, will build an addition to its edifice. This is made necessary by the enlarged Sunday-school, and in order to provide proper conveniences and accommodations for the advance work being accomplished.

Robinson church where G. S. McGaughey is pastor has closed a chautauqua for boys with A. W. Conner, of Indiana, as leader. This was held in co-operation with all the churches of the town and was considered of great value in creating intelligence regarding the boy problem and its solution.

Granite City meeting conducted by C. E. Booth of St. Louis assisted by Miss Vera Morris, was concluded with 18 additions, 12 of these being baptized. The minister Oliver W. Jennings is enjoying the co-operation of his people and succeeding in the pastorate.

Galesburg Church where J. A. Barnett is pastor, will have a meeting in May with Charles Reign Scoville and his company. For the meeting a large tabernacle will be erected and a number of congregations in that vicinity will co-operate. There is great expectation.

The evangelistic meeting at Augusta, conducted by Mr. Sword and lasting for four weeks, resulted in 108 additions. The meeting thoroughly stirred the church and town and plans are being considered for enlargement and improvement of the church edifice. The pastor is E. T. Cornelius.

Washington Church will be pastorless after the middle of June. Ernest Reed has been pastor here for three years and is highly recommended by the officials of the congregation. The pastorate relation is being dissolved with the kindliest feeling existing between pastor and the entire church membership.

The Beardstown meeting with Secretary J. Fred Jones preaching and Elmer E. Rice of Dixon leading the music, is progressing. The last report indicated 13 additions. This is a new congregation and the corporation papers are just being taken out. It is anticipated that sufficient money will be raised to buy a property before the close of the meeting.

W. B. Clemmer, of Rockford Church, exchanged pulpits last Sunday with O. F. Jordan, of Evanston (Chicago) Church. Rockford was formerly Mr. Jordan's pastorate. Mr. Clemmer reports that a building enterprise for Rockford has gone past the stage of revolution by the official board and will quite certainly become an accomplished fact in time.

W. H. Waggoner has recently concluded institutes at Arrowsmith, Lincoln, Antioch, Mason City, Lovington, Moweaqua, Roodhouse and Hartsburg. These institutes are spoken of in a very complimentary way by pastors and congregations, and succeed in accomplishing a quickened conscience in the churches as well as increasing Christian intelligence.

O. C. Bolman, pastor at Pekin, preached a strong sermon recently on the Lord's Prayer which was printed in the Peoria Journal. Mr. Bolman urged vigorously that in praying for daily bread it is "honest bread" only that we have a right to pray for. The bread, the livelihood, that is gotten unjustly either by a business that is in itself nefarious or by questionable industrial methods was condemned in a forthright manner.

J. H. Wright is minister at Harristown where last month the 50th anniversary of the organization of this church was celebrated. All but four of the 20 charter members are dead. The remaining four were present at the anniversary service. Of these the youngest is now 78 years of age and the oldest 82. G. M. Goode, the oldest former pastor, O. W. Lawrence, of Central Church, Decatur, W. H. Harding, of Maroa, A. P. Cobb and Judge W. E. Nelson, of Decatur, and the pastor, J. H. Wright, were among the speakers of the day. After the morning service the Ladies' Aid Society served a dinner in the town hall. Following this dinner was a devotional service and presentation of the four charter members, an address by A. P. Cobb, and a fellowship hour with greetings from former pastors and friends of the congregation. The congregation is encouraged over its beginning of a new semi-centennial of history.

Pekin church, where O. C. Bolman preaches, gave $33.25 for foreign missions. This is a large improvement over the offerings of previous years. The two preceding years the offering amounted to only a little over $300. The pastor is not, however, satisfied with the amount given, and in making an investigation relative to the number of people who gave, he found that a relatively small proportion of the congregation had fellowship in the service. It is an encouraging sign when pastors and official boards will begin to take serious account of the fact that the current expense offering and missionary contributions are made by a few rather than by a large majority of the congregation. A signal success in giving is not one where a large amount is raised from a few people. The individuals who give such an offering will be blessed, but the congregation will not. A revival meeting for the re-enlistment of retired Disciples would prove of momentous consequence in many churches.

News Editorials

Men's Class to Study Immigration.

The Sunday-school, as a foremost specialist insists it shall be called, is flexible enough to admit of any study which deals with the individual's salvation or social betterment. Robert H. Newton, of Atlanta, recognizes this fact and is leading his Brotherhood class into profitable fields of study. Several months ago the Christian Century gave extended notice to the class beginning a study of "The Gospel of the Kingdom," by Josiah Strong. A report of this three months' study says, "It has broadened our views of Christianity and the mission of the church, and deepened the conviction that Christianity means service." This class will now take up, very appropriately, as a sequel to this, a study of the immigration problem. The announcement in the local bulletin is worthy of reprinting:

"If the news should be flashed over the wires that a foreign foe a million strong had landed on our Eastern shore all would be deeply concerned and every able bodied citizen would be ready to respond to a call to arms to repel the invaders and we would call it patriotism.

"A million immigrants, 80 per cent of them from southern and eastern Europe, the vast majority unable to read or write, utterly unfit for self government, come to the United States every year, but how few give it any serious thought. But it is true that unless they are properly dealt with they become a greater menace to American institutions than an invading army of a million men.

"There is a call for a patriotism of peace that will lead the citizens of this country to look this problem in the face. Will we Americanize them or will they Foreignize us? Will America go the way of Rome? It is time to throw off our false and unfounded sense of security and study conditions. Much depends upon the attitude of the church.

"Religion and education alone can transform this motley horde into safe, self governing American citizens. The nation's hope rests in an enlightened Christian citizenship.

"Our Men's Brotherhood Bible class invite all men to join with them this quarter in the study of the problem of immigration that we may be better prepared for the service of our country and our Lord."

A Masculine Church.

The Fourth Christian Church of Danville is according to reports a masculine church. It is the youngest of our congregations in that city and is carrying on an enterprise of building a new house of worship, which will be completed in a few weeks at an expense of $10,000. The dedicatory sermon will be preached by Evangelist Charles Reign Scoville. At nearly every Sunday service, there are more men than women. At the prayer-meeting, the women are usually out-numbered by the men two to one, and two-thirds of the Sunday-school teachers are men. The congregation is situated in a workingmen's district and is composed mostly of laboring men—miners, brick-makers and mechanics. The pastor is H. D. Williams, a minister who has had a fine experience and who has done work of a very strong and successful nature in a number of churches. He has a message for men. While the location may be partially responsible for the masculine element in the church, it is certain that the pulpit and pastoral ministrations are in no small degree responsible for this unusual result.

Appealing to Morbid Expectancy.

An Illinois secular newspaper prints a leading editorial entitled, "How to Go to Hell," taking the subject from a sermon theme announced by an evangelist preaching in the city. The newspaper takes the evangelist to task vigorously for indulging in sensational preaching. "This subject," says the editorial, "is in a dead level with sermons 'for men only' when every reprobate in town crowds into the church expecting to hear language unfit for decent ears. Preachers and public speakers, and newspapers, too, are familiar with this morbid curiosity of many and they too frequently appeal to it for purposes that are not always the highest. No minister need use deceit or subterfuge to get men to listen to the teaching of Christianity. Heaven and how to get there should be the theme for every sermon." The core of the argument of the editorial is that ministers should not use topics that even stir up morbid or merely curious expectation, no matter what use is made of the occasion when the people are gathered together. This thesis is indisputable.

Illinois Secretarys' Letter

Girard is pulling together fine—they always do—and the work prospers accordingly. Sheeler Campbell is beloved by all. A husband and wife recently united with the church, one 80 and the other 78 years old.

Pres. A. C. Gray, of Eureka College, has a splendid lecture on "How We Got Our Bible." It is instructive and entertaining. Young People's societies or other organizations of the church would do well to have this lecture delivered under their auspices.

It is a pleasure to note the dedication of the new church at Chicago Heights, April 2, Geo. L. Snively, master of ceremonies, and E. D. Salkeld, pastor. Twelve thousand one hundred and ten dollars was raised during the day, clearing all indebtedness, and they now have a modern plant valued at $30,000. The congregation is united and happy and prepared to enter upon a larger work.

When this is read the world will know whether Illinois is to have County Local Option or will lose Township Local Option The issue is momentous. May the God of battles win the victory!

T. J. Buck will close his work at Cheneyville May 7 and will be open for another field. He has done a successful work there, 35 added, all adults but two; five will be baptized Easter morning. Call him.

J. M. Francis, of Athens, has taken the work at Newton three-fourths time.

Johnston City is in a meeting, Geo. P. Bramel, evangelist. The church wants to employ a minister at once. Write G. E. Ellis.

W. W. Weedon, of Assumption, had six additions at regular services last Sunday, making ten during the last two weeks.

The revival meeting at the First Church, Bloomington, Edgar D. Jones, pastor, and W. F. Richardson, of Kansas City, Mo., evangelist, closed last Sunday night with 71 additions. It was a most helpful meeting in every way, and though short in duration its good effects will be felt in years to come. On Monday evening following the close of the meeting there was held a great union men's banquet of the three Christian churches of Bloomington at the Centennial Church. About 160 men sat down together and with music and speech-making a most delightful evening was spent. Mr. Richardson delivered the principal address on "Disciples in the City," dealing with city problems and methods and laying out a great program of activity for the enlargement of our cause in Bloomington. It is expected that a City Missionary Board will soon be organized following closely the Kansas City plan for local enlargement.

J. H. Gilliland and family returned this week from their winter sojourn in Florida to their home in Bloomington. He has time for one or two spring meetings if called at once.

That state offering, brethren, what about it? It is hard for us to believe that this great cause has been "turned down" by all the churches that have not yet made an offering this missionary year. In the four central districts there are 237 churches that have not yet helped state missions, distributed as follows: Third district, 63; Fourth district, 29; Fifth district, 66; Sixth district. 79. Let us hear from you as soon as possible that your offering may be reported in the printed list on your district convention program.

Just received word that Roley Nay has taken the work at the Second Church, Cairo, for half time.

W. D. Deweese, Office Sec'y-Treas.
J. Fred Jones, Field Secretary,
Bloomington, Ill.

Eureka College

The Illinois Christian Educational Association recently held its regular quarterly meeting in Eureka. Mrs. Ella S. Stewart of Chicago, president of the board, president.

Eureka Alumni will hold a reunion at Portland, Ore., during the National Convention. J. F. Chormley '82, Portland, W. F. Shaw, '94, Chicago, and Mrs. Ella S. Stewart, '90, Chicago, are the committee in Charge. Definite plans will be announced as soon as possible.

The Eureka College male quartette filled a date on the Canton, Mo., lecture course most acceptably.

A room at Lida's Wood has just been beautifully furnished by the generosity of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Litchfield of Flanagan, Ill., who gave $134 for this purpose.

Chicago

The address of Dr. H. L. Willett at the Y. M. C. A. auditorium on Monday, April 10, was the first of the series given during Holy Week.

The annual rally of the Cook County Christian Endeavor was held in the Central Y. M. C. A. Tuesday evening, April 18. Though a leading element in the Endeavor work at large, the Disciples were poorly represented at this meeting.

Upon request of the Christian Business Men's Association, the Chicago Christian Missionary Society presented the city work to an interested group from the various churches Monday evening, April 17, after a dinner had been served. Those present report a helpful meeting.

Several Chicago churches fittingly observed Holy Week with services of prayer and praise. The Irving Park Church engaged in a week of prayer. Services were held every night at the church. S. G. Buckner, of Ashtabula, Ohio, brother of C. C. Buckner, conducted the services. Hyde Park Church had special meetings. On Wednesday evening Miss Breyfogle, assistant pastor, spoke on "Suffering." On Thursday night at a special communion service, C. C. Morrison spoke. An hour of prayer was observed Friday afternoon. O. F. Jordan, of Evanston, preached nightly in his church during Holy Week. These sermons related themselves in a special way to the events of the last week in Jesus' life and were given, not only for the strengthening of Christian people but for the purpose of bringing outsiders into the circle of discipleship. Holy Week services also were held in Memorial Church. These meetings were well advertised, well attended and proved an uplift to the congregations. The Central Y. M. C. A. calls attention to the following important dates and announced list of speakers. Sunday, April 23, 3:30 p. m., Rev. J. Campbell White, of New York, will be the chief speaker. On Monday, April 24, 12:15 p. m., an illustrated address will be delivered by Dr. Wilfred T. Grenfell, of Labrador. On Sunday, April 30, 3:30 p. m., Harry A. Wheeler, president Chicago Association of Commerce, will make the address. The public is cordially invited to these meetings held in the Y. M. C. A. auditorium.

Dedication

The Antioch Church, N. S. Haynes, minister, honored me with an invitation to assist at the dedication of their new building and the day, April 9, was perfect for the occasion. A large body assembled, the committee worked well, the money came without trouble, and church and minister were pleased with the results of their labor and sacrifice.

This church is in the country about five miles east of Decatur and the building is beautiful and convenient, having besides the main room, side rooms and good entrances and a basement under it all. The windows and decorations are beautiful and the general effect delightful. About forty active members form the congregation and the building, costing $5,000, is a monument of their faith and sacrifice.

At the afternoon service, Brother Haynes presided at the communion, and he pronounced the dedication service. Visiting ministers present were E. M. Smith and O. W. Lawrence, of Decatur, Brother Clark, of the M. E. church, and C. A. Heckel, a resident minister, who led in the erection of the house and did it well.

The church is delighted to have so strong a minister as Mr. Haynes.

The congregation was organized by John Tyler, father of B. B. and J. Z. Tyler, and Mrs. Sue Oder, who was present in company with Mrs. Haynes. J. Z. Tyler sent the church a pulpit Bible and many tender words were spoken in love of the Tyler family by their friends.

The ladies of the church furnished delicious meals to all at the noon and evening hour.

Bloomington. J. Fred Jones, Sec'y.

On Sunday, April 9, the Jackson Boulevard Sunday-school had 658 present which is the largest attendance in its history. There were ninety-seven women in Mrs. Hunter's Bible class which was started a year ago. Eight additions by confession and baptism that day. Austin Hunter is pastor.

AN ILLINOIS UNION CHURCH

BY W. H. STORM.

The following sketch of the Union Church at Cisna Park, Ill., is submitted to those interested in promoting Christian Union in villages and rural communities, as one solution of the problem.

This village of five hundred people is located in the southwestern part of Iroquois County. More than half the population of this section is either German Lutheran or New Amish (German). Of the English-speaking people, there are many "faiths," but only two congregations—the Methodist Episcopal and the Union.

Motive of Union.

This work of union was begun in the hope of giving to a number of isolated believers of different views an opportunity for public worship, that they might be able to do better Christian work. The United Brethren had tried the work alone, as had the Presbyterians and later the Methodists, without being able to unite the community in their support. In view of these facts about twenty-five brethren, among whom were Quakers, Methodists, Lutherans, Presbyterians, and Disciples, decided to unite and work together. L. I. Mercer, then of Hoopeston, aided these brethren in organizing the union, and helped to secure C. L. Lyon, of Eureka, to preach for them half-time. They had, at first, only a verbal agreement, but later they drew a writing of agreement, the main clauses of which read as follows:

"We, the undersigned, in order to do more efficient work for our Lord and Master, do hereby pledge our support to this congregation in every way consistent with our several views of faith and practice."

"This organization shall be known as the Union Church, and it shall be non-criticising, acknowledging one Master and Lord, Jesus Christ."

Congregational in Government.

The government is congregational, and six brethren, elected annually, are the executive board. At each annual meeting of the congregation the opportunity is given every member to express his views concerning the work. If it is so desired, a minister of different faith may be secured. When missionary or charity offerings are taken, if the giver wishes the offering to go through a different organization than that represented by the minister in charge, it is sent through the channel designated by the giver. The Lord's Supper is served quarterly. Those coming into the church, upon confessing their faith in Christ, are baptized as they desire to be; but the minister in charge of the church at that time is not bound to administer the ordinance in violation of his faith,—and I may add that up to the present time it has been necessary only once to call in a minister in such case, all except one coming into the church, upon confession of faith in Christ, having been immersed. Every member coming into the church signs himself, according to his views, by the name which he desires to hold, so there is no room for a work of absorption to be carried on in favor of a majority. The members of the board are chosen from the different bodies. The congregation meets in a good building which was dedicated several years ago to the use of any evangelical people. They are on record as the Union Church of Cisna Park, Ill., and a cordial standing invitation is extended to all people of whatsoever faith to unite with them, holding Jesus Christ as Lord and Master, and faith in Him as a basis of fellowship.

Union Maintained for Seven Years.

The congregation is just entering upon its seventh year's work. During these years the membership has grown from twenty-five to seventy. At present about half this number are Disciples. Among those coming in by letter or statement, some have been United Brethren and some Baptists. Many of the best and most influential citizens of the community hold membership in the church. (A report of the year's work just closed appears in another place.) No word of dissatisfaction has come to me concerning the union work from any member. Instead of discord has come a larger union, and a growing confidence in each other. At present an effort is being made—initiated by this congregation—to interest all the people of the community in a union revival to be held next September. The outlook for the work is brighter now than it has been at any previous time.

Present Pastor Beginning Fourth Year.

The following brethren—all Disciples—have served as pastors: C. L. Lyon, A. A. Burr, R. Goodacre, and the writer. Revivals have been conducted by John W. Street, H. Goodacre, and two by O. E. Kelley. I have been with these brethren since June, 1908, and remain with them another year. When first I visited them I was informed that they wanted nothing preached but the Bible. Upon that basis I have enjoyed my work there. The superintendent of the Sunday-school is of the United Brethren faith, while the president of the Christian Endeavor Society is a Disciple. All departments of the church co-operate in every good work, and I find it a pleasure to work at practical Christian union with an open Bible and a zealous people. And I believe the Gospel, if preached in love, and lived in word and deed, is God's power for uniting the scattered forces of the King's army and bringing the answer to the Master's prayer, "that they may all be one that the world may believe that thou hast sent me."

Church Life

—Let every Sunday-school worker give attention to Superintendent Hopkins' suggestion elsewhere entitled, "Four Great Lessons." He has sent no more important communication to the schools than this.

—The writer of the "San Francisco Letter" on page 22 of last week's issue is awarded the prize for best news item. He will pleace accept this statement as due notification and indicate at once by postal card which of the following books he prefers:

1. New Testament Theology, by Henry C. Sheldon, Macmillan, $1.50 net.
2. The Truth of Christianity, by W. H. Turton, Putnam, $1.25 net.
3. Christian Unity in Effort, by Frank J. Firth, Lippincott, $1.50 net.
4. Unitarian Thought, by Ephraim Emerton. Macmillan, $1.50 net.

—One of the officers of the general organized work writes the Christian Century as follows: "I have wanted to tell you how much I appreciate the good editorial work of The Century. You have been very happy in the selection of matter. You have gone a long way toward answering the demand for a Christian Union Journal voiced at the Topeka Convention." We appreciate that. While the talk was going on at Topeka, we wondered in what respect such a journal would differ from the Christian Century except in its not printing church news. The ideal of this paper is to carry out just the purpose outlined at Topeka for a journal of Christian unity.

William Oeschger, chancellor of Cotner University, is in a meeting at Palmer, Neb.

W. A. Tate, pastor at Bloomingdale, Mich., has resigned his pastorate there, to take effect in June.

Tolbert F. Weaver of Austin, Texas, is preaching at Bertram, where he organized a fine C. E. Society of 40 members.

Robert M. Hopkins, National Sunday-school Superintendent, reports over 900 Front Rank schools among the Disciples.

Dr. and Mrs. J. W. Lowber of Austin, Texas, are leading a good meeting at Paris, Texas. There have been over 500 accessions.

W. F. Shearer is in a meeting with Wm. E. Payne, pastor at Sheridan, Ind. At last reports there had been twenty-six additions.

Revival services are in progress at Fourth Church, Indianapolis, Ind., under the leadership of the pastor, William Verner Nelson.

A. T. Shaw, pastor at Spencer, Ind., was invited to address the men's brotherhood of the Presbyterian church at Brazil, Ind., recently.

Fullerton, Calif., church dedicates its beautiful new building, April 23. F. M. Dowling preaches in the morning and Bruce Brown, the new pastor, in the evening.

C. M. Kreidler, pastor at Elmira, N. Y., is leading his congregation in a good meeting. Mrs. J. E. Powell is assisting in the singing.

Seattle has secured the services of J. E. Denton for city evangelist. One of his first efforts will be to make the Findlay Avenue Mission self-supporting.

A B. Markle, for a number of years pastor at Anaheim, Cal., resigned, after building up a good work here. He will be succeeded by E. J. Harlow of Corona, Cal.

J. Walter Reynolds of Lyons, Kan. has accepted the unanimous call of First Church, Macon, Ga., and will begin work there May 1.

A. H. Roadhouse has resigned from the pastorate of First Church, Santa Ana, Calif. He will be succeeded by Paul E. Wright of Columbia, Mo.

Evangelists Breeden, Lintt and Travis are in a union evangelistic meeting at San Benardino, Cal. Eight churches are co-operating and two hundred have responded in seven days of invitation.

Under the leadership of Henry Ritz, the church at Boone, Iowa, expects to cancel an indebtedness of $1,600 by July 1. Both pastor and congregation are much encouraged by this evidence of activity.

John Ray Ewers, minister of East End Church, Pittsburgh, Pa., has been elected president of the Pittsburgh ministerial union, comprising all the Protestant ministers of the city.

During a meeting of eight weeks at Walters, Okla. under the leadership of H. Gordon Bennett, fifty-two were added to the membership, and much was accomplished in reorganizing the financial department of the church.

Joseph C. Todd, pastor of Kirkwood Avenue Church, Bloomington, Ind., addressed the congregation at Rushville, Ind., recently on religious education and received a good offering for the Bible chair of the State University at Bloomington.

A new church has been organized at Ontario, Ore. T. L. Read, formerly of Phoenix, Ariz., is in charge of the work here and at Vale, Ore., where a $6,000 building is being erected. It is hoped that a church may soon be built at Ontario.

J. B. Baker of Tacoma, Wash., began his itinerary for home missions at Beatrice, Neb. on April 9, with splendid addresses both morning and evening. The congregation pledged to support Mr. Baker in West Washington, this being their fifth missionary. J. E. Davis is pastor of this church.

Walter S. Rounds has begun his work as University pastor under the Bible chair at Bloomington, Ind. Mr. Rounds will conduct a class at Kirkwood Avenue Church on "Social Problems in the Light of the Gospel of Jesus," taking up child labor, intemperance and women in industry.

In the first two weeks of Charles Reign Scoville's meeting at Enid, Okla., there were 581 additions. W. J. Wright, pastor at Enid, is now acting president of the university, during the absence of E. V. Zollars, and with the faculty and students, is rendering great service in the meeting.

There have been eight additions to the church at Aberdeen, Miss., recently. L. H. Stine, the pastor, there, says, "Contributions to Protestantism" is receiving a good response from the other ministers of Aberdeen. At the request of the faculty of the high school, Mr. Stine will repeat his lecture on "John Calvin."

G. J. Chapman, minister of the First Church, Joplin, Mo., is lecturing Sunday evenings on the lives of great reformers, Martin Luther, John Calvin, John Wesley and Alexander Campbell, respectively. Mr. Chapman addressed the Twentieth Century Brotherhood of Men of the Carthage First Church, Monday evening, April 10.

W. J. Lhamon has been holding a meeting he reports as an especial delight to him. He says that the joint meeting of the official boards of the Baptist and Disciple churches of the town formed a resolution in favor of the union of the two bodies. It is to be hoped that this movement toward union will be consummated.

Palm Sunday at the Lenox Ave. Church, New York, was observed at the morning service April 9, the minister, Wm. Bayard Craig, speaking on the subject: "Hosanna to the Prince of Truth." In the evening the Carey E. Morgan, of Paris, Kentucky, spoke on topic: "The Work of Christ in America." The Sunday morning audiences are crowding the auditorium on recent Sundays.

Our good friend, Mr. Frank Coop, of Southport, Eng., sends us an English paper announcing the acceptance by Rev. T. E. Ruth of Liverpool of a call to a Baptist church in Southport. Mr. Ruth's messages have many times been quoted in The Christian Century and last summer we printed in full his London Conference address on "Christian Union and the World's Need," a masterly statement.

R. W. Abberley and J. Ross Miller closed their short meeting at Bethany, Neb., on Apr. 9, with sixty-five additions. H. O. Pritchard, who is in the first year of his ministry here, is leading the church into greater spiritual activity. The Sunday-school has an enrollment of fifty and is doing excellent work. R. W. Abberley and J. Ross Miller are in a meeting at Owosso, Mich.

Texas state convention will be held this year at Ft. Worth, May 6-9. A committee of thirty, under the leadership of Clinton Lockhart, president of Texas Christian University, has already commenced active arrangements, and it is expected that there will be at least 600 representatives from the churches over the state. The missionary and educational interests of the church will be the principal subjects dealt with.

E. L. Day, of Noblesville, Ind., has accepted the pastorate of North Park Church, Indianapolis, Ind., and will begin there Apr. 23. During his pastorate of fifteen months at Noblesville, eighty-five were added to the church, the Sunday-school graded and reorganized, and an enrolment of 150 reached in the men's class. The total membership of the church is now about 750. L. C. Howe of New Castle will take up the work at Noblesville.

A note from L. N. D. Wells, pastor at East Orange, N. J., tells of the death of Mrs. Jane Cowans, known at Bethany College by all graduating classes for many years as "Mother Cowans," April 3, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. E. T. Wells of Steubenville, O. Mrs. Cowans was related to Senator Oliver of Pittsburgh, and came to this country with that family from Ireland. Most of the years of her life were spent at Bloomington, Ill., and Bethany, W. Va. She had been an earnest Disciple for more than sixty years. Four children survive her.

Prof. H. T. Sutton, professor of oratory in the Texas Christian University, preached two most excellent missionary sermons in First Church, Joplin, Mo., Sunday, April 2. He remained during the week, giving Bible readings each evening. Prof. Sutton's readings were John the Baptist, Paul Before Agrippa and on Mars Hill, Eighteen Chapters of Job and Second Timothy. On one evening he read Ben Hur. G. J. Chapman, minister of the church, says that Mr. Sutton is "sincerely Christian and scholarly. His work is of the highest order and will do only good wherever he goes."

J. K. Ballou, pastor at Stockton, California, after a study of two or three years of the question of Christian union, is giving a series of sermons on the general theme, as follows: The Causes of Divisions; The Spirit and Genius of the Reformation; The Age of Polemics, and the Period of Comity; Federation, and Degrees of Unity; The Gradual Development of Unity—the Constant Stagnation of Conformity; The Chief Hindrances to Union; The Religion of the Spirit (not of authority), the Approach to Union; The Question of Baptism and Church Fellowship as Related to Union; Who Among Disciples Can Practice Unity, and With Whom Can They Unite?

W. T. Brooks has concluded a nine-days' meeting at Ladoga, Ind., with sixty-two additions. Mr. Brooks is now in a meeting at Aberdeen, Miss.

The Christian Century is pretty much committed to Pentwater, Mich., as the ideal place for Disciples to spend the summer vacation, but it recognizes that there may perhaps be other interesting places in the world. This admission is drawn out by looking through a little booklet of pictures and description setting forth the attractions of Pinecliffe, Colorado. Dr. B. B. Tyler suggests that those who make their summer rendezvous at this interesting place would appreciate our calling attention to its inviting features. Dr. and Mrs. W. Bayard Craig of New York, and Prof. A. M. Haggard of Drake University, are among the residents there during vacation It is surely a delightful place to be—and in such company!

The annual dinner of the Disciples Missionary Union of New York will be given on Apr. 25 at the Hotel St. Denis. The addresses of the evening will be on the subject: "Christian Union." The guests who will speak are Dr. William T. Manning, of Trinity Parish, New York; Peter Ainslie, of Baltimore, and Herbert L. Willett, of Chicago. The addresses will be of wide-spread interest since Dr. Manning as Chairman of the Episcopal Unity Commission, and Mr. Ainslie as chairman of the Disciples' Christian Union Commission are both qualified to speak with commanding interest. Doctor Willett will also speak at the noon chapel service at St. Paul's at Columbia University on April 25. The Disciples Club of Columbia, will attend the dinner in a body, escorting him from the University.

Bruce Brown, lately of Spokane, Wash., now pastor at Fullerton, Calif., sends the following interesting note:

"L. W. Klinker is holding a meeting in Cypress Park, Los Angeles, that deserves more than a passing mention. When I was with him in the South Main St. meeting last January, we selected Cypress Park as offering great promise. The Presbyterians had made an effort there without success. Bro. Klinker has succeeded in enlisting the interest of the entire community. This will be the only Protestant Church in Cypress Park. There are now seventy-five fine people enrolled as charter members. A large number of these have been baptized. Bro. Klinker went into debt for a tent and began with no promise of support. I have spoken for him twice."

How a State Secretary Writes To His Churches

Dear Brother:—The time approaches for our annual offering for American Missions. I do not know how you view it, but I look upon missions as missions, whether foreign, home or state, and a church cannot be doing its full duty to missions that is not in touch with all these fields. I am glad to note that your church was one of the few that made a good offering last year to American work. We, in South Idaho, are placed under very great obligations to the American Christian Missionary Society for their help in this field. Without the $100 given us this year we would simply have to abandon our missionary efforts, and the churches that are dependent upon us for support. Shall we not show our appreciation and gratitude to this board by giving as much to American missions as we do to foreign? One other consideration. Every dollar given to home missions means many dollars for foreign missions. The problem is a simple one. More and larger churches in America means more and larger offerings for the foreign work; and a church once organized and established by the American Christian Missionary Society will go on contributing to the foreign field for years to come. Money cannot be placed where it will do the cause of world-wide missions more good than in America. May we not count on your church for a large offering for American missions the first Lord's day in May? Will you please fill out the enclosed card saying we may?

Yours for America for Christ,
FRANK E. JONES,
Caldwell, Idaho. Cor. Sec'y. So. Idaho.

The World in Boston

Every department of "The World in Boston" is humming with the activity of the last two weeks of preparation for the opening of the missionary exposition, to be held in the Mechanics Buildding, April 22 to May 20. The building will be turned over to the Exposition management on the morning of April 17 and installation of the scenery and exhibits will be rushed day and night so as to be ready for the opening hour on April 22.

Regretting that he could not accept the invitation to be present and open the Exposition in person, President Taft has agreed to send from the White House a message of greeting and to press a telegraph key, sending a signal to the Mechanics Building, and in that way declare the Exposition open. Bishop Lawrence of the Episcopal Diocese of Eastern Massachusetts, Mrs. Helen Barrett Montgomery, and Dr. Booker T. Washington, will be speakers at the opening ceremonies.

The thousands of Stewards have finished the study of their text-books and are prepared to people the Exposition, impersonating the natives of all lands they represent. Hundreds are putting the finishing touches on their costumes. The time tables have been made up for the service of the Stewards so that the Exposition will be manned at all hours by regiments of the great army of workers. One thousand children have been trained to take part in little plays and tableaux and to play the games which children of other countries play.

The rehearsals of the great choir for the Pageant of Darkness and Light are drawing near the end and the musical director, Mr. Ephriam Cutter, Jr., is greatly pleased with the efficiency which has been developed. Rehearsals of the participants, who are to be on the platform are being held every evening. Each episode of the Pageant is being rehearsed on successive nights.

Four Great Lessons

Every Sunday-school in the world that is following the uniform lessons of the International Sunday-school Association has in store four tremendously big lessons for this quarter. These days should be made mountain peaks in instruction and might with profit be preceded with the same amount of energy in preparation that on other occasions is expended in working up a record attendance or special contribution, with the emphasis for these days laid upon well prepared and well taught lessons.

These days are as follows:

On April 30 the lesson is a special Foreign Mission Lesson with the story of Jonah as the text.

Sixty Years the Standard
DR. PRICE'S CREAM BAKING POWDER
A Cream of Tartar Powder
Made from Grapes
NO ALUM

On May 14 the call of Isaiah for consecration is made the basis for a like lesson in Home Missions.

On May 21 the quarterly Temperance Lesson is to be studied and it is an especially well chosen one.

On May 28 there appears for the first time a lesson devoted to the great theme of International Peace.

The Scripture passages and golden texts for this remarkable quartet of lessons are of vital importance, they should be well presented and the golden texts should be memorized by the entire school. Every pupil in the senior and adult departments of our eight thousand Sunday Schools is urged to make careful preparation for these four great lessons. ROBT. M. HOPKINS,
American Sunday-school Supt.

Ohio Secretary's Letter

Preparations for a great State Convention are nearing completion. The convention meets in Portsmouth, May 22-25. The C. W. B. M. and the Brotherhood of Disciples are arranging strong programs for their sessions. The O. C. M. S. convention begins Tuesday evening and closes Thursday afternoon. The watchword of the convention is "Go Forward." The president's address by Geo. Darsie will have the watchword for its subject. A unique and attractive feature will be the business men's session which comes on Wednesday morning. Addresses will be made by three business men and two ministers. Another feature will be the Preacher's Hour Wednesday morning and afternoon and Thursday morning. At this time Harry D. Smith, president of the A. C. M. S., will give a series of addresses for the special benefit of the preachers. It is hoped every preacher in the state may be present

THE DIVINITY SCHOOL OF
The University of Chicago
Summer Quarter, 1911.
First Term begins June 19. Second Term Begins July 27.
COURSES will be offered in the Old Testament by Professors Jewett, Willett, Smith, L. B. Paton, of Hartford Theological Seminary, and G. A. Barton, of Bryn Mawr College; New Testament, by Professors Burton, Votaw, and Goodspeed; Systematic Theology, by Professors Smith and H. A. Youtz, of Auburn Theological Seminary; Church History, by Professors Parker, Moncrief, Gates, and George Cross, of Newton Theological Institution; Practical Theology, by Professors Hoben, Greene, and G. E. Dawson, of the Hartford School of Religious Pedagogy; Ecclesiastical Sociology, by Professor T. J. Riley, of Washington University; Public Speaking, by Professors Blanchard and Nelson; Music, by Mr. Lash. Courses in other departments of the University are open to students in the Divinity School.
Address the Dean for further information.

at this feast of good things. Many preachers are absolutely unable to pay their own expenses. A church ought to send its minister. It will refresh his spirit. It will gladden his heart. It will enlarge his vision. It will enrich his ministry. It will bless the church. Send your minister to Portsmouth with a "God bless you" and a full purse. Wednesday night there will be two masterly addresses, "Back to Christ" by I. J. Spencer and "Filled with His Spirit," by J. H. Goldner. The Sunday-school Session Thursday afternoon will be in charge of State Bible School Evangelist, L. I. Mercer. There will be messages from R. M. Hopkins, National Bible School Superintendent, H. H. Moninger and R. P. Shepherd. Thus the program throughout is of National convention caliber and attractiveness. Delegates will be present from Kentucky and West Virginia to swell the numbers and enjoy the feast and the fellowship.

Z. E. Bates has returned to Ohio and taken up the work at Bowling Green. Ohio will give him a cordial welcome back home.

John Hoag of Orwell has located at Stowe and Steeles Corners.

A. P. Johnson of Chickasha, Okla., captivated the people of the Dunham Avenue Church, Cleveland, on a recent visit there and they are looking forward eagerly to his coming to be their permanent minister May 1st.

Charles Darsie has resigned after a fruitful pastorate of nearly six years at Uhrichsville, to become the minister of the Crawford Road Church, Cleveland.

A. J. Sever for eight years minister at Mentor where he did a most substantial and permanent work, has tendered his resignation to that congregation.

J. B. Pickel has closed his work at Centerburg. He will continue to give half time to the church at Martinsburg.

March was a good month in the Ohio office. Receipts show an increase over last year. The missions all report prosperous condition. April is the closing month of our fiscal year and the secretary is anxious that every church be lined up for enlarged work in our state before the books close the first of May. Some churches postpone their remittance until the end of the year. This is a dangerous practice. See to it that your offering is not overlooked. The outlook at present gives strong reason to hope that the year will show a very encouraging increase over last year, but the battle is not won and we need every dollar sent in promptly.

Cleveland, O. I. J. CAHILL.

District Conventions in Kentucky

The convention season in Kentucky has now begun. Beginning at Murray in the twenty-third district, nineteen district conventions are in progress of being held, covering the entire state and continuing until the middle of June. Immediately following, come the series of county conventions, which will continue through July, August and up to the Frankfort convention in September. About sixty county conventions have been scheduled. All of these are in organized counties. The district schedule is as follows:

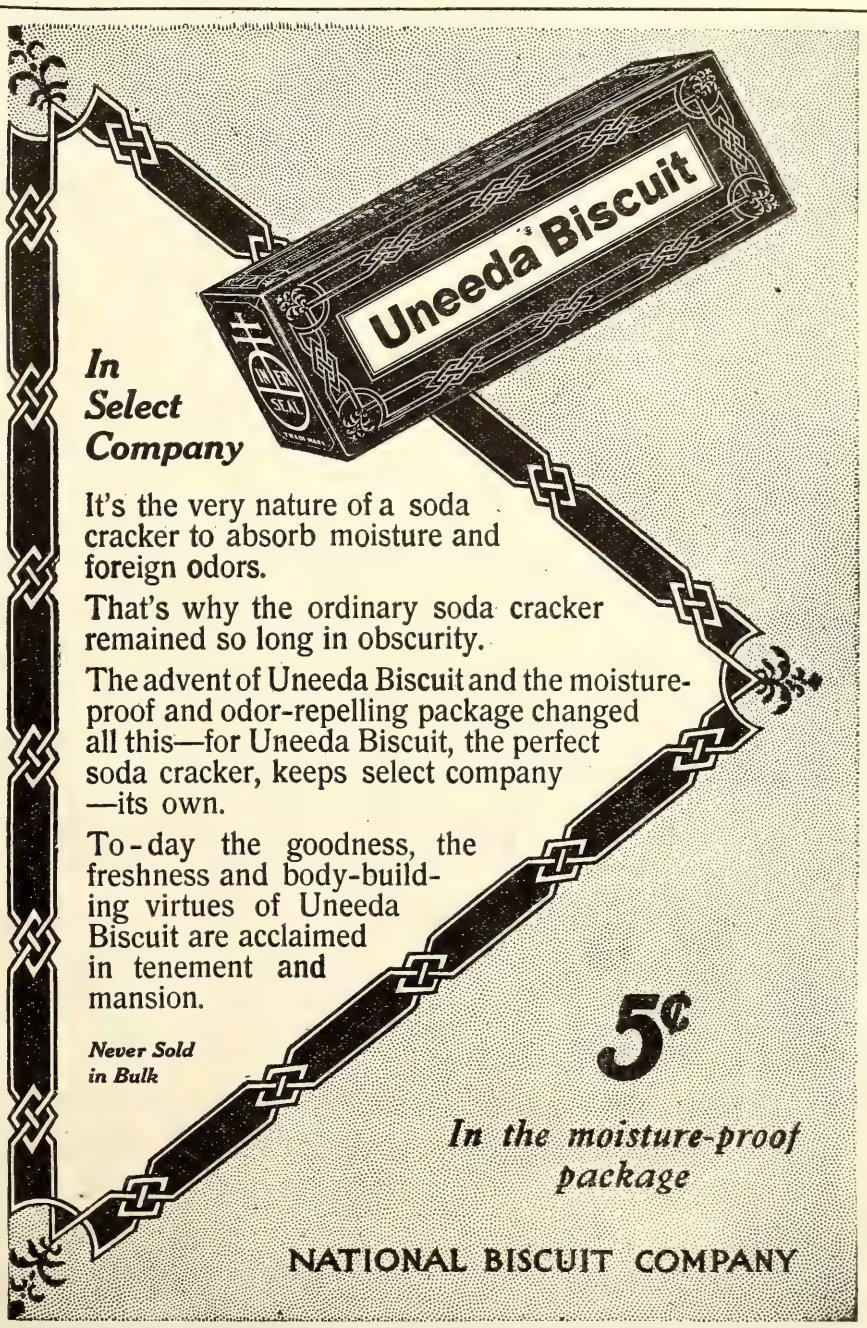
District.	Place.	Date.
Twenty-three	Murray	April 11-12
Twenty-one	Sebree	April 13-14
Eighteen	Hartford	April 18-19
Twenty-two	Crofton	April 20-21
Twenty	Trenton	April 25-26
Two	Hodgenville	April 27-28
One	Lebanon	May 2-3
Ten	Houstonville	May 4-5
Five	Lawrenceburg	May 9-10
Nine	Versailles	May 11-12
Twelve	Dover	May 16-17
Eight	Carlisle	May 18-19
Seven	Erlanger	May 23-24
Six	Campbellsburg	May 25-26
Eleven	London	May 30-31
Sixteen	Olive Hill	June 2-4
Thirteen	Jackson	June 9-11
Four	Russell Springs	June 16-18
Three	Albany	June 23-25

The first day of each convention is C. W. B. M. day, the first night, State Missions; the second day, Bible-school; the second night, Educational. The programs for Bible-school day this year are strong and practical. The district officers seem to have made an unusual effort, as one expressed it, to make their programs "the pride of the district." The secretaries are gathering the reports and say they are coming in fine. After all, it is not the addresses delivered that make a convention great, but good reports.

The new district standard adopted at Owensboro is now in operation. The standard is as follows: (1) Every county represented in the district convention by one of its officers. (2) Every county with as many as five co-operating Christian Bible-school organized. (3) Every county secretary making a written report to the district statistician. Districts complying with these requirements will be known as "Banner Districts." Many districts are striving to reach this standard. WALTER E. FRAZEE.

Summer School of Sunday-school Methods

The second annual Summer School of Methods for Sunday-school and Missionary workers will be held at Bethany Park, Indiana, August 9-18. The school is under the direction of state superintendent, Garry L. Cook, Dean, and Mrs. Frank Wells, state president C. W B. M. The faculty and courses are as follows: Bible study, Prof. W. B. Taylor, Bethany College; "Psychology in Religious culture," R. P. Shepherd, St. Louis; Pedagogy, Prof. W. F. Smith, Bible College, Lexington, Ky.; two courses in Missions by Miss Hazel A. Lewis, Elementary Superintendent Indiana Sunday-school Association, Indianapolis; History, Methods and Management, Garry L. Cook and others to be an-



Uneeda Biscuit
In Select Company
It's the very nature of a soda cracker to absorb moisture and foreign odors.
That's why the ordinary soda cracker remained so long in obscurity.
The advent of Uneeda Biscuit and the moisture-proof and odor-repelling package changed all this—for Uneeda Biscuit, the perfect soda cracker, keeps select company —its own.
To-day the goodness, the freshness and body-building virtues of Uneeda Biscuit are acclaimed in tenement and mansion.
Never Sold in Bulk
5¢
In the moisture-proof package
NATIONAL BISCUIT COMPANY

Books

WHEN YOU WANT BOOKS

Send your order to us. We handle the books of all publishers, at the lowest prices. Your order will be promptly attended to.

THE NEW CHRISTIAN CENTURY COMPANY

700 East Fortieth Street - - - - Chicago, Ill.

nounced later.

The evenings will be given over to popular lectures and entertainments. The last evening (the 18th) will be commencement, and Peter Ainslie, Baltimore, will deliver the address. All schools in Indiana that reach the Front Rank standard by that date will be awarded pennants during the program of the evening. The regular certificate issued by the International Sunday-school Association for Summer school work will be given to all those completing prescribed courses to the satisfaction of the faculty.

The Bethany Assembly Board have granted a special rate of $10 for ten days for this school. This includes room, meals and gate fee. There will also be a matriculation fee of one dollar charged for the school work.

Complete programs will be out about the 15th of April. All requests for information regarding the school should be sent to Garry L. Cook, Dean, 6060 East Washington St., Indianapolis, Indiana.

A Day of Good Things at Cotner University

June eight is to be made a great day at Cotner University. It will be Commencement Day for the present college year and also the day on which the installation services are to be held. The regular commencement exercises are to be held in the morning. At that time nineteen young people are to be given the degree of A. B. Nine persons will receive from the Normal School of the University State Life Teacher's Certificates. In addition to these there are many that are to be graduated out of the departmental schools—music, elocution, medicine, commerce. The commencement address is to be delivered by Geo. B. Van Arsdal, pastor of the Central Church, Denver, Colorado. All are very happy over the fact that we are to have this brilliant speaker with us.

In the afternoon of the same day the writer is to be formally installed as Chancellor of the University. On that occasion Hon. C. H. Aldrich, Governor of Nebraska, is to be present and deliver the address. In the evening a reception is to be given. We are planning to make the day one that will long be remembered in the annals of the University. All of the old students and friends of the University are urged to be present. To all that can possibly come we extend a most hearty welcome. It is to be made a season of great rejoicing. Everything at Cotner is full of promise. Everything is moving forward. We are full of hope for the future and of thanksgiving for the present prosperity. Come to Bethany for this great day.

WILLIAM OESCHGER.

Pomona, California

One of the most satisfactory meetings I have ever conducted was held recently at Pomona, Calif., with M. D. Clubb. The fellowship with pastor and people, the number of additions to the church, the royal devotion of the membership, and the sympathetic interest of the churches of the city combined to make the task of the evangelist a labor of love, and to give real significance to the results. Mr. Clubb has been with the Pomona church for a little over three years, and has not only erected an enduring monument in the new church building, which is one of the best appointed plants of the brotherhood, but has both numerically and spiritually enlarged the membership. In a quiet but statesmanlike manner he has brought to pass great things for the congregation. One hundred and five came forward during the meeting, a hundred of whom have united with this congregation. The personal work of the members was largely responsible for the large audiences and for the additions. Of course, all of this was done under the direction of the pastor. Rarely, if ever, have I seen greater efficiency displayed by the members of a congregation.

The music was led by G. H. Waters, an elder of the congregation. He has conducted the music for twenty-five revivals, and gives every indication that he will be equal to the task for many more. Mr. Waters, gives not only his time and abilities to the cause, but devotes all his income to the gospel, Waters Station on the Congo was founded by him. He is truly a prince in Israel. The Pomona church has the second largest Sunday-school on the Coast, and is doing satisfactory work under the direction of Supt. Orr. The C. W. B. M. has more than 140 members, and all other organizations are equally strong and efficient.

Began a union meeting with ten of the leading Los Angeles churches last Sunday, after which I shall be with A. C. Smither.

R. H. CROSSFIELD.

Bethany Graded Lessons

CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON, Editor

International Interdenominational

Sixteen denominations have united to prepare a non-sectarian body of literature for the new Graded Lessons authorized by the International Committee.

The result is a most practical, fascinating, scientific and artistic series of lesson helps for teachers and pupils.

The Bethany Graded Lessons are now developed to the point where they supply the entire school—children, young people and adults.

Send today for prospectus.

The New Christian Century Co.

700 E. Fortieth St. CHICAGO.

THE AMERICAN
CHRISTIAN MISSIONARY SOCIETY
1849--1911

FACTS - - FIGURES - - FILOSOFY

Mother of Organized Missions
Established 3,803 Churches
Baptized 82,025 Believers
Raised $1,985,604.07

Our First and Fairest Fruit of Fellowship
Our Heart and Hand Dedicated to Home and Native Land
Our Servant for Promoting the Plea for Christian Union
Our Supply of Men and Means for World Evangelization

REMEMBER THE OFFERING FIRST SUNDAY IN MAY

The CHRISTIAN CENTURY

Volume XXVIII. April 27, 1911 Number 17

The Disciples' Congress

Report of Annual Gathering

A Time of Testing

Editorial

The Convict

By J. S. Kirtley

CHICAGO

Blazing the Trail

An Appeal for Historical Interest and Activity.

The promotion of historical interest, among the Disciples of Christ, is hardly yet begun. It is true that some good histories have been written of the Disciples at large. But local activity and productiveness still remain an almost unknown thing in a body which has had a hundred years of history in some respects remarkable.

It all goes back to the fundamental question whether one values past events very highly and especially those events which made and gave to the world the Disciples of Christ. Upon this question all shades of opinion may be found among the Disciples themselves. The Disciple historian is, of course, deeply interested in the history of his brotherhood, and as all of us are prone to do with our special fields, may possibly overemphasize its importance for the present. The average layman of the church has a normal and healthy interest in past events relating to his religious group, as is evinced by the numerous historical sketches in our current journals. Finally, there is the strange person who says, "There was a time when people would delve in such matters, and doubtless some are interested now; but I do not see how any value could come from it."

But no doubt the time is now ripe, and the interest broad enough for many individuals to begin the promotion of local historical interest among the Disciples of Christ. For a hundred years we have been ardently busy making history, or at least our share of it. In the heat and strain of a polemic situation, necessarily induced by our relationship to the other religious bodies, little time and energy remained for more quiet pursuits such as historical research. But now that the Disciples have won their place in the middle West, being a numerical, and let us hope, a spiritual, power, in the states of Missouri, Kentucky and Illinois, the time seems at hand, and the machinery developed, for the preservation of our local history and our literature.

The sense of responsibility is all the more deepened when one investigates some of the other Protestant groups and learns that here the Disciples are behind. In the state of Missouri, for example, the Baptists have had their "Baptist Historical Society of Missouri" for more than twenty-five years, and the fruits of it have been great. I had the pleasure of visiting William Jewell College and going through their handsome new Carnegie Library. There, in one of its spacious rooms, was gathered the research material on Missouri Baptists, papers, books, tracts, a growing accumulation of treasure as the years go by.

In contrast with this the Disciples of Missouri have done practically nothing, although this is the state whose seventh district alone contains more Disciples than the state of Kansas, and whose history is rendering noble by such personalities as that of Alexander Procter.

The hand that writes these lines is a hand stretched out for co-operation. Here and there, in Texas, in Louisiana, in Illinois, in Missouri, are individuals deeply interested in Disciple history. Why should they not constitute a little fraternity within a greater one? Let them join hands through correspondence, let them gather at conventions, let them begin to agitate for the organization of historical societies in their respective states. The people, who are proud of the best things in their past, will folow the lead.

On behalf of three persons deeply interested, these lines are closed with an earnest appeal for aid in discovering the following records, or any parts of them:

1. "The Christian Pioneer," published at Lindley and Chillicothe, Mo., about the time of the Civil War.

2. The old "Christian-Evangelist," published at Fort Madison, Iowa, in the decades preceding and during the war.

3. Scott's "Evangelist" for 1841-43.

I speak for various persons among the Disciples who are anxious for access to the above material, and would be willing to pay a good price for it, or make a journey to get access. The day when all such material is gathered in central or state libraries of the Disciples will be a glad day for the Disciple historian. Information as to the whereabouts of the above, and similar material, will be highly appreciated by myself and other individuals over the country, for whom I write. R. W. GENTRY.

Rev. R. W. Gentry.

Columbia Missouri.

College Men and Dry Goods

Harry Gordon Selfridge, formerly of Chicago, has caused a stir in London by introducing university men in his department store. The innovation is discussed in society, in commercial circles and in the press. The majority of the merchants appear to be skeptical as to its success. "It is just what has been done in Chicago, Boston, and other American cities," said Mr. Selfridge. "The only question as to whether a university man will or will not succeed in business is whether he has the grit to begin at the bottom of the ladder and climb up round by round. If he has, he is certain to beat the comparatively uneducated man." College men who have secured places in Field's and Carson Pirie's and other big dry goods houses in Chicago have been generally of the opinion for some time that a man can hardly afford to go through college and then start life over again in the dirty shipping room (at one time in the filthy basement of one of these houses) with the idea of working slowly up to perhaps a fairly good position. Of course Mr. Selfridge would rather have college men working for him at nine dollars a week than some boy "off the patch," who only knew how to read and write with a little figuring. His idea is one that has always pervaded the biggest store in Chicago, which made its owner the city's richest man (the highest type of clerks for the lowest wages). The idea expressed in London is not new or nice or particularly taking; it is the old idea of grab off the best man you can for the money. The majority of college fellows will hardly fall in with it. The higher institutions of learning are supposed to fit men for something else besides the lowest rounds of the commercial ladder. Cornell University at Ithaca, N. Y., Armour Institute in Chicago, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, University of Illinois and other big schools are doing this.

Do not desert your work, but pierce into its heart, exalt it to its loftiest conception, if you would be more holy.—Phillips Brooks.

HIRAM COLLEGE. Send for Illustrated Bulletin. Souvenir Mailing Card and Complete Catalog to PRES. MINER LEE BATES, HIRAM, O.

BELLS. Steel Alloy Church and School Bells. Send for Catalogue. The C.S. BELL CO. Hillsboro, O.

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS. UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY. Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O. (Please mention this paper.)

BOWLDEN BELLS FOR CHURCH AND SCHOOL. Sweet Tone Far Sounding Durable. Catalogue Free. AMERICAN BELL & FOUNDRY CO., NORTHVILLE, MICH.

WE READ and clip for you daily everything printed in the current country and city press of America pertaining to the subject of particular interest to you.

NEWSPAPERS contain many items daily which would inform you exclusively of where you can secure new business, an order or a contract; where a new store has been started, a new firm incorporated or a contract is to be let. A daily press clipping service means more business

FOR YOU. Send Stamp for Booklet

THE CONSOLIDATED PRESS CLIPPING CO.
1109 167 W. Washington St., Chicago, U. S. A.

DO N'T FORGET

CHILDREN'S DAY

For Foreign Missions

FIRST SUNDAY IN JUNE

SUPPLIES FREE

The Foreign Christian Missionary Society will furnish CHILDREN'S DAY SUPPLIES for the first Sunday in June FREE to those Sunday Schools observing the day in the interests of HEATHEN MISSIONS.

FREE SUPPLIES

1. CRUSADERS FOR CHRIST. The beautiful new Children's Day Exercise by P. H. Duncan. Sixteen pages of song, recitation, and drill. A bundle of sunshine. A high class exercise, yet simple enough for the smallest school.

2. LIFE-SAVER MISSIONARY BOXES. Like the picture above. Automatic, self-locking. They will please. Put your school to work with them.

ORDER AT ONCE. Give local name of Sunday School and average attendance. Write

STEPHEN J. COREY, Box 884, Cincinnati, O.

The Christian Century
CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON AND HERBERT L. WILLETT, ... EDITORS

A Plea for Ignorance

There is no wisdom in the old saw, "Where ignorance is bliss, 'tis folly to be wise," for bliss is not the aim of existence. Besides, the bliss of today may be the blister of tomorrow, and the folly of abandoning ignorance may lead to the felicity of being wise. Nor was Pope wholly right when he said, "A little learning is a dangerous thing; drink deep, or taste not of the Pierian spring." It depends on the one who has the learning; for even a little knowledge is what the most "knowledgeous" had to start with, and it usually excites the thirst for more.

Broken Down Bounds of Knowledge.

We are living in a day when there is more knowledge about more things in possession of more people than at any other time in the history of man. The things known locally have become universalized. The provincial is passing. No community can keep its secrets from another community. There are no more hermit nations; nor is there any hermit knowledge. Not only the unknown, but much that was considered unknowable, has become well known. When it comes to general information about unusual things, not only is "the gray barbarian younger than the Christian child," but the gray Christian, of a few generations ago, is outclassed by the wide-awake lad in a good, modern school today. What the artisan knows today, about such recondite matters as chemistry, electricity, economics, mechanics and all kinds of applied physics, would have put him in the class of the learned, when Tennyson wrote his Locksley Hall. The boundaries of knowledge have been pushed back till one may feel, like the old man who looked down the opening mouth of the river, out into the ocean, and said, "That's the widest river I ever saw; I can see clean out of sight."

Inquiring thought has been turned in three most promising and perilous directions, toward God, toward human relationships and toward the inner self of the inquirer. We call these the fields of theology, sociology and psychology. We are conducting our study of God from the point of view of his works in nature and in man. But no theologian of the old, a priori school ever mapped out the attributes of God, in a speculative way, with more dogmatic and intolerant finality. We can tell exactly what God is and what he is bound to do, from what we know of the workings of the human mind, and we can tell others all about it. The assumption of infallibility is not the exclusive prerogative of any age or class of thinkers. God must be greatly pleased that we are trying to learn of him in those ways but he must also be displeased when the knowledge we have puffs up and does not always build up.

Can Children Learn Too Much?

Our knowledge of the inner-self life and of the outer social life is growing every day. Experts are leading in the study. The x-ray is a fit symbol of that form of investigation. Children are acquiring dangerous knowledge in those two fields. And there are people who urge their complete enlightenment on many of the delicate matters of life. Eugenics, the new science of being well born and brought up, seems to transfer to the family the principles of the farm and to make stirpiculture and stock raising sister industries. The spirit in which we study God recognizes no ability on his part to do anything beyond our comprehension.

Our rapid acquisition of knowledge is attended by more than imaginary perils. There is the peril of inflation. When once we say, with one of Shakespeare's characters, "Ignorance is the curse of God, knowledge is the wing wherewith we fly to Heaven," we have mistaken knowledge for wisdom. Knowledge is the material with which wisdom works, but when men and children acquire what cannot be utilized, they are in danger of turning it into evil. There is such a thing as turning truth into falsehood, which is the peculiar madness of every neurotic. There is such a thing as turning knowledge into ignorance, which is the failure of those who are "forever learning and never coming to the knowledge of the truth." It is the vice which Josh Billings satirized when he said, "It's better not to know so many things than to know so many things that are not so."

There is the peril of disaster to the unprepared. The proposition to teach children the mysteries of life and acquaint them with all the functions of their own bodies is one of the greatest delicacy and the reason is that they are not sufficiently in command of their own ideals to be entrusted with too intimate knowledge. Even when all possible information must be given, it is to be imparted, only as it may be needed, at critical epochs of life. Many a young life has been spoiled with the loss of all its romance, and even its purity, from too great frankness about facts which require reserve and restraint. Before we carry the matter too far we must stop and ask, not whether what we want to teach them is true, for it is, nor whether it is right for them to know sometime, but whether they are ready for that knowledge now. That last Thursday evening, in the upper room, the Master had "many things" he was very anxious to say, but he said, "Ye cannot bear them now." Every teacher of the young must always hold "many things" in reserve for the time when they can bear them and I must know when to impart them.

God's Big Place.

There is the peril of irreverence and therefore of spiritual poverty. Caryle said, in his rugged way, that irreverent knowledge was no knowledge, even worse than no knowledge. We analyze every thing, in order to let daylight shine through it. We pull the petals from the flowers, dissect the human body, discern the forces working in history, lay open the very nature of God. It is right that we should follow the gleam and know what we can; but better for us that we be reverent than learned. Ignorance of what it is not best for us to know is the door of opportunity. It is the opportunity of faith, not credulity. Faith sees; credulity is blindness. Faith fills the unknown with God and is content to leave some things to him, while looking forward to the time "when we shall know, even as we are known."

It is of the highest importance that we concede God a place to work and plans with which to work, which we are incapable of knowing, or even knowing about. That turns our present knowledge into wisdom and creates expectation of more. Our peace of mind depends on knowing our place. Willingness to let God work his magisterial and merciful will is the way to profit by it. Ignorance is an asset just at that point.

When we are told that God's providences over us are such that he is controlling far off forces and distant events in our interest, so as to make "all things work together for good to them that love God," we can easily believe it. We have to receive constant instruction, such as God gave, through Isaiah, that his ways are not as our ways, nor his thoughts as our thoughts, but, as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are his ways higher than our ways, his thoughts than our thoughts. That limitation on our knowledge wakens reverence which turns our real knowledge into wisdom, and, better still, stimulates that power, which some one has called our sixth sense, the eye of faith. God is greater than our hearts. Our limitations give us outlook. Our confidence in him fills all the unknown with him.

J. S. K.

Social Survey

Official Report on Awful Fire

The board of fire underwriters has made public its report on the Triangle Waist factory fire, New York city. The number of dead is put at 145 and the number of operatives who escaped at 360. The report shows that owing to the arrangement of the ninth floor of the building, its crowded and inflammable condition, and the panic among the operators, packed back to back with tables ranged against them, not more than half of those at work there had a chance for their lives. They were doomed from the start, it is indicated, because of the difficulty of reaching the stair exits, the doors of which opened inward. The underwriters recommend fire drills and private fire departments in all factories; stairways in fireproof shafts reached by outside balconies; inside stairs in masonry shafts with fire doors at every floor; automatic sprinklers in every building over sixty feet high; wire, glass and metal frames for all outside windows. Recommendations will not bring back these unfortunate victims of greedy, money-mad employers and incompetent city officials. Neither will they prevent other disasters unlesss they are carried out in an effective manner. The two men whose criminal negligence in not seeing that the safety of their employes was better provided for in case of fire resulted in the loss of life have been indicted by the Grand Jury. The indictments charge each man with manslaughter in the first and second degrees the maximum penalty for which is twenty and ten years' imprisonment, respectively. The indictments charge that the defendants are responsible for the deaths of Rosie Grasso and Margaret Schwartz, whose charred bodies were found on the ninth floor of the burned building. The district attorney hopes to prove that the girls tried the door on the ninth floor in an effort to escape, but found it locked. About ten years each at Sing Sing is what these two men should fall heir to at the trial and would probably convince them that money saved at an expense of life, even though the poor ignorant humans of the East side, is hardly money gained. New York jurymen have a chance to administer well deserved punishment to two serious offenders.

The Cost of Living

A report on the cost of living in American cities, the result of investigations made in twenty-eight towns in the country by officials of the British board of trade has been circulated in Parliament. The report of 533 pages covers the questions of working class housing, retail prices of commodities, and rates of wages in the United States, compiled for purposes of comparison with the conditions of workers in Great Britain and other countries. The conclusions reached are: "The cost of food and rent combined is 52 per cent greater in the United States than in England and Wales, but these heavier relative charges on working class income have been accomplished with weekly wages which are as 230 to 100." The report adds that this ratio of money earnings is more than two and one-fourth times as great as in England and Wales, and "makes possible a command of necessaries, conveniences, and minor luxuries of life that is both nominally and really greater than that enjoyed by the corresponding class in that country. The report notes that although the habit of spending is greater in American than in England, and although the American is naturally more extravagant and great wastefulness often results, it is a fact that those who desire to exercise a strength of will and foresight can save more easily in the United States than in England because of the larger income. In the matter of hours the skilled workers in the building trades in America have the advantage of about six hours weekly compared to the English, and the unskilled have an advantage of about 3¾ hours.

A Trade School Which Suits All

A trade-school which has the commendation of employers, trade unionists, and educational experts is worth more than ordinary attention, for it is a phenomenon all too rare.

When David Ranken, Jr., deeded over to the David Ranken, Jr., School of Mechanical Trades the whole of his large fortune, exceeding $3,000,000, he then and there endowed it with the freedom which characterizes it, for ideas can always be carried out if there is no concern as to where the money is to come from—a hampering, even crippling consideration which confronts nearly every institution and individual. Many of the trade-schools opposed by trade-unionists are not efficient; they profess to turn out a good plumber in three months. The Ranken School, however, trains boys long and carefully and raises rather than lowers any standard of trade workmanship. But these "three months schools" have not freedom of action; they must be self-supporting on a low tuition rate. At the Ranken School the per capita cost in the day school during 1909-10 was $226.40, and the tuition receipts were but thirty dollars per day. Lewis Gustafson, the superintendent, seems to have no idea that the per capita cost of the school will decrease. It is likely that the self-supporting or money-making trade school will pass, and that the growing general belief in the value of trade education will manifest itself by further endowments from philanthropists and in the establishment and maintenance of trade schools as a part of public education.

Shall Parenthood be Revived?

Parental authority seems almost a thing of the past. That kind of authority which was stern, repressive and cruel in its exactions, we may well relegate to the past while we regret that any of it has come down to the present. But there is a divine prerogative invested in parenthood, a right to headship and control in the sphere of the family life that belongs to all times and is essential to the perpetuity of family, social and national life. In the atmosphere of our modern age this invested right is quite overlooked or has been transfered to the children. That there is need for a wholesome return to some adequate parental control in the home is becoming more and more apparent. Such a setting forth of conditions as is presented in the report of the vice commission is enough to create, not alone surprise and alarm, but to compel a new regime of authority from the source where properly it has been placed. Many of the present-day evils are being treated from a remedial standpoint rather than from a preventive one. It is safe to say that the great majority of wrong-doers have become habituated to evil from a lack of proper guidance and control at the proper time. A child cannot be allowed to have its own way, ignore the rules and wishes of the household, and do as it pleases during the formative period of growth, without being a candidate for every sort of evil later on. To come out of a respectable home will be of little advantage to a boy or girl, if in that home they have never learned obedience to right and worthy conduct. The rules of the school-room, the influences of the Sunday-school and the church, or the recognized standards of social proprieties, will have little meaning or force to impetuous childhood which has been trained at home to trample upon that authority which is closest allied to the laws of God. The result of attempting to correct, by legal restraint or reform efforts, the lawless tendencies of young men and women who have been nursed into disobedience is both disappointing and sad enough to be heart breaking. It would be supremely better for our modern home discipline to become even puritanical and severe than to have, as we do today, such a vast throng of splendid youths going the highways of vice and shame, with no moral or legal restraint strong enough to turn them back because their divinely appointed guardians and teachers have failed in their duty. The only safeguard for sturdy character for the young people of another generation lies with the fathers and mothers of the present.

Shall the Day's Work Afford a Living?

"The family as a social unit takes us back into shadows beyond where history begins; the town carries with it a thousand written memories of walled boroughs, county markets and communes, where self-government had its beginnings. But the mill," writes Paul U. Kellogg in The Survey, "with its acres of tracks and sheds, its continuous operation, its intricate plan of discipline, of interlocking processes, of insistent demands upon human nature, is a newer institution. Factory production is less than two centuries old. The power transmission through which the modern plant with its thousands of workmen has expanded and developed, is scarcely as many generations old. Electrically charged wires have become the binding nervous cords of industrial mechanism well within the memory of living men.

"Has the development and equipment of the family and the town, the two older social institutions, kept pace with mechanical invention? Have they held their own against the mill? Is the balance of life and work preserved? Or have we, in the industrial town of twentieth century America, not a 'deserted village' such as Goldsmith lamented in eighteenth century England, but a more serious, antithetical problem in an overcrowded, overwrought aggregate of households. The query is not, shall 'every rood of ground maintain its man,' but, shall the day's work afford an adequate basis for American livelihood?"

The Christian World

A Page for Interdenominational Acquaintance.

United Brethren

The Country Church and Its Minister.

The country church and the country preacher have been weighed and found wanting by not a few who think they understand the needs of the present generation of farmers. No institution that lives in the hearts of the people will be destroyed by criticism. Those who point out its faults will only add to its strength. But of course the improvement of the country church and the increase of the country ministry in efficiency will come through the efforts of those who have ideals for both and who expect both to realize these ideals. A writer in The Religious Telescope gives utterance to this prophecy:

The country church must be conserved. Shall a man-made metropolis thrive upon the dying embers of a God-made habitation? Never! The country community of the future will so far surpass the city, as a place in which to live, that the inhabitants of the metropolis will crave the fresh air of the country, the flowers of the field, the music of the feathered orchestra, the virtue of the country citizen, the sociability of the rural districts, and the spirituality of God's people. All this will come to pass—but how? By working toward the ideal. Where there is no vision the people perish. The ideal country community will be composed of the ideal church, the ideal school, ideal homes, ideal social conditions, and ideal citizens. Such a community will live in the hearts of its countrymen, and will die only when the nation ceases to be.

The ideal country church will have a complete organization, looking after every interest of its territory, socially, financially, and spiritually. The organization will have as its pastor an ideal man. He will be spiritual, intelligent, God-fearing, man-loving, and an ardent lover of nature. He will be interested in the physical, mental, financial and spiritual welfare of his people. He will receive a salary large enough to make a respectable living, to buy the best of books, and to attend the conferences and conventions where he should be present. The church-building will be strictly modern, affording every convenience necessary for the best development of the people under its care. The parsonage will have a world-wide influence.

The country church of the future will be the strong church of the nation. With all the modern conveniences, such as the telephone, rural delivery, interurban lines, electric and gas lights, consolidated schools, modern churches, strong preachers, and ideal social conditions, the country community will wield a power of which the world will take notice and God will abundantly bless.

Farmers will no longer move to the city after they have amassed a fortune, when such a community exists, but will reside on their farms, build tenant-houses and, if need be, take a short visit during the year to the city, as the landlords do in England. They will invest their money in their home church, and in other organizations for the purpose of developing the boys and girls into strong men and women for the glory of God and the world at large.

Unitarian

The Deeper Need.

In these days of programs for reform it may be worth while to be reminded that the preacher has something to do after he has set the world right with respect to child labor, the saloon, woman's rights, and the race question. There are longings of the human heart that temporal expedients will not satisfy. These longings must call for strong, clear words of hope. How this fact was brought home to one minister is related by the Rev. Robert C. Douthit in The Christian Register:

My soul was stirred within me by the tales of social injustice which I heard. I, too, would become, if need be, a martyr to the cause. Conditions must be changed, and that without delay! I should do my part to change them at whatever hazard. I should take down my dust-covered Karl Marx and Mill and Ely and Hillquitt and Henry George, and should proclaim the acceptable year of social regeneration. Economics should be my daily food and sociology my daily drink. I would preach sermons filled to the brim with vitriolic messages for the oppressors of the poor and healing balm for the oppressed.

My heart aflame with this social gospel, I went to the home of one of the factory workers. He would, perhaps, give me some pointers. But he had no complaint. He was saving money out of his slender pay and doing well. "Our boss," said he, pointing to the dining table,—"our boss has a heart as big as that table." But the light had gone out of the home with the death of his little boy. He wanted to know if I really believed that he would meet the lad again. Tears came unbidden as he said, "I would give anything if I could feel so sure of it as you are!"

A woman, farther on, a lifelong toiler with the needle, was thankful that the asthma did not keep her from sitting up to work. But she did want to know if it was really necessary to be baptized, as some of her neighbors sought to convince her. What an expression of relief passed over her face when I told her that baptism, in her case, would have no more to do with salvation than washing her face.

I found many places where the heart was sore, but my sociological message did not seem to be the one to heal the wound; rather it was faith in God and his loving purposes for all his children.

While I have not lost my desire to see social justice prevail, and shall continue to do my small part to that end, yet I find that in my own experience, at least, Henry George and Karl Marx are becoming dusty again as I try to meet the deeper needs of the village people with whom I come in daily contact.

Methodist

The Value of Public Worship.

Churches of every name call men together to worship God. There are millions of people who attend church regularly because their conscience would not allow them to be at ease if they remained away from the services of the church. Does it pay to use so much time for religious meetings? On the worth of social worship the Northern Christian Advocate (Chicago) has this to say:

Well, what about church-going? Have we a duty in the premises? Ought we to have a conscience in the matter?

Let us see. The church is organized religion. But should religion be organized? Is it not better, since religion is a thing of the spirit, to have our worship free and spontaneous without intervention of times and seasons and forms? Why can't a boy pray quite as well in bed as on his knees at the side of the bed? Why can't a man sing psalms in the woods or by the brook as well as in church or prayer-meeting? To be quite frank, a boy could pray as well one way as the other, but does he? A man can worship in one place as well as another, but does he? It is ever and always a question of results.

The church service is an evolution. If there were no church, men would organize one. Social worship, like social life generally, is a necessity of our nature. Man is just built that way. He would no more worship by himself than live by himself. And the duty of church-going arises from that fact.

No man liveth unto himself. For his own enrichment in all spiritual grace and power a man needs social worship; for the enrichment and increasing power of the church he must contribute to social worship. Where and when and how often he shall go are matters of detail. But go he must if we would vindicate his discipleship in a matter which is not at all personal to himself but which is bound up in the very fact of his discipleship.

A good citizen is not free to debate whether he will go to the polls where the life of the state is involved; because he is a citizen he must go or be blameworthy. The disciple neglects church-going at his peril. It might be a small matter that grace should die in him; but it is a matter of infinite moment that the life and power of the church should not be hindered and impaired by any fault of his.

Can Authority Change the facts of History?

Prince Max, younger brother of the King of Saxony, has recently made a trip to Rome. He went there by special invitation. The reason for the invitation was that he had written an article in which he declared that "the claim of infallibility was a modern invention which would have to be given up," that belief in purgatory, the immaculate conception of Mary, and the theory of the single bishop for all the church could not be traced back to the early church, and that the Crusades were expeditions of robbers, and that the popes had often been eaten up with lust of power rather than the passion for feeding the flock of Christ. The fathers of the church at Rome were alarmed by this attack on their cherished theories. Did they proceed to show that Prince Max was ignorant of the facts and needed instruction? One who is accustomed to study history would expect to correct errors by presenting the facts. What was actually done at Rome is told for us by The Central Christian Advocate (Kansas City):

Not a moment was lost. The journal was suppressed. Copies were bought up at any price and destroyed. Scarcely one is now in existence. As for Prince Max, he was sent for in hot haste. He reached Rome. He was prostrated before the pope's toe. He retracted all he had said. A great deal of advertising has been given the incident by Catholic organs. Our exchanges from Rome give much space to it. And now after a fanfare of trumpets that Prince Max the scholar did not know what he was talking about, albeit he was not convinced by referring him to historical authorities, but to the major anathema and excommunication, he is sent back to his college a sadder and wiser (?), a humbler man. He has recanted.

Does any one for one moment think that he has recanted in earnest? If he has discovered that two and two make four, can a sweeping condemnation and bit of terrorizing make him really believe that two and two do not made four, that they make five or three?

We would like one of those priceless articles. But they have disappeared from off the face of the earth. Not the man but his opinions, his historical discoveries, have been, as it were, burned at the stake.

Thus goes it with Rome in this twentieth century.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

Published Weekly by

The New Christian Century Co.

Entered as Second-Class Matter Feb. 28, 1902, at the Post Office at Chicago, Illinois, Under Act of March 3, 1879.

EDITORS—CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON AND HERBERT L. WILLETT.
CONTRIBUTING EDITOR—SILAS JONES.

SUBSCRIPTIONS—Subscription price $2.00. If paid strictly in advance $1.50 will be accepted. To ministers if paid strictly in advance, $1.00 per year. Single copy 5 cents.

EXPIRATIONS—The label on the paper shows the months to which subscription is paid. List is revised monthly. Change of date on label is a receipt for remittance on subscription account.

DISCONTINUANCES—In order that subscribers may not be annoyed by failure to receive the paper, it is not discontinued at expiration of time paid in advance (unless so ordered), but is continued pending instruction from the subscriber. If discontinuance is desired, prompt notice should be sent and all arrearages paid.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS—In ordering change of address give the old as well as the new. If the paper does not reach you regularly, notify us at once.

REMITTANCES.—Should be sent by draft or money order payable to The New Christian Century Company. IF LOCAL CHECK IS SENT ADD TEN CENTS FOR EXCHANGE.

700-714 EAST FORTIETH ST., CHICAGO, ILL.
United Religious Press Building

The Church and the Drunkard

Jesus lived with and for those who needed help. The drunkard is one of those who need help. No intelligent disciple doubts that if the Master were with us today he would go to the drunkard and bid the manhood in him assert its superiority to appetite. There are differences of opinion as to how the drunkard should be treated, and it is well that we do not all think the same things. Men who drink are not alike in physical and social heredity. They cannot, therefore, all be benefited by the same kind of treatment.

It is the business of the church to learn what science has to say of the effect of alcohol and to teach it to young and old. Superstitions die slowly. There are still living many who believe intoxicating drinks keep one cool in the summer and warm in the winter. There are those who cannot see how a man can have a good time unless he is drunk. We read every few weeks of an octogenarian, a nonagenarian, or a centenarian whose great age and unimpaired mental faculties are attributed to the use of whiskey or beer. Because vigorous races use intoxicating liquors it is illogically argued that it is drink that makes them vigorous. The church can aid the world to think clearly.

The power of custom can be used in behalf of the drunkard as well as against him. Abraham Lincoln gave this answer to those who said men will live and act for themselves: "Let me ask the man who could maintain this position most stiffly, what compensation he will accept to go to church some Sunday and sit during the sermon with his wife's bonnet upon his head? Not a trifle, I'll venture. And why not? There would be nothing irreligious in it, nothing immoral, nothing uncomfortable—then why not? Is it not because there would be something egregiously unfashionable in it? Then it is the influence of fashion; and what is fashion but the influence that other people's actions have on our actions—the strong inclination each of us feels to do as we see all our neighbors do? Nor is the influence of fashion confined to any particular thing or class of things; it is just as strong on one subject as another. Let us make it as unfashionable to withhold our names from the temperance cause as for husbands to wear their wives' bonnets to church, and instances will be just as rare in one case as the other."

The church has the privilege of teaching its members the value of law in promoting the welfare of the drunkard. The brewers of England are cursing Lloyd George for their loss of trade. And what has Mr. George done to make them lose trade? He has been the leader in making laws restricting the liquor business. The Rev. Joseph H. Croker, writing in The Christian Register says, "The ancient fallacy is constantly making the rounds of the press and platform: Man cannot be made good by law! But is not this the object of all legislation, to make people good in a large and general way? They are made good by statute just as they are made wise by law. In the one case government provides the means of education, and in the other it imposes restraints upon vice and creates incentives and opportunities of virtue. The state would be a pitiful failure could it not help people to be good, not by fiat, but by providing favorable conditions. And this is all that advocates of temperance laws have in mind. Both law and sentiment are needed. Law without public sentiment is like a machine without motive power; while mere public sentiment without some definite legal agency for its enforcement is as ineffective as powder burned in the open air."

But favorable conditions and scientific teaching on the effect of alcohol are not enough. Appetite drives men to get liquor at any cost of labor and social disapproval. They may know exactly what drinking is doing for them and that knowledge may have no power of restraint. What can be done for those whose appetite for strong drink is their distinguishing characteristic? Such men can be saved only by motives powerful enough to overcome appetite and it is the business of the church to give them right motives, to strengthen right impulses. One who reads "Twice-Born Men" is made aware that the gospel is the power of God unto salvation. The Salvation Army is able to point with pride to the sobriety of many whom its preaching of the Gospel of Hope has saved from drunkenness. A few churches are able to arouse the nobler ambitions of the victims of drink. Unfortunately, many churches have no word of power to speak to the weak-willed drunkard. If a church cannot impress its message powerfully upon the drunkard, is it not time to ask whether it is really preaching it to any one? [Midweek Service, May 3. Luke 4:16-19; 7:36-50; I Cor. 6:9-11.] S. J.

A Time of Testing

It is becoming plain that the Disciples of Christ are today confronting the most favorable opportunity to make a constructive contribution to Christian union that has been theirs in a hundred years.

And this opportunity puts to the test in a most searching and revealing way the principles, the temper, the motives and the sincerity of our people.

So long as the ideal of Christian unity was indifferently regarded by the denominations there was left to the Disciples no course except to pursue an aggressive evangelistic method in building up churches simply Christian, which though appearing to others as constituting another denomination, would nevertheless be potent forces for unity in the day of opportunity.

Whether during the long period of unresponsiveness to the plea for unity the Disciples have so habituated themselves to their denominational status that they cannot now bear an effective testimony to their ideal is the question which, it is believed, will be answered in the next decade.

In very practical and very candid terms the test is being applied to us in such searching questions as the following:

Are the Disciples more ready for Christian union than other religious bodies?

Are the Disciples bound down to denominational practices and traditions, to a human creed—albeit unwritten—, to their own private interpretation of the Scripture, in such a way as to render them a further complication of the union problem instead of a potent factor in the solution of it?

Have the Disciples developed an institutional life which stimulates the same sectarian prejudices as flourish in all denominations, reënforced by a not undeserved pride in the marvelous growth of their body?

Do the men of light and leading, the officials of the various societies, for example, feel more sensitive in the matter of their adjustment to the "denominational" consciousness of the Disciples than to the great ideals of unity which the Disciples were born to promote?

And, finally, has there grown up within our borders a press with established interests dependent upon the continuance of the Disciples as a denomination, a press which, lacking the world-view, feels—subconsciously, perhaps—that its very life is threatened by any movement on the part of Disciple churches to actually practice Christian union?

These are some of the questions which are pushing their way to the front of the most discerning and sensitive minds among us, and not among ourselves alone, but among other communions many of whose leaders have been watching the Disciples' growth and studying their temper for many years.

What the final issue of such questions as these will be The Christian Century has no doubt. It is unthinkable that the main body of our people will fall back into the sectarian pit from which they have been digged. Our ultimate testimony to Christendom will be in harmony with Thomas Campbell's declaration and address and with the ideal which has inspired us since 1809.

* * *

However, it may be expected that before these issues are definitively determined, there will be contradictory and confused voices in the presence of the open door of opportunity which the Disciples confront.

The chance to actually practice Christian union will strike panic to the souls of some who have adjusted themselves to the Disciples as a strong, growing, respectable member of the family of denominations, with a denominational integrity of their own to maintain—like all the others. Such persons will do all in their power to hinder the realization of our ideal.

We may refer to two outstanding instances of this obstructionist attitude toward the practice of unity. They are found in two well-known newspapers of the brotherhood.

The Christian Standard, hearing that there were strong sentiments among Disciple missionaries on the foreign field favorable to the actual practice of Christian union within the Church of Christ, and hearing also that at a certain conference in India in which Disciple representatives participated a tentative plan for the partial realization of our ideal of unity was adopted, to be submitted to the churches and missions interested, wrote an ingenious editorial calculated to embarrass the two leading foreign missionary societies of the brotherhood.

This editorial called upon these missionary agencies to arise and explain that their missionaries held no such sentiment and could be relied upon not to practice Christian union on the foreign field, however imperative the occasion might seem to be. The Standard left no doubt in the minds of its readers that failure on the part of these two societies to speak out, giving satisfactory explanations, would result in the use of its influence to inhibit the sending of funds to the treasuries of these societies.

On another page will be found the response of these two societies. To readers of The Christian Century there is no occasion to discuss the contents of this statement. It does but make more clear the situation described in these columns in several recent issues.

Our concern at this moment is with the sorry fact that these societies felt compelled to make any statement at all, unless it should have been a glad announcement that at last the day had dawned for which the Disciples long had prayed.

The incident is cited here as an illustration of the paradoxical situation in which the Disciples find themselves: having pleaded for Christian union a full hundred years, and now standing at an open door of opportunity for practicing it, they feel the surly hand of a vested interest laid upon their shoulder and holding them back.

* * *

The other instance illustrating the same paradox is found in the attitude of The Christian Evangelist toward a concrete case of proposed union between a church of Disciples and a neighboring Congregational church.

An inquiry concerning methods of procedure addressed to The Christian Century by the Disciple pastor had drawn from this paper two articles of encouragement and counsel.

This counsel was based on no first hand knowledge of the facts, but on the statements made by the inquiring pastor in his letter. It is not impossible that in his enthusiasm for unity he did not fully estimate the forces that would oppose any such action, both in his own congregation and that of the Congregationalists. But we had no right to assume the conditions other than as described, namely, that two congregations in the same community desired to unite and had good and sufficient reasons therefor.

How now could they unite?

The Christian Century pointed out that union between Disciples and Congregationalists was desirable, feasable and would be highly significant. We did not believe that any vital thing stood in the way of union provided both bodies—or, in this case, both congregations—really desired it. A way was pointed out by which union might be consummated without trespassing upon the consciences of either group.

That this is the true way for Disciples of Christ to talk, The Christian Century believes. That Thomas Campbell believed there was absolutely no good or vital reason why even the churches of his day should be divided, is a fact of history. That the apparent excuses for division have greatly diminished since his day nobody will dispute.

Therefore this paper minimized differences and encouraged action.

The Christian Evangelist, apparently fearing lest some attempt at practicing Christian union between the two churches would actually be made, printed an editorial unique in the literature of the Disciples. It was entitled "Christian Unity in Fairyland."

The whole matter was treated as a joke. Disciples and Congregationalists, it said, have deep-set prejudices and convictions making union impossible until these hindrances are removed. The counsel of The Christian Century was characterized as a fairy dream, "formulated in the upper air."

But if any one should attempt to bring this theory of union down out of the air and treat it as a practicable thing, he would find himself running against some very stubborn facts and certain old-fashioned consciences, which somehow cannot be manipulated by finespun theories.

The Christian Evangelist then proceeded to mention six or seven "snags" that stand in the way of the union of these two congregations and asked The Christian Century to try its hand at removing them out of the way. These questions—"snags"— it is our purpose to consider in another issue. We are interested now not in defending our counsel given to the inquirer but in calling attention to the startling difference between the tone of voice in which the Christian Evangelist speaks of unity when confronted by a concrete chance to practice it and that in which, let us say, Thomas Campbell spoke of it.

Directly after the editorial appeared in The Evangelist the inquiring pastor sent a note to its editors, asking them to give their advice as The Christian Century had done, showing him "how to deal with the situation so as to make our plea for union effective."

Here now was a chance for The Christian Evangelist to grapple the union problem close to the ground. We should hear no fairy story now, but good, hard, practicable counsel opening the way to speedy and enduring union.

Much to the surprise of every one who had read the criticism of The Christian Century's treatment of the matter, The Christian Evangelist sets the union of these two congregations farther away than fairy land. It magnifies obstacles and discourages action. It assumes that both Disciples and Congregationalists have a wide assortment of "conscientious convictions" which stand in the way of union. "Chief among them is baptism, both as respects its form and symbolical significance, and its proper subjects."

"We cannot sacrifice conscience for union," it says.

No one would dream that he was reading a paper published by the Disciples of Christ whose passion is for union, who declare division a sin, who believe the supreme desire of Christ is that his followers may be one, and whose essential message has ever been that the things that divide the church are not matters of conscience at all.

One cannot help asking the questions at the beginning of this article as he reads The Christian Evangelist's counsel to a pastor face to face with what is persumably a typical case for the application of the Disciple principles.

The Christian Evangelist's answer wholly lacks the Disciples' insight.

It is just such an answer as any good sectarian paper might give today. Indeed we know of some papers not published by Disciples that would speak a bigger word than our contemporary of St. Louis uttered in this case.

The essential sectarian implication of the proposal for a union Bible class to study for a year! the questions: (1) What is the New Testament confession of faith which should in all cases precede baptism? (2) How does faith in Christ express itself in relation to membership in Christ's church? (3) By what names should Christ's church be called? is apparent to anyone.

Is this all the Disciples have to say? Are such questions the big questions that underlie unity? Must serious-minded Christians stay apart until they have spent a year threshing out old straw like this?

Does The Christian Evangelist want union? Is it ready for union? Is it not, rather, surprised and confused—and judged, too,—when it stands face to face with an opportunity to practice the thing for which it has so long and eloquently pleaded?

These questions would not be allowed to leave our pen were it not for the cautionary, inhibitive words with which it closes its article, advising this pastor and his church not to practice Christian union with the Congregationalists until their course could be approved by the whole brotherhood!

Are these the dimensions of the sectarian pocket into which the Disciples' movement for unity has been put away in the very day of its opportunity?

Teaching Nuggets

Prejudice blinds us to our highest privileges.

Following Him is finding him in all his fulness.

All great leaders have had to learn to be followers.

"Come and you will see" is the best pedagogy known.

The best way to pray, "Abide with me," is to stay in his ways.

No sincere disciple was ever willing to be a solitary disciple.

A Card Relating to Union in Mission Work in India.

[See Editorial on Page 6]

Two years ago a conference in the interest of Christian union was held in Jubbulpore, India. Seven or eight religious bodies were represented in that conference. It was believed by most of the delegates that in order to effect a union of all the Christian forces in India the converts of the different Missions must be freely accepted by all. The delegates representing religious bodies practicing affusion urged that the Missions practicing immersion should consent to accept their converts without any question as to baptism. This our missionaries in India (or in any other field) have not done.

The basis of union proposed at the Jubbulpore Conference was not satisfactory to our missionaries and was referred back to its authors for modification. The whole matter will be considered again at a conference to be held in August of the current year. Meanwhile, all the Missions continue to observe the ordinances as they have been doing from the beginning. Mr. Rains has been in India recently and has discussed the situation with our missionaries and approves their action in not accepting the basis of union proposed by the Conference.

The brethren should know that the situation in India is very different from what it is in America. Here, if members of immersionist or non-immersionist churches move from one part of the country to another, they can easily find church homes of their own kind; but in India where there is only one Mission in one town or district this is not the case. It often happens that those who conscientiously believe that they have been scripturally baptized and are refused admittance into immersionist churches lose their interest in Christianity and go back to heathenism and are lost. It is affirmed that in some mission centers more have been lost to Christianity from this cause than have been won by the missionaries there from paganism. It is the loss of so many, who are only babes in Christ, that troubles the missionaries and makes them wish that some solution for the problem could be found. They have to deal with a very difficult situation. This being the fact, it is not strange that they have been discussing it from all sides and in all its bearings.

The basis of union has been discussed by our missionaries but they have not entered into any agreement with the missionaries of other societies to receive the unimmersed. No unimmersed person has been received into any one of our mission churches in India, or elsewhere, and no agreement to do so has been made. No change will be made in the present practice of the Mission in India or elsewhere in foreign fields without the knowledge and approval of the Executive Committees.

MRS. ANNA R. ATWATER,
President.
MRS. M. E. HARLAN,
Secretary.
For the executive committee of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions.

A. MCLEAN,
President.
STEPHEN J. COREY,
Secretary.
For the executive committee of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society.

A Social Faith

In The Student World of April, 1911, there is an article on "Indian Nationalism and the Student Movement." The writer is Principal A. G. Fraser, Trinity College, Kandy, Ceylon. He tells the student volunteers what he thinks they ought to bring to India in order to prove their right to be missionaries. They must reckon with Indian nationalism. The people of India are discovering themselves. They have grasped firmly the idea of nationality and their enthusiasm for it is passionate. What can the missionary do for India at this time? Principal Fraser says:

Strive to get a social faith. In the words of Mazzini, "not that individual faith which creates martyrs but that social faith which is the parent of victory; the faith that arouses multitudes; faith in their own destiny, in their own mission and in the mission of the epoch; faith that combats and prays; faith that enlightens and bids men advance fearlessly in the ways of God and Humanity."

Do you believe in the honor and glory of India and China? Do you believe they will rise to the height that God has planned for them and that they will stand forth some day in the glory of their Saviour? If not, there is little use in your working with and for them. They believe in their future, and they are right. But if with them you can see a little of that coming glory, then study those masters of the social faith, the prophets of Israel. Take if you like as an introduction the Commentaries of Principal George Adam Smith; but study the prophets of Israel. They lived in just such times as we now live in, in the East, and their message is essentially part of ours.

"Loose Them and Let Them Go!"

[The statement from the Foreign Society and the Christian Woman's Board of Missions found on this page was called forth by a peremptory demand of the Christian Standard for an explanation of the sentiments of many missionaries with reference to the practice of Christian unity on the foreign field. In the Standard of April 15, Claris Yeuell contributes a startlingly frank and penetrating stricture on the Standard's own editorial. It should be read in connection with the Societies' statement and so is reproduced here.—The Editors.]

"A PLACE FOR EXPLANATION."

CLARIS YEUELL.

The editorial of March 25, headed as above, deals with a live theme. To me it seems, though, to be treated in a dead spirit. Lively it may be, but not alive. A queer combination of backwoods belligerency and high church hauteur. It deals with a large problem in a small spirit. It lacks even the metropolitan mind in handling a question of broad bearings. It is provincial, if not pharisaical. Its spirit is not Christian, in any but the narrowest sense. It needs feeling, sympathy and soul.

Dr. Johann Warneck, of Sumatra, during a discussion at the Edinburgh World's Missionary Conference, declared that heathenism is materialistic.

It has lost God; it is without God; it is far from God. The animistic heathen are slaves of fear. We missionaries observe in missionary work at the present time the greatest wonder that exists in the world, except the incarnation of God in the person of his Son. It is the conversion of men hitherto seeking only the lowest things of the earthly life, men to whom the first message of the gospel sounds ridiculous and absurd, men who, though they are cannibals and wicked, do not admit that they have done any sin or wrong. This is what makes the missionary task so dear, so great—to see how the gospel of Christ brings absolutely new forces to bear upon these earthly minded people. I saw in Sumatra, among the wild Battak tribes, that the preaching of the gospel really delivered these poor slaves from their fear; that they became free, joyful, thankful men. Then I saw that they experienced in their sinful life the presence of the living, almighty, loving God; that they came into a real, deep communion with our Father in heaven. The reality of this communion is proved by their living faith, which often makes us ashamed, and likewise by the sincerity of their prayers. In connection with this communion they learn to fight against their sins and the national vices.

Surely it is not the purpose of the plea of the disciples to refuse Christian recognition to such transformed heathenism as is here portrayed. These Sumatrans are certainly Christians. They have the divine nature, and, in a sense that we know nothing of in Christendom, they have been born of the Spirit. In all truth outside of technical considerations, they are regenerated. They have submitted in all good faith, and with an intensity of devotion altogether foreign to us, to what they have been taught is baptism—they are not unbaptized, only in the most literalistic and legalistic sense. In God's sight I have no hesitation in averring they are baptized, and who will dare deny? And yet, virtually we are to treat them as though they are the veriest heathen, if there is any logic to the contentions of this article.

Let me say regarding the questions submitted to our various interests, that, if any of our brethren think that any of our missionaries are teaching and practicing the plea among the heathen in any formal or proscriptive sense, as it is sometimes, and too frequently, done at home, they are grievously deluded, and might as well, without any more ado, withdraw all support from the societies or other agencies through which they work. There may be some visionaries (and they are men without vision in any true sense), representing mainly our non-coöperating brethren, who try to because they do not know any better, and their work, at its best, as is well known, amounts to very little. But among the heathen, whatever may have been their attitude at home and no matter what body they represent, missionaries soon forget their isms, even their "our-plea" isms, and all are Christians to them who name the name of Christ and depart from iniquity. The heathen field is more a place for expansion and application than for explanation. Conditions rather than theories guide the misisonaries, and I, for one, say, "Loose them and let them go."

Paulding, Ohio.

Lose not the sense of wonder as you go through life, for wonder is a token of the Christ-commended childlike heart. Under the surface is much wealth that God has hidden for your seeking. There is ever a deeper meaning in common things, had you but eyes to see and hearts to understand.—Hilton Jones.

Prohibition in a College Town

BY MARY H. KROUT.

For more than sixty years the town of Crawfordsville, Ind., has never been without its saloons. In the early days these places had their regular customers—perfectly respectable people, many of them, both amongst the town residents and the farming class. As time passed, public sentiment began to condemn the licensed sale of spirits. The saloons still had a profitable patronage, but it was no longer respectable to be seen entering them. The customers narrowed down to the reckless and hardened, or to those who came and went by the back door.

From a rural hamlet the town became a small railroad centre and manufactories sprang up. These two sources recruited the saloons, which still flourished, and to these patrons were added the more unsuccessful of the farmers.

The town has been the seat of Wabash College for some seventy years. Several successful and well-known authors have given it some degree of celebrity as a literary centre. But notwithstanding this the saloon held its own in spite of the long continued efforts of the more intelligent and moral element to abolish it.

In 1909 the temperance people, irrespective of politics secured the enactment of a law that made it possible for the majority in each county to decide whether the saloon should continue or go.

Voted Dry.

To the surprise of everybody almost every county in the state voted "dry," Montgomery county, of which Crawfordsville was the seat, amongst them. The proprietors of the saloons were allowed to continue until their license expired, and it narrowed the trade until but one remained, where could be studied all the salient features of the traffic. Finally this, too, ceased to exist, and Crawfordsville became a prohibition town.

The beneficial effects made themselves felt almost immediately. For one thing, the crowds of drunken loafers that lounged about the saloons which have always been on the best streets, melted away; there were fewer arrests for disorderly conduct, fewer prisoners in the county jail. The dry-goods stores, groceries and hardware stores got the money that had gone into the till of the saloon-keeper. Children in the public schools that had come poorly clad, in patched and ragged shoes and clothing, began to be well-dressed, to hold up their heads for their fathers were no longer drunken.

Beneficial Effects.

The manufacturers, without an exception have testified that the effects of shutting up the saloons have been beneficial beyond anything they could have expected. Among their employes, as always happens, were those who frequently spent Saturday night and Sunday drinking. Monday morning found them practically disabled. Often it was the middle of the week before they were in normal physical condition.

In their families the children were half-starved and the mothers and daughters eked out the income, which would have given them a good living had the father been sober, by sewing and washing, and working in the factories. When the saloons went these men ceased to drink. They supported their families in comfort and even saved money. Men who had never been able to get ahead had a balance in the bank.

One dealer in hardware and agricultural implements said that in the past year he had sold $8,000 worth of farming implements, more than he had ever sold in any one year during all the time he had been in business in Crawfordsville. The money, formerly squandered in the saloon had been thus spent by farmers who, up to that time, had always been too poor to buy the implements needed to cultivate their land. This, of course, meant better farming, larger crops and larger profits, the farmer's family sharing in his prosperity.

A Reformed Expressman.

There is in the town a young man engaged in the transfer and express business. Energetic, reliable and prompt, he built up a good business. But at times he drank heavily. At such crises he became almost a raving maniac, and was finally sent to the Hospital for the Insane in Indianapolis. Again and again he pulled himself together, and after losing all he had, built up his business, but only to have it swept away. While he was in the Insane Hospital the local option law went into effect and when he was sent home cured, there were no saloons to tempt him. He went to work again, got a little money, bought a poor half-starved horse and a ram-shackle wagon. Within a year he has been able to get a good wagon, and now owns two horses.

There have been, as goes without saying, violations of the law against selling liquor without license,—"blind tigers" and "bootlegging." But these have not been numerous. The risk has been too great. The mere inconvenience in getting liquor secretly has been a great factor in keeping men sober who never hesitated when the saloon doors stood open on every thoroughfare.

Few had the time or the money to go to the towns where the saloons were still running wide open—Indianapolis, Lafayette, Terre Haute and elsewhere.

What a Resident Says.

One of the most tireless, fearless and indefatigable workers in the temperance crusade has been Dr. George L. Mackintosh, president of Wabash College. He says that college discipline has never been so easy to maintain as within the past year; with a marked advance in studiousness and good conduct amongst the students. While they have come from the better families, it would have been impossible not to find some few in an attendance of nearly four hundred, disposed to patronize the saloon if it could be made safe and easy, and these, in their influence and example have been a menace to others. The saloon abolished, this serious difficulty has been abolished with it.

It is not to be supposed that the whiskey interests of the state have watched these tremendous inroads upon their profits without an effort to recover the ground they have lost. They have helped the illegal traffic in all ways that they could, but this has been a petty business compared to the enormous revenue from thousands of saloons. An individual struggle was hopeless. But last autumn a legislature was to be elected with power to abrogate or amend the law that has been so disastrous to their prosperity. There is no doubt that every man on every ticket was known to the brewers and distillers, with the price of those who could be bought, and they poured thousands of dollars into the state and elected their tools. The Democratic party in its platform pledged itself specially to revise the law that had been enacted with such labor, and which had been indorsed throughout nearly the whole of the state by a majority of the voters. The liquor men kept a strong lobby at the capital during the entire session—limited, fortunately, in Indiana to six weeks, and they worked with insolent boldness, their agents going in upon the very floor and whipping their creatures into obedience. The point at issue was that, instead of an entire county constituting the electoral unit, the units should be decreased in size and increased as to numbers. In other words, there should be an election in every township, instead of a single decisive election for the county. This entailed upon the tax payers a heavy cost, and in the elections just held, while the "Drys" are still in the ascendancy in some places where they succeeded a year ago; in others the saloon has been restored with all its attendant evils.

A Warm Campaign.

The campaign in Crawfordsville, which emphasized its "No" of a year ago, has been typical of the struggle that has gone on everywhere. The forces of the "Drys" were thoroughly organized. They had the facts and figures of one year's experiment in prohibition at their command as an unanswerable argument in favor of keeping the saloons shut. It was an immense advantage.

The lines have been sharply drawn. On one side lined up the schools, the churches, and better class of people. On the other, were the saloon men, their patrons and a few politicians who suppressed their names.

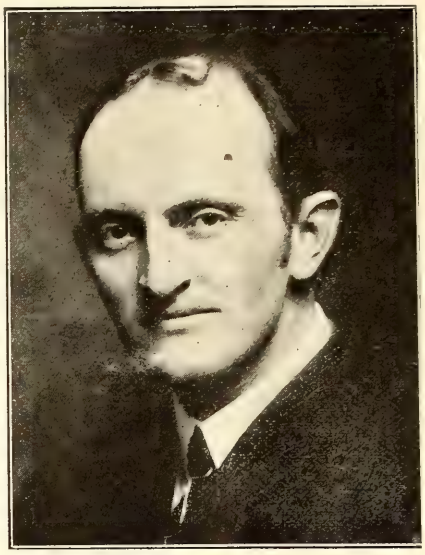
The last-mentioned secretiveness was characteristic of the "Wets." A suspicious "Business Men's League" floated the town with circulars, false and misleading in every statement, endeavoring to prove that the closing of the saloon had increased the tax through the prosecution of men illegally engaged in the liquor traffic. Not a name was signed to the document, and had they been they would have carried no weight. Every law-abiding citizen would have been ready to testify that the good achieved would have been cheap at the price. The fight was short and sharp, lasting only two weeks.

Meetings were held daily and were largely attended. The day before the election several thousand children from the public schools marched through the principal streets, each carrying a flag with drums beating, and such telling mottoes in evidence as "Vote for us until we can vote for ourselves." The children were formed into line and sent on their way, unaccompanied by their teachers. Thousands of people looked on from the curb-stones, and the moral effect was tremendous.

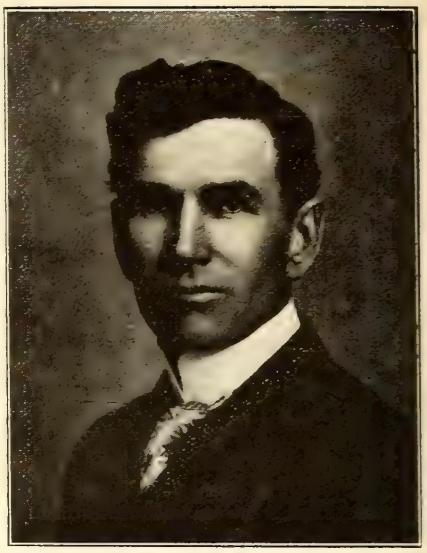
On election day women, young and old, served coffee and sandwiches in the neighborhood of the polling places. When the votes were counted—in spite of some mysterious difficulty with the voting machines in two precincts—the "Drys" once more were in the majority, and in Montgomery county, at least, the saloon is barred out for another two years.

To be calm when others about us are troubled; to dream dreams and yet not to be mastered by them; to think and yet not make thoughts an end; to meet triumph without pride and disaster without being embittered; to walk with the many and keep virtuous; to hold converse with the mighty and yet not lose the common touch; to be influenced neither by the criticism of foes nor the flattery of friends; to endeavor to be of service and helpfulness to others; to keep in mind the transitions of life's experiences; to love humanity and to trust in God—these are guideposts on the highway to happiness. A. T. FOWLER.

Rev. H. A. Denton.



Rev. E. F. Daugherty.



Rev. David H. Shields.

Disciples in Congress Assembled

Account of the Stimulating Program at Springfield, Ill.

Another Congress of the Disciples has come and gone, leaving behind it the same four deep impressions made by all previous congresses: that of great inspiration and broadening to those who attended, that of regret that so relatively few of the ministers and thoughtful laymen of the brotherhood were present, that of the immeasurable possibilities of progress involved in the Congress idea, and that of a firm resolve on the part of those who were in attendance to strive to make the next one more nearly representative of the great communion the Congress is designed to serve.

The attendance was, as usual, mostly from the state in which the sessions were held. Illinois ministers made up perhaps three-fourths of those present. Missouri, Indiana, Ohio and Kentucky were represented in the registration, while one delegate, Rev. H. A. Denton, came all the way from Troy, N. Y., to Springfield to participate in the giving and receiving of this annual feast.

Program's High Character.

No more stimulating program has ever been offered our Congress goers. Looked at in advance, there seemed to be a certain sameness of subject matter throughout the program—psychology and liberal Christianity were the dominant words—and many no doubt felt that these themes were rather remote and academic, discussed, as they were for the most part announced to be, by representatives of the academic world, professors in colleges and universities. The program would have drawn a larger attendance had it exhibited a wider variety of theme and dealt with some of the questions now burning in the souls of all Disciples of Christ.

But as actually rendered the program was full of variety and vitality. It dealt with live issues in the liveliest way and stimulated the best kind of discussion.

Papers on Education.

The opening papers of Tuesday evening by President Miner Lee Bates of Hiram College on "Schools of the Disciples of Christ" and Dean Charles M. Sharpe of the Missouri Bible College on "The Religious Need of Our State Universities" the present writer did not hear, but arriving next morning he did hear that both were splendidly conceived and heartily received. Mr. Bates started an analysis of educational conditions among the Disciples which, while yielding much valuable data, suggested also a method of approach to this vital problem of our people.

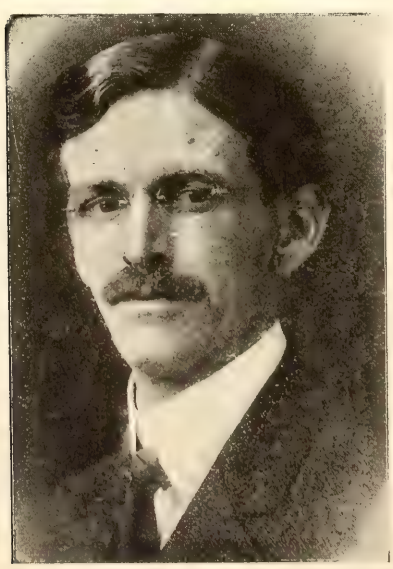
On Wednesday morning the "psychological" sessions began. Rev. E. F. Daugherty of Vincennes, Ind., read a paper on "Psychology and Biblical Interpretation." Mr. Daugherty began a long way back of his subject, tracing out his relation to the Congress in general and depreciating his fitness for the particular task assigned him. At first the hearers felt a bit resentful that so much time was taken in the "approach" to the subject, but afterward, in looking back over the complete address, one could see how the logical treatment was illuminated by the personal disclosures of the preface.

Biblical Phenomena Discussed.

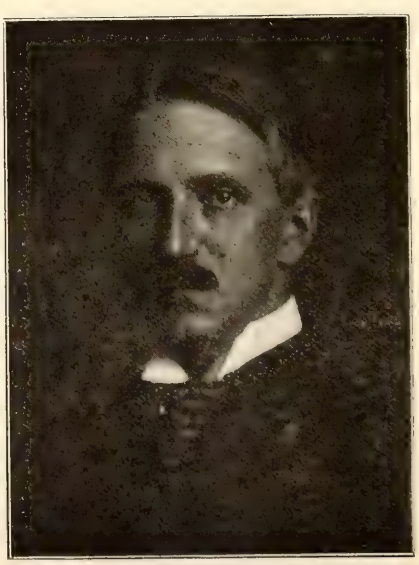
Various biblical phenomena belonging in the field of psychological interpretation were discussed helpfully by Mr. Daugherty and Mr. Denton, whose paper dealt with the same subject. Inspiration, vision, prophecy, the Holy Spirit, conversion, the gift of "tongues," miracles and the Christian character were considered by the papers. An interesting and typical paragraph showing the spirit and method of treatment is this quotation from Mr. Daugherty's paper in its treatment of the phenomenon of "tongues" in the early church:

"The Pentecostal manifestation [of tongues] may have had a psychological value in the merely sympathetic attitude of mind the auditors had for the messengers and the thing of which they testify on the occasion. Just as one today without an understanding of the French may be sympathetic toward the genius of Sarah Bernhardt. My interest in the 'divine Sarah' was psychological rather than philological, and though grasping only an occasional word in her lines I was not without appreciation of the pantomime. Why should it not have been so with tongues? As a phenomenon it passed, being of low value: its appeal today is entirely to those of mystical turn and ignorant condition. Psychological study may attain in time, is attaining, a better scientific appreciation of the things which have had supernatural explanation heretofore. I raise the simple query—whether a thing be natural or supernatural in popular acceptance—is its divineness invalidated by the point of view? I see God in the growth of the flowers. The wonder of Him and His work is no greater in a miracle, so-called, than in any natural phenomenon which is, in the last analysis, inexplicable."

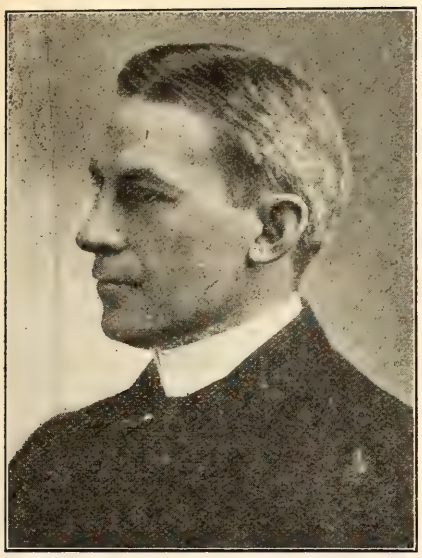
Mr. Denton's paper disavowed any affinity



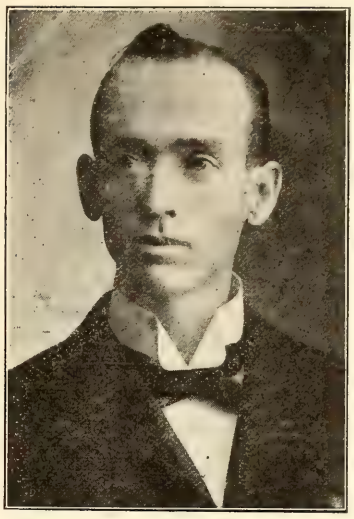
Professor Ernest H. Lindley.



Professor Edward C. Moore.



Professor Edward S. Ames.



Professor Charles M. Sharpe.

Rev. Truman E. Winter.

with any particular school of thought and asked to be judged as an original contribution. The author, however, as did also Mr. Daugherty, showed considerable sympathy for the pragmatic point of view.

The morning session prepared the mind of everybody for the highly interesting interpretation of the personality and teaching of Professor William James, which was given by Professor E. H. Lindley of Indiana University at the afternoon session. For an hour and three-quarters Dr. Lindley sketched the picturesque career of this most distinguished modern psychologist. When four o'clock came it was only because the special cars furnished by the Chamber of Commerce to take the visitors to Lincoln's tomb were announced as waiting, that the Congress consented to adjourn.

Popularizing a Technical Concept.

That evening Professor E. S. Ames of the University of Chicago read a paper on "Religion and the Social Consciousness." Except to those who have been trained in the processes and concepts by which modern psychology does its work, the statement in Professor Ames' recent book on religious psychology that "religion is a phase of the social consciousness" is likely to seem very thin and pale and totally inadequate. It was evidently Dr. Ames' purpose in writing his paper to clear up the meaning of the term and to show the thorough-going social character of religion. His paper was able and well received, though not wholly convincing to all his hearers. Rev. George A. Campbell, of Hannibal, Mo., voiced the feeling that a considerable portion of the religious life had not been brought into the purview of the paper. Others took part in an informing and appreciative discussion.

Thursday was liberal Christianity day. Professor Edward C. Moore of Harvard University presented an address in the forenoon on "Modern Thought and Religious Belief." He defined modern thought as originating in the philosophical revolution of Emmanuel Kant something over one hundred years ago. Kant's great discovery was that of the constructive activity of the mind in knowledge. That is to say, the mind does not simply receive truth from without; it constructs it. This discovery together with the insight into the evolutionary character of the world have given the modern man a universe vastly different from that of those who lived before Kant. Modern thought brings into a unitary system the three great magnitudes upon which we may reflect: God, Nature and man. The bearings of this fundamental thesis were brought out with matchless skill, vivacity and frankness. The evolutionary conception of the world was characterized as being far more thrillingly religious than the old-time static conception. At the close the questions showered themselves upon the speaker. Past the noon hour's call for dinner the entire gathering stayed, eager for the lucid replies with which he answered all inquiries. Miracles, inspiration, Christian union, the church and its ordinances, all were discussed in their relation to modern thought.

Liberal Christianity and Missions.

That evening Professor Moore related modern thought to Christian missions. He is chairman of the executive committee of the American Board of Commissioners and a member of the Continuation Committee of the Edinburgh Conference, so he spoke with deep insight into mission work and ideals as well as into the academic aspect of modern thought. It was a great message that he brought, contrasting the old and the new way of conceiving Christian missions and interpreting the equally if not more potent sanctions for missionary enterprise in liberal Christianity than in the older forms.

The visit of these two men—Professors Lindley and Moore—to the Congress brought great inspiration and blessing to all who heard them. Again and again the sentiment was heard that next year's Congress should procure them and set in motion such agencies of publicity as would bring out an attendance of five hundred or a thousand men.

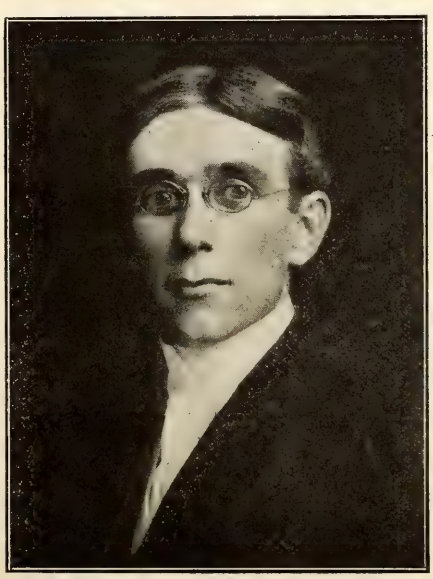
The papers by Rev. David H. Shields of Eureka, Ill., and Rev. T. E. Winter of Fulton, Mo., given on Thursday afternoon, were not heard by so large a company as they deserved. Perhaps the long concentration of attention given Professor Moore in the morning together with the great deposit of material for further thought left in the minds of the Congress by his address caused the attendants to go apart and talk in groups about the things they had heard. Both papers emphasized the importance of the church relating itself vitally to the changing order of the modern world.

Joint Congress With Baptists.

Two matters of action by the Congress must be mentioned. One of these was the acceptance of the invitation to participate with Baptists and Free Baptists triennially in a joint Congress, particularly in the gathering to be held in Atlantic City in November of this year. The Disciples will share equally with the two other bodies in the number of speakers on the program and bear their share of expense by providing for the transportation of their speakers to and from the place of meeting.

The other action taken was in selecting Kansas City as the place of meeting a year hence with Dean C. M. Sharpe, Columbia, Rev. C. M. Chilton, St. Joseph, and Rev. L. J. Marshall, Kansas City, as executive committee, charged with the responsibility of providing the program and making all arrangements for the Congress.

Springfield's hospitality was just perfect—that's all. The pastors—Golden, Burnham and Jenner—and their people enhanced their city's reputation as a delightful place in which to hold a Christian convocation of any sort.



Rev. J. C. Todd, Secretary.

Rev. C. H. Winders, President

The Convict

BY JAMES S. KIRTLEY.

"If you expect to get forgiveness from heaven you've got to do some forgiving yourself and there's no use to ask it of him, unless you ask it of everybody you have ever wronged."

Deacon Plant was putting it straight to the men in his Sunday-school class, at the Joliet penitentiary.

"The two things go together," continued the grand old man. "What do you say, men? Are these straight and fair propositions?"

Heads nodded approval and "yes" and "that's right" came, again and again, from that class of fifty men.

"A-a-a-amen," spoke out an unctious old fellow who claimed to have "got religion" when Evangelist Tucker held his three days' meetings at the penitentiary, five years before.

"What's the matter with that theory?" asked the deacon again.

"It's all right," thundered twenty or more men's voices.

Joe Webb's face had lost its usual sunny look and was fairly black with rage, as he sat directly in front of Plant.

"Then, am I to understand that you are ready to act on these principles?" Again nods and a multitudinous "yes" were the reply.

"I will never forgive that black-hearted devil who swore to a lie and sent me here," and Joe said it in a way that was conclusive.

"But you have to, Joe," said his teacher.

"Can't help it. Guess I'm a goner, then," and, by this time, the most popular convict, the most bright and witty man in those walls, was almost beside himself.

"Hold on, Joe, don't make a definite decision on that matter today. Think it over and let me know next Sunday."

Joe's face relaxed into a semblance of his genial, jolly, joking self, as he said. "All right; I'll see if I can improve my rhetoric by that time."

Next Sunday the deacon asked, "how is it Joe? Can you forgive, now?"

"Just the same. I'd like to boil Dan Nugent and make soap out of him. He has plenty of grease and we wouldn't need any lye" and his tongue lingered fondly on the word "lye."

After the class, Mr. Plant asked Joe for a talk and they were joined by George Vann, who also taught a class. The talk drew out all the facts of Joe's sad and singular case—his early life at Scranton, Pa., where he graduated at the high school, his four years at Rock City, where he won a good position as bookkeeper and assistant cashier in the bank, his marriage to Agnes Lyle, the accusation of stealing $3,000 and his conviction on the testimony of the cashier whom everybody called "honest Dan Nugent." The books had been tampered with and the handwriting was so much like his the case went against him. He felt confident Dan himself had stolen the money as he was cashier over Joe, but he could not prove it. It was a federal case and no mercy was shown.

Both Plant and Vann were convinced, by his straightforward manner, that Joe was telling the truth. Mr. Plant simply said, "I would hate to have such a task, Joe, but I don't see that there is anything else but to forgive him."

"Why?"

"Because you can't be forgiven yourself unless you forgive him."

"If he gets off free, while I suffer, it's more like the burglar prosecuting the man whose house he robbed."

"No, he's going to be punished."

"Who'll do it?"

"The one who says 'Vengeance belongs to me; I will recompense.'"

"I think I can do it more to my own satisfaction than he will."

"But, Joe, He knows exactly how to do it and you might not hand out just what is coming to him. Your heart might fail you and you would stop before you got through, or you might not stop at all."

"I'll promise to give him enough. Besides, if Dan should ask Him to forgive him, He might let the rascal off entirely."

"In that case," said Plant, he will compel Dan to make it right with you and besides He will make Dan punish himself more than you can punish him."

"Well I guess I can let it go at that. But Dan is going to be sore for a million years with the beating he will get. Suppose he won't repent?"

"Then," said the deacon, "he will catch it, good and plenty."

The two men were well pleased when Joe "gave Dan over," as he said, and was very happy. The logic of it seemed rational to Joe.

"Now, Joe," asked the deacon, in the class, next Sunday morning, "are you ready to forgive him?" And all were pleased with the positive way he answered, "I am."

From that time Joe was one of the happy converts. He even substituted as teacher, one Sunday when the deacon was sick. He specialized on the doctrine of forgiveness, made that a sort of hobby. It surprised a good many, for they knew Joe thought Dan had sent him there on false testimony and they knew he had been studying law, expecting to practice it, when he was free, and to send Dan there. He was only twenty-six.

Old Tim Sullivan said, "Joe you 'pear to think you and Godlemighty can clean up creation with yer fergivin' business. Guess you're lettin' 'em know at home, so as to git Dan off his guard, fer I've hyeard you say, many a time, 'at you's jes' keepin' your place in the pen warm fer Dan an' at you's studyin' law so's to be able to p'int out the road this way to Dan, when you git home."

But, the day Joe was released, he left with all the good will they had on hand for anybody. He took dinner with Mr. Plant and started for Rock City in time to reach home about dark, that beautiful October day. He had been gone four years, having made one year of credits for good behavior.

All kinds of emotions mingled in his bosom as he came in sight of the old place, joy at being free once more, shame at being considered a criminal, anger at the man who was the cause of the disgrace, gratitude that the superb little woman, whom he called wife, still believed in him, as did all her people and his people. It was with the greatest self-restraint that he could keep from going to Nugent and killing him.

His wife received him with as much pride and pleasure as if he were the hero of a hunting expedition to Africa. Mr. Magee, the pastor of the church, had been put in possession of all the facts by Plant and Vann, as well as by Joe's wife, and he was out the next morning to give him welcome home. He had his suspicions of Nugent, anyhow, in spite of his aggressive prominence in the church, and assured Joe of his confidence, as well as that of a lot of people. At once he was offered the position of head bookkeeper in the leading dry goods house of the town, whose owner was a special friend of Mr. Vann. While doing that work, he still lived in the suburbs at the home of Mr. Lyle and studied law at night with Henry Black, an old college friend of John Plant, son of the deacon.

Joe anticipated great embarrassment in going to church, but after the first Sunday, it was almost all gone, in spite of the staring looks of an occasional pair of eyes. The occasion of its disappearance rather distressed Joe. Dan was on hand and seemed to be well satisfied with himself till he caught sight of Joe, for it had never occurred to him that the ex-convict would face the people at church, any time, much less the first Sunday he was out.

Dan did not see Joe till he was by his side passing the collection basket. The effect upon him was like a shock of electricity. He looked as if the police were after him. Joe did not exactly pity him but he said to himself, "the work of vengeance is surely beginning." And then Joe smiled a real smile. "All I'll have to do will be to come to church and Dan will convict himself by being too scared to come at all, or to walk straight, if he gets up courage enogh to face me. This is pretty good. Something's doing, sure."

From that day, Joe never staid away from church, but he missed his guess on Dan, who rallied, faced him, with a forced smile, and said, "we are glad to see you, Joe."

Then came the fight. He could always make Dan wince by giving him a fixed stare and he got to enjoying it. "Yes, you lying hyprocrite," said Joe to him one Sunday morning, "you know, as well as I do, you are guilty and will some day be found out,"—no, Joe did not say it, but he came very near saying it.

Then he got disgusted with himself, for enjoying the diversion of torturing Dan. "This is not square, to take revenge out of the proper hands, when I've turned it over to Him. If I keep on fooling with it and interfering with His prerogative, He may give me some personal attentions I may not enjoy. He's got it in for Dan, all right. Guess I'll let up on him for a while."

It was just before he was to take his state examination to practice law and Mr. Black said to him, one day, "Joe, I have a letter from my old friend, John Plant, son of your Deacon Plant, who is assistant cashier in a Chicago bank. He heard from his father the story of Dan's rascality and was surprised and elated to find a deposit slip of his made out January 4, 1902, for $2,500.00. He thinks that may be part of the money he took from the bank, for it was about that time. Later it was checked out on a board of trade deal. I've suspected him for some time of crookedness in settling up the estate of Frank Watson."

Joe's heart jumped. He felt confident Black was on the right trail. "I'd give all my hopes to see him punished; but I forgot. I've turned that over to the One who said, 'Vengeance belongs to me: I will recompense.' But I hope it is only my sense of justice that that makes me anxious to do him good, by giving him inducements to stop that habit permanently. Still I don't want to interfere with the good work; so I'll try to keep out."

Mr. Black didn't tell Joe why he was gone to Chicago three days, but he was something of a detective, as well as a lawyer, a good combination, and he was pretty busy those three days. The evening of his return he phoned to Joe to come to the office the next morning at 10:30, instead of waiting till the afternoon, as usual.

"I think I've got the dots on Dannie," was Black's greeting as Joe entered. "He turned as heartless a trick on Frank Watson's widow as he did for you. He'll be here in a few minutes. Keep still and watch me."

The way the blood rushed out of Dan's face and left it as white as a sheet at the sight of Black and Joe was tragical, but he regained his self control at once and tried to be very cordial with Joe. He knew Black suspected his honesty, in the case he had settled for his client, and never liked to be in his presence.

Joe knew that Black meant business, though he had not been taken into his plans. He watched. Developments came fast enough to suit the wishes of the most hasty. The sense of victory and of a consequent vindication tingled through every nerve of Joe's body. Yet at that moment, he had enough command of himself to remember his committment of the case to the One who said, "vengeance is mine." The old vindictiveness was on hand in sufficient force, but he actually began to pity the man who was taken in charge by the One who ultimately settles things right and gives each one what he is entitled to. If Joe had said those two passages to himself once, he had said them forty times a day—"If ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your heavenly Father forgive you your trespasses; vengeance belongeth unto me and I will repay." And, after quoting them to himself, he would say, "That's square talk. I'll keep still."

"Dan," said Black, "I've asked you to come in, in order to give you some information I have recently obtained, which confirms two things I have known for a long time. One is that you made away with four thousand dollars of the estate of Frank Watson, and the other is that you stole the money of the bank and had Joe convicted on false testimony. I have just come from Chicago with all the evidence I need to send you to the penitentiary. Friends and detectives have been working on the case and I have the evidence here in this pigeon hole. Joe knows nothing of what I have done and he has not seen this testimony. Before I go any further I want to ask him how many people know about your guilt."

"There is one Person," said Joe, "who saw him take the money and tamper with the books. I've turned the whole case, as far as I am concerned, over to Him. He has charge of it, with promise to recompense him."

"Well, is there no escape for Dan?"

"Yes, if he will confess and make reparation."

"To whom?"

"To every one wronged by him."

"Will you prosecute him?"

"No, it can be kept quiet, if he takes the right course."

"I want to tell you what that means," continued Black. "He must exonerate you, and pay back the money to the bank and to Frank's estate."

"Do you mean to say you won't prosecute him?"

"I will not."

Didn't you study law in the penitentiary in order to send him there?"

"I did."

"Why do you decline to prosecute him?"

"I promised that Person I wouldn't take the case out of His hands."

Dan had sat there thinking. He turned toward Joe, with a sudden flush of his face. "Do you say you don't want to send me to the penitentiary?"

"I do."

"Why not?"

"I've forgiven you and turned you over to that Person. Perhaps you can guess who He is."

The storm of remorse within Dan burst and he fell on the floor in agony of soul. "I'm going to the penitentiary. It would be heaven to be there and feel that I am being punished."

"No," said Joe, "not if I can help it."

That afternoon at the hastily-called meeting of the directors, Dan stated the case and asked to be prosecuted and sent up. Joe was called and he requested them to leave him alone. But Dan said it would be extreme cruelty to allow him to stay out of the penitentiary. It was a case for the federal court.

When he went to Joliet to serve his term, he bore a letter of introduction from Joe to his old teacher, Deacon Plant. The letter said, among other things, "honest, I did my best to keep him out, but he thought he never could be happy till he got just what I got. I commend him to your helpful kindness. Tell him not to be too hard with himself. I think you can fully trust him."

The first Sunday in the class, he asked the privilege of speaking. He said, "I am the man who sent Joe Webb here and now Joe has sent me here. I sent him by false testimony. He sent me by forgiving me and breaking my heart, till I felt it would be a relief to my conscience to come. All wanted to secure my pardon, but I want to live here long enough to show that I appreciate the heroic man, who brought me to myself, and Deacon Plant, who made that kind of a man of him."

A Little Catechism for Christians

By Amos R. Wells.

Question: How many denominations are there in the United States?

Answer: 186, according to latest census.

Ques. How many denominations were there in 1890?

Ans. 145, according to the census of that year.

Ques. How many denominations were disbanded in the interval?

Ans. Twelve.

Ques. How many were merged with other denominations?

Ans. Four.

Ques. How many wholly new denominations were added to the list?

Ans. Forty-eight.

Ques. Were there other additions to the denominations?

Ans. Yes; some denominations split in two.

Ques. How many Baptist denominations exist in the United States?

Ans. Sixteen.

Ques. How many Lutheran?

Ans. Thirty-four.

Ques. How many Methodist?

Ans. Fifteen.

Ques. How many Presbyterians?

Ans. Twelve.

Ques. What reason is given for the existence of these 186 denominations?

Ans. That each perpetuates a valuable principal and struggles for its acceptance.

Ques. Then each denomination at present lacks 185 valuable principles possessed respectively by the 185 other denominations?

Ans. M-a-y-b-e.

Ques. Any other reason?

Ans. That varying types of human minds naturally require different types of creed and forms of church government and worship.

Ques. Then there are 186 different types of human minds?

Ans. It would seem so.

Ques. Is this division of our Christian forces into 186 sundered camps a good thing?

Ans. Yes—for the devil.

MEANS TO AN END—Doctor: "Well, John, how are you today?" John: "Verra bad. I wish Providence 'ud 'ave mussy on me an' take me!" Wife: "'Ow can you expec' it to if you won't take the doctor's physic?"—The Continent.

Spring Twilight

Singing in the rain, robin?
Rippling out so fast
All thy flute-like notes, as if
This singing were thy last!

After sundown, too, robin?
Though the fields are dim,
And the trees grow dark and still,
Dripping from leaf and limb.

'Tis heart-broken music—
That sweet, faltering strain,—
Like a mingled memory,
Half ecstasy, half pain.

Surely thus to sing, robin,
Thou must have in sight
Beautiful skies behind the shower,
And dawn beyond the night.

Would thy faith were mine, robin!
Then, though night were long,
And its silent hours would melt
Their sorrow into song.

—Edward Rowland Sill.

A Little Nonsense

Strickland W. Gilliland, the humorist, goes about the country entertaining audiences. In one town Gilliland was met by the lyceum committee and asked what further arrangements he desired.

"Nothing, but a glass of water on the table," said the humorist.

"To drink?" asked one of the committee.

"Oh, no," said the funny man, "I do a high dive in the second act."—Human Life.

Now and then a childish slip of the tongue reveals to startled adults the true relative positions occupied by "grown-ups" and "growing-ups" in the child's mental world. Two women not in the same social set came together at a kindergarten party, and the richer woman rather patronizingly remarked:

"Perhaps you will permit me to say good-morning without a formal introduction. I do not know by what name to address you, but I have heard so often and so much of you as 'Annie's mamma.'"

"That's nothing," spoke up little Annie, recognizing and reasoning if not thoroughly understanding the speaker's tone. "You needn't feel so stuck-up about it. You're only Mary's aunt!"

"I can't stay long," said the chairman of the committee from the colored church. "I just came to see if yo' wouldn't join de mission band."

"Fo' de lan' sakes, honey," replied the old mammy, "doan' come to me! I can't even play a mouf organ."—Lippincott's.

A Kansas teacher struggling to indict a reluctant class into the mysteries of correct composition, wrote two test sentences on the blackboard, one wrong in syntax, the other containing a misstatement of fact. The sentences were: "The hen has three legs," and "Who done it?" No connection, of course, was supposed to exist between the two.

"Willie," said the teacher, calling upon an especially inattentive but bright scholar, "go to the blackboard and show where the fault lies in the sentences that I have just written."

Willie, evidently puzzled and studying hard upon the tangle, approached the board very deliberately, looked at it in steady silence for some moments, then seized the crayon and fell to work. To the teacher's blank consternation he wrote:

"The hen never done it. God done it."

The teacher sat down to catch her breath.

Indian Cradle Song

Swing thee low in thy cradle soft,
Deep in the dusky wood;
Swing thee low and swing aloft—
Sleep, as a papoose should;
For safe in your little birchen nest,
Quiet will come, and peace and rest,
If the little papoose is good.

The coyote howls on the prairie wild,
And the owlet hoots in the tree;
And the big moon shines on the little child
As it slumbers peacefully.
So swing thee high in thy little nest,
And swing thee low and take the rest
That the night wind brings to thee.

The father lies on the fragrant ground,
Dreaming of hunt and fight;
And the pine leaves rustle with mournful sound
All through the solemn night.
But the little papoose in his birchen nest
Is swinging low as he takes his rest,
Till the sun brings the morning light.

—Chicago Tribune.

We Go A'journeying.

BY GERTRUDE W. FIELDER.

It was a cold, blustering morning in March and as we gathered around the breakfast table, we children seemed to be as squally as the day.

"Dearie me," said mamma, "if we cannot have sunshine out of doors, all the more reason why we should have it indoors. Come now, let's go a'journeying. Ah! I spy a sunbeam in Margey's eyes. Margey, you may start first." (It is a game we all like.)

"I will go down our street and around the corner on to Main street," said Margey. "First, I come to the butcher-man's but I pass him by and go a'journeying on, next, I come to the baker-man's, I go in and buy something—it commences with B, everybody guess."

"Bread, of course," cried Richard, "now it's my turn."

"Not so fast, Richard, my boy," said papa. "Of what is bread made, Margey?"

"Flour," answered Margey.

"And of what is flour made?"

"Wheat."

"Correct. And in the western part of the United States are immense fields of wheat. When it is ripe it is cut down and threshed, taken to the mill and comes out white flour just as you have seen it when Jane makes bread. Now, Richard, you may start on your trip."

"I will go a'journeying to Mrs. Perkin's farm," said Richard, "and when I get there I will take a hoe and dig and dig and dig and then I'll fill up a basket with round, hard things all covered with dirt——and they commence with a P."

"Potatoes," said papa. "The potato, children, is purely an American vegetable and was first taken into Europe by Sir Walter Raleigh. When he left Virginia for England he took some potatoes with him and as they were something entirely new, he sent a sample to the Emperor of Germany, who ordered his gardener to plant them in the royal garden. When the little seed-balls formed, the gardener, supposing that was the part to be eaten, picked them, had them cooked and served to the Emperor. The Emperor was disgusted, as were his courtiers whom he had invited to taste the new and strange dish and the potatoes were ordered to be dug up and thrown away. The gardener obeyed and in so doing, disclosed the real potatoes. I guessed Richard's problem, it is my turn to go a'journeying. I will take a long trip, a sea voyage in fact and when I reach my journey's end, I find myself in Rio Janeiro, a seaport of Brazil. Who can tell me where Brazil is?"

"South America," cried Richard.

"But I do not stop in Rio Janeiro," went on papa, "I go outside the city where there are large plantations and here I see hundreds of negroes at work. What I am going to tell you about grows on bushes as tall as plum trees. The bark is of a grayish color, the leaves are glossy green, the flowers white and the berries dark red, very much resembling a cherry. The kernel is in two parts, each having a flat side. It is the work of the negroes to gather the kernels in deep baskets and lay them on large stones, where the grains are spread out to dry, after the red, juicy part is rubbed off. When it is dried it is put into large bags and sent to Rio to be shipped to all parts of the world."

"It's coffee, I knew it all the time," I said. "I 'spose I should have given the others a chance, but I was in a hurry 'cause I wanted to go on the same boat with you, papa, but I shall get off at Louisiana. I am going to visit a plantation too and watch the negroes at work. First, they cut down something, you'd guess right off if I told you what, and then strip off the top and the leaves. Then they cut this something into small pieces, tie it up in bundles and take it to the mill where it is crushed all up and the juice is boiled until it is white. Time to guess."

"Sugar!" exclaimed mamma. "And now I am going a'journeying away up in the northern part of the state of Vermont, and when I reach an old weather-beaten farm-house I am going straight to the shed to get out the ox-sled, then to the barn for the two brown-eyed oxen. Then I shall pile the sled with wooden pails and long wooden troughs. I drive slowly out of the farm-yard gate—pretty soon I come to another farm-house, here a merry group of girls and boys come running out and climb into the sled. Bye and bye we reach the woods and we drive in over the crisp snow which goes crunch, crunch, crunch under the wide, smooth runners of the sled.

"The sun has already begun to make his power felt, he has kissed the rugged trunks of the maple trees and has set the sweet sap mounting through every vein and tissue. Now we set the troughs in order at the foot of the trees, while the boys bore the holes in the tree trunks for the little spouts through which the juice must run. Very soon we hear the drip, drip, of the oozing sap as it trickles over the spout into the trough.

"While the troughs are slowly filling, the boys collect twigs and branches and make a fire, then a great iron kettle is slung over the fire on three poles and into this kettle goes a quantity of the sap which is boiled and comes out——" But just then the door opened and in walked Jane with a plateful of buckwheat cakes and a big pitcher of—— "Maple syrup, goody, goody," we all cried, even papa.

"I didn't know the syrup had arrived," said papa.

"It was a surprise kept for just such a morning as this," returned mamma.

"Your journey was the very bestest one of all, mamma," said Margey. "More syrup, papa, please."

The Junior Pulpit

BY "MARK WAYNE."

THE KEYS.

I have here three keys: a flat key to a Yale lock, an ordinary door key, and a clock key. These are not just bits of metal, but are really magicians, and they can do very wonderful things. This Yale key fits the door to my office down town. See, the door opens, not only into my office, but into the opportunities of the day's work, into association with my fellow workers, into the questions of business and the expectations of gain. Shall I not call this key, this magician that opens all the doors of usefulness, shall I not rightly call him Hope?

This larger rounded key comforts my weary homeward evening way. He cheers me when I am discouraged; when lonely, whispers of sweet companionship awaiting; when I fail, tells me of affection that fails not; when the sky is overcast and pavement wet, pictures a pleasant gratefire and spread supper table. And when I reach my day's and journey's end the key springs out to open all the wards of home, and welcome to the peace of the family circle. Shall I not call the name of this magician Love?

Last comes this rounded key with wide flat handle; used not to open doors but to wind the old clock on the stairs. Every night this genii winds the great main spring. I sleep, but the clock keeps guard through the long hours, never misses a second, and summons me at dawn to a day's new endeavor. Why, what would happen if also the clocks stopped? Home disarranged, business disorganized, traffic blocked. No man has a right to let his clock run down. For the magician of the clock I name Faith.

Look! My three keys are fastened to a key-ring, that I may not lose them. Christ is life's key-ring, holding in himself the keys of faith and hope and love. Lose him and you lose them; have him and you have them: to open the doors of opportunity; to bring to the fireside of affection; to wind the main springs of all life.

The Daily Altar

An Aid to Private Devotion and Family Worship

SUNDAY, APRIL 30.

Theme for the Day.—The True Communion.

Scripture.—The cup of blessing which we bless, is it not a communion of the body of Christ? seeing that we who are many are one loaf, one body.—I. Cor. 10:16, 17.

But a certain Samaritan, as he journeyed came where he was; and when he saw him he was moved with compassion, and came to him, and bound up his wounds, pouring on them oil and wine.—Luke 10:33, 34.

The Holy Supper is kept, indeed,
In whatso we share with another's need;
Not what we give, but what we share,—
For the gift without the giver is bare;
Who gives himself with his alms feeds three,
Himself, his hungering neighbor, and me.
—J. R. Lowell ("The Vision of Sir Launfal.")

Prayer.—Our Father who art in heaven, on this the day made sacred by so many inspiring events in the history of the faith, and most of all by the resurrection of our Saviour from the dead, we come to Thee with joy and confidence, for Thou hearest us always. Accept the offering of gratitude which we make to Thee. Fill our souls with love and purity, of kindness and Thyself. Restrain us from every wish and way, and direct our feet into the pathway of holiness and peace. For we ask in the name of our Lord. Amen.

MONDAY, MAY 1.

Theme for the Day.—The Pure in Heart.

Scripture.—Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God.—Matt. 5:89.

Thrice blest whose lives are faithful prayers,
Whose loves in higher love endure;
What souls possess themselves so pure,
Or is there happiness like theirs?
—Tennyson ("In Memoriam.")

Prayer.—Holy and righteous Father, Giver of life, and the Author of all our well-being, in the multitude of Thy tender mercies we find ourselves amazed and overwhelmed, for we have not merited the abundance of Thy favor. Yet in the life and work of our Lord we have seen Thy grace and mercy made manifest to all men, and we are brought very low in our sense of ill-desert before Thee. Yet we ask, most merciful Father, that Thou wilt pardon our offenses, and give to us in fuller measure the blessing of the pure heart, which brings us near to Thee. And may we see the shining of Thy face in our daily lives, and hereafter in the everlasting life. Amen.

TUESDAY, MAY 2.

Theme for the Day.—Sea Glimpses.

Scripture.—And I saw as it were a glassy sea mingled with fire; and them that came off victorious from the beast and from his image and from the number of his name, standing by the glassy sea, having harps of God.—Rev. 15:2.

Hence in seasons of calm weather,
Though inland far we be,
Our souls catch sight of that immortal sea,
Which brought us hither,
Can in a moment travel thither,
And see the children sport upon the shore,
And hear the mighty waters rolling evermore.
—Wordsworth ("Ode on Immortality.")

Prayer.—O Lord, our God, we wait for Thy blessing, without which all our lives are famished and unsatisfied. Thou hast loved us with an everlasting love, and called us into the covenants of Thy grace through faith in Jesus Christ our Lord. In his name, therefore, we beseech the favor of food and raiment, of health and happiness, and the privilege of working with Thee at the great tasks of the kingdom of God. Grant us this day the vision of the King in his beauty, and the sea of divine grace that rolls onward to the throne of God. We pray in the Saviour's name. Amen.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 3.

Theme for the Day.—A Message from Heaven.

Scripture.—The Lord hath appeared of old unto me, saying, Yea, I have loved thee with an everlasting love; therefore with loving kindness have I drawn thee.—Jer. 31:3.

Give me some word to say for Thee,
I prayed. The world needs charity;
Its sorrows are so great to bear,
And men bow down 'neath loads of care.
Fain would I bring them some relief
And comfort for their hours of grief.
May I not tell them something? Go,
A voice replied, and let them know
Their Father loves them.
—Marianne Farningham ("Our Father Cares.")

Prayer.—Holy and righteous God, the Giver of good and the Preserver of our souls, we have hardly dared to trust the blessed news brought to us in Thy holy Word, for it seems far beyond the reach of thought that we should be called the sons of God. Yet so convincing is that message made to us in the life and teachings of our Saviour that we dare not doubt its truth. And when we look with fuller care into the volumes of divine record and of human experience, we are left in no uncertainty, for Thy love to us is everywhere made clear. Keep us ever in that love, we pray in Jesus' name. Amen.

THURSDAY, MAY 4.

Theme for the Day.—Conscience.

Scripture.—And herein do I exercise myself, to have always a conscience void of offence toward God, and toward men.—Acts 24:16.

Pray for us, for we trust we have a good conscience, in all things willing to live honestly.—Heb. 13:18.

These thoughts may startle well, but not astound
The virtuous mind, that ever walks attended
By a strong siding champion, conscience.
O welcome, pure-eyed Faith, white-handed Hope,
Thou hovering angel gilt with golden wings,
And thou, unblemished form of Chastity!
—John Milton ("Comus.")

Prayer.—We praise Thee, O God. We acknowledge Thee to be the Lord. To Thee all angels cry aloud in ceaseless adoration. To Thee cherubim and seraphim continually do cry, Holy, holy, holy. The goodly fellowship of the prophets praise Thee. The holy company of the apostles praise Thee. The martyrs of all the years lift up their voices to Thee. We would unite our praise with that of this vast throng, and confess Thy glory. Do Thou aid us to be worthy of such companionship, by the uplifting of our hearts to Thee, and by the right ordering of our lives in Thy sight. Give us minds that are set on the noblest things, and consciences void of offense toward God and man. We ask in Jesus' name. Amen.

FRIDAY, MAY 5.

Theme for the Day.—The Sufficiency of Christ.

Scripture.—And he said unto me, My grace is sufficient for thee; for my strength is made perfect in weakness. Most gladly, therefore, I will rather glory in my infirmities, that the power of Christ may rest upon me.—II Cor. 12:9.

Christ! I am Christ's, and let the name suffice you,
Ay, for me, too, He greatly hath sufficed.
Lo, with no winning words I would entice you;
Paul has no honor and no friend but Christ.

Yes, through life, death, through sorrow and through sinning
He shall suffice me, for He hath sufficed;
Christ is the end, for Christ was the beginning,
Christ the beginning, for the end is Christ.
—F. W. H. Myers ("St. Paul.")

Prayer.—Our Father, we give Thee humble and hearty thanks for Thine infinite favor to us, for our daily comforts and well-being, for the means of grace and for the hope of glory. In the fulness of Thy provision for us we find every want supplied. But beyond all the daily blessings we receive, we praice Thee for our Saviour, Jesus Christ the Lord. In his name we ever come to Thee, and coming find Thee ready to receive. Accept our praise for the mercies of this day, and go with us in the days to come, until we see Thee face to face. For Christ's sake. Amen.

SATURDAY, MAY 6.

Theme for the Day.—God's Many Voices.

Scripture.—The voice of the Lord is upon the waters; the God of glory thundereth; the Lord is upon many waters.—Psa. 29:3.

And behold the glory of Israel came from the way of the east; and his voice was like a noise of many waters; and the earth shined with his glory.—Ezek. 43:2.

Not by one portal or one path alone
God's holy messages to men are known;
Waiting the glances of His awful eye,
Silver-winged seraphs do Him embassy,
And stars, interpreting His high behest,
Guide the lone foot, and glad the falling breast.
The rolling thunder and the raging sea
Speak the stern purpose of the Deity,
And storms beneath and rainbow hues above
Herald His anger and proclaim His love.

Prayer.—Our heavenly Father, the whole of creation speaks of Thy power and Thy goodness. There is no voice in all the universe, save that of the unthankful of the human race, that does not proclaim Thy praise. We would join in this great chorus of thanksgiving, and count ourselves among those grateful beings to whom the glory of God is an ever-present theme. Help us to learn more fully the happy secret of the world, and be able to tell it to all whose lives we can direct for good. Make this day worthy of us and of Thee, and may the week which comes to its close bear some good record of our lives to Thy presence. For Jesus' sake. Amen.

Avoid all anxious care, vexation, murmuring and melancholy, which darken thy soul and render thee unfit for the friendship of God. If thou dost perceive such feelings arising, turn gently away from them.—G. Tersteegen.

The Moral Leaders of Israel

BY PROFESSOR HERBERT L. WILLETT

Section XIX. Isaiah of Jerusalem

May 7. Text for Special Study, Isa. 6.

QUESTIONS.

1. In what part of the nation did the earlier prophets perform their work?
2. What transfer of prophetic activity came in Isaiah's day?
3. Were there any prophets in northern Israel contemporary with Isaiah?
4. What reign formed the background of Isaiah's youth?
5. What two kings were contemporary at this time?
6. In what books is the reign of Uzziah described?
7. Which account, that of kings or that of Chronicles, is probably the more reliable? Why?
8. What calamity befell the king in his later years?
9. How was this explained by the Chronicles?
10. What is known of Isaiah's position in the social life of his age?
11. How long did the public work of Isaiah last?
12. What relation does the book of Isaiah bear to the work of the prophet?
13. Is it probable that the book contains some of the writings of other prophets than Isaiah?
14. Why is the sixth chapter to be regarded as the earliest?
15. What were the successive steps of Isaiah's summons to prophetic work?
16. How did Isaiah come to offer himself for the work of preaching?
17. How was he warned of the difficulty of his task?
18. What did Isaiah undertake in his work of prophet?
19. What four ideas did he emphasize?
20. How did he illustrate his messages?

1. THE DAYS OF ISAIAH.

With Hosea the prophetic voices of the Northern Kingdom ceased. Hitherto all the great prophets had belonged either to the nation as a whole, or to its northern part. Moses, Samuel and Nathan were national leaders in the broader sense. Ahijah, Elijah, Elisha, Amos and Hosea were all men of northern Israel.

But with Isaiah there came a transfer of prophetic activity from Israel to Judah. The northern preachers ceased for the kingdom of Israel came to its close in 721 B. C. and only Judah remained. Isaiah began his service as a messenger of God in 739 B. C. and was therefore a contemporary of Hosea. It may be that as a youth he heard some echoes of the preaching of Amos in Bethel. But the most important part of his work fell in the period following the fall of Samaria.

The long and prosperous reign of Uzziah (or Azariah) formed the background of Isaiah's youth. Both kingdoms, Israel and Judah, were prosperous. Jeroboam II in the north widened the bounderies of his rule from Hamath on the north to the Dead Sea on the south. Almost equally successful was Uzziah. He was the son of Amaziah and grandson of Joash. He found Judah at a low level of strength, and brought it up to the position of a great power, almost equal, for a brilliant moment to the neighboring and usually superior kingdom of Israel.

The account of Uzziah's reign given in the book of Second Kings is brief (2 Kings 15: 1-7), but the narrative of the Chronicler is much more elaborate (2 Chron. 26). The historical value of Chronicles is much below that of Kings, being written centuries later, and more likely to be influenced by tradition, especially of the priestly sort. But not unfrequently it adds features which are not improbable and which throw new light on the times.

Thus in reference to Uzziah the Chronicler tell us that he restored the part of Elath, on the Gulf of Akaba, to the possession of Judah; that he was successful in his raids of Philistine territory; that he beat back the Arabs and other tribes of the south; that he was a famous builder, adding much to the fortifications of Jerusalem, and erecting towers in other parts of his kingdom; that he was devoted to farming and stock rearing; and that he greatly increased the numbers, equipment and effectiveness of the army.

The event which clouded all his later years was his leprosy. This dreaded disease was regarded as the stroke of God, a punishment for sin. In Kings no effort is made to give a reason for this affliction. But the Chronicler, with his strong priestly trainings, gaves the reader to understand that the malady was due to the king's presumptious attempt to burn incense in the temple. By the days of the Chronicles the priestly law had so far developed as to forbid any performance of the rites by another than the priests. No recital was more likely to increase the reverence in which the priests were held than one of this sort, which made clear the fact that even a king could not intrude into the sacred domain of the priests.

That the king was a leper and as such was compelled to live in solitude, while his son, Jotham exercised the functions of government, was the chief item of political significance in the years when Isaiah was growing to manhood.

2. THE MAN ISAIAH.

The position of Isaiah in the social life of Jerusalem is not seated. It is merely recorded that he was the son of a certain Amoz. An effort has been made to relate him to the royal family of Judah, and all the circumstances point to a high and influential social position in the city. That he had no intention of devoting himself to prophetic activity seems clear. He was perhaps expecting to live the life of a courtier or diplomat. That he was a man of some wealth seems not unlikely. He was dowered with great natural gifts and was in possession of such educational advantages as the times afforded.

Isaiah was married and at the time he began his ministry as a prophet he had a son. Later another son was born to him. His wife is referred to as the prophetess (8:3). The children in this family received names which Isaiah later turned to good advantage in his preaching. (7:3; 8:3).

The advantages which Isaiah enjoyed in his natural gifts, his educational and his social position gave him great influence in the city and the court. He was a notable figure wherever he went. His counsel was prized in affairs of state. He was a speaker of wonderful power. His personality must have been commanding and impressive. It is difficult to imagine a commonplace man wielding the influence which this prophet exerted for the forty years and more of his public work.

For his ministry began in the year of King Uzziah's death (739 B. C.) and continued to the day of Jerusalem's deliverance from the Assyrian forces under Sennacherib (701 B. C.). How much longer he lived and preached is not known. Jewish tradition asserted that he survived to the days of Manasseh (686-641 B. C.) and was put to death in cruel fashion by that king.

3. THE BOOK OF ISAIAH.

The most casual reading of the book which bears the name of this prophet reveals the fact that all of its earlier utterances at least are the record of Isaiah's public addresses. The book is not biography nor essays, but sermons. All the characteristics of spoken messages are found in these utterances.

Yet it is clear that the book does not contain all the sermons of the prophet. It is much too small to include the messages of forty years. Nor are any of these sermons given in their complete form. Like the report of the sermon of Peter on the day of Pentecost (Acts. 2) or of Paul at Antioch of Pisidia Acts 13), it is probable that there were outlines, notes or briefs preserved. Yet enough is given to furnish a fairly clear idea of the prophet's thought.

The Moral Leaders of Israel is a Sunday School course for Young People's and Adult Bible Classes. It will continue throughout the year 1911. The publishers of THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY will supply classes of six or more with weekly copies of the paper containing these lessons, at $1 per year for each copy, or 30 cents per quarter. The class members will receive in addition to their Sunday-school lesson all the rich things provided every week in THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY. The papers distributed to the class on Sunday will contain the lesson for the following Sunday. Orders should be sent through the regular Sunday-school Treasurer if you wish to pay quarterly; or you may deal directly with the Publishers, enclosing remittance at the rate of $1.00 per year for each copy ordered. Be sure and give name of teacher or class member to whom papers shall be sent for distribution.

Again, the sermons in the book do not appear to come in regular order. Even a casual reading will convince the reader that they have been assembled with little regard to chronological sequence. This probably was thought to be of small moment. It is not difficult, however, to rearrange them in a more satisfactory order, by the help of their references. Such a reconstruction has now been accomplished by most biblical students, and with a fair degree of unanimity, and its details are to be found in almost any modern introduction or commentary.

But another feature requires attention as well. Who wrote the book? Did Isaiah write down in brief from the things he had uttered? If so, for what purpose? It could not have been his aim to reach future generations with his words, for his purpose lay in the effort to reach and inspire the people of his own day. Did his disciples write down the words of their Master, even as the Apostles wrote memoirs of the Lord? We know that Isaiah had such an inner group of hearers and helpers to whom he spoke when the multitude would not listen (8: 16, 17). Did these men preserve the messages of the prophet and perhaps later an gather them into the volumne as we have it?

If so, and the different sermons of the long ministry of Isaiah were recorded at different times, and at length gathered into a collection, how can we be sure that the utterances are all those of Isaiah, and that the messages and writings of other prophets have not been mingled to some extent with the original Isaian material? The answer is, of course, that we cannot be sure. In fact it is highly probable that some sections of the book as we have it are not the work of this prophet at all. Such portions of the book as 13, 14, 24-27, 34, 35 and 40-66 have come to be regarded as the work of other hands. And this decision is reached upon the same ground as those by which the genuine messages of the prophet are vindicated. Some of these fragments, especially chapters 40-66 will be considered in a later section of these studies.

4. THE CALL OF ISAIAH (CHAP. 6).

It is clear that the experience recorded in the sixth chapter is the earliest phophetic message of the book. It may not have been recorded, or even told, for years after this active work began. But it reveals the manner in which he first came to embrace the prophetic work. Perhaps Isaiah's reason for telling this experience was the popular demand for his credentials as a teacher sent from God and his authority to proclaim to the men of his time their duty and danger. We know that Jesus and the apostles were challenged to show by what right they spoke as they did.

The entire chapter needs to be studied with care. Was it a dream of the night, or a waking vision, or a parable constructed by the prophet to make clear to others the steps in his spiritual awakening? Whatever be its basis, it is one of the most impressive sections in the story of prophetic work. More than this, it makes clear the process of prophetic preparation in that age and every age.

